

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

JUDICIAL AND STATUTORY DEFINITIONS

OF

WORDS AND PHRASES.

VOLUME 7.

PUBLISH.

See "Publication."

"Publish" is defined as to issue; to make known what before was private; to put into circulation; the idea of publicity, of circulation, of intended distribution. United States v. Williams (U. S.) 3 Fed. 484, 486.

"Publish" primarily means to make known, so that, where a notice is required to be published in a newspaper, printed in German, the notice must also be in German. When printed in English, it would be merely printed, not published. State v. City of Orange, 22 Atl. 1004, 1005, 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 111, 14 L. R. A. 62.

The guaranty in Const. art. 1, § 8, providing that every citizen may speak, write, and publish his sentiments upon all subjects, does not give to the citizen the right to murder; nor does it give him the right to advise the commission of that crime by others. What it does permit is liberty of action only to the extent that such liberty does not interfere with or deprive others of the equal right. In the eye of the law, each citizen has an equal right to live and to act, and to enjoy the benefits of the laws of the state under which he lives; but no one has the right to use the privileges thus conferred in such a way as to murder his fellow citizens, and one who imagines he has labors under a serious misconception, not only of the true meaning of the constitutional provision referred to, but of his duties and obligations to his fellow citizens and to the state itself. Thus the publication of an article in an anarchistic paper inciting a murder is not within the protection conferred by such provision. People v. Most, 75 N. Y. Supp. 591, 592, 71 App Div. 160.

PUBLISHER.

"Publisher" is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary "as one who, by himself or his agent, makes a thing publicly known; one engaged in the circulation of books, pamphlets, or other papers." Le Roy v. Jamison (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 373, 378.

A publisher is one who makes anything publicly known, as such is its meaning in reference to publication of a libel. Sproul v. Pillsbury, 72 Me. 20, 21.

Manager synonymous.

See "Manager."

As manufacturer.

See "Manufacturer."

As printer.

The publisher of a paper is ordinarily a printer, in the sense of being the person for whom, as principal, and by whose servants, the paper is printed, and is thus held synonymous with "printer," so that an affidavit of the publication of a summons made by a publisher is a sufficient compliance with Civ. Code Proc. § 415, requiring the affidavit to be made by the printer, or the foreman or the principal clerk. People v. Thomas, 36 Pac. 9, 10, 101 Cal. 571 (citing Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505, 513; Bunce v. Reed [N. Y.] 16 Barb. 347; Menard v. Crowe, 20 Minn. 448, 452 [Gil. 402]; Kipp v. Cook, 46 Minn. 535, 537, 49 N. W. 257).

As proprietor.

The word "proprietor," used in connection with a country weekly newspaper, has been held synonymous with "publisher" within the meaning of a statute (Code Iowa, § 2620) requiring the affidavit of the publication of a legal notice to be made by the publisher of the paper. Palmer v. McCormick (U. S.) 28 Fed. 541, 544.

Publisher of Libel.

He is the publisher of a libel who, either of his own will, or by the persuasion or dictation of another, executes the same in any of the modes pointed out as constituting a libel; but, if any one by force or threats is compelled to execute such libel, he is guilty of no offense. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 725.

PUEBLO.

See "Mexican Pueblo."

The term "pueblo," in its ordinary signification, means people or population, but is used in the sense of the English word "town." It has the indefiniteness of that term, and, like it, is sometimes applied to a mere collection of individuals residing at a particular place—a settlement or village as well as to a regularly organized municipality. Trenouth v. City and County of San Francisco, 100 U. S. 251, 25 L. Ed. 628 (citing Grisar v. McDowell, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 363, 18 L. Ed. 863).

A grant to a pueblo in Mexican law did not constitute a private land grant in the sense which took title out of the state. It was the mere vesting in the pueblo—a political subdivision of the state—of the use of the land in trust for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, and with power, as the representatives of the state, to make grants which should vest the title in private ownership of solares or house lots. These grants did not deprive the state from thereafter making technical private land grants vesting the title in natural persons. United Land Ass'n v. Knight, 24 Pac. 818, 827, 828, 85 Cal. 448.

Pueblos, under the Mexican law, were simply part of the political government of the country, and, as political agencies, the state succeeded to control over them upon the change of government. Whatever property they had, incidental to their existence as pueblos, was held as a municipal trust for the public use of the pueblo. As such agencies, the state was under no obligation to continue their existence. In the exercise of her sovereign power, she could have abolished them altogether, or have incorporated them into her own scheme of government, as municipalities, with such powers and restrictions as she might see fit to impose upon them. City of Monterey v. Jacks, 73 Pac. 436, 441, 139 Cal. 542.

PUEBLO INDIANS.

The Pueblo Indians are not included within the meaning of Act June 30, 1834, declaring that every person who makes a settlement on any lands belonging, secured, or granted by treaty to any Indian tribe is liable to a penalty, etc., as they are Indians only in feature, complexion, and a few of their habits. United States v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 614, 617, 24 L. Ed. 295.

PUFFER.

A "puffer," in the strict meaning of the word, is a person who, without having any intention to purchase, is employed by the vendor at an auction to raise the price by fictitious bids, thereby increasing the competition among the bidders, while he himself is secured from risk by a secret understanding by the vendor that he shall not be bound by his bids. The employment of a puffer is a fraud on the real bidders which will relieve the highest bidder from any obligation to complete his contract. Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338, 375, 48 Am. Rep. 398.

A puffer is a person who attends an auction and bids for the purpose of inflating the value of the property, in behalf of those interested in the sale, with no desire to purchase the property. Such person is sometimes referred to as a "by-bidder," "capper," "decoy duck," "white bonnet," "sham bidder." McMillan v. Harris, 35 S. E. 334, 335, 110 Ga. 72, 48 L. R. A. 345, 78 Am. St. Rep. 93.

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE.

A plea puis darrein continuance, in the common-law system, was a pleading which set up some matter of defense that had arisen after plea, and before replication, or after issue joined. City of Chattanooga v. Neely, 37 S. W. 280, 281, 97 Tenn. 514.

A plea puis darrein continuance is a pleading of facts occurring since the last stage of the suit, whatever that stage may be, provided it precedes the trial. This plea, if sustained, may abate the particular suit without affecting the right, or it may go to the merits and defeat the right of action. A plea of this kind is always pleaded by way of substitution for the former plea, on which no proceeding is afterward had. Waterbury v. McMillan, 46 Miss. 635, 640.

A plea of puis darrein is in substitution of all previous pleas, and is always pleaded by way of substitution. It may be either in bar or abatement. Woods v. White, 97 Pa. 222, 227.

PULL.

In a statement that persons who were around the criminal section of the district court witnessed a striking illustration of what it is to be "possessed of a pull," and that the same persons were also given an illustration of how easy it is for a man to keep out of the penitentiary if the pull is worked for all it is worth, the phrase "possessed of a pull" is, to speak strictly, without an intelligible meaning, and is, in any event, so doubtful and uncertain that it cannot be applied as imputing that the court was corrupt, with any greater certainty than it may be said to refer to some other person or persons, or to actions or motives erroneous and improper, but not corrupt. Percival v. State, 64 N. W. 221, 223, 45 Neb. 741, 50 Am. St. Rep. 568 (approved in Rosewater v. State, 66 N. W. 640, 641, 47 Neb. 630).

PULLICAN.

A pullican is an instrument formerly used for extracting teeth by main force. It frequently brought with them a part of the jawbone. In re Hunter, 60 N. C. 372, 373.

PULSATORY CURRENT.

A pulsatory current is one caused by sudden or instantaneous changes of electrical intensity. Dolbear v. American Bell Telephone Co., 8 Sup. Ct. 778, 781, 128 U. S. 1, 81 L. Ed. 863.

PUNCTUATION.

See "Mark of Punctuation."

PUNISH.

"To punish" means to impose a penalty upon; to afflict with pain or loss or suffering for a crime or fault; to inflict a penalty for an offense upon the offender; to impose a penalty for the commission of crime. Bradley v. State, 38 S. E. 630, 631, 111 Ga. 168, 50 L. R. A. 691, 78 Am. St. Rep. 157.

PUNISHABLE.

The word "punishable," as used in statutes which declare that certain offenses are punishable in a certain way, means liable to be punished in the way designated. It does not mean "must be punished." State v. Neuner, 49 Conn. 232, 233; People v. Keating, 16 N. Y. Supp. 748, 750, 61 Hun. 280; Smith v. Commonwealth, 37 S. W. 586, 587, 100 Ky. 133; State v. Mayberry, 48 Me. 218, 235, 236; United States v. Watkinds (U. S.) 6 Fed. 152, 160; Miller v. State, 58 Ga. 200, 203; People v. Murphy, 57 N. E. 820, 821, 185 Ill. 623. The fact that a recommendation to mercy may reduce the punishment otherwise prescribed does not take the offense out of the operation of a general provision as to offenses punishable by imprisonment exceeding certain limits. Miller v. State, 58 Ga. 200, 203.

Within the Code, providing that such offenses as are punishable with death or confinement in the penitentiary are felonies, the word "punishable" refers to offenses which may be punished by confinement in the penitentiary, and not to those only which must be so punished. Benton v. Commonwealth, 16 S. E. 725, 89 Va. 570; People v. Hughes, 32 N. E. 1105, 1106, 137 N. Y. 29.

The word "punishable," in Laws 1897, p. 69—the indeterminate sentence law—relating to criminal cases where defendant is on trial for a felony punishable by confinement in the State Prison, applies only to those crimes which actually are, and not which may be, punished by confinement in the State Prison. Hicks v. State, 50 N. E. 27, 28, 150 Ind. 293.

The word "punishable," in Rev. St. § 6830, making it criminal for any person to verbally accuse any other person of a crime punishable by law, with intent to extort, etc., is not descriptive of a crime, but only operates to limit the subject-matter of the accusation to those acts which come within the penalties of the criminal laws of the state. Mann v. State, 26 N. E. 228, 227, 47 Ohio St. 556, 11 L. R. A. 656.

PUNISHABLE WITH IMPRISONMENT.

The provision of a charter, and an ordinance passed thereunder, providing that the town council might provide for the punishment of offenders against ordinances, and that it should be competent for the magistrate before whom any offender had been tried to direct that he be committed to the county jail until he pay the fines, forfeitures, and costs which were recovered or adjudged against him, is not in violation of a provision of the Constitution prohibiting a justice of the peace from trying any person, except as a court of inquiry, for an offense punishable with imprisonment or death. In such case it could not properly be said the offense was punishable with imprisonment, but rather that the imprisonment was a mere means of collecting the fine, and incident thereto. Ex parte Bollig, 31 Ill. 88, 96.

"Punishable" means liable to punishment, and the expression "punishable with imprisonment for life," in Gen. St. c. 160, § 1, providing that murder committed in the commission of, or attempt to commit, any crime punishable with death or imprisonment for life, is murder in the first degree, is broad enough to include every crime for which, on conviction, the guilty party is liable to such imprisonment. Commonwealth v. Pemberton, 118 Mass. 36, 42.

PUNISHMENT.

See "Corporal Punishment"; "Cruel and Unusual Punishment"; "Cumulative Punishment"; "Infamous Punishment"; "Same Punishment"; "Unusual Punishment."

Commutation of, see "Commute—Commutation."

Punishment is the penalty for the transgression of the law. People v. Court of Sessions, 19 N. Y. Supp. 508, 510 (citing Whart. Law Lex.); State v. Smith, 7 Conn. 428, 431.

"Punishment" is synonymous with "penalty." And "liability" and "forfeiture" are synonymous with "punishment," in connection with crimes of the highest grade. The punishment or penalty is fixed by the law defining and inhibiting the criminal act. Featherstone v. People, 62 N. E. 684, 687, 194 Ill. 325 (citing Beggs v. State, 122 Ind. 54, 23 N. E. 693; United States v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 398, 5 Sup. Ct. 99, 32 L. Ed. 480).

The terms "penalty" and "punishment" are frequently used as synonyms of each other. Thus, Webster defines "punishment" as pain, suffering, or loss inflicted on a person because of a crime or offense. State ex rel. Reid v. Walbridge, 24 S. W. 457, 458, 119 Mo. 383, 41 Am. St. Rep. 663.

Rev. St. § 1290 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 916], allowing a soldier discharged from service, except by way of "punishment for an offense," transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to that of his enlistment, means a discharge as a punishment inflicted by the judgment of a court-martial or other military authority for a specific offense, and not a discharge for unfitness for service and general bad character, and hence a soldier discharged for the latter cause is entitled to transportation and subsistence, etc. United States v. Kingsley, 11 Sup. Ct. 286, 287, 138 U. S. 87, 34 L. Ed. 896.

The terms "conviction" and "punishment" each have a well-settled legal meaning, and are used in the law to designate certain stages and incidents of a criminal prosecution; and when the Legislature declared, in Laws 1893, p. 60, that for a violation of his official duty a county treasurer should, on conviction thereof, be punished, it manifestly intended that the proceedings against him should be on the criminal, and not the civil, side of the court. Ex parte Howe, 37 Pac. 536, 537, 26 Or. 181.

Under Revenue Act, §§ 287, 288, providing that, for the offenses therein described, a person found guilty may be removed from office, the penalties which might be imposed under such section constituted "punishment," in the sense in which that word is used in Cr. Code, § 208, providing that every person holding any public office who shall be guilty of any palpable omission of duty, malfeasance, etc., where no special provision shall have been made for the punishment thereof, shall be fined, etc., and may be removed from his office. Gunning v. People, 86 Ill. App. 174, 178, 180 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

The punishment or penalty is fixed by the law defining and inhibiting the criminal act. The sentence is the final determination of the criminal court—the pronouncement by the judge of the penalty or punishment as the consequence to the defendant of the fact of his guilt. Featherstone v. People, 62 N. E. 684, 687, 194 Ill. 325.

Civil relief.

The word "punishment," as used in act for the prohibition and punishment of transactions which are calculated to lessen competition in trade, or to influence the price of either imported or domestic articles, would include civil relief to the injured person against the wrongdoer. State v. Schlitz Brewing Co., 59 S. W. 1033, 1039, 104 Tenn. 715, 78 Am. St. Rep. 941.

Deprivation of civil or political right.

The deprivation of any civil right for past conduct is punishment for such conduct. State ex rel. Reid v. Walbridge, 24 S. W. 457, 458, 119 Mo. 383, 41 Am. St. Rep. 645.

In holding that a law requiring a test oath that a person taking the oath had not engaged in rebellion against the United States, assisted or aided its enemies, etc., as a condition of his right to exercise the privileges of a minister of the gospel, was the infliction of a "punishment," as the term is understood in the law relative to ex post facto laws, the court say: "The deprivation of any rights, civil or political, previously enjoyed, may be punishment; the circumstances attending and the causes of the deprivation determining this fact. Disqualification from the pursuit of a lawful avocation, or from positions of trust, or from the privilege of appearing in the courts, or acting as an executor, administrator, or guardian, may also, and often has been, imposed as punishment. We do not agree with the counsel of Missouri that to punish one is to deprive him of life, liberty, or property, and that to take from him anything less than these is no punishment at all. The theory upon which our political institutions rest is that all men have certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that, in the pursuit of happiness, all avocations, all honors, all positions, are alike open to every one; and that, in the protection of these rights, all are equal before the law. Any deprivation or suspension of any of these rights for past conduct is punishment, and can be in no otherwise defined. Some punishments, says Blackstone, consist in exile or banishment, by abjuration of the realm or transportation; others, in loss of liberty by perpetual or temporary imprisonment. Some extend to confiscation by forfeiture of lands or movables, or both, or of the profits of lands for life; others induce a disability of holding offices or employments, being heirs, executors, and the like." Cummings v. State of Missouri, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 320, 18 L. Ed. 356.

Fine.

The word "punishment," as used in a verdict stating that the jury find the defendant guilty of criminal trespass, and assess her punishment at a certain sum, is synonymous with "fine." Beggs v. State, 23 N. E. 693, 694, 122 Ind. 54.

Forfeiture.

See "Forfeit—Forfeiture."

Revocation of license.

The revocation of a liquor license by a municipal court is not a "punishment," within the meaning of that word in the clause of a Constitution defining the limit of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace as to punishment. It is not a punishment in that sense of the word. The license is a mere privilege conferred to pursue a business peculiarly subject to police regulation and control. While the revocation by the court follows the conviction, as a consequence of the violation of an ordinance, it has no more the purpose and effect of punishment than if the license were revoked by the mayor or city council, neither of whom would have the power to impose punishment for the offense. There is a plain distinction between such withdrawal of special privilege, which has been abused, the termination of a mere license, and the penalty which the law imposes as a punishment for the crime. The constitutional provision limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace by the measure of punishment which may be imposed has no reference to any such incidental consequences. State v. Harris, 52 N. W. 387, 388, 50 Minn. 128.

PUNISHMENTS NOT CORPOREAL.

Punishments not corporeal are fines, forfeitures, suspensions, or deprivations of some political or civil rights; deprivation of office, and being rendered incapable to hold office. State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 129, 49 Am. Rep. 218 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict.); State ex rel. Reid v. Walbridge, 24 S. W. 457, 458, 119 Mo. 383, 41 Am. St. Rep. 683.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

"Punitive" damages are the same as "vindictive" and "exemplary" damages.

Chiles v. Drake, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 146, 147, 74 Am. Dec. 406; Murphy v. Hobbs, 5 Pac. 119, 123, 7 Colo. 541, 49 Am. Rep. 366; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly's Adm'r, 38 S. W. 852, 854, 100 Ky. 421; Roth v. Eppy, 80 Ill. 283, 287; Claiborne v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 33 S. E. 262, 263, 46 W. Va. 363. Such damages are sometimes called "smart money." Springer v. J. H. Somers Fuel Co., 46 Atl. 370, 371, 196 Pa. 156; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Prentice, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 263, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. Ed. 97.

Punitive damages are damages over and above such sum as will compensate a person for his actual loss. Miller v. Donovan, 39 N. Y. Supp. 820, 824, 16 Misc. Rep. 453; Murphy v. Hobbs, 5 Pac. 119, 123, 7 Colo. 541, 49 Am. Rep. 366; Springer v. J. H. Somers Fuel Co., 46 Atl. 370, 371, 196 Pa. 156.

Punitive damages are sometimes spoken of as "vindictive damages" and "exemplary damages." They are sometimes referred to as "smart money" and "blood money." They are called "punitive damages" because of the theory that such damages will act as a sort of punishment of the defendant for such wrongdoing; not only as a punishment for past wrongdoing, but to deter the defendant and others in similar business from repeating such wrongdoing in the future. Oliver v. Columbia, N. & L. R. Co., 43 S. E. 307, 320, 65 S. C. 1.

"Punitive," "vindictive," and "exemplary" damages are all synonymous terms. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly's Adm'r, 19 Ky. Law Rep. 69, 78, 38 S. W. 852, 100 Ky. 421.

Punitive damages are awarded to punish a defendant for his evil intent and motive in doing an unlawful act. Fuller v. Redding, 16 Misc. Rep. 634, 636, 637, 39 N. Y. Supp. 109.

Punitive damages are those given in addition to compensation for a loss sustained, in order to punish and make an example of the wrongdoer. Reid v. Terwilliger, 22 N. E. 1091, 1092, 116 N. Y. 530; Bank of Palo Alto v. Pacific Postal Tel. Cable Co. (U. S.) 103 Fed. 841, 847; Roza v. Smith (U. S.) 65 Fed. 592, 596; Times Pub. Co. v. Carlisle (U. S.) 94 Fed. 762, 767, 36 C. C. A. 475; Warner v. Southern Pac. Co., 45 Pac. 187, 189, 113 Cal. 105, 54 Am. St. Rep. 327; Nixon v. Rauer (Cal.) 66 Pac. 221, 222; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 13 Sup. Ct. 622, 626, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. Ed. 463; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Prentice, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 263, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. Ed. 97; Murphy v. Hobbs, 5 Pac. 119, 123, 7 Colo. 541, 49 Am. Rep. 366; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. White, 33 South. 970, 82 Miss. 120; McKnight v. Denny, 47 Atl. 970, 971, 198 Pa. 323; Limbeck v. Gerry, 39 N. Y. Supp. 85, 104, 15 Misc. Rep. 663; Holmes v. Jones, 41 N. E. 409, 411, 147 N. Y. 59, 49 Am. St. Rep. 646; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Watson, 15 Pac. 877, 888, 37 Kan. 773. Such damages rest on the right to punish, and not the right of the injured party to compensation for a wrong done. French v. Deane, 36 Pac. 609, 612, 19 Colo. 504, 24 L. R. A. 387; Costich v. City of Rochester, 73 N. Y. Supp. 835, 838, 68 App. Div. 623.

In actions of tort, where gross fraud, malice, oppression, or wanton, willful, or reckless conduct, or criminal indifference to civil obligations affecting the rights of others, appear, or where legislative enactment authorizes it, the jury may assess punitive damages. Clalborne v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 33 S. E. 262, 263, 46 W. Va. 363; Holmes v. Jones, 41 N. E. 409, 411, 147 N. Y. 59, 49 Am. St. Rep. 646; Times Pub. Co. v. Carlisle, 94 Fed. 762, 767, 36 C. C. A. 475. Punitive damages are damages where a person acts willfully and maliciously to the injury of another. McKnight v. Denny, 47 Atl. 970, 971, 198 Pa. 323; Limbeck v. Gerry, 39 N. Y. Supp. 95, 104, 15 Misc. Rep. 663. Punitive damages are damages which may be awarded where a man wantonly, maliciously, or with utter disregard commits a trespass. Benascoter v. Long, 27 Atl. 674, 677, 157 Pa. 208. Exemplary, punitive, and vindictive damages are allowed in theory when a tort is aggravated by evil motive, actual malice, deliberate violence, or oppression or fraud. Springer v. J. H. Somers Fuel Co., 46 Atl. 370, 371, 196 Pa. 156; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ray, 46 S. W. 554, 555, 101 Tenn. 1. Exemplary or punitive damages, being awarded not by way of compensation to the sufferer, but by way of punishment to the offender and as a warning to others, can be awarded only against one who has participated in the offense. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Prentice, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 263, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. Ed. 97; Day v. Woodworth, 54 U. S. (13 How.) 363, 371, 14 L. Ed. 181, 185; Sheldon v. Baumann, 19 App. Div. 61, 45 N. Y. Supp. 1016; Limbeck v. Gerry, 39 N. Y. Supp. 95, 104, 15 Misc. Rep. 663; Voltz v. Blackmar, 64 N. Y. 440, 444; Costich v. City of Rochester, 73 N. Y. Supp. 835, 838, 68 App. Div. 623; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. Ed. 374; Peoria Bridge Ass'n v. Loomis, 20 Ill. 235, 71 Am. Dec. 263.

Punitive damages are only permissible when "the illegal act for which redress is sought is not only tortious, but is dictated by malice or evil intent, or is attended with circumstances of intentional oppression, insult, or outrage." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Watson, 15 Pac. 877, 880, 37 Kan. 773.

Punitive damages are those damages which may be awarded in actions of tort founded on the malicious or wanton misconduct of the defendant, or upon such neglect as is equivalent to malicious or wanton misconduct. Malsenbacker v. Society Concordia, 42 Atl. 67, 69, 71 Conn. 369, 71 Am. St. Rep. 213 (citing St. Peter's Church v. Beach, 26 Conn. 355; Welch v. Durand, 38 Conn. 182, 4 Am. Rep. 55; Burr v. Town of Plymouth, 48 Conn. 460).

Punitive damages can only be awarded against one who has participated in the offense. Nixon v. Rauer (Cal.) 66 Pac. 221, 222; Warner v. Southern Pac. Co., 45 Pac. 187, 189, 113 Cal. 105, 54 Am. St. Rep. 337; Bank of Palo Alto v. Pacific Postal Tel. Cable Co. (U. S.) 103 Fed. 841, 847; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Prentice, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 263, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. Ed. 97, 101. See, also, Caldwell v. New Jersey Steamboat Co., 47 N. Y. 282; Fisher v. Metropolitan Elevated Ry. Co., 34 Hun. 433, 437; Muckle v. Rochester Ry. Co., 79 Hun. 32, 38, 29 N. Y. Supp. 732, 736; Costich v. City of Rochester, 73 N. Y. Supp. 835, 838, 68 App. Div. 623; Vanderbilt v. Richmond Turnpike Co., 2 N. Y. (2 Comst.) 479, 51 Am. Dec. 315; Cleghorn v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 56 N. Y. 44, 47, 15 Am. Rep. 375, 377.

PUNITORY DAMAGES.

"Punitory damages," as distinguished from "actual damages," are given by way of punishment or example, when it is found that the acts of the defendant tending to the injury of the plaintiff are willful, wanton, or malicious. Grace v. McArthur, 45 N. W. 518, 521, 76 Wis. 641.

The term "punitory damages" is used to designate damages in excess of compensatory damages, which are allowed as a punishment of the wrongdoer. It is synonymous with the terms "exemplary," "vindictive," and "punitive" damages. Murphy v. Hobbs, 5 Pac. 119, 123, 7 Colo. 541, 49 Am. Rep. 366.

Punitory damages are such as may be awarded only when the wrong is shown to be malicious, and are to be assessed by the jury in their sound discretion, without bias or feeling, according to the malignity shown, and in such reasonable sum as will tend to prevent future evils of like kind and degree. Wimer v. Allbaugh, 42 N. W. 587, 588, 78 Iowa, 79, 16 Am. St. Rep. 422.

PUPIL

"Pupil" as used in Rev. St. §§ 2762, 2767, providing that the expenses of maintenance of the blind, deaf, and dumb may be recovered from the parents, etc., of the pupils, the word "pupils" should be limited to persons in attendance at such institutions, notwithstanding the act also names the hospital for the insane, since an inmate of an insane asylum is not a "pupil" within the meaning of the word as used in the statute. Marshall County Com'rs v. Burkey, 27 N. E. 1108, 1109, 1 Ind. App. 563.

PURCHASE

See "Cash Purchase"; "Certificate of Purchase"; "Compulsory Purchase"; "Conditional Purchase"; "Title by Purchase"; "Words of Purchase."

Purchase is called "the possession of lands and tenements that a man hath by his own deed or agreement, unto which possession he cometh, not by title of descent from any of his ancestors or cousins, but by his own deed." H. C. Frick Coke Co. v. Laughead, 52 Atl. 172, 174, 203 Pa. 168 (quoting Litt. § 12).

"Purchase" means the acquisition of property by a party's own act, as distinguished from acquisition by act of law. Kinne v. Kinne (N. Y.) 45 How. Prac. 61, 65 (citing Burrill, Law Dict. 842; Steph. Comm. 355; 4 Kent, Comm. 373).

In law, the acquisition of land by any lawful act of the party, in contradistinction to acquisition by operation of law, is a purchase, and it includes title by deed, by matter of record, and by devise. Cobb v. Webb, 64 S. W. 792, 793, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 467.

"Purchase," in its most enlarged sense, includes "all lawful acquisition to real estate by any means whatever except by descent." Watson v. Donnelly (N. Y.) 28 Barb. 653, 658 (quoting 2 Bl. Comm. 241); Starr v. Hamilton (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 1107, 1111; City of Enterprise v. Smith, 62 Pac. 324, 325, 62 Kan. 815.

"Acquisition by purchase" includes every mode of taking title except descent or inheritance. Stamm v. Bostwick (N. Y.) 40 Hun, 85, 88 (citing Hall v. Hall, 81 N. Y. 134).

"Purchase," in the enlarged and technical sense, may be defined to be a lawful acquisition of real estate by any means whatever except descent. Porter v. Greene, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 571, 575. A lessee is a purchaser as truly as he who becomes grantee in fee. Hence it is held that under Act May 8, 1854 (P. L. 1854, p. 621, § 23, subd. 2), requiring the board of school directors to cause suitable lots to be purchased, and buildings to be erected, purchased, or rented for schoolhouses, and section 33, authorizing the levy of a special tax to be applied solely to the purpose of purchasing or paying for the ground and the erection of school buildings thereon, the levying of a special tax for the purpose of paying rent on a building to be used as a schoolhouse is authorized. Hackett v. Emporium Borough School Dist., 150 Pa. 220, 226, 24 Atl. 627.

The term "purchase," when applied to real estate, means the acquisition of lands by other means than descent or inheritance. As applied to personalty, it is the acquisition of anything for a price by the payment of money or its equivalent. "Sale" and "exchange" are used interchangeably in the law, and as a transmutation of property from one party to another in consideration of some price or recompense in value. By the settled rule of interpretation, in the absence of any expression to narrow its significance, the word "purchase" must be given its ordinary, well-understood meaning as accepted in the daily transactions of the business world, and that carries the right to buy for cash, for any equivalent agreed upon, or on the credit of the buyer. Berger v. United States Steel Corp., 53 Atl. 68, 71, 63 N. J. Eq. 800.

Littleton defines "purchase" to be "the possession of lands * * * which a man hath by his own act or agreement," and says: "In this sense he who takes by gift * * * or by alienation is regarded by the law as a purchaser." Grant v. Bennett, 96 Ill. 513, 535.

The term "purchase," as used in speaking of an estate acquired by purchase, means an acquisition either from an ancestor or any other person, by deed, will, or gift, and not as heir at law. Priest v. Cummings (N. Y.) 20 Wend. 838, 849.

The word "purchase" is a term which includes every mode of acquiring an estate known to the law, except that by which as heir, on the death of his ancestor, becomes substituted in his place as owner by operation of law. Falley v. Gribbling, 128 Ind. 110, 115, 116, 26 N. E. 794 (citing Webst. Dict.).

The term "purchase," in its general signification, and which is the legal sense of it, includes all modes of acquiring property except by descent, and it embraces a devise. McCartee v. Orphan Asylum Soc. (N. Y.) 9 Cow. 487, 491, 18 Am. Dec. 516.

As used in Acts 22d Gen. Assem. c. 85, § 2, relating to "purchase" of lands by aliens, purchase includes every method of acquiring title to real estate, except by descent by operation of law. Bennett v. Hibbert, 55 N. W. 93, 96, 88 Iowa, 155; Burrow v. Burrow, 67 N. W. 287, 288, 98 Iowa, 400; Opel v. Shoup, 69 N. W. 560, 562, 100 Iowa, 407, 37 L. R. A. 583.

The word "purchase," as used in Laws 1875, c. 88, providing that aliens may inherit from a citizen who has purchased and taken a conveyance to real estate, is not used in its popular and commercial meaning as equivalent with to "buy," but in its proper extended legal meaning, as including every mode of acquiring land except by descent. Stamm v. Bostwick, 25 N. E. 233, 122 N. Y. 48, 9 L. R. A. 597. The word "purchase" in such law embraces only lands acquired by purchase, and does not apply to lands descended to deceased, though owned and held at the time of the decease, and the same descends only to such heirs as are citizens. Callahan v. O'Brien, 25 N. Y. Supp. 410, 413, 72 Hun, 216.

There is a clear distinction which has always been recognized in the law of real property between titles acquired by real purchase and titles acquired by descent. The latter vest by operation of law. Laws N. Y. 1845, c. 115, as amended by Laws 1874, c. 261, providing that those aliens who, according to the statutes of New York, would answer to the description of "heirs," may take by descent from any alien resident or any naturalized or native citizen of the United States who has purchased and taken, or who shall thereafter purchase and take, a conveyance of real estate, gives the right of transmission by descent only to resident aliens and naturalized and native citizens, and attaches only to land acquired by purchase. Brannagh v. Smith (U. S.) 46 Fed. 517, 518.

There are two modes only of acquiring a title to land, namely, descent and purchase, purchase including every mode of acquisition known to the law, except that by which an heir, on the death of an ancestor, becomes substituted in his place as owner by the act of law. Stamm v. Bostwick, 25 N. E. 233, 122 N. Y. 48, 9 L. R. A. 597. The heir who takes by descent is not a purchaser in the eye of the law, and does not hold the estate by purchase. The word "purchase," as used in 1 Rev. St. p. 738, § 137, declaring that an unacknowledged and unattested deed shall not take effect as against a purchaser, etc., is used in its legal sense. Strough v. Wilder, 119 N. Y. 530, 535, 23 N. E. 1057, 7 L. R. A. 555.

The power of purchase given a corporation which is prohibited from taking by devise has been construed in its vulgar, and not in its legal, sense, which signifies an acquisition by any other mode than inheritance. Chambers v. City of St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543, 574.

At common law, when a party dies, leaving issue who are aliens, the latter are not deemed heirs at law, but the estate descends to those who have inheritable blood. But an alien may take by purchase. Orr v. Hodgson, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.) 453, 4 L. Ed. 613. The word "purchase," in the above case, is used in its enlarged sense, which includes every other mode of acquiring property as distinguished from descent, and of course includes acquisition by devise. Jones

v. Minoque, 29 Ark. 637, 645 (citing 4 Kent, Comm. pp. 373, 374).

"Purchase," in its most enlarged and technical sense, signifies the lawful acquisition of real estate by any means whatever except by descent. In its more limited sense, "purchase" is applied only to such acquisitions of land as are obtained by trade, or bargain and sale, for money or some other valuable consideration. In common parlance, "purchase" signifies the buying of real estate and of goods and chattels. Purcell v. Smidt, 21 Iowa, 540, 546.

The word "purchased," in a declaration alleging that plaintiff purchased of defendants certain land, held to mean "bought" or "acquired by paying a price." Curtis v. Burdick, 48 Vt. 166, 171.

Where a defendant, claiming to be a bona fide purchaser of certain estate, denied notice of an incumbrance at the time of the purchase, it is held that the word "purchase" is to be understood as meaning when the contract for the purchase was made, and not as referring to the actual signing, sealing and delivery of the conveyance. Dean v. Anderson, 34 N. J. Eq. (7 Stew.) 496, 504.

Acquisition founded on consideration.

The word "purchase," in its popular sense, has the narrower signification of acquisition by voluntary act or agreement for a valuable consideration. City of Enterprise v. Smith, 62 Pac. 324, 325, 62 Kan. 815.

"Purchase," in a popular and confined sense, means acquisition by way of bargain and sale or other valuable consideration, or the transmission of property from one person to another by their voluntary act and agreement, founded on a valuable consideration. Cobb v. Webb, 64 S. W. 792, 793, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 467.

Acquisition for price in money.

The word "purchase," in its common sense, means no more than when a man gives money for anything. Martin v. Strachan, 1 Wils. 66, 72.

The definition of the word "purchase," in common usage, as a verb, as appears by Dr. Webster, is to buy; to obtain property by paying an equivalent in money. Hoyt v. Van Alstyne (N. Y.) 15 Barb. 568, 572. See, also, Hamilton v. Gray, 31 Atl. 315, 316, 67 Vt. 233, 48 Am. St. Rep. 811.

If a person other than the maker or person under obligations to pay a note paid for it in money, it was a purchase and sale. If the consideration for the transfer of such note was other notes, than the transaction was an exchange or barter. Labaree v.

Klosterman, 49 N. W. 1102, 1106, 33 Neb. 150.

As the term "purchase" is used in reference to negotiable paper, it means "to pay a certain sum for it, the standard of which is fixed by the agreement of the parties." Ridgway v. National Bank of New Castle, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 216, 220.

To "purchase" is to obtain or secure as one's own by paying or promising to pay a price. Cheatham v. Bobbitt, 24 S. E. 13, 14, 116 N. C. 343.

The word "purchased," in an allegation that plaintiff purchased certain realty of defendants on reliance on certain false and fraudulent representations, means bought or acquired by paying a price. Curtis v. Burdick, 48 Vt. 166, 171.

As bargain.

Webster defines the verb "to purchase" as to bargain for, and the noun "purchase" as bargain. The word as used in a letter addressed to a party, reciting that a certain party "comes to see you to purchase your cattle in the county adjoining our pasture, or any 'purchase' he may make of you on this trip for joint account for us and himself we have authorized him to do so," etc., means bargain. Halff v. O'Connor, 37 S. W. 238, 241, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 191.

Barter.

Purchase differs from barter only in the circumstance that, in purchasing, the price or equivalent given or secured is money. Hoyt v. Van Alstyne (N. Y.) 15 Barb. 568, 572; Labaree v. Klosterman, 49 N. W. 1102, 33 Neb. 150.

Champerty distinguished.

It is said that the words "purchase" and "sale" have been used indiscriminately in connection with the term "champerty," and that such use has bred confusion in the books. "Champerty" is defined as an agreement by one to take a suit or claim, and at his own expense gather in the spoils, dividing them with the owner. It does not imply a purchase. The word "purchase" means to buy by paying a price, and implies a payment. A purchase is that which is obtained for a price in money or its equivalent. Hamilton v. Gray, 31 Atl. 315, 316, 67 Vt. 233, 48 Am. St. Rep. 811.

Condemnation.

The word "purchase" was used in the title of Laws 1897, c. 82, reading, "An act authorizing and empowering cities * * * to obtain * * * water * * * by purchasing or constructing, owning and operating water-works * * * by said cities," in its popular but restricted sense of acquisition of property by voluntary agreement for a valuable consideration, and not in its technical or enlarged sense of acquisition by all means other than by descent or operation of law. Consequently, the title of the act did not express the subject of the acquisition of waterworks property by condemnation proceedings, and, in consequence, section 12 of the act, which purports to authorize such proceedings, was unconstitutional and void. City of Enterprise v. Smith, 62 Pac. 324, 325, 62 Kan. 815.

Conveyance of fee.

The word "purchase," in a contract for the sale of land, which recited the payment of a certain sum in judgment of a right of way for laying a pipe line, and also the purchase of a piece of property, was construed to show a contract for a conveyance of the fee in the property, and not merely for a limited use for the making of a crossing. Camden & T. Ry. Co. v. Adams, 51 Atl. 24, 26, 62 N. J. Eq. 656.

The phrase "contract for the purchase," as used in Rev. St. Tex. art. 4691, providing that property held under a contract for the purchase thereof belonging to the state shall be considered for all purposes of taxation as the property of the person so holding the same, means a contract to acquire the fee in the land. A contractor who binds himself in writing, mutually executed and delivered by him and the proper state authorities, to erect a specified building for certain clearly designated parcels of land, is to be held as acquiring or holding such lands, after entry permitted and before patent, under a contract for the purchase of such lands. Taylor v. Robinson (U. S.) 34 Fed. 678, 681.

Where there is a covenant in a lease providing that the lessee "shall have liberty to purchase," such phrase is to be construed as meaning that the lessee shall have, if he purchase, a clear title, free from a claim of dower and all other incumbrances. It means the whole title. In re Hunter (N. Y.) 1 Edw. Ch. 1, 5.

Conveyance of right to use.

The word "purchase," when applied to a dramatic production, means that a party has acquired from the author or owner a right to use it on payment of a stipulated royalty. Sanger v. French, 51 N. E. 979, 980, 157 N. Y. 213.

Conveyance in trust.

Every method of coming into an estate except by inheritance is a "purchase," and hence, where property was conveyed in trust for two persons, a contention that they did not become joint tenants because they did not take by purchase was of no merit. Greer v. Blanchard, 40 Cal. 194, 197.

In corporate charter.

A general power given to a railroad company of purchasing, or otherwise receiving and becoming possessed of, holding, and conveying, real and personal estate, is limited, and can only be exercised to effect the purposes for which the road is chartered. Depots, cars, engine houses, tanks, repair shops, houses for bridge and switch tenders, coal and wood yards, are necessary appendages to the operation of such a company. This power to hold land for such purposes will be implied, but not the power to hold lands for dwellings for employes, for car or locomotive factories, coal mines, etc., as it is not necessary to the operation of such a company that it own such property. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. v. Mansfield Tp., 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 510, 513, 57 Am. Dec. 409.

Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations (section 444), lays down the law thus: "Whether a municipal corporation with power to 'purchase and hold real estate' for certain purposes has acquired and is holding such property for other purposes, is a question which can only be determined in a proceeding instituted at the instance of the state. If there is capacity to purchase, the deed to the corporation divests the estate of the grantor, and there is a complete sale; and whether the corporation, in purchasing, exceeded its power, is a question between it and the state, and does not concern the vendor." Hayward v. Davidson, 41 Ind. 212, 215.

"Where a conveyance is made to a county of land for the special use of educational purposes, the heirs of the grantor cannot raise the objection that the deed conveyed property to the county for other and different purposes than those specified in the statute, in an action by them against the county to quiet title to the land. Raley v. Umatilla County, 13 Pac. 890, 891, 15 Or. 172, 3 Am. St. Rep. 142.

Devise.

Title is acquired by purchase when the title is vested in him by his own act or agreement. A title by devise is a title by purchase. Allen v. Bland, 33 N. E. 774, 134 Ind. 78.

The word "purchase," as used in Act 1851, incorporating the Marshall Infirmary, and declaring the same capable of taking, by direct purchase, or otherwise holding, conveying, or disposing of, any real or personal estate, is used in its popular sense, and does not include acquisition by will. Downing v. Marshall, 23 N. Y. 366, 388, 80 Am. Dec. 290.

Municipal corporations empowered to purchase and hold real estate for certain purposes may take title under a will devising land to it for its use forever. Hayward v.

Davidson, 41 Ind. 212, 215; Chambers v. City of St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543, 574.

Discount.

The terms "purchase" and "discount," when used in reference to the transfer of a negotiable paper, are generally used as correlative terms. When a piece of business paper, a valid and subsisting obligation (not an accommodation note made and known to be made for the sole purpose of raising money), is discounted by another at any rate, such discount is held to be a purchase of the paper, and is called sometimes a "discount" and sometimes a "purchase." Niagara County Bank v. Baker, 15 Ohio St. 68, 74, 75.

Gift.

The word "purchase," as used in Rev. St. 1858, c. 18, § 7, providing that the property of all Indians who are not citizens shall be exempt from taxation, except lands held by them by purchase, should be construed in its more limited sense as used in common parlance, meaning the acquisition of lands for a valuable consideration, and not in its technical sense, which is the acquisition of real estate by any means whatever except descent. Lands held by Indians by gift or donation from the original Indian tribe, with the assent of the government of the United States, and by patent from that government, are not held by "purchase" within the meaning of the statute. Farrington v. Wilson, 29 Wis. 383, 392.

Hiring with option to purchase.

The authority of the master of a vessel to "purchase" necessary supplies for the vessel while in a foreign port implies the power to obtain such supplies by hiring with the option to purchase. Negus v. Simpson, 99 Mass. 388, 392.

See "Hold."

Mortgage.

A mortgage of real estate is a "purchase" within the meaning of the recording laws, and a mortgagee is, to the extent of his claim, a purchaser of the land. But this has no application in a state where a mortgage conveys no title. Hitchcock v. Nixon, 47 Pac. 412, 413, 16 Wash. 281.

Partition.

A tenant in common whose interest becomes severed by partition is a "purchaser" of the interests of his co-tenants in the lands set apart to him. Campau v. Barnard, 25 Mich. 381, 382.

Sale implied.

The very idea of purchase imports a sale. Thus, if both the parties to a contract covenant and agree that one of the parties reserves the right to purchase the property of the other at a certain period, it is a fair implication that the other party will sell at such time. In re Water Com'rs of Village of White Plains, 76 N. Y. Supp. 11, 15, 71 App. Div. 544.

The word "purchase," as used in Laws 1902, p. 415, providing that insurance companies shall not purchase stock of any company which has not paid dividends, is not used in the broad sense of "acquired," but in the more usual popular sense, which makes it the correlative of the word "sell." Subscribing for new stock is a very different thing from buying or purchasing stock which has already been issued and is held against the company which issued it. Subscribing for an original issue of stock at the formation of a corporation, or for a new issue made by an existing corporation, is an act in the nature of a loan, and is not a purchase within the statute. Robotham v. Prudential Ins. Co., 58 Atl. 842, 847, 64 N. J. Eq. 673 (citing Commercial Fire Ins. Co. v. Board of Revenue of Montgomery County, 99 Ala. 1, 6, 14 South. 490, 42 Am. St. Rep. 17).

PURCHASE AND HOLD.

The term "purchase and hold," under Act March 17, 1787, enabling the Bank of North America to have, hold, and purchase lands, rents, etc., and also to sell, grant, or convey the same lands, provided that such lands and tenements which the said corporation were thereby able to "purchase and hold" should only extend to such lots of ground and convenient buildings, etc., which they might find necessary for carrying on the business of the said bank, etc., and all such lands and tenements which might be bona fide mortgaged to them as securities for their debts, cannot be construed as precluding a bank from purchasing absolutely lands in a distant county which it does not occupy. "The restriction is that the bank shall not purchase and hold. 'Purchasing' and 'holding' are very different things, and the consequences of each are very different. If the words had been that the bank should neither purchase nor hold, then it could neither have done one nor the other." Leazure v. Hillegas (Pa.) 7 Serg. & R. 313, 319.

PURCHASE MONEY.

"Purchase money" means money paid for the land, or the debt created by the purchase. Austin v. Underwood, 37 Ill. 438, 442, 87 Am. Dec. 254; Eyster v. Hatheway, 50 Ill. 521, 525, 99 Am. Dec. 537; Kneen v. Halin, 59 Pac. 14, 15, 6 Idaho, 621.

The words "purchase money" should be held to mean the original demand for the property sold, as distinguished from a demand on the security given for the payment of the purchase price, and hence the property of the surety on a note given for the purchase price of a horse is not exempt from levy on an execution issued on a judgment recovered on the note. Davis v. Peabody (N. Y.) 10 Barb. 91, 93.

Code 1873, § 3665, provides that the section of the statute of frauds which declares that parol evidence is incompetent to establish a contract for the creation or transfer of any interest in real estate does not apply where the purchase money or any portion of it has been received by the vendor. Held, that the term "purchase money," as there used, means the consideration received, in whatever form it exists; and therefore, where the vendor has received the consideration for his undertaking, the parties are not precluded by the provision in question from showing by parol what the real nature of the agreement was. Devin v. Himer, 29 Iowa, 297, 299 (cited and approved in Stem v. Nysonger, 29 N. W. 433, 434, 69 Iowa, 512); Devin v. Eagleson, 44 N. W. 545, 546, 79 Iowa, 269.

Debt for lumber for house.

The term "purchase money," in a homestead law, does not include a debt for lumber bought and used for building a house on such homestead. The thing to which the homestead right attaches under the statute is not the house, considered alone as personal property severed from the freehold, but the real estate interest of the owner in the land, which carries with it the dwelling as an appurtenance and part of the realty. Any debt contracted in the purchase of this real estate represents in whole or in part the purchase money of the property, but not debts incurred in making improvements or erections thereon of any kind. Smith v. Lackor, 23 Minn. 454, 458.

Judgment for conversion.

The "purchase money" means the money agreed to be paid by the purchaser for the property, and does not include a judgment recovered in an action for taking personal property without the consent of the owner, and converting and disposing of the same. Hoyt v. Van Alstyne (N. Y.) 15 Barb. 568, 572.

Loans for purchase.

Money loaned to be used in purchasing property, and to enable borrower to purchase, and actually used in making the purchase, and paid to the seller as part of the consideration of it, is purchase money. Houleshan v. Rassler, 41 N. W. 720, 721, 73 Wis. 557.

The term "purchase money" is one used to designate the money stipulated to be paid by the purchaser to the vendor. It does not relate, as between the borrower and lender, to money borrowed with which to purchase real estate. Heuisler v. Nickum, 38 Md. 270, 279; Eyster v. Hatheway, 50 Ill. 521, 525, 99 Am. Dec. 537.

PURCHASE-MONEY MORTGAGE.

The effect of a mortgage to secure the purchase money, executed simultaneously with the deed to the vendee, is that the legal title remains with the mortgagee or vendor of the land. Baker v. Clepper, 26 Tex. 629, 634, 84 Am. Dec. 591.

PURCHASE OF PEACE.

Compromise as, see "Compromise."

PURCHASE SCALE.

A partner in a sawmill firm purchased logs for the firm. His partners being dissatisfied, he bought the logs from the firm for his own account, the firm agreeing to saw them at so much per thousand, "purchase scale." Held, that the term "purchase scale" meant the scale made at the time of the purchase, and not the scale made at the mill as the lumber was cut. Hayes v. Cummings, 58 N. W. 46, 47, 99 Mich. 206.

PURCHASER.

See "Bona Fide Purchaser"; "Complete Purchaser"; "First Purchaser"; "Innocent Purchaser"; "Ordinary Purchaser"; "Subsequent Purchaser."

Purchaser or otherwise, see "Otherwise."

As the term is used in the law of sales "purchaser" means the person buying the goods sold. Eldridge v. Kuehl, 27 Iowa, 160, 173.

An allegation that a note was transferred by indorsement before due, and that the indorsee had no knowledge of the usury which existed in the note at the date of its inception, is not an allegation that the indorsee was a bona fide purchaser of the note. It may have been a gift, or it may have been indorsed merely for collection. Dunn v. Moore, 26 Ohio St. 641, 642.

The word "purchaser," as used in Swan & C. St. p. 467, § 8, providing that, if a conveyance of land be not recorded within six months from the date thereof, the same shall be deemed fraudulent as far as relates to any subsequent bona fide purchaser, is not used "in its broadest sense, including every person who acquires land otherwise than by descent, but in its ordinary and original meaning, that the acquisition is for a valuable consideration." Morris v. Daniels, 35 Ohio St. 406, 417.

The word "purchaser," as used in 1 Rev. St. p. 738, § 137, declaring that an unacknowledged and unattested deed "shall not take effect as against a purchaser or incumbrancer until so acknowledged," means one who derives title by purchase from the grantor in the unacknowledged and unattested deed, or from one who himself is mediately or immediately a purchaser from such grantor. One claiming land under a deed from the heirs of a former owner, who had previously conveyed the land by an unacknowledged and unattested deed, is not a purchaser within this definition. Strough v. Wilder, 119 N. Y. 530, 535, 23 N. E. 1057, 7 L. R. A. 555.

The term "purchaser," in Enrollment Law 1892, § 11, providing that a lien of judgment, decree, and forfeited forthcoming bond, shall cease and determine as against purchasers or creditors of the debtor, unless the same shall be enforced by execution within five years, etc., means bona fide purchasers. Fowler v. McCartney, 27 Miss. (5 Cushm.) 509, 515.

The word "purchasers," as used by the trustees of a corporation, authorizing an officer of the corporation to convey land to purchasers at his discretion, was used in its broadest sense, and includes the power to donate land, to execute a conveyance by gift, and all other modes of personal acquisition of real property, except by descent and distribution. State v. Glenn, 1 Pac. 186, 192, 18 Nev. 34, 47.

The term "purchaser," as used in the chapter relating to real property, shall be construed to embrace every person to whom any real estate or interest therein shall be conveyed for a valuable consideration, and also any assignee of a mortgage or lease of other conditional estate. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 10246; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 8993; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2729; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 2242; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 4184; Bank for Savings v. Frank, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. (13 Jones & S.) 404, 410, 411.

Under Rev. St. 1878, §§ 2241, 2242, providing that the term "purchaser" shall be construed to embrace every person to whom any estate or interest in real estate shall be conveyed for a valuable consideration, and also every assignee of a mortgage or lease or other conditional estate, a purchaser of a mortgage is included within the term "purchaser." Butler v. Bank of Mazeppa, 68 N. W. 998, 999, 94 Wis. 351.

Assignee for benefit of creditors.

The term "purchaser," within the rule that purchasers of property without notice of certain equities will be protected, does not include an assignee for the benefit of creditors. In re Goodwin Gas Stove & Meter Co.'s Assigned Estate, 31 Atl. 91, 92, 166 Pa. 296.

The word "purchaser," as used in our statutes, has acquired a well-defined technical signification, and embraces every holder of the legal title to real or personal property where such title has been acquired by deed. There is no exception to this rule. Snyder v. Hitt, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 204 (cited in Halbert v. McCulloch, 60 Ky. [2 Metc.] 456, 79 Am. Dec. 556).

Assignee of mortgage.

An assignee of a mortgage is a purchaser within the recording acts. Larned v. Donovan, 32 N. Y. Supp. 731, 733, 84 Hun, 533.

As assign.

See "Assigns."

As creditor.

See "Creditor."

Devisee.

The word "purchaser," as used in Rev. St. 75, § 17, providing that it shall be lawful for any widow entitled to dower in any lands of which her husband died seised, or any heirs or guardian of any minor child entitled to any estate in the lands, or any purchaser thereof, to apply to the orphans' court for the appointment of commissioners to assign dower, does not include a devisee. In re Hopper, 6 N. J. Eq. (2 Halst. Ch.) 325.

Judgment creditor.

A judgment creditor is not a purchaser of an interest in his debtor's land, within the meaning of the recording act of 1775. "No man," it is said in Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. Wms. 491, "can call a judgment creditor a purchaser; nor has such a creditor any right to the land. He has neither jus in re, nor ad rem. And therefore, though he release all his right to the land, he may extend it afterwards. All that he has by the judgment is a lien on the land; nor is he deceived or defrauded, though the cognizor of the judgment had before made 20 mortgages of his real estate." Cover v. Black, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 493; Heister's Lessee v. Fortner (Pa.) 2 Bl. 40, 46, 4 Am. Dec. 417; Rodgers' Lessee v. Gibson (Pa.) 4 Yeates, 111, 112.

As legal representative.

Purchaser at execution sale as, see "Legal Representative."

Mortgagee.

A mortgagee is not a purchaser of an estate, though for the purposes of the recording acts he is sometimes treated as one. He is simply a lien creditor, a holder of security with money, and his assignee takes the mortgage subject to all differences, unless he inquires of the mortgagor and learns that there are none, and he is in no better condition than his assignee. Hoffsomer v. Smith (Pa.) 1 Kulp, 348, 349 (citing Michener v. Cavender [Pa.] 2 Wright, 338).

A mortgagee is not a purchaser of an estate. He is simply a lien creditor, holding the mortgage as security for the payment of the bonds therein recited. Riddle v. Hall, 99 Pa. 116, 122.

A mortgagee is a purchaser within the recording act. Larned v. Donovan, 32 N. Y. Supp. 731, 733, 84 Hun, 533; Dorr v. Meyer, 70 N. W. 543, 544, 51 Neb. 94; Raymond v. Whitehouse, 93 N. W. 292, 294, 119 Iowa, 132.

The term "purchaser," in the law of fraudulent conveyances, relative to the right of bona fide purchasers, includes a mortgagee. Jones v. Light, 30 Atl. 71, 73, 86 Me. 437.

Under Code Iowa, § 2442, providing that "the widow of a nonresident alien shall be entitled to the same rights in the property of her husband as a resident, except as against a purchaser from decedent," mortgagees of the property of such nonresident alien are purchasers, within the meaning of the section. In re Gill's Estate, 44 N. W. 553, 554, 79 Iowa, 296, 9 L. R. A. 126.

The act of 1811 gave a landlord a right to distrain the goods of his tenant or subtenant; but, if the tenant should have made a bona fide sale of his goods, they were not liable to distress. In construing this statute it was held that a mortgage by the tenant of his goods was a sale within the meaning of the act, and that a bona fide mortgagee, both before and after forfeiture, was a purchaser. Snyder v. Hitt, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 204 (cited in Halbert v. McCulloch, 60 Ky. [3 Metc.] 456, 79 Am. Dec. 556).

Purchaser at judicial sale.

A purchaser at a judicial sale is a purchaser within the recording act of Illinois, providing that an unrecorded deed shall take effect as to subsequent purchasers without notice after the time of filing the same for record. McNitt v. Turner, 83 U. S. (16 Wall.) 352, 361, 21 L. Ed. 341.

Vendee in contract of sale.

Under Rev. St. § 2242, providing that the word "purchaser," as used in section 2241, which declares conveyances of real estate not recorded to be void as against subsequent purchasers in good faith, etc., shall be construed to embrace every person to whom any estate or interest in real estate shall be conveyed for a valuable consideration, and also every assignee of a mortgage or lease or conditional sale, a person who holds a mere executory contract for the sale or purchase of land is not a purchaser. First Nat. Bank of Stevens Point v. Chafee, 73 N. W. 318, 319, 98 Wis. 42.

A purchaser, ex vi termini, is one who has acquired the title, and the term cannot in legal propriety be applied to one who claims under an unexecuted contract to convey. Gilpin v. Davis, 5 Ky. (2 Bibb) 416, 418, 5 Am. Dec. 632.

PURCHASER FOR VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

The term "purchaser for a valuable consideration" is defined by the court in Fullenwider v. Roberts, 20 N. C. 420, as for "a fair and reasonable price according to the common mode of dealings between buyers and sellers"; or, as said by Pearson, C. J., in Worthy v. Caddell, 76 N. C. 82: "The party assuming to be a purchaser for valuable consideration must prove a fair consideration, not up to the full price, but a price paid which would not cause surprise, or cause any one to exclaim: 'He got the land for nothing. There must have been some fraud about it.'" Collins v. Davis, 43 S. E. 579, 581, 132 N. C. 106.

PURCHASER FOR VALUE.

A mortgage taken for a precedent debt does not constitute the mortgagee a purchaser for value as against a person acquiring an interest in the property prior to the giving of the mortgage and subsequent to the incurring of the indebtedness. Reeves v. Evans (N. J.) 84 Atl. 477, 478.

An indorsee of a negotiable instrument, who takes it before maturity in part payment of a pre-existing debt and credits it thereon, is a purchaser for value in the due course of business. Smith v. Thompson (Neb.) 93 N. W. 678, 679.

PURCHASER IN GOOD FAITH.

See "Good Faith."

PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE.

The phrase "without notice," as used in Mill & V. Code Tenn. § 2890, providing that instruments not registered shall be void "as to existing or subsequent creditors or bona fide purchasers from the makers without notice," qualifies bona fide purchasers, and is not grammatically a qualification of the word preceding. Therefore a creditor of the grantor is not affected by an unregistered instrument, though he had notice of its existence. Southern Bank & Trust Co. v. Folsom (U. S.) 75 Fed. 929, 934, 21 C. C. A. 568.

The words "without notice," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2469, which provides that the receiver's title to personal property extends back by relation in certain cases, but not so as to "affect the title of a purchaser in good faith without notice and for a reasonable consideration," mean without actual notice, or without a knowledge of such circumstances as may be deemed equivalent to notice. Zimmer v. Miller, 40 N. Y. Supp. 886, 890, 8 App. Div. 556.

A bona fide purchaser and a purchaser without notice stand on the same footing of equal protection, under Rev. St. 1879, § 2507, providing that conditional sales shall be void as to subsequent purchasers in good faith and creditors. Coover v. Johnson, 86 Mo. 533, 539.

PURE.

See "Chemically Pure"; "Technically Pure."

The word "pure" means wholesome, or ordinarily pure, as used in Act 1874, requiring water companies to furnish pure water. Commonwealth v. Towanda Waterworks (Pa.) 15 Atl. 440, 442.

PURE ACCIDENT.

In the discussion of questions of liability for negligence, the term "pure accident" is uniformly employed in contradistinction to culpable negligence, to indicate the absence of any legal liability. A purely accidental occurrence may cause damage without legal fault on the part of any one. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Cutts, 49 Atl. 673, 674, 95 Me. 162 (citing Conway v. Lewiston & Auburn Horse R. Co., 90 Me. 199, 205, 38 Atl. 110).

PURE CHARITY.

A pure charity is one which bears a portion of the burden that would otherwise fall on the public, and which gratuitously cares for persons who would otherwise be a public charge; and hence a charitable institution which requires a payment of an admission fee and the making of a will in its favor by the applicant is not a pure charity. In re Keech's Estate, 7 N. Y. Supp. 321, 322.

An act exempting institutions organized for pure charity from taxation applies to any association to improve the condition of the poor, which dispenses its benefits without any charge whatever, and keeps a place where money is disbursed to the needy. It is not necessary that it should have a house where the poor are lodged, but it is sufficient if it has a place or office where it transacts its business, consisting of the dispensation of alms without discrimination. In re Lenox's Estate, 9 N. Y. Supp. 896, 896.

PURE PLEA.

A pure plea in equity must clearly and distinctly aver all the facts necessary to render it a complete equitable defense to the case made by the bill, so far as the plea extends. It should be direct and positive, and not state matters by way of argument, inference, or conclusion. Where its allegations, being taken as true, did not, so far as the plea purports to extend, make out a full and complete defense, or where the necessary facts are to be gathered by inference alone, it will not be sustained. Da Costa v. Dibble, 24 South. 911, 912, 40 Fla. 418.

PURE SWEET WINE.

"Pure sweet wine" is fermented grape juice only, and shall contain no other substance of any kind whatever, introduced before, at the time of, or after fermentation, and such sweet wine shall contain not less than four per centum of saccharine matter, which saccharine strength may be determined by testing with Balling's saccharometer or must scale, such sweet wine, after the evaporation of the spirit contained therein, and restoring the sample tested to original volume by additional water: provided, that the addition of pure boiled or condensed grape must, or pure crystallized cane or beet sugar to the pure grape juice aforesaid, or the fermented product of such grape juice prior to the fortification provided for for the sole purpose of perfecting sweet wines according to commercial standard, shall not be excluded by the definition of pure sweet wine as aforesaid: provided, further, that the cane or beet sugar so used shall not be in excess of ten per centum of the weight of wines to be fortified. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2171.

PURE TAX.

A pure tax is a burden imposed by the sovereign power on all property and persons alike, and compensated for by the equal protection which all receive from such power. Dressman v. Farmers' & Traders' Nat. Bank, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 1013, 1014, 38 S. W. 1052, 1053, 100 Ky. 571, 36 L. R. A. 121.

PURE WINE.

As used in an act relating to the adulteration of wines, the words "pure wine" mean the fermented juice of the undried grapes, without the addition thereto of water, sugar, or any foreign substance whatever. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 4200-57.

PURELY.

In connection with the phrase "purely public charity," and in its ordinary sense, the word "purely" means completely, entirely, unqualifiedly. White v. Smith, 42 Atl. 125, 126, 189 Pa. 222, 48 L. R. A. 498.

In the statute exempting from taxation institutions devoted to merely pure public charity, it is held that the word "purely" is equivalent to the word "wholly." Episcopal Academy v. Taylor, 25 Atl. 55, 56, 150 Pa. 565; Trustees Kentucky Female Orphan School v. City of Louisville, 36 S. W. 921, 923, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A. 119.

PURELY CHARITABLE INSTITUTION.

A "purely charitable institution," within the constitutional provision exempting certain classes of property from taxation, may be said to be an institution organized for the purpose of rendering aid, comfort, and assistance to the indigent and defective, open to the public generally, conducted without a view to profit, and supported and maintained by benevolent contributions. State v. Bishop Seabury Mission, 95 N. W. 882, 90 Minn. 92.

PURELY CHARITABLE PURPOSE.

A Masonic lodge building, the first two stories of which are rented, and the third used as a lodge hall, is not used for purposes purely charitable, within Const. art. 10, § 6, and Rev. St. 1889, § 7504, exempting buildings in cities and towns from taxation, when used exclusively for purposes purely charitable, notwithstanding the rents received or paid on the building went to pay a debt on the building. There is a very material difference between what is denominated a public charity and what is meant by the words "for purposes purely charitable." In Delaware County Institute of Science v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. 163, it is said: "No corporation or institution is a purely public charity which is not under control or supervision of the public authorities, or at least subject to public visitation, or is founded and endowed so as to give the general public under reasonable restriction an absolute right to receive its benefits, and, in case of failure of managers, to follow it and compel compliance therewith by application to the court. In the case of the dissolution of such a charity, its property must vest in the public authorities for charitable uses." An institution may be used for purposes purely charitable by distributing alms to the poor, needy, and afflicted of certain sects or nationalities, or the members of certain organizations, and their widows and children. Fitterer v. Crawford, 57 S. W. 532, 533, 157 Mo. 51, 50 L. R. A. 191.

PURELY MANUFACTURING PURPOSES.

"Purely manufacturing purposes," as used in 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. p. 2032, § 3, cl. 4, providing that the capital stock of all companies and associations, except those organized for purely manufacturing purposes, shall be assessed by the state board of equalization, does not apply to a corporation or ganized to carry on a general business of distilling liquors, and to deal in the same, and also to engage in dealing in cattle and other live stock, and in malting and dealing in malt. Distilling & Cattle-Feeding Co. v. People, 43 N. E. 779, 780, 161 Ill. 101.

PURELY PUBLIC CHARITY.

A public charity is defined as whatever is done or given gratuitously in relief of the public burdens or for the advancement of the public good. When the public is the beneficiary, the charity is public; and when no private or pecuniary return is reserved to the giver, or to any particular person, but all the benefit resulting from the gift or act goes to the public, it is a purely public charity. Kentucky Female Orphan School v. City of Louisville, 36 S. W. 921, 923, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A. 119 (citing Episcopal Academy v. City of Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565, 25 Atl. 55). Thus a religious denominational school, which does not limit the admission of children of members of its own denomination, though it gives a preference to such children, and is not maintained for pecuniary profit, is within the meaning of the term. Episcopal Academy v. City of Philadelphia, 25 Atl. 55, 56, 150 Pa. 565.

The Ohio act of 1864, exempting from taxation institutions of purely public charity, means buildings or property used exclusively for charitable objects. If an institution embraces other objects and uses, its buildings for other purposes, as, for instance, renting with a view to profit, it is not an institution of purely public charity. Cleveland Library Ass'n v. Felton, 36 Ohio St. 253, 259.

Const. art. 9, § 1, exempting from taxation "institutions of purely public charity," cannot be construed to include an academy of learning whose chief source of maintenance is tuition fees. It is not enough that the institution be founded and endowed by public or private charity, but it must be substantially maintained by public or private charity. Appeal of City of Philadelphia (Pa.) 15 Atl. 683.

An institution of science, whose object is the promotion and diffusion of general and scientific knowledge among the community at large, and the establishment and maintenance of a library and museum, but the benefits of which are restricted to members, except upon conditions prescribed by a board of managers, is not a "purely public charity" within the meaning of the Pennsylvania Constitution, exempting such institutions from taxation. Delaware County Institute of Science v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. 163, 167.

An asylum established by will for the maintenance and education of white female orphan children, open to the public, but to which the children of a certain religious faith were to be given a preference, and which asylum was to be under the religious auspices of such particular religious faith, is a "purely public charity," within the meaning of Const. art. 9, § 1, authorizing the exemption from taxation of institutions of purely public charity. Burd Orphan Asylum v. School Dist. of Upper Darby, 90 Pa. 21.

Under Const. art. 9, § 1, empowering the Legislature to exempt from taxation institutions of "purely public charity," an asylum for the maintenance and education of white female orphan children of not less than four years or more than eight, first, who shall have been baptized in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the city of Philadelphia; second, the same class of children baptized in said church in the state of Pennsylvania; third, all other white female orphan children between the said years, without respect to any other description or classification, except that at all times and in every case the orphan children of clergymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church shall have the preference—is a purely public charity. The word "purely," in this connection, is not to have its largest and broadest signification. It is not contended that a charity, to be purely public, must be open to the whole public, nor to any considerable portion of the public. Without doubt an asylum for the support of 50 blind men, or an equal number of paupers, would not be obnoxious to the objection that it was not purely public. A charity for the maintenance of disabled seamen, or of aged and infirm stonemasons, resident in the city of Philadelphia, would undoubtedly be a purely public charity; and so, also, would a charity for the maintenance of the children of such persons. As said in Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229: "When a charity is public, the exclusion of all idea of private gain or profit is equivalent in effect to the force of 'purely' as applied to a public charity in the constitution." Burd Orphan Asylum v. School Dist. of Upper Darby, 90 Pa. 21, 28, 29, 30.

A Young Men's Christian Association, organized to endeavor to bring young men under moral and religious influences, to aid them in selecting suitable boarding places and securing employment, and by other means to surround them with Christian influences, and actually engaging in such work, and also furnishing instruction, keeping open libraries, gymnasiums, lists of boarding houses, etc., and membership in which is nontransferable, giving no property right, the membership fee being merely nominal, is an institution of "purely public charity," within Const. § 170, exempting property of such institutions from taxation. Commonwealth v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n, 76 S. W. 522, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 940.

Const. art. 9, § 1, providing that the General Assembly may exempt from taxation "institutions of purely public charity," means charities that are purely and entirely public. The phrase is intended to exclude those charities which are private, or only quasi public, such as many religious aid societies are. A library held in trust as the property of a corporation for the advancement of knowledge and literature in a city, not used in any way for the purpose of private profit, no distinction being made between the parties and the general public, except member's privilege of commutation by annual payment for the hire of books, which payment is for the increase and preservation of the library, the corporation is an "institution of purely public charity," within the meaning of the Constitution. Philadelphia Library Co., v. Dobough (Pa.) 12 Phila. 284, 285.

Const. § 170, providing that institutions of purely public charity shall be exempt from taxation, does not include a Masonic lodge, which provides for its members and their families, or the wives and orphans of those who are dead, for it is a private charity. The words "purely public" need no definition. They do not include any restricted or private charities. In Morning Star Lodge No. 26, I. O. O. F., v. Hayslip, 23 Ohio St. 144, the court said: "A charitable or benevolent association, which extends relief only to its own sick and needy members, and to the widows and orphans of deceased members, is not 'an institution of purely public charity.'" In City of Philadelphia v. Masonic Home of Pennsylvania, 160 Pa. 572, 28 Atl. 95, 23 L. R. A. 545, 40 Am. St. Rep. 736, the question was whether the property of the Masonic Home, open only to those who were Masons, was exempt; and the court said: "When the eligibility of those admitted is thus determined, it seems to us that the institution is withdrawn from public, and put in the class of private, charities. A charity may restrict its admissions to a class of humanity, and still be public. It may be for the blind, the mute, those suffering under special diseases, for the aged, for infants, for women, for men, or for different callings or trades by which humanity earns its bread; and as long as the classification is determined by some distinction which involuntarily affects or may affect any of the whole people, although only a small number may be directly benefited, it is public. But when the right to admission depends upon the fact of voluntary association with some particular society, then a distinction is made which concerns not the public at large. The public is interested in the relief of its members, because they are men, women, and children, not because they are Masons. A home without charge, exclusively for Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Catholics, or

7 Wds. & P.—2

Methodists, would not be a public charity; but then, to exclude every other idea of 'public' as distinguished from 'private,' the word 'purely' is prefixed by the Constitution. This is to intensify the word 'public,' not 'charity.' It must be purely public; that is, there must be no admixture of any qualification for admission, heterogeneous, and not solely relating to the public." City of Newport v. Masonic Temple Ass'n, 56 S. W. 405, 406, 108 Ky. 333, 49 L. R. A. 252.

PURGATORY.

Purgatory is defined by an authoritative expositor of the church's creed to be "a state of suffering after this life, in which those souls are for a time detained who depart this life after their deadly sins have been remitted as to the stain and guilt, and as to the everlasting pain that was due to them, but who have, on account of those sins, still some debt of temporal punishment to pay, as also those souls which leave this world guilty only of venial sins. In purgatory these souls are purified and rendered fit to enter into Heaven, where nothing defiled enters." Harrison v. Brophy, 59 Kan. 1, 3, 4, 51 Pac. 883, 40 L. R. A. 721 (quoting Catholic Belief [Lambert's Am. Ed.] 196).

PURGE.

If a disselector take from the dissee a naked release of all his interest in the land, no relation arises between them by which one is placed in subordination of the other, and the disselector is not thereby purged. Fox v. Widgey, 4 Me. (4 Greenl.) 188.

PURGERY.

A purgery is a room in which hogsheads full of sugar are placed in a standing or upright position for the purpose of being drained. Meyer v. Queen Ins. Co., 6 South. 899, 900, 41 La. Ann. 1000.

PURLOIN.

Purloin means to commit larceny, and hence, when used in a statute, it is synonymous with "steal." McCann v. United States, 2 Wyo. 291, 298.

PUROLINE.

Puroline and gasoline as sold and used for illuminating purposes, are both petroleum products, and both are gas generating fluids. From the testimony of chemists and other experts, and of dealers in such articles, it appears that the difference of danger between puroline and gasoline of 74° gravity, is so slight and insignificant that it is hardly measurable, or even perceptible. It also appears that in the trade orders for puroline are frequently and almost usually filled by delivering 74° gasoline, and circulars issued and distributed all over the state by different dealers in these articles contained the statement that 74° gasoline is of the same gravity as puroline. In both, the danger is not from explosion while burning in lamps, but from handling in the proximity of a light, on account of the gas which they liberate and generate from packages which are not air-tight, and which gas is inflammable. Socola v. Chess Carley Co., 1 South. 824, 826, 39 La. Ann. 344.

PURPART.

A purpart is that part of an estate which, having been held in common, is by partition allotted to any one of the parties to it. The use of the word implies a common concurrent holding, whether in possession or remainder. Seiders v. Giles, 21 Atl. 514, 516, 141 Pa. 93 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. 395).

PURPORT.

The word "purport," as used in speaking of the purport of an instrument, means the substance thereof as it appears on the face thereof to every eye that reads it. Dana v. State, 2 Ohio St. 91, 93 (citing Wharton).

Purport imports what appears on the face of the instrument. McClellan v. State, 32 Ark. 609, 611. It is usually intended to express the substance and effect as appears from the face of the instrument, in distinction from "tenor," which means a copy or exactness. State v. Callendine, 8 Iowa, 288, 296.

A statute imposing a penalty for passing any false or forged instrument issued or purporting to have been issued by any corporation or company duly authorized for that purpose is designed to describe paper appearing on its face to be such as was calculated to defraud, and not to require proof of the actual legal existence and authority of the corporation whose name was used. Snow v. State, 14 Wis. 479, 483.

"Purporting," in a statute making it a felony for any person to counterfeit the lawful issue of any bank or corporation, or notes or bills purporting to be of any bank or corporation, means appearing on the face of the instrument. Van Horne v. State, 5 Ark. 349, 353; State v. Harris, 27 N. C. 287, 294.

Purport means the design or tendency, the meaning or import when used in the expression, "An instrument purports," etc. State v. Burling, 102 Iowa, 681, 684, 72 N. W. 295, 296 (citing State v. Sherwood, 90 Iowa, 560, 58 N. W. 911, 48 Am. St. Rep. 461).

As design.

The term "purport," as used in Code 1873, § 3917, defining the crime of forgery, "if any person, with intent to defraud, falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit any note, being or purporting to be the act of another, by which any pecuniary demand or obligation, or any right or interest in or to any property whatever, is, or purports to be created," etc., means the design or tendency, meaning or import. Under the wording of the statute, the instrument need not in fact create any liability. The design of the instrument merely is material, and, if it be intended to create a legal liability on its face, it may be the subject of forgery within the statute. State v. Sherwood, 58 N. W. 911, 912, 90 Iowa, 550, 48 Am. St. Rep. 461.

As indicating invalidity.

The word "purporting," as used in an instruction in a will contest in which an instrument is spoken of as one "purporting" to be a codicil, cannot be construed to intimate that the instrument was not a codicil, or to cast discredit upon its validity. Smith v. Henline, 51 N. E. 227, 232, 174 Ill. 184.

As resembles.

An instrument purports to be a particular instrument which it more or less resembles, and this definition applies to a part, as well as the whole, of an instrument. Reg. v. Keith, 29 Eng. Law & Eq. 558, 560.

As substance.

The purport of an instrument means the substance of it, as it appears on the face of it, in the eyes of all who read it. Roberts v. State, 16 South. 233, 234, 72 Miss. 110; State v. Fenly, 18 Mo. 445, 454; Thomas v. State, 2 N. E. 808, 812, 103 Ind. 419; State v. Chinn, 44 S. W. 245, 246, 142 Mo. 507; Fogg v. State, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 392, 394.

The purport of an instrument means the substance of it, as it appears on its face to every person who might read it, and means the apparent, and not the legal, import. State v. Pullens, 81 Mo. 387, 392.

By setting forth an instrument according to its "purport and effect" in an indictment, only the import or substance of the instrument is indicated, and not an exact copy. State v. Bonney, 34 Me. 383, 384.

"Purport," as used in an indictment for libel, charging a person with an unlawful and malicious libel "according to the purport and effect, in substance, among other things, as follows," is not equivalent to "tenor," and does not necessarily import a strict recital of the words of the libel. The purport of a message or communication may be, and, indeed, generally is, stated without the use of the identical words in which it is conceived. It is equivalent to "substance." Commonwealth v. Wright, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 46, 65.

"The purport" of an instrument means the substance as it appears on its face, and has a signification different from "tenor," which imports an exact copy. State v. Atkins (Ind.) 5 Blackf. 458; Commonwealth v. Wright, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 46, 65.

The word "tenor" imports an exact copy—that is, set forth in words and figures—whereas "purport" means only the substance or general import of the instrument. Commonwealth v. Wright, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 46, 65.

The word "purporting," in an indictment charging that defendants did create and put in circulation, and did issue, etc., divers notes, bills, etc., purporting that money would be paid to the receiver and holder thereof, is a word of technical meaning. Buller, J., in delivering the opinion of the judges in Reading's Case, 2 Leach, 590, said: "It is clear that, where an instrument is thereby set forth, the description that it purports a particular fact necessarily means that what is stated as the purport of the instrument appears on the face of the instrument itself." Again, in Gilchrist's Case, 2 Leach, 657, Buller, J., in delivering the opinion of the judges, said: "Old cases have given rise to much learning and argument on the words 'purport' and 'tenor,' and the books are full of distinctions as to the meaning of these words and the necessity of using the one or the other of them in indictments where written instruments are to be used. But among the many cases upon this subject I can find no judicial determination that the purport and the tenor should both be stated in any case whatever. Purport means the substance of an instrument, as it appears on the face of it to every eye that reads it. Tenor means the exact copy of it." Russell says: "But with respect to the word 'purport,' it should be well observed that it imports what appears on the face of the instrument, as a want of attention to this meaning of the word has been fatal to many indictments." 2 Russ. Cr. 345 (*364). Archbold, in his Criminal Pleadings (page 58), says: "If an indictment describe a written instrument as purporting to be so and so, the instrument, when produced in evidence, must appear upon the face of it to be what it is described as purporting to be; otherwise the defendant will be acquitted for variance." In the case of King v. Jones, Doug. 289, Lord Mansfield says: "The representations of the prisoner to Royner, after the note was made, could not alter the purport, which is what appears on the face of the instrument itself." The indictment in the case at bar can only be sustained by the production and giving in evidence of a note, bill, check, or ticket which upon its own face declares that money will be paid to the receiver or holder thereof, or that it will be received in payment of debts. State v. Page, 19 Mo. 218-217.

"Purport" means the substance of an instrument, as it appears on the face of it to every eye that reads it, and "tenor" means an exact copy of it; and, where an instrument is stated according to its tenor, the purport of it must necessarily appear. Fogg v. State, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 392, 394; Myers v. State, 101 Ind. 379, 381. Where an indictment charges the forgery of a certain order, purporting to have been made and executed by one W., and following this charge the order is set out in hæc verba, and according to its tenor it was signed W., the purport clause will be regarded as surplusage, and disregarded. Myers v. State, 101 Ind. 379, 381. See, also, State v. Johnson, 26 Iowa. 407, 413, 96 Am. Dec. 158.

The word "purpose," from the Latin "propositum," means "that which a person sets before himself as an object to be reached or accomplished; the end or aim to which the view is directed in any plan, manner, or execution; end, or the view itself; design; intention." An amendment to a bill which limits or extends its scope, but embraces no new matter not germane, is not within Const.

art. 5, § 21, providing: " * * No bill shall be so altered or amended on its passage * * * as to change its original purpose." Loftin v. Watson, 32 Ark. 414, 420 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

"Purpose," as used in an ordinance of the city of Wilmington, Del., prohibiting any person from occupying any land or building for the purpose of producing or preparing meat for sale or market, but providing that it should not apply to any farmer, unless such farmer should exercise the business of farming for the purpose of producing or preparing meat, means "that which a person sets before himself as an object to be reached or accomplished; the end or aim to which the view is directed in any plan, measure, or exertion; intention; design; end; effect; consequence." Homewood v. City of Wilmington (Del.) 5 Houst. 123, 127.

The purpose of legislation is to be determined by its natural and reasonable effect, and not by what may be supposed to have been the motives upon which the legislators acted. People v. Roberts, 19 Sup. Ct. 70, 76, 171 U. S. 658, 43 L. Ed. 323.

As effect.

"Purpose," as used in a statute requiring a mortgage to express the purpose for which it is given, means the effect which the instrument is intended to have upon the rights of the contracting parties and the status of the subject-matter. Ford v. Burks, 37 Ark. 91, 94.

As intent.

"Intent and purpose," as used in an indictment charging that defendants conspired for the unlawful, malicious, and felonious purpose, and with fraudulent and malicious intent and purpose, to obtain, etc., is equivalent to "design." State v. Grant, 53 N. W. 120, 121, 86 Iowa, 216.

PURPOSELY.

"Purposely" means on purpose. State v. Dolan, 50 Pac. 472, 473, 17 Wash. 499.

"Purposely" is defined by Webster to mean, "by purpose or design; intentionally; with premeditation." Whitman v. State, 22 N. W. 459, 460, 17 Neb. 224.

"Purposely," as used in an instruction that, if defendant purposely killed deceased after reflection, etc., he was guilty of murder in the first degree, meant intentionally or willfully. Lang v. State, 4 South. 193, 195, 84 Ala. 1, 5 Am. St. Rep. 324.

"Purposely," as used in Act 1843, defining murder in the second degree as a homicide committed purposely and maliciously, etc., should be construed to mean intentionally and designedly, and therefore to make the act murder in the second degree, the intention or design or purpose to perpetrate it must be formed before the act is committed. The word "purposely," however, should not be construed as synonymous with "premeditatedly" or "deliberately." Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231, 262.

The word "purposely," in a declaration against a railroad company for killing plaintiff's intestate alleging that defendant purposely violated the speed ordinance, did not charge that defendant purposely killed the intestate; the allegation amounting to no more than a killing through negligence. Hancock v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 51 N. E. 369, 372, 21 Ind. App. 10.

The epithets "unfairly and secretly computed," "unjustly and unfairly attempted," and "artfully and purposely framed," used in regard to the official acts of the cashier of a bank, did not necessarily imply moral obliquity, and therefore are not slanderous per se. Kerr v. Force (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 386, 396.

The words "unlawfully, feloniously, purposely, and with premeditated malice," in an information for assault and battery, as descriptive of the manner in which the alleged assault and battery was perpetrated, carry with them and import that it was done in either a rude manner, or in an insolent manner, or in an angry manner, and, if not, that it was done in all of them. If it was done unlawfully, and also feloniously, purposely, and with premeditated malice, it was done in an angry manner; and more, because malice is defined to mean enmity of heart, malevolence, ill will, a spirit desiring harm or misfortune to another, a disposition to injure others, unprovoked malignity of spirit. Such an allegation sufficiently describes the offense created by Rev. St. 1894, §§ 1983, 1984, providing that whoever in a rude, insolent, or angry manner unlawfully touches another is guilty of assault and battery. Chandler v. State, 39 N. E. 444-447, 141 Ind. 106.

PURPOSES OF COMMERCE.

Where owners of land abutting on a navigable stream accept grants from the state conveying to them land under water, conditioned on their erecting docks thereon for the purpose of promoting commerce, the phrase "purposes of commerce" means a public and general commerce; and hence, on the erection of docks thereon, the owners conferred on the public the right to pass over their abutting land as far as necessary to go to and from the docks. Thousand Island Steamboat Co. v. Visger, 83 N. Y. Supp. 325, 331, 86 App. Div. 126.

PURPOSES OF NAVIGATION.

See "Actual Purposes of Navigation."

PURPOSES OF PROFIT.

A mutual benefit society, which had a joint stock fund raised by subscriptions, portions of which were advanced to members by way of a loan at a certain rate of interest on competitions by bids, but the dealings of which society were exclusively with the members and for the benefit of members, was not a "society established for purposes of profit," within St. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, § 2, and therefore did not need to be registered. Bear v. Bromley, 11 Eng. Law & Eq. 414, 416.

PURPRESTURE.

"'Purpresture' cometh of the French word 'pourprise,' which signifieth a close, or enclosure; that is, where one encroacheth or maketh several to himself that which ought to be common to many." Co. Litt. 277b; Co. Magna Charta, 38, 272 (quoted in State v. Kean, 45 Atl. 256, 69 N. H. 122, 48 L. R. A. 102).

An invasion of the king's private property in the soil covered by water is a purpresture. It is laid down by all old writers that it might be committed either against the king, the lord of the fee, or any other subject. A purpresture is not a nuisance, unless it also interferes with navigation. Cobb v. Lincoln Park Com'rs, 67 N. E. 5, 7, 202 Ill. 427, 63 L. R. A. 264, 95 Am. St. Rep. 258.

A purpresture is an invasion of the right of property in the soil, while the same remains in the king or in the people. A purpresture may ripen into a title, because the sovereign power might make a grant of the property in question. Timpson v. City of New York, 5 N. Y. App. Div. 424, 430, 39 N. Y. Supp. 248.

"A purpresture signifies an enclosure; that is, when one encloseth and maketh that several to himself which belongs to many. It is when there is a house builded or an enclosure made of any part of the king's domain, or of a highway or a common street or public water." City of Columbus v. Jaques, 30 Ga. 506, 512 (quoting 3 Co. Litt.); State v. Kean, 45 Atl. 256, 69 N. H. 122, 48 L. R. A. 102; Moore v. Jackson (N. Y.) 2 Abb. N. C. 211, 213; People v. Park & O. R. Co., 18 Pac. 141, 143, 76 Cal. 156.

Purpresture is a clandestine encroachment and appropriation on land or waters that should be common or public. Coke, Litt. 277b (cited in Hoey v. Gilroy, 14 N. Y. Supp. 159, 161); People v. Mould, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1032, 1033, 24 Misc. Rep. 287; Hoey v. Gilroy, 14 N. Y. Supp. 159, 161.

An intrusion on the right of property in tide water and in the soil thereof is designated at common law a "purpresture"; but the word in its ordinary acceptation at the present day means any encroachment on the sovereign right within a highway, river, street, harbor, or wharf. Sullivan v. Moreno, 19 Fla. 200, 228.

A purpresture is an invasion of the right of property in the soil while the same remains in the people. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Shultz, 22 N. E. 564, 565, 116 N. Y. 382; The Idlewild (U. S.) 64 Fed. 603, 605, 12 C. C. A. 328.

A purpresture is defined to be an encroachment upon lands, or rights and easements incident thereto belonging to the public, and to which the public have a right of access or of enjoyment, which includes encroachments upon navigable streams. United States v. Debs (U. S.) 64 Fed. 724, 740.

A purpresture is an inclosure or appropriation for private use of that which belongs to the public. Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Applegate, 38 Ky. (8 Dana) 299, 33 Am. Dec. 497.

A purpresture is an inclosure by a private person of a part of that which belongs to, and ought to be open and free to the enjoyment of, the public at large. City of Grand Rapids v. Powers, 50 N. W. 661, 89 Mich. 94, 14 L. R. A. 498, 28 Am. St. Rep. 276. The appropriation by an individual of a part of a public common may therefore be a purpresture; and, as it would constitute an invasion of a public right, it would be proper that proceedings for its abatement should be taken on behalf of the state. Attorney General v. Evarts Booming Co., 34 Mich. 462, 472. The remedy to prevent its erection or to compel its removal from waters within the evident flow of the tide of a navigable stream is suit on behalf of the people by the Attorney General. People v. Mould, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1032, 1033, 24 Misc. Rep. 287.

"A purpresture is an encroachment by any person, by building or otherwise, on a street or some part of it, or such an inclosure, impediment, or obstruction of it thereby as to amount to the exclusion and hindrance of the citizens and the public from the full and beneficial use and enjoyment of it as a public street." Drake v. Hudson River R. Co. (N. Y.) 7 Barb. 506, 548.

A permanent encroachment upon public streets for a private use is a purpresture, and is in law a nuisance. People v. Harris, 67 N. E. 785, 789, 203 Ill. 272, 96 Am. St. Rep. 304.

A purpresture is any permanent or habitual obstruction of a public street, although room enough be left to pass. Hoey v. Gilroy, 14 N. Y. Supp. 159, 161.

A railroad through a city, not occupying any part of the road or street exclusive ly, is not a purpresture. Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Applegate, 38 Ky. (8 Dana) 299, 83 Am. Dec. 497.

An unauthorized inclosure of a part of a highway may also be a purpresture and a public wrong, whether the highway be one by land or by water. Attorney General v. Ewart Booming Co., 84 Mich. 462, 472.

A purpresture is a clandestine encroachment or appropriation upon land or water that should be common or public. Any permanent or habitual obstruction of a public street is included. Hoey v. Gilroy, 14 N. Y. Supp. 159, 161.

Encroachment on navigable water.

An unauthorized encroachment on the soil of the shore is termed a "purpresture," though not injurious, nor a public nuisance, and may be enjoined and prohibited on the information of the Attorney General. Revell v. People, 52 N. E. 1052, 1056, 177 Ill. 468, 43 L. R. A. 790, 69 Am. St. Rep. 257.

At the common law any encroachment upon a public stream was considered to be a purpresture; that is to say, the making of that several and private which ought to be common to many. A crib or pier, erected in the waters of the harbor of New York, is a public nuisance and purpresture, unless the party erecting the same is by some competent power authorized to build it at such place. People v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 396, 399, 84 Am. Dec. 351.

The term "purpresture" includes the act of a person in constructing a wharf on the Hudson river between high-water mark and the navigable part of the stream, without first obtaining a grant of such land. People v. Mould, 55 N. Y. Supp. 453, 454, 37 App. Div. 35.

Any erection under tide waters without license is an encroachment on the property of the sovereign, or, as it is termed in the language of the law, a "purpresture," which he may remove at pleasure, whether it tends to obstruct navigation or otherwise. Eisenbach v. Hatfield, 26 Pac. 539, 542, 2 Wash. St. 236, 12 L. R. A. 632.

A purpresture exists where a riparian owner has unlawfully intruded into the water of a navigable stream beyond the point of navigability, to fill up the bed of the stream beyond that point for the sole purpose of extending his possessions, so as to obstruct and interfere with the public right of navigation, and the public would have a right to abate it as a public nuisance; for it would give no rights to the person who made it, and it would not forfeit or destroy his riparian rights as they existed before. Union Depot St. Ry. & Transfer Co. of Stillwater v. Brunswick, 17 N. W. 626, 629, 31 Minn. 297.

A partial obstruction of a navigable stream by rafts of lumber moored in it is such an obstruction, irrespective of any question of the degree of inconvenience caused. Moore v. Jackson (N. Y.) 2 Abb. N. C. 211, 213.

A structure built on the bed of a lake, not in aid of navigation, such as a building in which to store and repair boats, is a purpresture. Askew v. Smith, 85 N. W. 512, 514, 109 Wis. 532.

A purpresture is not a term that applies to a wharf built upon the shore of a navigable stream by the proprietor of the soil, but only so when carried so far into the channel, or so far beyond his title, as to become a nuisance. This doctrine is as well settled law as that a purpresture is per se a nuisance. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Lawrence (N. Y.) 2 Hun, 163, 181.

Nuisance distinguished.

A purpresture is an invasion of the right of property in the soil, while the same remains in the king or the people. A nuisance is an injury to the common right of the public to navigate the waters. There is, therefore, a wide difference between the two, and, though they may coexist, yet either may exist alone without the other. People v. Vanderbilt, 26 N. Y. 287, 292.

Purpresture is a particular kind of nuisance. An unauthorized invasion of the rights of the public to navigate the water flowing over the soil is a public nuisance, and an unauthorized encroachment on the soil itself is known in law as a purpresture. People v. Gold Run Ditch & Mining Co., 4 Pac. 1152, 1155, 66 Cal. 138, 56 Am. Rep. 80.

There is a wide difference between a purpresture and a nuisance. Although they may coexist, yet either may exist alone without the other. The Idlewild, 64 Fed. 603, 605, 12 C. C. A. 328.

Every purpresture is not a nuisance. It may or may not be. People v. Park & O. R. Co., 18 Pac. 141, 143, 76 Cal. 156.

PURSE.

Distinguished from bet, see "Bet."

A "purse, prize, or premium" is ordinarily some valuable thing, offered by a person for the doing of something by others, into the strife for which he does not enter. He has not a chance of gaining the thing offered, and, if he abide by his offer, he must lose it, and give it over to some of those contending for it. Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532, 539; Morrison v. Bennett, 52 Pac. 553, 557, 20 Mont. 560, 40 L. R. A. 158; Hankins v. Ottinger, 47 Pac. 254, 255, 115 Cal. 454, 40 L. R. A. 76; Porter v. Day, 37 N. W. 259, 261, 71 Wis. 296. The term does not include betting on horse races. Morrison v. Bennett, 52 Pac. 553, 557, 20 Mont. 560, 40 L. R. A. 158.

Rev. St. 1846, c. 40, § 3, enacts that every person who shall contribute or collect any moneys, goods, or things in action for the purpose of making up a purse, plate, or other valuable thing to be raced for by any animal contrary to law shall forfeit a certain sum. A certain association under its articles of association held a horse fair for the purpose of testing the speed of horses by trotting, etc. Handbills were distributed specifying the various races and the respective premiums to be awarded. The premium fund was raised by assessment on the owners of horses and by an admittance fee to the fair grounds. It was held that "premium" was but another name for "purse," "stakes," or "reward" to the owner of the animal which should excel in speed, and the mode of raising this premium came within the express prohibitions of the third section. Bronson Agricultural & Breeders' Ass'n v. Ramsdell, 24 Mich. 441, 444.

PURSER.

A purser of a ship is the fiscal agent of the owners. Spinette v. Atlas S. S. Co. (N. Y.) 14 Hun, 100, 105.

PURSUANCE.

See "In Pursuance Of."

PURSUANT.

A decree reciting that it was made pursuant to the last will and testament of the deceased and the laws of the state import that the court did determine and adjudge the party's rights to the property then being distributed as given and fixed both by will and the laws of the state. Ward v. Congregational Church, 29 Atl. 770, 772, 66 Vt. 490.

PURSUANT TO LAW.

"Pursuant to law," as used in a statute providing that witnesses in attendance at a federal court pursuant to law are entitled to witness fees, etc., should not be construed to exclude those who attend voluntarily and without being subpoenaed. The object of the law is to reimburse the prevailing party for the necessary expenses of his evidence, and whether the witnesses come voluntarily or under a compulsory writ is immaterial. Eastman v. Sherry (U. S.) 37 Fed. 844, 845; Hanchett v. Humphrey (U. S.) 93 Fed. 895, 896; Spaulding v. Tucker (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 899, 900; Lillenthal v. Southern Cal. R. Co. (U. S.) 61 Fed. 622, 623.

"Pursuant to law," as used in Code Cal. § 848, providing that for each day's attendance in court pursuant to law a witness is entitled to a certain amount per mile going and coming, etc., means to attend court upon the requirement of or in obedience to the law, all contained under the obligatory requirements or pursuant to the commands of law, and does not include a voluntary attendance. Haines v. McLaughlin (U. S.) 29 Fed. 70, 71.

PURSuing.

"Pursuing or engaging in the occupation of selling liquors," which is taxable under the statutes, does not characterize the act of making one sale of intoxicating liquors. Merritt v. State, 19 Tex. App. 435, 436.

PURSUIT.

See "Agricultural Pursuits"; "Fresh Pursuit"; "Immediate Pursuit"; "Industrial Pursuit"; "Mechanical Pursuit."

"Pursuit," as used in the general incorporation statutes of Oregon, authorizing the formation of corporations for the purpose of engaging in any lawful enterprise, business, pursuit, or occupation, is not restricted in meaning to a scheme for making money, but includes any object consistent with the interest of society, and may engage the attention of men and invite their co-operation; and a corporation may lawfully be organized under such statute for the purpose of guaranteeing bonds of an educational institution to strengthen its credit. Maxwell v. Akin (U. S.) 89 Fed. 178, 180.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS.

The term "pursuit of happiness," as used in the statute declaring that all men have certain inalienable rights, and providing that among them are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, includes the right of a citizen to follow his individual preference in the choice of an occupation. "The right of every man to choose his own occupation, profession, or employment, though not expressly guaranteed by the Constitution, is included in the right to the pursuit of happiness." Ruhrat v. People, 57 N. E. 41, 43, 185 Ill. 133, 49 L. R. A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30 (citing Black, Const. Law, p. 411).

The right to the pursuit of happiness, guaranteed by the Constitution, includes the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation in any manner not inconsistent with the rights of others. Hooper v. California, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 210, 211, 213, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297.

The pursuit of happiness includes the right of private contract. State v. Kreutzberg, 90 N. W. 1098, 1101, 114 Wis. 530, 58 L. R. A. 748, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934.

The clause of the Declaration of Independence affirming the right of men to pursue happiness means "the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity or develop their faculties, so as to give them the highest enjoyment." Butchers' Union Slaughter House, etc., Co. v. Crescent City Live Stock Landing, etc., Co., 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 660, 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. Ed. 585.

PURVEYANCE.

The prerogative of "purveyance," in England, was that "whereby the crown enjoyed the right of buying up provisions and other necessities for the use of the royal household at an appraised valuation, and in preference to all others, even without the consent of the owner." At one time it prevailed pretty generally throughout Europe, and was regulated in England by Magna Charta, but is now abolished there. In re Barre Water Co., 20 Atl. 109, 110, 62 Vt. 27, 9 L. R. A. 195.

PURVIEW.

The meaning usually attached to the term "purview" by writers on law seems to be "the enacting part of a statute, in contradistinction to the preamble; and we think the provisions of the act repealing all acts or parts of acts coming within its purview should be understood as repealing all acts in relation to all cases which are provided for by the repealing act, and that the provisions of no act are thereby repealed in relation to cases not provided for by it. Payne v. Conner, 6 Ky. (3 Bibb) 180, 181; Patterson v. Caldwell, 58 Ky. (1 Metc.) 489, 493; Grigsby v. Barr, 77 Ky. (14 Bush) 330, 339; Commonwealth v. Watts, 2 S. W. 123, 126, 84 Ky. 537; State v. Reynolds, 9 N. E. 287, 289, 108 Ind. 353.

Where a statute repeals a prior statute so far as the prior statute comes within the purview of the later one, the word "purview" applies to the enacting part, the body or subject of the act, in contradistinction from the other parts thereof, such as the preamble, the saving, and the proviso; and hence the repeal is not confined merely to such parts of the former act as are inconsistent with the provisions of the repealing act. The San Pedro, 15 U. S. (2 Wheat.) 132, 139, 4 L. Ed. 202.

In construing the meaning of a statute providing that all laws and parts of laws coming within its purview and meaning were thereby repealed, the Supreme Court of Tennessee reasons as follows: "It cannot be perceived that the addition of the word 'purview' makes any difference in the meaning of the Legislature. Lord Coke informs us that the purview is all that part of an act which lies between the caption and the repealing clause. Thus it seems that it means nothing more than the body of the act. But what is the meaning of the body or purview of the act? * * * All such parts of former acts as were within the purview or body of this act are repealed. The word 'purview,' in this place, is a mere expletive. Either that, or the word 'meaning' must be useless. * * * If the provisions of a subsequent statute are commensurate with the evils redressed by the former, it operates as an entire repeal; otherwise, it is a repeal pro tanto. In this view of the subject it is essential that not only every part of the same act should be taken into consideration, but all statutes made on the same subject, in order that it may be seen how far one statute repeals another, as well as to ascertain the meaning of the Legislature by comparing different parts of the same and other acts on the same subject. Lord Coke, in Foster's Case, 11 Coke, 63, 64, lays down the rule to be that, if a subsequent act can be reconciled with a former one, it shall not be a repeal." Smith v. Hickman's Heirs, 3 Tenn. (Cooke) 330, 337.

The word "purview," as used in the repealing clause of an act stating that all laws within the purview of this act are repealed, etc., means within the limit or scope of the act. Hirth v. City of Indianapolis, 48 N. E. 876, 878, 18 Ind. App. 673.

PURVIEW OF THE RULE.

By purview of the rule is meant the spirit of the rule. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. United States, 23 Sup. Ct. 120, 122, 187 U. S. 315, 47 L. Ed. 194.

PUSHERS.

The means for ejecting horse-shoe nails from the die after they have been sheared are termed "pushers." Bensley v. Northwestern Horse Nail Co. (U. S.) 26 Fed. 250, 254.

PUSHING.

As the term is used in railroad parlance in relation to the switching of cars, "pushing" means the act of an engine in the rear of a car in pushing it into the position which it is to occupy. Mark v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 20 N. W. 131, 132, 32 Minn. 208.

PUT.

A will directing the executors to "put" a sum on interest, to be well secured, means to loan money at the legal rate of interest on the security of a mortgage or judgment. The testator had in his mind a loaning on real estate and in no other mode, for that is its common and ordinary acceptance, and is the sense in which it is received by the mass of the community in which the testator resided, which was an agricultural district and among farmers. In common parlance, neither among agriculturalists, traders, nor dealers in stock do the words "put on interest" convey the idea of a purchase of bank or other corporation shares. In re Nyce's Estate (Pa.) 5 Watts & S. 254, 257, 40 Am. Dec. 498.

The words "put and keep," in a lease in which the landlord agrees to put and keep a roof in repair, do not imply a confession that it is out of repair, in the absence of any circumstances to indicate a probability of its being out of repair, and therefore the covenant does not impose on the landlord the duty of repairing without notice to him of the necessity of repairs. Thomas v. Kingland, 14 N. E. 807, 108 N. Y. 616.

The word "put," as used in a lease giving the lessor a lien as security for the payment of the rent on all goods, implements, stock, fixtures, tools, and other personal property put on the leased premises, is used in its broad general sense, and includes crops planted on the premises, and also includes the hay, though, while in the form of growing grass, it was a part of the realty. McCaffrey v. Woodin, 65 N. Y. 459, 469, 22 Am. Rep. 644.

PUT IN CIRCULATION

The term "issued or put in circulation," in a statute providing that no banking association shall issue or put in circulation any bill or note, have a restricted, special, and almost technical meaning, relating exclusively to the moneyed currency of the country, and, in the language of the general banking law, to circulating notes in the similitude of banking notes. Curtis v. Leavitt (N. Y.) 17 Barb. 309, 341.

PUT INTO HIS HANDS.

"Put into his hands," as used in a declaration in an action against a constable for neglecting and refusing to serve a writ, the allegation being that the writ was put into the hands of the constable, means that the writ was offered to the constable and made subject to his control, and would include, in case the constable is unable to manually take the writ, the putting of it into his pocket, or in fact in his possession in any way. Patten v. Sowles, 51 Vt. 388, 391.

PUT OUT.

The words "ejected, expelled, put out, and removed" relating to trespass, may be satisfied under some circumstances by proof that the house was destroyed in the plaintiff's absence, and by his being prevented from returning to it and re-entering it because finding it existing no longer as a habitable house, but not so where the pulling down and expelling was contemporaneous. Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 779.

PUTS HIMSELF UPON THE COUNTRY.

The form, "And of this he puts himself on the country," used as the concluding part of an answer under the old system of pleading, means that the pleader desired to have the truth of the alleged facts tried by a jury. Bell v. Yates (N. Y.) 33 Barb. 627, 629.

PUTTING AWAY.

Where the master of a parish apprentice proposed to him that he should go to a farm in a different parish occupied by the master's sister, and the apprentice assented and worked for the sister for four years, there was a "putting away" of the apprentice without the consent of the justices, within the meaning of St. 56 Geo. III, c. 139, § 9. Rex v. Inhabitants of Shipton, 8 Barn. & C. 88.

Where a parish apprentice, bound for seven years to A., served him for four years, when A. agreed with B., who carried on the same business in another parish, that the pauper should work for B., B. to pay A. a certain sum out of the pauper's earnings, there was a "placing out or putting away" of the apprentice within St. 57 Geo. III, c. 139 § 9, and no settlement was gained by the service under B. Reg. v. Inhabitants of Wainfleet All Saints, 11 Adol. & El. 656.

PUTTING CHARACTER IN ISSUE.

An action putting character in issue is an action in which the character of the parties, or some of them, is of particular importance. Actions for criminal conversation, slander, etc., are of such a character. Ward v. Herndon (Ala.) 5 Port. 382, 386.

"Putting character in issue" is a technical expression, which does not mean simply that the character may be affected, but that it is of particular importance in the suit itself, as the character of the plaintiff in an action of slander, or that of a woman in a suit for seduction. In those excepted cases character affects the amount of the recovery. The jury was by law bound to consider it in assessing damages, and it is in that sense that it is said that "the nature of the action puts the character in issue." Stark v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co., 61 S. W. 669, 674, 160 Mo. 529.

"Putting character in issue," as was said in Porter v. Seiler, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 424, 62 Am. Dec. 341, "is a technical expression, which does not signify merely that personal reputation is incidentally involved in the consequences or results of the action, but that the action in its nature directly involves the question of character." American Fire Ins Co. v. Hazen, 1 Atl. 605, 608, 110 Pa. 530.

PUTTING IN FEAR.

The words "putting in fear," as used in the definition of robbery as the felonious and forcible taking of the property of another from his person against his will by violence or by putting in fear, is equivalent to constructive violence, and the demands of the law are met by proof of fear excited with respect to apprehended injuries to the person, property, or character. Though there need be no great degree of terror or fright for personal safety excited in the person robbed, the fact must be attended with such circumstances of terror or intimidation, such threatening by word, gesture, or manner, as in common experience is likely to create an apprehension of danger, and induce one to part with his property for the safety of his person. The terror which would lead the person robbed to apprehend an injury to his character was never deemed sufficient to support an indictment for robbery, except in the particular instance of its being excited by means of insinuations against or threats to destroy the character by accusations of sodomical practices. Simmons v. State, 25 South. 881, 882, 41 Fla. 816.

Property obtained by a trick, or by threats of illegal arrest, criminal prosecution, or insinuation against character, is not a taking by putting in fear, within the meaning of Rev. St. 2398, defining robbery. Simmons v. State, 41 Fla. 316, 318, 25 South. 881, 882.

In a robbery in the first degree it is indispensable that the putting in fear be a fear of some immediate injury. State v. Howerton, 59 Mo. 91, 92.

PUTATIVE.

Reputed; supposed; commonly esteemed. Applied in Scotch law to creditors and proprietors. 2 Kames, Eq. 105, 107, 109; Black, Law Dict.

PUTATIVE FATHER.

In bastardy proceedings the sworn father is called the "putative father," because he is supposed to be the father of the child. State v. Nestaval, 75 N. W. 725, 72 Minn. 415.

The word "father," in the chapter relating to the support of the poor, includes the putative father of an illegitimate child. Code Iowa, 1897, § 2250.

PUTATIVE MARRIAGE.

Mourlon defines a putative marriage as "a marriage which is in reality null, but which has been contracted in good faith by the two parties, or by one of them." Such marriages are so far valid as to impose a civil liability upon either party to the other party, if innocent. In re Hall, 70 N. Y. Supp. 406, 410, 61 App. Div. 268.

In El Diccionario de Legislacion putative matrimony is defined to be a marriage which, being null on account of some dissolving cause, is held notwithstanding for a true marriage, because of its having been contracted in good faith by both or one of the spouses in ignorance of the dissolving cause. Smith v. Smith, 1 Tex. 621, 623, 46 Am. Dec. 121.

PUTS.

As used in reference to transactions on boards of trade, a "put" is defined to be the privilege of delivering or not delivering the thing sold. Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, 234, 55 Am. Rep. 414; Pixley v. Boynton, 79 Ill. 351, 358; Wolcott v. Heath, 78 Ill. 433, 437; Osgood v. Bauder, 39 N. W. 887, 890, 75 Iowa, 550, 1 L. R. A. 655; Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co., 43 N. E. 774, 778, 160 Ill. 85, 31 L. R. A. 529; White v. Barber, 8 Sup. Ct. 221, 230, 123 U. S. 392, 31 L. R. A. 243.

A speculative option, where the object of the parties is not a sale and delivery of the goods, but a settlement in money on differences, is commonly called a "put." In re Chandler (U. S.) 5 Fed. Cas. 443, 444.

"Put" is a term used by stockbrokers to designate a contract by which one of the parties thereto purchases a privilege to deliver certain stock at any time within a certain period and receive a certain sum therefor; "so that, in case the market should decline to any point below that figure, the person owning the privilege under the protection thus secured could deliver the stock at the agreed price." Hopper v. Sage, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. (15 Jones & S.) 77, 78.

"Puts," or the privilege, for a nominal consideration, of delivering a large quantity of grain within a certain time at a specified price, where no delivery of the grain was contemplated by the parties, and they expected to settle the differences as established at future prices, are simple wagers, and void as against public policy. Ex parte Young (U. S.) 30 Fed. Cas. 828, 831.

The true idea of an option is what are called, in the peculiar language of the dealers, "puts" and "calls." A "put" is defined to be the privilege of delivering or not delivering the thing sold, and a "call" is defined to be the privilege of calling for or not calling for the thing bought. Carroll v. Holmes, 24 Ill. App. 453, 456 (citing Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, 55 Am. Rep. 414).

"Put" is distinguished from "call," which is the privilege of calling for or not calling for the thing bought. Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co., 43 N. E. 774, 778, 160 Ill. 85, 31 L. R. A. 529.

QUACK.

To speak of a physician in his professional capacity as a "quack" is to call him a mere pretender, a person boasting of attainments which he does not possess, and is libelous per se. Elmergreen v. Horn, 91 N. W. 973, 974, 115 Wis. 385.

QUAD BALLOTS.

"Quad ballots" has been used to designate official ballots on which unauthorized marks are affixed, as if made by the printer's quad. The marks do not import design, and are by themselves just as consistent with mistake as design. People v. Dutchess County Sup'rs, 32 N. E. 242, 245, 135 N. Y. 522.

QUADROON.

In the French and Spanish American colonies and in Louisiana, the descendant of a mulatto—that is, a person of an equal mixture of European and negro blood—and a white person is called a "quadroon." The term has never been adopted in South Carolina, but such a person is legally included in the term "mulatto" or "person of color." State v. Davis (S. C.) 2 Bailey, 558, 559.

QUALIFY.

As the word "qualify" is used in Const. § 5, requiring state officers to "qualify," etc., it means the taking of the oath or affirmation also constitutionally provided for. Archer v. State, 22 Atl. 8, 9, 74 Md. 443, 28 Am. St. Rep. 261. See, also, People v. McKinney, 52 N. Y. 374, 380.

The word "qualify," in St. Okl. 1890, § 3821, providing that officers shall qualify and enter upon the duties of their office on a certain date, unless otherwise provided, does not mean that an officer is required both to take the oath of office and give bond, as there is no statute requiring such officer to give bonds. Logan County Com'rs v. Harvey, 52 Pac. 402-404, 6 Okl. 629.

"Qualify," in its legal use, means to take an oath to discharge the duties of an office; and when an executor named in a will alleges that he desires to qualify as such, and the court orders that letters testamentary issue to him upon his complying with the requisites of the law, they are to be issued to him when he shall have taken oath well and faithfully to discharge the duties of his trust. Hale v. Salter, 25 La. Ann. 320, 324.

In holding Purity of Elections Act, § 4, requiring a successful candidate to swear to a statement of his expenses as a qualification to taking office to be a violation of Const. art. 20, § 3, describing the oath which a successful candidate shall take, and providing that no other qualification shall be taken, the court quotes State v. Bemenderfer, 96 Ind. 374, 376, as saying: "The term 'qualify,' as used in the statute, does not mean possessed of the necessary political, mental, and moral endowments, but means the acts performed after election, as taking the official oath and executing an official bond. 'Eligible' means capable of being chosen, while 'qualified' refers to the performance of the acts which the person chosen is required to perform before he can enter into office. Abbott, in defining the word 'qualified,' says it means to take the oath and give the bond required by law from an administrator, executor, public officer, or the like, before he may enter into the discharge of his duties." Bradley v. Clark, 65 Pac. 395, 396, 133 Cal. 196.

"Qualify," as used in Const. art. 3, § 12, providing that all judicial officers shall hold their offices until their successors shall have qualified, means to take such steps as the statute requires before the person elected or appointed to an office is allowed to enter on the discharge of its duties, such as to file a sufficient bond, to be approved by the proper officer, and to take and subscribe the official oath. State v. Albert, 40 Pac. 286, 287, 55 Kan. 154.

The word "qualify," as used in Comp. Laws, § 1393, providing that "probate judges in their respective counties are authorized to qualify wills by receiving the evidence of the witnesses who were present at the time of the making of the same and all other acts in relation to the investigation of the validity thereof," is equivalent to the word "probate," and is intended to convey the same meaning. Bent v. Thompson, 5 N. M. 408, 422, 23 Pac. 234.

QUALIFICATION.

See "Certificate of Qualification."

Qualifications relate to the fitness or capacity of the party for a particular pursuit or profession. Webster defines the term "qualifications" to mean "any natural endowment or any acquirement which fits a person for a place, office, or employment, or enables him to sustain any character with success." Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 319, 18 L. Ed. 356; Meffert v. State Board of Medical Registration and Examination, 72 Pac. 247, 252, 66 Kan. 710.

Qualification in one sense means fitness for; a doing of some act as a condition of taking or holding office; qualify; to make oath to any fact; to take oath of office before entering into its duties. Cent. Dict. Qualification is that which qualifies a person and renders him admissible to or acceptable for a place or an office or appointment; and, as used in Const. art. 12, declaring that the oath to be taken by public officers shall be the only oath or test required as a qualification for office, is used in the sense of something to be done before taking office as a condition of holding it, in the sense of taking an oath of office, not in the sense of fitness. People v. Palen, 26 N. Y. Supp. 225, 228, 74 Hun, 289.

Elector.

The words "any person not having all the qualifications of an elector," used in Rev. St. 1858, c. 169, § 42, providing that inspectors of election who shall knowingly receive the vote of any person not having all the qualifications of an elector shall be guilty of a crime, mean any person disqualified, incapacitated, or disentitled to vote from any of the causes fixed by law, and refer to the condition of the person at the time his vote is received. Bryne v. State, 12 Wis. 519, 527.

Instruction.

"Qualification," as used in reference to one instruction as a qualification of another, does not imply contradiction, but a limitation or modification, so that, where one instruction is a contradiction of another, one of them must be untrue, and can only have the effect of confusing the minds of the jury. People v. Kennett, 45 Pac. 994, 996, 114 Cal. 18.

Jury duty.

"The definition and touchstone of qualification for jury duty, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution and its amendments, was the ancient phrase, 'Liber et legalis homo.' It vested the qualifications on a threefold basis, freedom, law, and humanity; in other words, the juror must be free, lawful, and of the human race. This definition was rigid as far as freedom and humanity were concerned, but elastic as to lawfulness." There is nothing in the provisions in the Constitution and laws of the United States preserving to the citizen the right of juries, grand and petit, as known to the common law, which renders invalid a statute allowing unmarried women to serve on juries. Hayes v. Territory, 5 Pac. 927, 2 Wash. T. 286.

Office.

"Qualification for office," as defined by the most approved lexicographers, is the endowment or accomplishment that fits for an office; having the legal requisites; endowed with qualities fit or suitable for the purpose. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Seay, 64 Mo. 89, 101, 27 Am. Rep. 206.

"Qualification," with reference to an office, has a double meaning, one of which is the endowment or acquirement which renders one eligible to place or position, and the other relates to the act whereby he is installed in his office. Hyde v. State, 52 Miss. 665, 672.

QUALIFIED.

See "Duly Qualified"; "Failure to Qualify."

"Qualified" has a double sense, and may mean a condition or status of an officer, and is also often used to describe his act of taking an oath. People v. Crissey, 91 N. Y. 616, 636.

Const. art. 5, § 2, as amended November 5, 1867, declares that no person who has ever voluntarily borne arms against the United States shall be qualified to hold office until such disability be removed by a law passed by two-thirds of the Legislature. Held, that the word "qualified" refers to the holding of the office, and not to the election, and hence one not qualified at an election would be entitled to enter upon the office if his disability were removed before the issuance of the certificate. Privett v. Bickford, 26 Kan. 52, 53, 40 Am. Rep. 301.

The word "qualified," when applied to any person elected or appointed to office, shall be construed to mean the performance by such person of those things which are required by law to be performed by him previous to his entering upon the duties of his office. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 4971.

As not disqualified.

In the Constitution, the words "qualified" and "qualifications" are employed in their most comprehensive sense, to signify not only the circumstances that are requisite to render a citizen eligible to office or that entitle him to vote, but also to denote an exemption from all legal disqualifications for either purpose. Commonwealth v. Jones, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 725, 744.

Eligible distinguished.

See "Eligible."

As taking oath.

The word "qualified," in 2 Rev. St. p. 438, § 67, providing that the power of a former sheriff does not cease until the new sheriff has qualified and given the proper security, means nothing more than taking the oath of office. "If the term 'qualified' was intended to embrace everything necessary to be done by the sheriff in order to entitle him to enter on the duties of his office, then it was unnecessary to say anything about the giving of security." Curtis v. Kimball (N. Y.) 12 Wend. 275, 276.

The word "qualified," in Const. art. 3, § 2, providing that the Governor shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor shall be chosen and qualified, means that such successor shall take the oath of office. Ex parte Smith, 8 S. O. (8 Rich.) 495, 519, 520.

As taking oath and giving bond.

"Qualified," as used in Act Jan. 31, 1852, providing that the office of clerk pro tempore of the court of common pleas terminates whenever the successor elected at the regular election shall have qualified, imports nothing more than that the person elected has complied with the requirements of the statute by giving bond and taking the oath of office. State v. Neibling, 6 Ohio St. 40, 46.

"Qualified," in the constitutional provision in reference to a public officer holding over till his successor is elected and qualified, does not mean possessed of the necessary political, mental, and moral endowments, but means the acts performed after election, as taking an official oath and executing an official bond. It is distinguished from "eligible," which means capable of being chosen, while "qualified" means the performance of the acts which the party chosen is required to perform before he can enter into the office. Abbott, in defining the word "qualified," says it means to take the oath and give the bond required by law from an administrator, executor, public officer, or the like before he may enter on the discharge of his duties. Abb. Law Dict. In Steinback v. State, 38 Ind. 483, it was said: "The term 'qualified' was not used in its ordinary or popular signification, as possessed of endowments or accomplishments or intellectual capacity or moral worth to discharge the duties of an office; but the framers of the Constitution intended that the person who had been elected to an office, and had taken the oath of office and given bond, where a bond is required, was qualified, and had the right to assume and discharge the duties of such office." State v. Bemenderfer, 96 Ind. 374, 376.

QUALIFIED ACCEPTANCE.

In Story, Bills, § 239, it is said an acceptance is general when it imports an absolute acceptance precisely in conformity to the tenure of the bill itself. It is unqualified when it contains no qualification, limitation, or condition different from what is expressed on the face of the bill or from what the law implies upon a general acceptance. It is qualified when the drawee absolutely accepts the bill, but makes it payable at a different time or place, or to a different firm, or in a different mode from that which is the tenure of the bill. Todd v. Bank of Kentucky, 66 Ky. (3 Bush) 626, 628.

An acceptance is qualified which is (1) conditional, that is to say, which makes payment by the acceptor dependent on the fulfillment of a condition therein stated; (2) partial, that is to say, an acceptance to pay part only of the amount for which the bill is drawn; (3) local, that is to say, an acceptance to pay only at a particular place; (4) qualified as to time; (5) the acceptance of some one or more of the drawees, but not of all. Ann. Codes & Sts. Or. 1901, § 4543; Neg. Inst. Law N. D. § 141; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 1055.

QUALIFIED ELECTOR.

The term "qualified electors," as used in the chapter relating to elections, includes all male persons of the age of 21 years or upwards, belonging to either of the following classes, who have resided in the territory for a period of six months, in the township sixty days and in the voting precinct thirty days next preceding any election: (1) Citizens of the United States; (2) persons of foreign birth who shall have complied with the provisions of the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization; (3) civilized persons of Indian descent, not members of any tribe. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2907.

As actually voting person.

In Act Cong. March 4, 1898, authorizing municipal corporations to issue bonds, and providing that no person shall be qualified to vote on the question of issuing such bonds except he be a qualified voter, and in case two-thirds of the qualified voters shall vote affirmatively the bonds shall issue, the term "qualified voters" means, not those qualified and entitled to vote, but those qualified and actually voting. In that connection a voter is one who votes, not one who, although qualified to vote, does not vote. Cronly v. City of Tucson (Ariz.) 56 Pac. 876, 877.

The phrase "qualified electors voting thereon," in Const. art. 9, prescribing the manner for the submission of constitutional amendments, and providing that the proposed amendment shall become part of the Constitution if a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon vote in favor of the amendment, does not mean a majority of the electors of the state, or those whose names appear on the poll books as voting at such an election, but only a majority of the electors actually voting on the question of amendment. Bott v. Secretary of State, 40 Atl. 740, 741, 62 N. J. Law, 107.

As those voting effectively.

The "qualified voters voting," in the constitutional amendment of 1898 (section 36, art. 4), providing for the submission to vote of new municipal charters, and that they may be adopted by an affirmative vote of four-sevenths of the voters voting, does not include voters attempting to vote, but whose ballots are spoiled, and which cannot be counted. "We hold that the bare attempt to vote, by depositing a blank ballot or an unintelligible ballot, is not effected, and should be excluded in the total count upon which the required four-sevenths is to be estimated." Hopkins v. City of Duluth, 83 N. W. 536, 538, 81 Minn. 189.

As person entitled to vote.

"Qualified elector," as used in a statute, means a person who is legally qualified to vote. Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 358, 362.

"Qualified elector," as used in the Constitution, prohibiting the election to any civil or military office in the state of any person except a qualified elector, was employed in its broadest sense, meaning a person qualified to vote generally. In re House Bill No. 166, 21 Pac. 478, 9 Colo. 628.

The words "qualified elector," in Pol. Code, § 1083, which, after enumerating the constitutional qualifications of a voter, provided that persons having such qualifications and whose names shall be enrolled on the great register of such county 15 days prior to an election shall be qualified electors, etc., are used in the sense of "elector who has the right to vote." It appears plain that the Legislature recognized the fact that there might be electors who were not so qualified. Bergevin v. Curtis, 59 Pac. 312, 318, 127 Cal. 86.

The words "qualified electors," as used in Const. art. 14, § 2, providing that the Legislature shall have power to remove the county seat, but that it shall not be removed unless a majority of the qualified electors of the county vote therefor, means those qualified to vote at elections for public officers, and therefore a statute which permits only resident taxpayers to vote on the question of the removal of the county seat is unconstitutional. Eagle County Com'rs v. People, 57 Pac. 1080, 1083, 28 Colo. 297.

Legal voter distinguished.

"Qualified electors," used in an act authorizing the submission of a question to vote, means a person who is legally qualified to vote, while "legal voter," unless a different meaning appears from other language in the act, means a qualified elector who does in fact vote. Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 358, 363.

As registered voters.

"Qualified electors," as used in the Constitution, means those who have been determined by the registrars as having the requisite qualifications by enrolling their names, etc. Carroll County Sup'rs v. Smith, 4 Sup. Ct. 539, 543, 111 U. S. 556, 28 L. Ed. 517.

By the term "qualified elector" we do not mean simply a registered voter, for we conceive that one may be a qualified elector, entitled to hold office, sit on a jury, etc., and yet not be entitled to vote, under the law, for want of certificate of registration. White v. Reagan, 25 Ark. 622, 623.

Women.

Under a statute providing that every qualified elector of the state is a qualified juror of the county in which he resides, it is held that women, though citizens, are not qualified electors; the right to vote being restricted by the Constitution to male citizens. State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 50, 58, 40 Am. Rep. 488.

QUALIFIED FEE.

See, also, "Base Fee."

The term "qualified fee," rather than "fee simple," is properly to be used in designating the estate of one owning a reversion or remainder in lands. Brackett v. Bidlon, 54 Me. 426, 434.

A qualified or base fee is confined to a person as tenant of a particular place. Patterson v. Ellis' Ex'rs (N. Y.) 11 Wend. 259, 277.

The term "qualified fee" includes the interest acquired by a county in real estate conveyed by a deed providing that the conveyance is for the use of the people of the county as long as the premises shall be used for a county site for the courthouse, jail, and clerk's office, but shall revert to the grantor if the county ceases to use it for such purpose. Gillespie v. Broas (N. Y.) 23 Barb. 370, 381.

A qualified, base, or determinable fee is an interest which may continue forever, but the estate is liable to be determined by some act or event circumscribing its continuance and existence. Moody v. Walker, 3 Ark. (3 Pike) 147, 190. It is the uncertainty of the event and the possibility that the fee may last forever that renders the estate a fee, and not merely a freehold. If the condition attached to the fee is one which is certain to happen, then there is a reversion. If such condition is one which may never happen, there is not a reversion, but only a possibility of reversion. United States v. Reese (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 742, 744.

Where an estate limited to a person and his heirs has a qualification annexed to it by which it must determine whenever the qualification is at an end, it is a qualified or base fee; in other words, a qualified, base, or determinable fee is an interest which may continue forever, but is liable to be ended by some act or event circumscribing its continuance or extent. This is what in modern, and especially in American, parlance is properly called a "fee with a conditional limitation annexed." Bryan v. Spires (Pa.) 3 Brewst. 580, 583.

QUALIFIED OWNERSHIP.

The ownership of property is qualified: (1) When it is shared with one or more persons; (2) when the time of enjoyment is deferred or limited; (3) when the use is restricted. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 680; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3280, Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 196.

QUALIFIED PERSONS.

"Qualified persons," as used in a court order requiring the sheriff to summon "qualified persons" to complete the grand jury, means residents of the county, since only residents were authorized to act. Stewart v. State, 13 South. 319, 98 Ala. 70.

QUALIFIED PRIVILEGE.

"Qualified privilege" in the law of libel extends to all communications made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has any interest, or in reference to which he has a duty to a person having a corresponding interest or duty. And the privilege embraces cases where the duty is not a legal one, but where it is of a moral or social character of imperfect obligation. Bacon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 33 N. W. 181, 183, 68 Mich. 166.

Qualified privilege exists in cases where some communication is necessary and proper in the protection of a person's interest, but this privilege may be lost if the extent of its publication be excessive. Smith v. Smith, 41 N. W. 499, 500, 73 Mich. 445, 3 L. R. A. 52, 16 Am. St. Rep. 594.

A qualified privilege is extended to a communication made in good faith upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, either legal, moral, or social, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty; and the burden of proving the existence of malice is cast upon the person claiming to have been defamed. Wagner v. Scott, 63 S. W. 1107, 1111, 164 Mo. 239 (citing Finley v. Steele, 60 S. W. 108, 159 Mo. 299, 52 L. R. A. 852; Sullivan v. Strathan-Hutton Evans Commission Co., 53 S. W. 912, 152 Mo. 268, 47 L. R. A. 859).

A plea of qualified privilege in slander or libel does not go to the extent of justification for the alleged slander or libel. It means nothing more than that the occasion of making it rebuts the prima facie inference of malice arising from the publication of matter prejudicial to the character of the plaintiff, and throws upon him the onus of proving malice in fact, but not of proving it by extrinsic evidence only. He has still the right to require that the alleged libel itself shall be submitted to the jury, that they may judge whether there is evidence of malice on the face of it. Evening Post Co. v. Richardson (Ky.) 68 S. W. 665, 668.

As against an absolute privilege, no action of libel can be maintained at all for the alleged libelous words; but if it be only a qualified privilege the action may be maintained unless the thing written had relation to the subject-matter undergoing judicial investigation. Under these definitions it is not material whether the privilege invoked be considered an absolute or a qualified one in an action for libel for statements contained in a petition by a receiver against his co-receiver, to the effect that such co-receiver was unlawfully withholding a portion of the assets and obstructing their collection, and that he was acting in contempt of court, and had embezzled some of the trust money, since, even though the privilege be considered as qualified, it will be sufficient in such a case. Bartlett v. Christliff, 14 Atl. 518, 520, 69 Md. 219.

QUALIFIED VOTERS.

All qualified voters, see "All."

A "qualified voter" is defined in Rev. St. 1899, § 9798, to be one who, under the general laws of the state, would be allowed to vote in any county for state and county officers, and who has resided in the district 30 days preceding the school district meeting at which he offers to vote. State ex rel. Sutton v. Fasse (Mo.) 71 S. W. 745.

As persons actually voting.

The term "qualified voters," in Const. Mo. art. 11, § 14, prohibiting a subscription by townships to railroads unless two-thirds of the qualified voters of the township at a regular or special election to be held therein shall assent thereto, means the qualified voters voting at such election. Cass County v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 360, 365, 24 L. Ed. 416.

"Qualified voters," as used in Const. Miss. art. 12, § 14, providing that the Legislature shall not authorize any county, city, or town to become a stockholder in, or to lend its credit to, any company, association, or corporation, unless two-thirds of the "qualified voters" of such county, city, or town, at a special election or regular election to to held therein, shall assent thereto, "must be taken to mean not those qualified and entitled to vote, but those qualified and actually voting." Carroll County v. Smith, 4 Sup. Ct. 539, 544, 111 U. S. 556, 28 L. Ed. 517.

"Qualified voters," as used in Const. Miss., requiring the assent of two-thirds of the "qualified voters" of a county at an election lawfully held for that purpose, to a proposed issue of municipal bonds, meant the vote of two-thirds of the qualified voters present and voting at such election as determined by the official return of the result, and not all those qualified and entitled to vote in the county. Carroll County v. Smith, 4 Sup. Ct. 539, 544, 111 U. S. 556, 28 L. Ed. 517.

As persons potentially qualified.

"Qualified voters," as used in Sand. & H. Dig. § 945 et seq., which authorizes the county court to submit the question of the removal of a county seat to the voters on petition of one-third of the qualified voters of the county, and to order such removal when a majority of the qualified voters vote in favor of the place named in the petition, and providing that, to ascertain the number of qualified voters for the purposes of the act, the county court should be governed by the number of persons liable to pay a poll tax as returned upon the assessor's book, does not mean those only that have paid a poll tax, but extends to all citizens of the county who would have the right to vote upon the payment of a poll tax. Dunn v. Lott, 58 S. W. 375, 376, 67 Ark. 591.

Const. art. 7, § 7, declares that no county, city, town, or other municipal corporation shall contract any debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit, etc., unless by a vote of a majority of the "qualified voters" therein. In Chester & L. N. G. R. Co. v. Caldwell County Com'rs, 72 N. C. 486, this clause was held to require a majority vote of all those competent to vote, whether registered or not. Rodman, J., says: "A qualified voter is one who is entitled to register as a voter, and who is qualified to vote upon registration." It was held in the case at bar that the section, construed in connection with article 6, § 2, declaring that no person shall be allowed to vote without registration, only required a majority of the registered voters in order to authorize a municipal corporation to contract a debt, the court saying that registration "is an indispensable condition of the right to vote, without compliance with which the elector, whatever his personal qualification may be, cannot exercise his franchise." Southerland v. City of Goldsboro, 1 S. E. 760, 96 N. C. 49.

As registered voters.

A qualified voter is one who by law is entitled to vote at an election. Where electors are required to register, an elector who fails to so register is not a qualified voter, although he possesses every other qualification. State ex rel. Woodson v. Brassfield, 67 Mo. 331, 337.

The term "qualified voters," in Const. art. 7, § 7, prohibiting municipal corporations from contracting any debts, etc., except for necessary expenses, unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein, means those whose names are registered as qualified voters, as required by Const. art. 6, § 2. Southerland v. City of Goldsboro, 1 S. E. 760, 96 N. C. 49.

"Qualified voters," as used in Const. art. 7, § 7, prohibiting counties, cities, etc., from incurring debts except on a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein, means a class of persons whose competency to vote has been passed upon in their admission to registration. Qualified voters are those only who have been lawfully registered. McDowell v. Massachusetts & S. Const. Co., 2 S. E. 351, 358, 96 N. C. 514.

The term "qualified voters," in Act 1898, § 99, p. 8, authorizing the permanent location of the county seat of Calhoun county by the vote of the qualified electors thereof, means those qualified to vote according to the provisions of the act, and therefore persons who have not registered as required by the act are not entitled to vote. The meaning of the term is to be determined from the statute in which it is found, and not alone from the general law governing the qualification of voters. State v. Crook, 28 South. 745, 749, 126 Ala. 600.

"Every definition of the qualification of voters," said Mr. Drake, the author of the Law of Attachment, arguing in Blair v. Ridgely, 41 Mo. 63, 97 Am. Dec. 248, "is but a statement of the terms on which men may vote; and in every instance such definitions refer to what a party has done, as well as to what he is. They say to the voter: 'If you have done certain things, you can vote.' He who does not register is not qualified to vote, and hence is not a 'qualified elector,' a phrase that is used five times in the Constitution to signify those who are entitled to go to the polls on election day and legally vote." It was held that a law requiring a registration before election day fixed a qualification for voting, and therefore was in violation of the clause of the Constitution which fixed the qualification of electors, and which did not require registration. White v. Multnomah County Com'rs, 10 Pac. 484, 486, 13 Or. 317, 57 Am. Rep. 20.

QUALIFIED VOTERS VOTING.

"Qualified voters voting," within the meaning of a statute providing that a township may subscribe to the capital stock of a railroad whenever two-thirds of the qualified voters of such town, voting at an election held for that purpose, are in favor of such subscription, is not the same as the "qualified voters of the township," and therefore the statute is in conflict with the clause of the Constitution prohibiting the General Assembly from authorizing such subscription unless two-thirds of the qualified voters consent thereto. State ex rel. Woodson v. Brassfield, 67 Mo. 331, 347.

The term "qualified voters voting," in the township aid act of Missouri of March 23, 1868, authorizing a subscription by a township to the capital stock of railway companies on a vote of not less than two-thirds of the qualified voters of the township voting at an election on such question, means the voters actually voting, as the voters not voting are presumed to assent to the expressed will of the majority of those voting. Cass County v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 360, 365, 24 L. Ed. 416.

QUALITY.

In defining "a," Webster says it is placed before nouns of the singular number, denoting an individual object or "quality" individualized; and "quality" is defined as (1) "the condition of being of such a sort, as distinguished from others; (2) special or temporary character; profession; occupation." State v. Martin, 30 S. W. 421, 423, 60 Ark. 343, 28 L. R. A. 153.

As used in the rule that no one can acquire the exclusive right to the use as a trade-mark of a generic word indicating or denoting merely quality of the article, "quality" is employed as denoting the grade, ingredients, or properties of the article. In some of the cases the word indicates generally the merit or excellence of the article as associated with or coming from a source, and when used in such sense there may be a valid trade-mark as indicating quality. Dennison Mfg. Co. v. Thomas Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 94 Fed. 651, 657.

The word "quality," as used in a contract providing that, if the engineer on board a certain steamship would approve the quality of coal for use on board that vessel, certain parties were to receive the same, etc., imports adaptiveness, suitableness, and fitness for the purpose specified, and in their most comprehensive sense. Heron v. Davis, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 336, 344.

Evidence.

In an instruction that the jury, from the weight of testimony, should take into consideration not so much the number of witnesses that testified to any one given fact, but the "quality" of the testimony, and in weighing the quality of the testimony they will take into consideration the interest of the witnesses and their appearance on the witness stand, the word "quality" may have meant the better evidence, and, if so, the court invaded the province of the jury. Gilmore v. Seattle & R. R. Co., 60 Pac. 743, 744, 29 Wash. 159.

Land.

The partial failure of consideration in the quality of the land for which the vendee may recoup damages in a suit for the purchase money must be understood as embracing not only qualities essentially inherent in the lands, as fertility of soil, but also qualities extrinsically added, such as preparation for cultivation, or any other material improvement made upon the land. In this case the court said: "To confine the term 'quality,' in this connection, to natural qualities, such as fertility of soil and the like, would be a narrow construction. It must be understood in a more comprehensive sense, as embracing not only qualities essentially inherent in the land itself, but also adventitious qualities—qualities extrinsically added, such as preparation for cultivation, or any other material improvement made on the land. This is the received sense in which the term is used when applied to realty." Thus it is laid down that in an "action brought for recovery of real property its quality should be shown, as whether it consists of houses, lands, or other hereditaments; and in general it should be stated whether the lands be meadow, pasture, or arable," etc. See Steph. Pl. p. 296; Bouv. Law Dict. "Quality." Barnes v. Anderson, 21 Ark. 125, 126.

QUANTITY.

See "Definite Quantity."

The term "quantity," as used in Rev. St. 476, § 2504, Schedule M, relating to duties on imported fruit, and making an allowance for loss on decay which exceeds 25 per cent. of the quantity, relates to the whole importation of fruit, and not to the quantity in each particular package damaged. Scattergood v. Tutton (U. S.) 2 Fed. 28, 29.

A "quantity," when used in an indictment charging the larceny of various articles of property of the same kind, is a sufficient description thereof, without stating any specific number of the articles stolen. Commonwealth v. Butts, 124 Mass. 449, 452.

Lumber.

"Quantity" may include "weights" or "amounts," but neither of these latter terms are accurately synonymous with "quantity." Under Rev. St. 1879, art. 280, imposing a penalty on a carrier for a failure to furnish to a shipper on demand a bill of lading stating the quantity of the shipment, a demand by the shipper of lumber of a bill of lading stating the weight or amount is insufficient to warrant an infliction of the penalty for its refusal. Sherman, S. & S. Ry. Co. v. Conly (Tex.) 87 S. W. 253, 254.

"Quantity," as used in Rev. St. 1879, art. 280, imposing a penalty on common carriers for refusing to give, when demanded, a bill of lading stating the quantity, character, and condition of the goods received, according to Webster is that which answers the question how much. It has the attribute of being so much, and not more or less. In the case of lumber, quantity might be ascertained with certainty by measurement or by weight. Describing lumber as "a car load" does not state the quantity. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Cuteman (Tex.) 14 S. W. 1069, 1070.

QUANTITY GUARANTEED.

A bill of lading acknowledging the receipt of a specific quantity of grain, and containing the words "quantity guaranteed," and also providing that damage or deficiency in quantity as specified should be deducted from charges by the consignees, amounts to a guaranty that the carrier will deliver the amount specified in the bill of lading, or be responsible for the shortage. Bissel v. Campbell, 54 N. Y. 353, 358.

QUANTUM.

"Quantum," according to Webster, means quantity, amount; and amount, the sum total of two or more particular sums or quantities; the aggregate; the whole quantity; a totality. Where a telegraph company failed to deliver a message promptly, and the plaintiff proved his right to recover damages for the delay, the jury could consider mental anguish occasioned by such delay in fixing the "quantum" of damages. Connelly v. Western Union Tel. Co., 40 S. E. 618, 622, 100 Va. 51, 56 L. R. A. 663, 93 Am. St. Rep. 919.

QUANTUM MERUIT.

A "quantum meruit" is in the nature of an action for the value of services rendered. Bills v. Polk, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 494, 495.

QUARANTINE.

Police regulation.

Vaccination distinguished, see "Vaccination."

To "quarantine" persons means to keep them, when suspected of having contracted or been exposed to an infectious disease, out of the community, or to confine them to a given place therein, and to prevent intercourse between them and the people generally of such community; and the authority granted by Const. art. 7, § 8, par. 2, to county officials to levy a tax for the purpose of "quarantine," does not authorize such officials to incur an indebtedness and levy taxes for the purchase of vaccine points for the use of the county in preventing the spread of smallpox within its borders. Daniel v. Putnam Co., 38 S. E. 980, 981, 118 Ga. 570, 54 L. R. A. 292.

Under a general statute providing quarantine as the means to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious disease, and a city charter authorizing the council to pass and enforce all ordinances deemed necessary or proper to prevent the introduction of infectious diseases, an ordinance providing "that it shall be unlawful for any person to import, sell or otherwise deal in cast-off garments, blankets, bedding or bedclothes in said city, provided that this ordinance shall not apply to the sale of said articles not imported, and that have not been used by persons having infectious diseases," is not authorized as a quarantine regulation, but is an unwarranted restraint of trade. Town of Greensboro v. Ehrenreich, 80 Ala. 579, 582, 2 South. 725, 60 Am. Rep. 130.

In the absence of an epidemic showing an apparent necessity therefor, an ordinance prohibiting any one from bringing second-hand clothing into a town, or exposing it for sale therein, without furnishing proof to the mayor that it did not come from an infected district, is not a valid exercise of a power to establish and enforce quarantine regulations, but is an unreasonable restraint of trade. Town of Kosciusko v. Slomberg, 9 South. 297, 68 Miss. 469, 12 L. R. A. 528, 24 Am. St. Rep. 284.

A "quarantine" is defined to be (1), properly, the space of 40 days; appropriately, the term of 40 days during which a ship arriving in port, and suspected of being infected with a malignant or contagious disease, is obliged to forbear all intercourse with the city or place. This time was chosen because it was supposed that any infectious disease would break out, if at all, within that period. (2) Hence the word means restraint of intercourse to which a ship may be subjected, on the presumption that she may be infected, either for 40 days or for any other limited period. Webster's Dict. The very idea of a quarantine implies that it is for a definite, limited time. Gibson v. The Madras, 5 Ha-wali, 109, 116, 120.

The right of the widow to remain in the capital messuage is in law called a "quarantine." Davis v. Lowden, 88 Atl. 648, 650, 56 N. J. Eq. 126.

By the common law the widow has the right to tarry in the mansion for 40 days after the death of her husband, which is called her "quarantine." Reagan v. Hodges, 69 S. W. 581, 582, 70 Ark. 563; Scrib. Dower, 14. It is said that this provision was made in consideration of the destitute situation in which the widow was placed by the death of her husband. Glenn v. Glenn, 41 Ala. 571, 580.

A widow's "quarantine," at common law, was a right to remain in and to hold and enjoy the mansion house of her husband after his death, without being liable to pay any rent for the same, until dower should be assigned to her. This right was, however, limited by statute to the space of 40 days after the death of her husband, though it appears that by the ancient common law a widow was entitled to remain in her husband's mansion house for a year after his death. The widow's quarantine is regarded as a privilege, a benefit, but not as a freehold estate on the land. The interest given to her was temporary and fugitive in its purpose, and not designed for continuance beyond the expressed time, and as a means to constrain the heir to assign her dower without unreasonable delay. Spinning v. Spinning, 10 Atl. 270, 271, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 215.

A widow's right to quarantine is a possessory right on which an action of ejectment may be maintained, and is assignable, and carries with it all the incidents that belong to it prior to the transfer. Phillips v. Presson, 72 S. W. 501, 502, 172 Mo. 24 (citing Fischer v. Siekmann, 125 Mo. 165, 28 S. W. 435; Carey v. West, 139 Mo. 146, 176, 40 S. W. 661).

QUARREL

"Quarrel," as used in an ordinance forbidding persons to quarrel, is a very comprehensive term, which would include a difficulty in which the owner of a store engaged in an attempt to eject a person from his premises who refused to go when ordered, though the ancient law would have given him a right to use force. Metcalf v. People, 30 Pac. 39, 2 Colo. App. 262.

Quarreling is the exchange of angry utterances between two or more persons, and not the mere use, in an ordinary tone, of vituperative and threatening words by one to another, who remains silent. It takes two to make a quarrel. Carr v. City of Conyers, 10 S. E. 630, 631, 84 Ga. 287, 20 Am. St. Rep. 357.

The term "quarrel," within the meaning of an accident policy which provides that if death occurs from assault provoked by quarrelling no recovery can be had, cannot be construed to include every frivolous controversy which might in some sense be termed a "quarrel," although not a dispute or quarrel from which the insured might reasonably expect anger to be provoked or injury to result. Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 16 S. W. 723, 725, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 256, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685.

QUARRY.

Mine distinguished, see "Mine."

To "quarry" means to cut, dig, or take out, as from a quarry. A "quarry" is defined to be an excavation or other place from which stone is taken by cutting, blasting, or the like, and usually distinguished from a mine by being open widely at the top and front. Ruttledge v. Kress, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 490, 495.

A "quarry" means, not an indefinite extent of stone or rock which may be worked, but the spot where the rock is quarried. Shaw v. Wallace, 25 N. J. Law (1 Dutch.) 453, 462.

"Quarries" are pits or excavations in the earth from which stones only are taken, as distinguished from "mines," from which metallic ores or other mineral substances are taken. Marvel v. Merritt, 6 Sup. Ct. 207, 208, 116 U. S. 11, 29 L. Ed. 550.

A "quarry" is a work for the excavation of minerals, where the whole excavation is open. Murray v. Allred, 43 S. W. 355, 358, 100 Tenn. 100, 39 L. R. A. 249, 66 Am. St. Rep. 740.

Since a quarry is an excavation or pit from which the slate is taken, the meaning of the phrase "working the quarry," as used in a lease requiring the forfeiture thereof for not working the quarry for a certain length of time, means the doing of any work necessary to the proper and convenient use of the pit, such as the removal of earth, debris, water, ice, or snow, as much as blasting and removal of the slate and rock, for the latter cannot be done unless the quarry is kept reasonably free from obstruction. Miller v. Chester Slate Co., 18 Atl. 565, 566, 129 Pa. 81.

QUARRYING.

A pledge, in a lease, to do such quarrying on the demised premises as is necessary to carry on the lessee's business as a boat builder, gives him a property in the rocks so quarried, and therefore the lessee is not required to account to the landlord for the stone so quarried. McKee v. Brooks, 20 Mo. 526.

QUARTER.

"Quarter of corn," as used in renewed lease, by which the lessee was to yield up so many "quarters of corn," will be understood to mean legal quarters, reckoning the bushel at eight quarters, although at that time the tenants paid by composition, reckoning the bushel at nine quarters. Hospital St. Cross v. Lord Howard De Walden, 6 Term R. 338, 343.

"Quarter," as used in descriptions of land, according to the government subdivisions, calling them the southeast "quarter," or the northeast "quarter," etc., designates a square piece of land; but such fact does not render a description of land as the south "quarter" indefinite, since the south one-quarter may be as accurately determined as the southeast one-quarter. McCartney v. Dennison, 35 Pac. 766, 767, 101 Cal. 252.

The word "quarter," as used in an ordinance providing that a license for running a barroom, drinking shop, etc., shall be paid each quarter, means a quarter of a year, and is not indefinite or uncertain. In re Schneider, 8 Pac. 289, 291, 11 Or. 288.

QUARTER CORNER.

A "quarter corner," as distinguished from a "section corner," in the government surveys means the corner on a section line midway between the section corners. Rud v. Pope County Com'rs, 68 N. W. 1062, 66 Minn. 358.

QUARTER OF A YEAR.

A "quarter of a year" is 91 days. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3257.

QUARTER SCALE.

"Quarter scale," in reference to timber, is the rule employed to determine the amount of square-edged boards contained in any log, without regard to its quality. The log is squared at its smallest end, and the number of feet found by taking three-fourths of the diameter of the smallest end of the log and squaring it; thus, if a log is 40 inches in diameter and 12 feet long, 30 inches of the diameter, or three-fourths, is taken and squared, making 900 feet. Bullock v. Consumers' Lumber Co. (Cal.) 31 Pac. 367, 368.

QUARTER SECTION.

The general and proper acceptance of the term "quarter section," as well as its construction by the general land department, denotes the land in the subdivisional lines, and not the exact quantity which a perfect admeasurement of an unobstructed surface would declare. Brown v. Hardin, 21 Ark. 324, 327.

QUARTER SECTION LINE.

A "quarter line," as distinguished from a "section line," means a line running from one quarter corner to another through the center of the section. Rud v. Pope County Com'rs, 68 N. W. 1062, 66 Minn. 358.

"Quarter section line," as used in a description of certain lands relative to the location of a certain public highway, means the east one of three straight lines, running north and south in the section, which divide it into three equal parts. Jackson v. Rankin, 30 N. W. 301, 303, 67 Wis. 285.

QUARTERS.

See "Public Quarters."

QUARTERONES.

"Quarterones," as used in the Spanish and French West Indies, applies to the issue of a white person and a tercerone; that is, a person possessing the blood of a white person and a mulatto. Daniel v. Guy, 19 Ark. 121, 131.

QUARTZ LODGE.

"Quartz lode" is a fissure or seam in the country rock, filled with quartz matter, bearing gold or silver, and may be wide or narrow; it varies in width from 1 inch, or even less, to 100 feet, or much more. The sides of the lode are represented and defined by the walls of the country rock, and these walls must be discovered, and the lode identified thereby, before it can be located and held as a lode. Foot v. National Min. Co., 2 Mont. 402, 404.

QUASH.

See "Motion to Quash."

The word "quash," according to Bouvier, means to overthrow. The Century and Webster's Dictionaries define its legal meaning to be to abate, annul, overthrow, or make void. Holland v. Webster, 29 South. 625, 627, 43 Fla. 85; Jones v. Wolfe, 60 N. W. 563, 42 Neb. 272.

Mr. Abbott, in his Law Dictionary, defines "quash" to mean to annul, overthrow, or vacate by judicial acts. Hood v. French, 19 South. 165, 167, 37 Fla. 117.

The term "quash," when applied to writs of error or other writs, means to abate for some defect in the writ itself or in the form of the writ, which defect does not reach the merits of the case. Bosley v. Bruner, 24 Miss. (2 Oushm.) 457, 462.

Where proceedings are irregular, void, or defective, the courts will quash them both in civil and criminal cases. An indictment which is so defective that no judgment can be given on it, or where there is no jurisdiction of the offense, will be quashed. The remedy is applicable only to irregular, defective, or improper proceedings. Therefore it is error to quash the writ in an action brought in the name of a county treasurer, as obligee on a surplus bond given on the purchase of land for taxes, though the interest of the equitable owner did not appear. Crawford v. Stewart, 38 Pa. (2 Wright) 34, 38.

QUASI.

The word "quasi" is a Latin word, signifying "as if; almost." It marks the resemblance, and supposes a little difference, between two objects. People v. Bradley, 60 Ill. 390, 402 (citing 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 411).

QUASI CONTRACT.

The whole theory of the law of implied contracts was originated for the purpose of giving a remedy ex contractu for certain wrongs. Nevada Co. v. Farnsworth (U. S.) 89 Fed. 164, 165.

In contracts it is the consent of the contracting parties which produces the obligation. In quasi contracts there is not any consent. The law alone, or natural equity, produces the obligation by rendering obligatory the fact from which it results. Therefore these facts are called "quasi contracts," because, without being contracts, they produce obligations in the same manner as actual contracts. McSorley v. Faulkner, 18 N. Y. Supp. 460, 462.

Implied or constructive contracts are similar to constructive trusts of courts of equity, and in fact are not contracts at all. They are called "quasi contracts," because, without being contracts, they produce obligations in the same manner as contracts. Munger Vehicle Tire Co. v. Rubber Goods Mfg. Co., 81 N. Y. Supp. 302, 303, 89 Misc. Rep. 817 (citing People v. Speir, 77 N. Y. 144, 150).

What is often termed an "implied contract," though it is more properly denominated a "quasi contract," is a matter of law. 1 Swift, Dig. 175. Such a contract rests merely on construction of law. It is one which the law, from the existence of facts, presumes the party has made. Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 524. A true implied contract, on the other hand, is one which may be inferred from the conduct of the parties, though not expressed in words. Weinhouse v. Cronin, 36 Atl. 45, 68 Conn. 250.

The term "quasi contract," which term is borrowed from the civil law, is correctly applied to cases where no true contract in fact exists, but where the law creates an obligation. Thus, in a large class of cases, where suit is brought to recover money which is paid by mistake or which has been obtained by fraud, it is said the law implies a promise to repay the money, when it is well understood that the promise is a mere fiction, in most cases without any foundation whatever in fact. The same practice has been adopted where necessities had been furnished to an insane person or to a neglected wife or child. The term "implied contract" cannot be correctly applied to such obligations, but it has been frequently so applied, arising from the fact that obligations generically different have been classed as such, not because of any real analogy, but, where the procedure of common law prevails, by the adoption of fiction in pleadings—that of a promise where none in fact exists, or can reasonably be supposed to exist—the favorite remedy of applied assumpsit exists. Quasi contracts are to be distinguished from implied contracts in that the latter arise from facts and circumstances in which a court or jury may fairly infer as a matter of fact that a contract exists between the parties. Columbus, H. V. & T. Ry. Co. v. Gaffney, 61 N. E. 152, 153, 65 Ohio St. 104.

QUASI CORPORATION.

See "Public Quasi Corporation"; "Quasi Public Corporation."

The term "quasi corporations" is generally used to designate counties and other political divisions of a state possessing only a low order of corporate existence. Scates v. King, 110 Ill. 456, 466.

"Quasi corporation" is a phrase generally applied to a body which exercises certain functions of a corporate character, but which has not been created a corporation by any statute, general or special. School Dist. No. 56 v. St. Joseph Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 108 U. S. 707, 708, 28 L. Ed. 601.

"Quasi corporations" are counties and hundreds in England, and counties, towns, etc., in this state. Adams v. Wiscasset Bank, 1 Me. (1 Greenl.) 361, 363, 10 Am. Dec. 88.

Towns, parishes, and proprietors of common lands, who hold meetings and regulate their proceedings under divers provisions of statutes enacted upon those subjects, are said to be quasi corporations. Hayden v. Middlesex Turnpike Corp., 10 Mass. 397, 400, 6 Am. Dec. 143.

Quasi corporations are associations having the attributes of corporations, though not being such in the strict sense of the term, as a county. Lawrence County v. Chattrail R. Co., 81 Ky. 225, 227.

The term "quasi corporations" is applied to such bodies as school districts or counties, which are given such designation by reason of the limited number of their corporate powers. The designation is used to distinguish them from corporations aggregate and from municipal corporations proper, such as cities and towns acting under charters or incorporating statutes. Kennedy v. Queens County, 62 N. Y. Supp. 276, 279, 47 App. Div. 250.

Quasi corporations include inhabitants of any district who are invested with particular powers without their consent, such as counties and hundreds in England, and counties, towns, etc., in Massachusetts. Although quasi corporations are liable to information or indictment for public duty imposed on them by law, yet no private action can be maintained against them for breach of their corporate duty unless such action is given by statute. Riddle v. Merrimac River Locks & Canals, 7 Mass. 169, 187, 5 Am. Dec. 35.

The term "quasi corporations" includes involuntary corporations, as counties, towns, school districts, and a township in New England. There is a distinction between the liability of a municipal corporation made by the acceptance of a village or city charter and such quasi corporations. The liability of the former is greater than that of the latter, even when invested with corporate capacity and the power of taxation. The latter are auxiliary to the state, merely, and corporations of the very lowest grade, and invested with the smallest amount of power. Whether the distinction and liability is based upon sound principle or not, it is so well settled that it cannot be disturbed. Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 552, 23 L. Ed. 440.

Towns, school districts, municipal societies, and boards of commissioners, etc., appointed to perform public service may be considered under our institutions as quasi corporations with limited powers coextensive with duties imposed on them by a statute or usage, but restrained from the general use of the authority which belongs to corporations under the common law. They are not bodies politic and corporate, with the general powers of corporations. English v. Jersey City, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 275, 277.

Quasi corporations, as distinguished from private corporations, are aggregate corporations, such as the inhabitants of a district, who by statute are invested with particular powers without their consent. Of this description are counties and hundreds in England. Such a corporation is not liable to individuals for an omission or malfeasance of its corporate duties, in the absence of any statute creating such liability. A city, therefore, is not liable to an action for an injury to plaintiff in having his house blown up during a fire, by the command of the authorities, to prevent the further spreading of the fire, though the fire was extinguished before it reached his house; there being no statutory liability in such a case. White v. City Council of Charleston (S. C.) 2 Hill, 571, 574.

As agencies of state.

Quasi corporations are that class of governmental institutions, such as school districts, etc., which possess some corporate functions and attributes, but are primarily political subdivisions—agencies in the administration of civil government—and their corporate functions are granted to enable them more readily to perform their public duties. Freeland v. Stillman, 30 Pac. 235, 238, 49 Kan. 197.

Quasi corporations are auxiliaries of the state, such as incorporated school districts, counties, etc., which owe their creation and all their powers and liabilities to the statutes of the state. They are called "quasi corporations" because, when considered with reference to the limited number of their corporate powers, they rank low down in the scale of corporate existence. Powder River Cattle Co. v. Johnson County Com'rs, 29 Pac. 361, 365, 3 Wyo. 597 (quoting Dill. Mun. Corp. pp. 30-33).

Counties.

See, also, "County."

The term "quasi corporations" includes counties, for the reason that, considered with respect to their powers, duties, and liabilities, they stand low down in the scale or grade of corporate existence. This designation is employed to distinguish them from private corporations aggregate, and from municipal corporations proper, such as cities acting under general or special charters. Burnett v. Maloney, 37 S. W. 689, 693, 97 Tenn. 697, 34 L. R. A. 541.

As political subdivision.

The term "quasi corporation" or "civil corporation" includes public corporations, like counties, townships, school districts, and the like, which organizations are mere territorial and political divisions of the state, established exclusively for public purposes connected with the administration of local government. They are involuntary corporations, because created by the state without the solicitation or even consent of the people within their boundaries, and made depositories of limited political and governmental functions, exercised for the public good, in behalf of the state, and not for themselves. They are no less than public agencies of the state. They are not liable in a private action in damages for negligence in the performance of their public duties, except when made so by legislative enactment. Dunn v. Brown County Agricultural Soc., 18 N. E. 496, 497, 46 Ohio St. 93, 1 L. R. A. 754, 15 Am. St. Rep. 556.

School districts are quasi corporations of the most limited powers known to the law. Dennan v. Webster, 73 Pac. 139, 140, 139 Cal. 452.

The inhabitants of a school district may be considered as a quasi corporation, with limited powers, coextensive with the duties imposed on them by statute or usage, but restrained from a general use of the authority which belongs to these metaphysical persons by the common law. The same may be said of all the numerous corporations which have been from time to time created by various acts of the Legislature; all of them enjoying the power which is expressly bestowed on them, and, perhaps, in all instances where the act is silent, possessing, by necessary implication, the authority which is requisite to execute the purposes of their creation. The inhabitants of a school district have sufficient corporate powers to maintain an action on a contract to build a school-house, and to make a lease of land to them. Inhabitants of Fourth School Dist. v. Wood, 13 Mass. 193, 199.

School districts are by the general laws declared a body corporate, and are quasi corporations, invested with corporate powers sub modo, and for a few specified purposes only. Town of Sauk Centre v. Moore, 17 Minn. 412, 417, (Gil. 391, 396) (citing Goodnow v. Ramsey County, 11 Minn. 31, 41 [Gil. 12, 19]).

School districts are not municipalities, but mere territorial divisions for limited purposes, and belong to the class of quasi corporations which exercise some of the functions of a municipality within a prescribed sphere. Briegel v. City of Philadelphia, 19 Atl. 1038, 135 Pa. 451, 20 Am. St. Rep. 885.

Township.

A township is a quasi corporation, and not a municipal corporation proper. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Pleasant Tp. (U. S.) 53 Fed. 214, 217; Madden v. Lancaster County (U. S.) 65 Fed. 188, 191, 12 C. C. A. 566.

QUASI CRIMINAL.

The Constitution requiring that the criminal court of Cook county shall have jurisdiction of cases of a quasi criminal nature was intended to embrace and include all offenses not crimes or misdemeanors, but offenses in the nature of crimes, which are punishable, not by indictment, but by forfeitures and penalties, such as qui tam actions, prosecutions for bastardy, informations in the nature of quo warranto, and suits for the violation of city ordinances. Wiggins v. City of Chicago, 68 Ill. 372, 375.

"Quasi criminal," in a statute giving courts jurisdiction of causes of a quasi criminal nature, means relating to or having the character of crime. It therefore includes every species of case relating to crime, and such as are regarded by the law as if a crime, although a little different. People v. Bradley, 60 Ill. 390, 402.

"Quasi criminal nature," as used in a constitutional provision to the effect that the criminal court of Cook county shall have jurisdiction in cases of the quasi criminal nature, means all offenses not crimes or misdemeanors, but in the nature of crimes, and which are punished, not by indictment, but by forfeitures and penalties. Wiggins v. City of Chicago, 68 Ill. 372, 375.

An action under Rev. St. § 1571, to recover the price paid for intoxicating liquors sold in violation of the statute, is a civil action, and not quasi criminal in character, although the constitutionality of the statute punishing as a crime the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors is sustained under the general power to make proper police regulation. But the provision which takes away the right to recover the price of liquors unlawfully sold is assimilated to the statute denying the right to recover usurious interest. And the conferring the right to recover the price of liquors paid is of like character. The remedy is enforced by a civil action, and is in all respects governed by the rules applicable to such action. Woodward v. Squires, 39 Iowa, 435, 438.

QUASI DERELICT.

A quasi derelict is a vessel which, though not abandoned, is unable to continue on its voyage by reason of the disability of its crew to navigate it; one whose crew is disabled by sickness, etc. Sturtevant v. George Nicholas (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 333, 334.

QUASI DWELLING HOUSE.

The term "quasi dwelling houses" is sometimes used to designate barns and other outhouses which are in such proximity to the mansion house as to render a person breaking and entering such barns or outhouses, etc., guilty of burglary. Quinn v. People, 71 N. Y. 561, 568, 27 Am. Rep. 87.

QUASI INDIVIDUAL.

The term "quasi individual" has been used to designate a private corporation. Such a corporation is a pure creation of the legislative will, having only such powers as are conferred expressly or by necessary implication. It has no inherent or natural right, like a citizen. State v. Haun, 54 Pac. 130, 133, 7 Kan. App. 509.

QUASI JUDICIAL.

When the law commits to an officer the duty of looking into facts and acting upon them, not in a way which it specially directs, but after a discretion in its nature judicial, the function is quasi judicial. Mitchell v. Clay County (Neb.) 96 N. W. 673, 678.

The action of the comptroller of the currency in ordering an assessment on the stockholders of an insolvent national bank involves a determination of the necessity for such assessment, which is quasi judicial, and is conclusive on the stockholders. De Weese v. Smith (U. S.) 97 Fed. 309, 317.

The insurance statutes vest the Commissioner of Insurance with discretionary power, and give him authority to see that all laws relating to insurance companies are enforced. Held, that the commissioner's duties are quasi judicial, so that mandamus will not lie to compel him to issue a certificate of admission to a foreign insurance company, which has been refused after a hearing. American Casualty Ins. & Security Co. v. Fyler, 22 Atl. 494, 60 Conn. 448, 25 Am. St. Rep. 337.

QUASI JURISDICTIONAL FACTS.

With respect to quasi jurisdictional facts which are necessary to be alleged and proved in order to set the machinery of the law in motion, the finding of the court is as conclusively presumed to be correct as its findings with respect to any other matter in issue between the parties. Examples of quasi jurisdictional facts are the allegations and proof of the requisite diversity of citizenship, or the amount in controversy, in a federal court, which, when found by such court, cannot be questioned collaterally; the existence and amount of the debt of a petitioning debtor in an involuntary bankruptcy; the fact that there is insufficient personal property to pay the debts of a decedent when application is made to sell his real estate; the fact that one of the heirs of an estate had reached his majority, when the act provided that the estate should not be sold if all the heirs were minors. Quasi jurisdictional facts are those facts which do not go to the subject-matter or to the parties, but to a preliminary fact necessary to be proven to authorize the court to act. Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 271, 273, 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. Ed. 123.

QUASI MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

Quasi municipal corporations are corporations commonly known as counties, townships, and school districts. The common-law rule is that no private law action can be maintained against municipal corporations for the neglect of a public duty imposed on it by law for the benefit of the public, and from the performance of which the corporation receives no pecuniary profit. As respects what are called "quasi municipal corporations," this is the rule, without exception; but as respects what are called "municipal corporations proper," such as cities and incorporated villages, the general current of the authorities is to the effect that, even in the absence of an express statute, they may be impliedly liable for acts of negligence in the performance of duty imposed on their officers and agents, while for the same or a similar wrong there is no liability resting on quasi municipal corporations. Snyder v. City of St. Paul, 51 Minn. 466, 471, 53 N. W. 763, 18 L. R. A. 151.

QUASI PUBLIC CORPORATION.

Railroad company as, see "Railroad Company."

Quasi public corporations partake in many respects of the nature of both public and private corporations, and are such as have concern with some of the expensive duties of the state, the trouble and charge of which are undertaken and defrayed by them in consideration of a certain emolument allowed and secured to their members. McKim v. Odom (Md.) 3 Bland, 407, 419.

The general term "corporation" is divided into those which are private only, formed by voluntary agreement for private purposes, and those which are created by the state for the purposes of government and management of public affairs, which are public or quasi public corporations. Murphy v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 31 Atl. 229, 232, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 245.

A bank of deposit and discount is a quasi public institution, and properly subject to statutory regulations for the benefit of depositors. Campbell v. Watson, 50 Atl. 120, 124, 62 N. J. Eq. 396.

QUASI USUFRUCT.

Imperfect or quasi usufruct is that which is of things which would be useless to the usufructuary if he did not consume or expend them, or change the substance of them, as money, grain, and liquors. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 534.

QUAY.

A quay is a vacant space between the first row of buildings and the water's edge, used for the reception of goods and merchandise imported or to be exported, and designates a space of ground appropriated to the public use—such use as the convenience of commerce requires. City of New Orleans v. United States, 35 U. S. (10 Pet.) 662, 715, 9 L. Ed. 573. A space of ground appropriated to the public use—such use as the convenience of commerce requires. With regard to location, it is usually a vacant space along the shore of navigable waters, between the first row of buildings and the water's edge, and is used for the reception of goods and merchandise imported or to be exported. Fleitas v. City of New Orleans, 24 South. 623, 631, 51 La. Ann. 1.

A quay is a landing place, a place where vessels are loaded and unloaded, a wharf, usually constructed of stone, but sometimes of wood, iron, etc., on a line of coast or the river bank, or around a harbor or a dock. St. Anna's Asylum v. City of New Orleans, 29 South. 117, 121, 104 La. 392.

QUESTION.

See "Judicial Question"; "Political Question"; "Specific Question"; "Sum in Question."

Other question, see "Other."

A question to be decided by a judge implies something in controversy, or which may be the subject of controversy. An order by a county judge that a day be assigned for a hearing on the allowance of the probate of a will was the determination of no question, but was only preliminary to the making of questions. McFarlane v. Clark, 39 Mich. 44, 46, 33 Am. Rep. 346.

Rev. St. § 652, declaring that when a judgment or decree is entered in a civil suit in a circuit court held by two judges, in the trial whereof any question has arisen upon which the opinions of the judges are opposed, the point, etc., shall be certified, should be construed to mean a question of law which must be capable of being presented in a single point. California Artificial Stone Pav. Co. v. Molitor, 5 Sup. Ct. 618, 621, 113 U. S. 609, 28 L. Ed. 1106 (cases cited).

QUESTION ARISING UNDER PATENT LAWS.

There is a clear distinction between a case arising under the patent laws and a question arising under the patent laws. The former arises when the plaintiff, in his opening pleading, be it a bill, complaint, or declaration, sets up a right under the patent laws as ground for a recovery. The latter may appear in the plea or answer or in the testimony. The determination of such question is not beyond the competency of the state tribunals. Carleton v. Bird, 47 Atl. 154, 156, 94 Me. 182.

QUESTION OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

"Question of constitutional law," as used in Const. art. 6, § 11, providing that the Legislature may require the Supreme Court to give an opinion on "important questions of constitutional law on solemn occasions," means questions of law only, arising on the Constitution alone. It can scarcely be any other than some question of the proper construction or true meaning of some provision, clause, or words contained in the Constitution; and it must be, in its own nature, a judicial question, the final determination of which by the organic frame of our government properly belongs to the judiciary. In calling for such opinions to be given in a manner somewhat novel and extrajudicial, and in matters not in litigation between contending parties, it must have been understood by the framers of the Constitution, and would seem to be the clear intent of the section, that such question should be important in reference to the public interest, and the necessary and immediate action of the executive or legislative branch of the government on some matter of unusual magnitude and solemn concern for the public good, and on a pure question of law, which could only be finally determined by the Supreme Court as a judicial question. Answer to Questions by Senate, Dec. 9, 1895, 37 Mo. 135, 137.

QUESTION OF FACT.

See "Particular Question of Fact."

QUESTION OF FRAUDULENT INTENT.

"Question," as used in Pub. St. c. 51, § 4, relating to fraudulent contracts and conveyances, and providing that "the question of fraudulent intent" shall be deemed a question of fact, and not of law, means the question of the existence of fraudulent intent. Gere v. Murray, 6 Minn. 305, 317 (Gil. 213).

QUESTION OF LAW AND FACT.

See "Mixed Question of Law and Fact."

QUESTION TO BE TRIED.

Some distinction was made in early cases between the term "defense" and "question to be tried." But under the Code, providing that two or more actions in favor of the same defendant for causes of action which may be joined may be consolidated by the court, to authorize the consolidation the defense or question to be tried must be substantially the same. There is no distinction between the terms "defense" and "question to be tried." Perkins v. Merchants' Lithographing Co., 47 N. Y. Supp. 712, 713, 21 Misc. Rep. 516.

QUESTIONED.

By the words "if the title is questioned by a suit, either prosecuted or threatened," is not meant an idle suit brought or threatened when there is really no ground for such suit or such threat. They mean a bona fide claim set up, on which a suit is brought or threatened. Kinports v. Rawson, 2 S. E. 85, 90, 29 W. Va. 487.

QUI TAM ACTION.

As civil action, case, or suit, see "Civil Action—Case—Suit—Etc."

A qui tam action is an action brought under a statute which gives a certain penalty, to be recovered by action by any person who will sue for the same, and which gives the person so suing a portion of the penalty. In re Barker, 56 Vt. 14, 20.

An action against an overseer of a road for neglect of duty must be a qui tam action. Harris v. Moore, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 44, 52.

Qui tam or popular actions are those given by a statute for the recovery, in whole or in part, of forfeitures or penalties, to any person who may sue for the same. Grover v. Morris, 73 N. Y. 473, 478 (citing 3 Bl. Comm. 160).

QUIA TIMET.

See "Bill Quia Timet."

QUICK.

Living; alive. "Quick chattels must be put in pound overt, that the owner may give them sustenance; dead need not." Bl. Law Dict. (quoting Finch, Law, b. 2, c. 6).

QUICK DISPATCH.

See "Customary Quick Dispatch."

An agreement for quick dispatch in discharging a vessel overrides any customary mode of discharging vessels by which they take their turn at the wharf. Davis v. Wallace (U. S.) 7 Fed. Cas. 182. So that, under a charter providing for quick dispatch in discharging, the charterer is liable to demurrage if the vessel from the crowded condition of the port was delayed in procuring a berth. Mott v. Frost (U. S.) 47 Fed. 82, 84; Thacher v. Boston Gaslight Co. (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 874.

A charter party provided that the cargo should be loaded and discharged with all quick dispatch, as fast as the captain can receive and deliver. Held, that such clause obligated the charterer to receive the cargo as fast as the master could deliver it, and they thereby took upon themselves the risk of being able, without delay, to provide a suitable berth for the vessel, and could not excuse themselves from demurrage by showing that they used reasonable diligence, and discharged the vessel within a reasonable time, considering the crowded condition of the port. Bjorkquist v. Certain Steel Rail Crop Ends (U. S.) 3 Fed. 717, 718.

QUICK WITH CHILD.

"Quick with child" means having conceived. Reg. v. Wycherley, 8 Car. & P. 262, 263.

A woman is quick with child from the period of conception and the commencement of gestation. Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86, 89.

A woman is quick with child, within the meaning of the rule that an abortion cannot be produced till such time, the moment the womb is instinct with embryonic life and gestation has begun. Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 204, 207, 39 Am. Rep. 227.

Big with child synonymous.

See "Big with Child."

As feeling child alive.

The common understanding of the words is that a woman is not quick with child until she has felt the child alive and quick within her. Commonwealth v. Parker, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 263, 266, 43 Am. Dec. 396 (citing Rex v. Phillips, 3 Campb. 73).

"Quick with child" expresses the time subsequent to the mother feeling the child quicken. Quicken is the incident, not the inception, of vitality. It was formerly held that quickening was the commencement of vitality with the foetus, before which it could not be considered as existing. But this view is no longer held by our most eminent writers. Dr. Beck says: "The motion of the foetus when felt by the mother is called 'quickenings.' It is important to understand the sense attached to it formerly and at the present day. The ancient opinion, and on which, indeed, the laws of our country have been founded, was that the foetus became animated at this period; that it acquired a new mode of existence. This is altogether abandoned. The foetus is certainly, if we speak physiologically, as much a living being immediately after conception as at any other time before delivery, and its future progress is but the development and increase of those constituent principles which it then receives." Commonwealth v. Reid (Pa.) 1 Leg. Gaz. 182, 199.

Pregnant distinguished.

A woman is said to be quick with child from the period of conception and the commencement of gestation, but is only pregnant with a quick child when the child has become quickened in the womb. Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86, 89.

The distinction between a woman being pregnant and being quick with child is applicable mainly, if not exclusively, to criminal cases, and it does not apply to cases of descents, devises, and other gifts. Hall v. Hancock, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 255, 257, 26 Am. Dec. 598.

As with quick child.

The phrase "quick with child" is synonymous with the phrase "with quick child," both importing that the child has quickened in the womb. State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. Law (2 Zab.) 52, 57, 51 Am. Dec. 248; Reg. v. Wycherley, 8 Car. & P. 262, 263.

QUICKSAND.

Quicksand is a fine-grained, loose sand, into which a ship sinks by her own weight as soon as the water retreats from her bottom. The Sandringham (U. S.) 10 Fed. 556, 562 (citing Admiral Smyth, Dict. Nautical Terms).

QUIET.

An article which stated that plaintiff was arrested for drunkenness and disturbance, but that a $10 note "quieted" the affair, imported that the charge subsided or the arrest was abandoned for the sum named. Stacy v. Portland Pub. Co., 68 Me. 279, 286.

QUIET ENJOYMENT.

See "Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment."

QUIET HOUSE.

A quiet house or place of business, within the meaning of the chapter relating to the taxation of the sale of liquors, is one in which no music, loud or boisterous talking, yelling, or indecent or vulgar language is allowed, used, or practiced, or any other noise calculated to disturb or annoy any persons residing or doing business in the vicinity of such house or place of business, or those passing along the streets or public highways. Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 5060g; State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20, 25, 33 S. W. 113, 30 L. R. A. 500; State v. Drake, 83 Tex. 329, 335, 24 S. W. 790.

QUIETUS.

The term "quietus" was a name given to a process in Rhode Island by which an administrator might be fully discharged by the probate court. White v. Ditson, 4 N. H. 606, 607, 140 Mass. 351, 54 Am. St. Rep. 473.

QUINTERONES.

"Quinterones," as used in the Spanish and French West Indies, applies to persons who are the issue of a white person and a quarterone, the latter being the issue of a white person, and of the issue of a white person and a mulatto. Daniel v. Guy, 19 Ark. 121, 131.

QUIT.

See "Notice to Quit."

Where defendants entered on another's land and went to work tearing down a fence, and the owner told them to quit, and not to break the lumber, the word "quit," as so used, meant to leave off or desist, and was not equivalent to notice to depart. There is a material distinction between a notice to desist from the commission of an unlawful act and a notice to depart from the premises. Ryan v. State, 31 N. H. 1127, 1128, 5 Ind. App. 396.

To quit, as used in Comp. Laws 1879, c. 55, § 7, requiring a landlord to give a tenant notice to quit, is synonymous with the words "to leave," as used in a notice given under the statute to a tenant to leave rented premises. Douglas v. Anderson, 4 Pac. 257, 32 Kan. 350.

As sell.

The phrase "quit all my right and title," in a deed which, with the husband's grantor, in consideration, etc., quit under the grantee all right and title to the premises, was considered tantamount to the word "sell" or "release," and to be sufficient to pass the husband's interest or title to the land in question to the grantee. Gordon v. Haywood, 2 N. H. 402, 404.

QUITCLAIM.

Under a power given to the selectmen of a town to execute a release of title to lands, a deed purporting to grant, sell, and quitclaim is a substantial execution of the authority; the word "quitclaim" being of equivalent meaning with the term "release." Hill v. Dyer, 3 Me. (3 Greenl.) 441, 445.

Though the word "quitclaim" may be used in a deed, if the deed nevertheless purports to convey the land itself, and not the mere right or title of the grantor, and if the grantee pay the purchase money without notice of any claim by a third person, he will be protected, as an innocent purchaser, against an unregistered deed of the latter. Dycus v. Hart, 21 S. W. 299, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 354.

The use of the word "quitclaim" in a conveyance does not restrict it, if the other language employed in the instrument indicates the intention to convey the land itself. Garrett v. Christopher, 74 Tex. 453, 12 S. W. 67, 15 Am. St. Rep. 850.

QUITCLAIM AND CONVEY.

The words "quitclaim and convey," in a contract whereby the owner of real estate agreed to quitclaim and convey the same, meant convey by a quitclaim, and only called for a quitclaim deed. Brame v. Towne, 56 Minn. 126, 128, 57 N. W. 454.

QUITCLAIM DEED.

See "Remise, Release, and Quitclaim."

A quitclaim deed is a form of deed in the nature of a release, containing words of grant as well as release. Mr. Anderson, in his Law Dictionary, defines a quitclaim deed as a deed in the nature of a release, containing words of release. State v. Kemmerer, 84 N. W. 771, 773, 14 S. D. 169.

A quitclaim deed is as much a conveyance as any other kind of deed, and it will convey what the grantor has, just as well as any other deed. It is generally held, however, that a quitclaim deed will convey nothing more than what the grantor actually owns. Utey v. Fee, 7 Pac. 555, 560, 33 Kan. 683.

A quitclaim deed contains no covenants, and does not purport to convey anything more than the interest of the grantor at the time of its execution. Balch v. Arnold, 59 Pac. 434, 435, 9 Wyo. 17.

Quitclaim deeds operate as primary or original conveyances. Smith v. Pendell, 19 Conn. 107, 112, 48 Am. Dec. 146.

A deed by several persons described as heirs, and therefore presumably having undivided interests, though in words undertaking only to "quitclaim all our, and each of our, right, title, claim, and interest," and in the habendum clause using the words "above-released premises," does not signify an intention to convey only a chance of title, and is not a quitclaim deed. Moore v.

Swift, 67 S. W. 1065, 1068, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 51.

The effect of a quitclaim deed at common law is probably the same as that prescribed by statute to a quitclaim deed in statutory form; that is to say, it has "the effect of a conveyance in fee simple to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, of all right, title, interest, and estate of the grantor, either in possession or expectancy, in and to the premises therein described, and all rights, privileges, and appurtenances thereto belonging" (Rev. St. 633, § 2208). Martin v. Morris, 22 N. W. 525, 530, 62 Wis. 418.

A quitclaim or release deed is one of the regular modes of conveying property, and is almost the only mode in practice where a party sells, and does not wish to warrant the title. Webster says, "In law, a release, or deed of release, is a conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another who has the same estate in possession." This is a strictly technical definition, by long established practice. It makes no difference whether the releasor has an existing estate in possession or not. The release will convey whatever interest the releasor has in the property. Ely v. Stannard, 44 Conn. 528, 533, 534.

"Quitclaim deed" is defined by Bouvier as a form of deed in the nature of a release. "It may be construed to be a bargain and sale, or any other lawful consequence by which the estate may pass, and the intention of the parties be effected, the recording of the deed being equivalent to livery and seizin." Nathans v. Arkwright, 66 Ga. 179, 186 (citing Oliver's Conveyancing, 225, 228; 61 Ga. 608).

A quitclaim or release deed is one of the regular modes of conveying property known to the law. It is almost the only mode in practice where a party sells property, and does not wish to warrant the title. Formerly the release was required to be to one having some estate in possession, but, by long-established practice, it makes no difference now whether he has an existing estate in possession or not. The release will convey to him, under any circumstances, whatever interest the releasor has in the property. Under this principle a quitclaim deed of "all right, title, interest, claim, and demand whatsoever which I, the said releasor, have or ought to have in or to" a certain tract of land, is sufficient to pass a right of entry for the breach of covenants contained in a former deed by the same grantor, though the quitclaim deed also contained the statement that the property had been theretofore mortgaged to the grantor. Hoyt v. Ketcham, 5 Atl. 606, 608, 54 Conn. 60.

A quitclaim deed is sufficient to invest the grantee with all the rights of his grantor. In principle, there is but little difference in this respect between a quitclaim deed and the deed of a special master under a decree of foreclosure, which conveys only the right, title, and interest of the defendant mortgagor. Both conveyances pass the same estate in extent—that is, whatever the grantor or the mortgagor has, whether it be fee simple, life estate, or remainder. Johnson v. Johnson, 70 S. W. 241, 248, 170 Mo. 34, 59 L. R. A. 748.

A quitclaim deed is not a mere release. It has the effect of completely transferring whatever title the grantor had to the persons named as grantees, and of giving to each the interest specified. Any kind of a legal tenure may be built up by such a conveyance. Such a conveyance affects only the liability of the grantor if the grantees do not acquire a good title. Chew v. Kellar, 71 S. W. 172, 175, 171 Mo. 215.

After-acquired interest.

A quitclaim deed or release of all one's right, title, and interest purports to convey and does convey no more than the present interest of the grantor, and does not operate to pass an interest afterward acquired. Harrison v. Borling, 44 Tex. 255, 262.

As color of title.

See "Color of Title."

As conveyance or grant.

See "Conveyance"; "Grant."

Conveyance of grantor's interest.

An allegation in a petition that a certain person, for a valuable consideration, sold and conveyed to the defendant, by a good and sufficient deed, all his right, title, and interest in and to the lands, does not show that the deed was a quitclaim deed. A deed by which a party sells and conveys all his right, title, and interest in land is not necessarily a quitclaim deed. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Townsend (U. S.) 62 Fed. 161, 164.

Definite estate conveyed.

Where the granting clause of a quitclaim deed is quitclaim in form, but there are expressions in other parts of the instrument which indicate an intention to do more than merely release any claim which the grantor may have, the intention of the parties is to be ascertained by considering all the provisions of the deed; and, if it appear that it was the intention of the parties to convey the fee simple or any definite estate in the land, effect will be given to such intention, and the deed will operate by way of estoppel, so that any estate subsequently acquired by the grantor will inure to the benefit of the grantee. Balch v. Arnold, 59 Pac. 434, 435, 9 Wyo. 17.

Doubtful title implied.

A quitclaim deed implies a doubtful title in the grantor, and, such being its character, it should not be held to pass anything more than a doubtful title. A complaint alleged that plaintiff had a docketed judgment against R., and that certain unpatented mining claims were conveyed by deed absolute from D. to R., who on the same day gave a quitclaim deed to F., and that the property was sold to plaintiff at judgment sale. F. was in the possession of the property at the time the quitclaim deed was made. Held, that there being neither an allegation that R. ever owned the property, nor that F. ever got any property or title from him, and there being an implication of doubt as to the title from R., owing to his having given a quitclaim deed to one in possession, the complaint was insufficient to sustain a suit on the theory that the judgment sale of the land to plaintiff transferred to him title to the claims.—Butte Hardware Co. v. Frank, 65 Pac. 1, 4, 25 Mont. 844.

Warranty of right to convey.

A quitclaim deed purports to release and quitclaim only what interest the grantor possesses at the time. By the use of this form of conveyance he does not thereby affirm the possession of any title, and is not precluded from subsequently acquiring a valid title, and from attempting to enforce it. Morrison v. Whiteside, 42 S. E. 729, 730, 116 Ga. 459.

QUITCLAIM, REMISE, AND RELEASE.

As used in a deed, the words "forever quitclaim, remise, and release" are not words of release only, but are operative words of conveyance, though the grantor has no prior estate. Thus, in Wilson v. Albert, 1 S. W. 209, 89 Mo. 537, the same operative words were used in a deed of quitclaim then under consideration, and it was ruled that the deed contained sufficient operative words of conveyance. The same rule was subsequently announced in Bray v. Conrad, 13 S. W. 957, 101 Mo. 331, and must be regarded as the settled law of this state. McAnaw v. Tiffin, 45 S. W. 656, 657, 143 Mo. 667.

QUO WARRANTO.

See "Information in the Nature of Quo Warranto."

The old common-law writ of quo warranto was a prerogative writ, to be applied for on behalf of the crown, as a matter of right, as against one who had usurped franchises or liberties, and for the purpose of inquiring by what right he claimed to do so. Buckman v. State, 15 South. 697, 699, 34 Fla. 48, 24 L. R. A. 806; State ex rel. Weed v. Meek, 31 S. W. 913, 915, 129 Mo. 431; State v. Allen (Tenn.) 57 S. W. 182, 190; Territory v. Ashenfelter, 12 Pac. 879, 884, 4 N. M. (Johns.) 85; Attorney General v. Sands, 44 Atl. 83, 85, 68 N. H. 54; Attorney General v.

McCaughey, 43 Atl. 646, 648, 21 R. I. 341; Casey v. Chase, 44 Atl. 872, 64 N. J. Law, 207; State v. Dayton Traction Co., 60 N. E. 291, 64 Ohio St. 272; Commonwealth v. Lexington & H. Turnpike Road Co., 45 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 397, 398; State v. Graham, 13 Kan. 136, 144; People v. Platt, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 717, 719. And to vacate the charter or annul the existence of a corporation for violations of its charter, or for omitting to exercise its corporate powers. People v. Miner (N. Y.) 2 Lans. 396, 398.

The writ of quo warranto was an ancient writ to try the right of one holding an office. Nichols v. MacLean, 101 N. Y. 526, 534, 5 N. E. 347, 54 Am. Rep. 730 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. 263).

The writ of quo warranto was the ancient method of proceeding against those who exercised franchises in derogation of the rights of the crown. Banton v. Wilson, 4 Tex. 400, 406.

Quo warranto is a writ commanding defendant to show by what warrant he exercises any franchise; having never had a grant of it, or having forfeited it by sale, neglect, or abuse. Vandenheuvel v. United Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 2 Johns. Cas. 127, 148 (2 Bl. Comm. 262; Thompson v. People [N. Y.] 23 Wend. 537).

Quo warranto is a means to oust an illegal incumbent from office, not to induct a legal one to it. State v. Fowler, 32 Atl. 162, 164, 66 Conn. 294.

The original scope of quo warranto was much broader than use merely in cases of intrusion into public office; it being a writ maintainable against any person who usurps any office, franchise, or liberty. People v. Loew, 44 N. Y. Supp. 42, 44, 19 Misc. Rep. 248.

Quo warranto is in no sense a writ of correction or review. State ex inf. Crow v. Fleming, 59 S. W. 118, 119, 158 Mo. 558.

Quo warranto, in its nature, involves a possession and user of the office by another than the relator. Conklin v. Cunningham, 38 Pac. 170, 171, 7 N. M. 445.

One purpose of a quo warranto was to go beyond the record to the very truth of the appointment. State v. Kennedy, 37 Atl. 503, 505, 69 Conn. 220.

Quo warranto, in its nature involves a possession and user of an office by another than the relator, for, without such foundation, such a writ should not be issued, and cannot be maintained. Conklin v. Cunningham, 38 Pac. 170, 171, 7 N. M. 445.

The writ of quo warranto seems first to have been used in 1198 against the incumbent of a church to require him to show by what authority he held the church. It was used for the purpose of extortion by the sovereigns of England until its scope was checked by statute. The first of these statutes was known as the statute of Gloucester. By its provisions there was an opportunity given the party affected to be heard. Writs of quo warranto fell into disuse about the sixteenth year of Richard II. The substitution thereof of the information in the nature of quo warranto was attributed by Blackstone to the length of the process on the proceeding in quo warranto. State v. Moores, 76 N. W. 530, 56 Neb. 1; State v. Elliot, 44 Pac. 248-250, 13 Utah, 200; State ex rel. McIlhany v. Stewart, 32 Mo. 379, 381; Lindsey v. Attorney General, 33 Miss. 508, 523.

A writ of quo warranto cannot be maintained, except at the instance of the government, whatever may be the right of the prosecutor or person claiming the office. United States v. Lockwood (Wis.) 1 Pin. 359, 363.

Quo warranto is not a remedy to determine disputes between private persons and a corporation, but it is to determine by what right the corporation exercised wrongfully or illegally a certain franchise, or to oust it from the right to be a corporation, for an abuse or nonuser of franchise granted. In a word, it will only lie against a corporation for some violation of its charter. State ex inf. Crow v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 75 S. W. 776, 780, 176 Mo. 687, 63 L. E. A. 761.

From the earliest times the legal remedy for trying a title to an office was by the writ of quo warranto, now a direct action by the Attorney General. In Blackstone's Commentaries it is stated that the writ of quo warranto was an initial writ to try the right of one holding a title to office. Greene v. Knox, 67 N. E. 910, 912, 175 N. Y. 432 (citing People v. City of Yonkers Police Com'rs. 174 N. Y. 450, 67 N. E. 78, 95 Am. St. Rep. 596).

A writ of quo warranto is in the nature of a writ of right for the state against any person who claims or exercises any office to inquire by what authority he supports his claim in order to determine the right. Blackstone. The writ of quo warranto, in consequence of the length of its process, has long since become obsolete in the English law, and information in the nature of a quo warranto, wherein the process is speedier, has been substituted in its place. Tomlin, Law Dict. A writ of quo warranto is in the nature of a writ of right. It issues on demand of the proper officer of the state as a matter of course, and there is no more necessity for an application to the Supreme Court for this writ than there would be for a summons in a circuit court when the state is about to commence an action of debt against one of her debtors. State v. St. Louis Perpetual Marine, Fire & Life Ins. Co., 8 Mo. 330, 331.

The writ of quo warranto at common law was a high prerogative writ, in the nature of a writ of right for the King against him who claimed or usurped any office, franchise, or liberty of the crown, and also lay in case of nonuser or any neglect, misuser, or abuse of a franchise. It was a civil proceeding prosecuted by the King's Attorney General at the suit of the King, without relation, to try a civil right; and the judgment, if for the King, was of seizure into the King's hands. No fine was imposed or punishment inflicted on the defendant. State v. Ashley, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 279, 310.

Quo warranto proceedings are brought in the name and on behalf of the people to determine whether the incumbent has unlawfully usurped or intruded into, or is unlawfully holding, an office. They are not primarily in the interest of any individual, but are intended to protect the public generally against the unlawful usurpation of offices and franchises. Such proceedings deal mainly with the right of the incumbent to the office, independent of the question who shall fill it, and differ materially from election contests in the primary and principal purpose for which they are brought, as well as in their procedure. People v. Londoner, 22 Pac. 764, 765, 767, 13 Colo. 303, 6 L. R. A. 444.

In theory the King was the fountain of honor, of office, or of privilege; and, whenever a subject undertook to exercise a public office or franchise, he was, when called upon by the crown through a writ of quo warranto, compelled to show his title, and, if he failed to do so, judgment passed against him. The foundation of the rule may have been that, as all offices and franchises are the gift of the King, they are deemed to be possessed by him, and, until his grant is shown, there can be no presumption that he had parted with them, or invested his subject with the right to exercise any part of the royal prerogative. State v. Allen (Tenn.) 57 S. W. 182, 190.

Quo warranto is the proper proceeding to determine disputed questions of title to public office, and for deciding the proper person entitled to hold the office and exercise its functions. Though brought in the name of the state, it is usually upon the relation of the real party plaintiff—the claimant to the office—and the judgment rendered, in case the relator succeeds, is that the defendant be ousted, and he be placed in possession of the office. State v. Owens, 63 Tex. 261, 270; Roberson v. City of Bayonne, 33 Atl. 734, 735, 58 N. J. Law (29 Vroom) 325.

As civil proceeding.

See "Prosecution."

A proceeding by information in the nature of a quo warranto is a civil, and not a criminal, proceeding. State ex rel. Brison v. Lingo, 28 Mo. 496, 498.

Informations in quo warranto, though originally criminal proceedings, have long been regarded as purely of a civil character, and therefore are not criminal informations, in the sense of the fourteenth section of the Bill of Rights, prohibiting criminal informations for indictable offenses. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Vail, 53 Mo. 97, 107.

Quo warranto is a quasi criminal proceeding, instituted in the name of the people, in the discretion of the district attorney, against a usurper of any public office or franchise, for the purpose of primarily ousting him as provided by Civ. Prac. Act, § 276. People v. Green, 1 Idaho, 235.

The original common-law writ of quo warranto was a civil writ at the suit of the crown, and not a criminal prosecution. It was in the nature of a writ of right by the King against one who usurped or claimed franchises or liabilities, to inquire by what right he claimed them. This writ, however, fell into disuse in England centuries ago, and its place was supplied by an information in the nature of a quo warranto, which in its origin was a criminal method of prosecution, as well to punish the usurper by a fine for the usurpation of the franchise, as to oust him or seize it for the crown. Long before our Revolution, however, it lost its character as a criminal proceeding in everything except form, and was applied to the mere purposes of trying the civil right, seizing the franchise, or ousting the wrongful possessor, the fine being nominal only; and such, without any special legislation to that effect, has always been its character in many of the states of the Union, and it is therefore a civil remedy only. Ames v. Kansas, 4 Sup. Ct. 437, 442, 111 U. S. 449, 28 L. Ed. 482; People v. Dashaway Ass'n, 24 Pac. 277, 278, 84 Cal. 114.

Quo warranto is properly a criminal method of prosecution, as well to punish the usurper by a fine for the usurpation of a franchise, as to oust him or seize it for the crown; but it hath long been applied to the mere purposes of trying a civil right, seizing a franchise, and ousting the wrongful possessor, the fine being nominal only. 3 Bl. Comm. 263. It is a remedy given to the crown against such as have usurped any office or franchise, being properly a criminal prosecution in order to fine a defendant for his usurpation, as well as to oust him from his office, yet at present is considered as merely a civil proceeding. 4 Bl. Comm. 310. The old writ passed away, and the information, the nature and character of which, except as to form, was essentially a civil as contradistinguished from a criminal proceeding, took its place; that is to say, the information in the nature of a quo warranto took its place, being applied to the purpose of trying the civil right; the fine being for the most part a fiction, as it was nominal only. State v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 190.

The history of the remedy of quo warranto (see 3 Bl. Comm. §§ 262, 263, and Shortt, Inform. §§ 110, 111, note 1) shows that it was originally a civil proceeding by writ of right for the crown; but afterwards, in the time of Edward III, or later, in order to obtain a speedier process, this form fell into disuse, and the proceeding by information was substituted. Of this latter form, Blackstone says: "This is properly a criminal method of prosecution, as well to punish the usurper by a fine for the usurpation of the franchise, as to oust him or to seize it for the crown, but hath long been applied to the mere purposes of trying the civil right, seizing the franchise, or ousting the wrongful possessor, the fine being nominal only." Mr. Heard, in the note cited above, says that long before our Revolution it lost its character as a criminal proceeding in everything except form. Prior to the statute of 9 Anne, c. 20, the remedy only extended to encroachments upon the royal prerogative. High, Extr. Rem. 434. That statute extended it to usurpation of municipal offices and corporate franchises, and authorized the imposition of a fine. In some states the statute of Anne has been recognized as a part of their system of laws, and in others special statutes have been passed. We are not aware that the statute has been so recognized in this state, and it was not named among the English statutes declared to be in force in this colony in February, 1749-50. The only case which seems to recognize it, although not expressly so, is State v. Brown, 5 R. I. 1, in the closing sentence of which the court say: "As there is no pretense of improper motives, the nominal fine of ten cents only will be imposed." The implication here is that, if improper motives were found, a larger fine might be imposed. But there was no discussion of the question in the case, and no authority for the imposition of the larger fine is stated. There are cases in other states—e. g., People v. Rensselaer & S. R. Co. (N. Y.) 15 Wend. 113, 30 Am. Dec. 33, and Attorney General v. City of Salem, 103 Mass. 138—where the dictum of judges may be found to the effect that the judgment is ouster and fine; but an examination of numerous cases discloses no instance of the rendition of such a judgment, except in cases where a statute specially authorizes the imposition of a fine. Considering the remedy, as it is now generally regarded, as practically a civil remedy, we do not think the court, in the absence of statutory authority, is justified in imposing a fine. Even the nominal fine spoken of by Blackstone is now generally disregarded. See form of judgment in Commonwealth v. Fowler, 11 Mass. 339, and note to People v. Richardson (N. Y.) 4 Cow. 97, 100; High, Extr. Rem. § 633. This may well be so, since such a fine is but the dim shadow of the criminal nature of the proceeding. State v. Kearn, 22 Atl. 1018, 1020, 17 R. I. 391.

Quo warranto, at common law, was a criminal proceeding; and, in addition to the judgment of seizure or of ouster, there was judgment that the defendant be taken to make a fine to the King for the usurpation. The information in the nature of quo warranto, under the statute, is also strictly a criminal proceeding, being for the usurpation of a state prerogative; and the statute authorizes a fine to be imposed, as well as to oust the party from his assumed franchise. Attorney General v. Utica Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 2 Johns. Ch. 371, 377.

As information in nature of quo warranto.

The phrase "quo warranto," as used in Gen. St. c. 63, § 1, refers to an information in the nature of quo warranto. State v. Tracy, 51 N. W. 613, 48 Minn. 497.

The words "writ of quo warranto," as used in Const. art. 8, § 3, authorizing the Supreme Court to issue the writ of quo warranto, mean the information in the nature of a writ of quo warranto used in modern times as a substitute for the ancient and obsolete writ of quo warranto. State v. West Wisconsin R. Co., 34 Wis. 197.

The phrase "writ of quo warranto," in constitutional provisions, is held to mean the modern information in the nature of such writ. State v. Gardner, 3 S. D. 553, 556, 54 N. W. 606.

At common law the writ of quo warranto was a civil writ at the suit of the King. Whatever the origin of the writ, whether civil or criminal, it is certain now that it is but a civil suit. The phrase "writ of quo warranto," in Const. art. 6, § 3, where the Supreme Court is given power to issue writs of quo warranto, means information in the nature of quo warranto, since courts, laws, and text-writers had been accustomed for hundreds of years to use the phrase "quo warranto" as the legal synonym of "information in the nature of quo warranto." State ex rel. Walker v. Equitable Loan & Investment Ass'n, 41 S. W. 916, 919, 142 Mo. 325.

QUOD PERMITTAT PROSTERNERE.

A writ commanding the defendant to permit the plaintiff to abate the nuisance complained of, and, unless he so permits, to summon him to appear in court and show cause why he will not, and that the plaintiff shall have judgment to abate the nuisance, and to recover damages against the defendant. Conhoxton Stone Road v. Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. Co., 51 N. Y. 573, 579, 10 Am. Rep. 646.

Quod permittat prosternere was a common-law writ in the nature of a writ of right, commanding defendant to permit the plaintiff to abate the nuisance, or show cause against the same, and plaintiff could have judgment to abate the nuisance, and for damages against the defendant. Powell v. Bentley & Gerwig Furniture Co., 34 W. Va. 804, 807, 12 S. E. 1085, 1086, 12 L. R. A. 53.

The writ of quod permittat prosternere does not merely give satisfaction for a past injury sustained by reason of a nuisance, but it also strikes at the root of the evil, by removing the cause of the mischief itself. Miller v. Truehart (Va.) 4 Leigh, 569, 577.

QUORUM.

See "Full Quorum."

A majority of a board of school directors constitutes a quorum. Decker v. School Dist. No. 2, 74 S. W. 390, 391, 101 Mo. App. 115.

The word "quorum," in a general sense, means a majority of the whole body. Berlin v. Nominations, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 615, 616.

The general rule is that to make a quorum of a select and definite body of men, possessing the power to elect, a majority, at least, must be present, and then a majority of the quorum may decide. Ex parte Willcocks (N. Y.) 7 Cow. 402, 409, 17 Am. Dec. 525.

It is now well settled that in all cases the majority of a legislative body is a quorum entitled to act for the whole body, unless the power that creates it has otherwise directed. Zeller v. Central R. Co., 35 Atl. 932, 934, 84 Md. 304, 34 L. R. A. 469.

A quorum is such a number of members of a body as is competent to transact business in the absence of other members. State v. Trustees of Wilkesville Tp., 20 Ohio St. 288, 293.

"Quorum," as used in Const. U. S. art. 4, § 8, providing that a majority of each house shall constitute a quorum to do business, is, for the purposes of the General Assembly, not less than a majority of the whole number of which the house may be composed. Vacancies from death, resignation, or failure to elect cannot be deducted in ascertaining the quorum. Opinion of Justices, 12 Fla. 653.

In determining how many judges shall constitute a court, or a quorum of a court, no distinction can be drawn between the words "quorum" and "court." Each term implies a body capable of exercising the function of a whole body not otherwise reserved.

Therefore the rule that in the House of Lords, the Supreme Court of England, a small minority may sit in deciding appeals, is applicable to show the propriety of the statutory provision that a minority of the Supreme Court judges may constitute a quorum of such court for the transaction of certain business. Floyd v. Quinn, 52 Atl. 880, 882, 886, 24 R. I. 147.

The quorum of a body may be defined to be that number of the body which, when assembled in their proper places, will enable them to transact their proper business, or, in other words, that number that makes the lawful body, and gives them power to pass a law or ordinance. But when, in the case of a municipal corporation, the statute law creating it is silent as to what shall constitute a legal assembly, the common law, both in England and in this country, is well settled that a majority of the members shall constitute a legal body. In Blacket v. Blizard, 9 Barn. & C. 851, the court recognized the general rule of law prevailing in England, that a public trust committed to a definite number of persons should be executed at a meeting where the majority of those are present. So, in this country, Mr. Dillon states that the common-law rules as to quorums and majorities, established with reference to corporate bodies consisting of a definite number of corporators, have, in general, been applied to the common council or select governing bodies of our municipal corporations, where the matter is not regulated by charter or statute. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 278. For the body itself to attempt to fix a greater number as necessary to constitute a quorum is for the body to attempt to change a rule of the common law, and the rule of procedure of the common council prescribing that two-thirds of its members shall be necessary to constitute a quorum is void. Helskell v. City of Baltimore, 4 Atl. 116, 119, 65 Md. 125, 57 Am. Rep. 308.

The word "quorum," now in common use, is from the Latin. It was anciently used in the commissions by which the King of Great Britain designated certain justices "jointly and severally to keep the peace, and any two or more of them to inquire of and determine felonies and other misdemeanors, in which number some particular justices, or one of them, are directed to be always included, and no business to be done without their presence." The persons so designated as essential to the transaction of business were called "justices of the quorum." Hence the term "quorum" has come to signify "such a number of the officers or members of any body as is competent by law or constitution to transact business." 1 Bl. Comm. 351; Webster's and Worcester's Dictionaries. For example, our Constitution provides: "The Senate shall consist of twenty-six, and the House of Representatives of forty-nine, members;" and again: "A majority of each house shall constitute a quorum, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members." Article 5, §§ 11, 46. Here we have the same language, "shall consist," as in section 5 of the judiciary article. Can it for a moment be supposed that if a vacancy should occur in the Senate or in the House of Representatives, by the death or resignation of a member during the legislative session, the General Assembly, or either house thereof, would no longer be legally constituted for the transaction of business? Such vacancies are of common occurrence, and yet such legislative bodies, so long as they have a quorum in attendance, proceed regularly with the transaction of business. Snider v. Rinehart, 31 Pac. 716, 718, 18 Colo. 18.

QUORUM UNUS.

The term "quorum unus" is derived from England. In England all the justices for a county are appointed and named in one commission, under the great seal. This appoints them all, jointly and severally, to keep the peace. In accordance with this commission, an assembly of two justices or more, quorum unus, makes a session, not only for inquiry, but to hear and determine. Where a statute confers certain powers upon, or requires certain duties to be performed by, any two justices, quorum unus, it is only necessary that one should be of the quorum. Gilbert v. Sweetser, 4 Me. (4 Greenl.) 483, 484.

QUOTA.

"Quota," as used in Laws 1865, c. 29, providing that a bounty should be paid to any person furnishing an acceptable substitute to apply on the quota under the call of December 19, 1864, means the whole number of men assigned to the district, without regard to deductions on account of credits. The gross quota is meant. Taber v. Erie County Sup'rs, 14 N. Y. Supp. 211, 214, 59 Hun, 627.

"Quota," as used in St. 1878, c. 190, § 1, cl. 10, providing that any person duly enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States as a part of the quota of any city or town under any call of the President during the Civil War, and who has continued in such service for a time not less than one year, and has not been proved guilty of willful desertion, and received an honorable discharge, shall be deemed to have acquired a settlement in such city or town, should be construed to include every person duly enlisted and mustered into the service of the United States, and the Legislature intended to include every man who served and made a part of that quota. Inhabitants

In St. 1865, c. 30, § 1, providing that a soldier or sailor, to gain a settlement in a city or town, must have been duly enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States as a part of the quota of the city or town in which the settlement is claimed under a call of the President of the United States during the Civil War, the term "quota" should not be construed in any legal or technical signification, but, according to its natural sense and import, to designate the proportion or share of the common burden which from the beginning belonged to each place. The Legislature intended the act to embrace every man who at any time served and went to make up the quota, though his services may have begun and ended before the quota was ascertained, or even before it was fastened by the statute as a legal obligation upon the respective cities and towns. And every soldier who was eventually credited to any municipality as a part of its quota rendered to it the public service, in return for which the privileges of a legal settlement therein have been conferred by the act. The same benefit has been received by the town, and the same rights were given by the statute, whatever may have been the date of the enlistment and mustering into the army. Inhabitants of Bridgewater v. Inhabitants of Plymouth, 97 Mass. 382, 388.

QUOTATION MARKS.

As marks of punctuation, see "Mark of Punctuation."

QUOTIENT VERDICT.

A quotient verdict is where each juror marks down an amount, and then the total amount thus marked down is added together, and that sum divided by the number of jurors in order to reach the amount of the verdict. Hamilton v. Owego Waterworks, 48 N. Y. Supp. 106, 107, 22 App. Div. 573.

Quotient verdict is a verdict rendered by agreement for one-twelfth of the aggregate amount of the several estimates by the jurors. Moses v. Central Park, N. & H. R. Co., 23 N. Y. Supp. 23, 3 Misc. Rep. 322.

QUOTING LISTS.

The quoting lists of a packing company were names of persons to whom the company quoted prices of commodities with the expectation of doing business with them. They had been compiled with much expense, and were valuable on that account, as well as because of the use made of them in the course of business. Torsch v. Dell, 41 Atl 903, 88 Md. 459.

R

R.

"R." as used in a deed describing land as "Secs. 22 & 28, Tp. 79, R. 18, Poweshiek County," is not uncertain or indefinite. It is a contraction in almost universal use in describing lands, and everybody understands it to mean "range." Ottumwa, C. F. & St. P. R. Co. v. McWilliams, 32 N. W. 815, 316, 71 Iowa, 164.

R. R.

"R. R." is a well-understood abbreviation of the word "railroad." West Chicago St. R. Co. v. People, 40 N. E. 599, 600, 155 Ill. 299.

RACE.

See "Selling Race."

A provision in a note given in the purchase of a horse that it is not to become due and payable until after the horse has won a race does not render the note invalid as being based on a wager, as it does not require a race for a wager, but is satisfied by winning a race for a premium, which is not illegal. Treacy v. Chinn, 79 Mo. App. 648, 651.

There can be no just distinction taken between the "trotting" and "racing" of horses. Ellis v. Beale, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 337, 339, 36 Am. Dec. 723.

RACE FIELD.

"Race field," as used in an indictment for unlawful gaming at cards, is the open space between quarter race paths at a time when two or more horses were exercised in training on the track and several persons had assembled to see the training, at which time bets on the running of the horses were made, though the racing for which the training was preparatory took place some days afterward, and though no company, club, or other person had the right to race there without the owner's permission. Commonwealth v. Wilson (Va.) 9 Leigh, 648, 649.

RACE MEETING.

The term "race meeting," as used in Act March 5, 1895, regulating holding of race meetings, and prescribing the penalty for violation of its provisions, etc., means meetings for horse races, and hence is not unconstitutional as embracing a subject not embraced in the title of the act, which declares the act to be for the purpose of regulating horse racing. State v. Roby, 41 N. E. 145, 150, 142

Ind. 168, 33 L. R. A. 213, 51 Am. St. Rep. 174.

"Race meeting," as used in Act March 5, 1895, forbidding a race meeting for a longer period than fifteen days at one time and less than thirty days subsequent to the last race meeting at the same place, regardless of the person, company, or association holding either of such meetings, should be construed to embrace meetings held on three different tracks, two of which are separated by a highway only, and the other being less than one-half mile distant, and that meetings held on such tracks constituted one race meeting within the meaning of the statute. State v. Forsythe, 44 N. E. 593, 595, 147 Ind. 460, 33 L. R. A. 221.

"Raceway," as used in a deed excepting the water privilege of a stream to be carried through the land conveyed in a raceway, means an artificial canal dug in the earth, leading from the dam of a stream to the machinery which it drives, and also a similar water course leading from the bottom of the water wheel. Wilder v. De Cou, 1 N. W. 48, 51, 28 Minn. 10.

RADIUS.

The term "radius" means "a right line drawn or extended from the center of a circle to its periphery," so that an agreement not to practice dentistry within a radius of ten miles of town means from the center of the town; the town as a whole not being suitable as the center implied by the term "radius." Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 175, 177, 36 Am. Rep. 64.

Of six squares.

"Radius," as used in Acts 1878, No. 100, prohibiting the keeping of a private market within "a radius of six squares" of a public market in New Orleans, signifies the length of the distance within which the prohibition was to be enforced. A radius is a straight line drawn from the center of a circle to any point of the circumference. Its length is half the diameter of that circle, or is the space between the center and the circumference. The center for measurement from which the radius would shoot was not required to be located in the middle of the space occupied by a public market, which is usually not a square, but some other geometrical figure, as a parallelogram or triangle; for the space between the center and the external boundaries would have to be included in the length of the distance, and this would shorten that length. State v. Berard, 3 South. 463, 464, 40 La. Ann. 172.

The provision of Act 1878, No. 100, which prohibits private markets within a "radius of six squares" from a public market, does not contemplate or justify the prohibited distance to be measured on an air line, but its true meaning is to prohibit private markets in all directions projecting from the nearest public market within a distance of six squares, over which customers would be able to walk from one market to another. State v. Barthe, 6 South. 531, 532, 41 La. Ann. 46.

RAFFLE.

See "Grand Raffle."

As a lottery, see "Lottery."

A "raffle" is a game of perfect chance, in which every participant is equal with every other in proportion to his risk and prospect of gain. The prize is a common fund, or that which is purchased by a common fund. Each is an equal actor in developing the chances in proportion to his risk. Whether they be developed with dice or other instruments is not material. The successful party takes the whole prize, and all the rest lose. The element of one against the many, the keeper against the bettors, either directly or indirectly, is not to be found in it. It has no keeper, dealer, or exhibitor. Prendergast v. State, 57 S. W. 850, 851, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 358; Stearnes v. State, 21 Tex. 692, 699; Riseln v. State, 71 S. W. 974, 975, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 413; Long v. State, 2 S. W. 541, 542, 22 Tex. App. 194, 58 Am. Rep. 633.

Where a person set up watches of which he fixed the value, which was equally apportioned among certain adventures, and the chance as to who should take them was determined by the throwing of pieces of coin, the adventure or hazard is a "raffle," and not a lottery. State v. Pinchback (S. C.) 2 Mill, Const. 128, 130.

A "raffle," as we understand it, is where one owning real or personal property of a certain value, say worth $100, sells 10 chances to 10 parties at $10 each, and the party drawing the capital prize takes the article. Dalton v. State (Tex.) 74 S. W. 25, 27.

Webster defines "raffle," when used as a verb, to mean to cast dice for a prize, for which each person concerned in the game lays down a stake, or at least a part of the value, as to raffle for a watch. Used as a noun, it means a game of chance or lottery in which several persons deposit a part of the value of the thing in consideration of the chance of getting it. State v. Kennon, 21 Mo. 262, 264.

Sections 30, 31, Rev. St., entitled "Of Raffleing and Lotteries," have reference only to the distribution of money or valuable things to be determined by law of chance, which shall be dependent upon the drawing of a lottery over which the parties to the distribution have no control; and the distribution among the members of an art union or its works of art by a lot, conducted by themselves, is not embraced within it. People v. American Art Union, 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 240, 241.

RAFT.

"A 'raft' may be made by lashing together two pieces of plank; and the word comprehends not only this, but a floating structure of timber of great value and extent." The term does not imply which, and a finding that a stream is navigable for rafts does not show that it is navigable in a commercial sense. State v. Town of Gilmanton, 14 N. H. 467, 479.

"Rafts," as used in an act of assembly declaring a creek to be a public stream or highway for the passage of boats and rafts, should be construed to include a number of logs not fastened together, but floated in the stream contiguous to each other. The term "raft" is used to express a body of timber held together by attraction or the force of external pressure. Walker, in his Dictionary, says it is a frame or float made by laying pieces of timber across each other; which, though differing from that given by Webster, may be accepted as equally expressive of the usual acceptance of the term. Deddrick v. Wood, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 9, 18.

As vessel.

See "Vessel."

RAFTING.

"Sorting and rafting," as used in Act 1891, c. 174, establishing the rule by which to fix the price for sorting and rafting logs and timber rafted and secured at a certain boom, means substantially the same as "rafting" in the charter of the boom company, specifying the fees and tolls allowed for rafting logs and timber. The act of sorting is a necessary part of the work of rafting. The very nature of the business, which is a proper element to be taken into consideration in giving construction of the language of the charter, indicates that logs of different owners arrive in the boom, and in rafting have to be separated or sorted out. Sorting and rafting may well be construed as imposing no greater duties than are implied in rafting in the charter. Proprietors of Machias Boom v. Sullivan, 27 Atl. 189, 191, 85 Me. 343.

Where a complaint charged negligence in rafting or rafting out logs, the words "raft ing and delivering," as used in a special finding in the action, limiting the damage to the failure to exercise reasonable diligence in rafting and delivering, means rafting or rafting out, nothing more, nothing less, and they are used in the conjunctive, and as having the same significance and meaning. Pennobscot Lumbering Ass'n v. Bussell, 42 Atl. 406, 92 Me. 256.

RAGE.

Anger distinguished, see "Anger."

RAGS.

In an action on a policy of insurance against loss by fire on a junk dealer's stock of rags it is permissible to show that by a usage of the trade the term "rags" has acquired a broader signification than belongs to the word as commonly used, and to prove that in the junk trade the term "rags" includes all articles used in the manufacture of paper. Mooney v. Howard Ins. Co., 138 Mass. 375, 52 Am. Rep. 277.

RAIL.

See "All Rail."

RAIL CAR.

Box car as, see "Box Car."

RAILING.

A statute requiring towns to maintain a "fence or railing" on certain roads implies a barrier of sufficient strength to prevent travelers under ordinary circumstances from going off the bridge or embankment. Munson v. Town of Derby, 37 Conn. 298, 310, 9 Am. Rep. 332.

RAILROAD—RAILWAY.

See "Belt Railroad"; "Bond of Railroad"; "Branch Railroad"; "City Railway"; "Connecting Roads"; "Horse Railroad"; "Lateral Railroad"; "Logging Railroad"; "New Road"; "Street Railroad"; "Switch Road."
Any railroad, see "Any."

"Railroad" and "railway" are used interchangeably. They are as nearly exact synonyms as any two words in the English language. In common speech the word "railroad" is the more frequent designation. State v. Brin, 16 N. W. 406, 30 Minn. 522; Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 210, 219; Millvale Borough v. Evergreen Ry. Co., 18 Atl. 993, 995, 131 Pa. 1.

The words "railroad" and "railway" are synonymous, and under all ordinary circumstances they are to be treated as without difference in meaning. Massachusetts Loan & Trust Co. v. Hamilton, 88 Fed. 588, 592, 32 C. C. A. 46; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Alentown & B. Rapid Transit Co., 44 Atl. 319, 320, 192 Pa. 596.

Though in the popular understanding the expression "passenger railways" does not mean the great lines of road operated by steam power, yet it by no means follows that the term "railroad" does not include all passenger railways, for the purpose of taxation. A railway is essentially a railroad. They mean the same thing, and are used indiscriminately in reference to our great interstate lines. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. City of Pittsburgh, 104 Pa. 522, 538.

In Missouri legislation there is no distinction between a railroad and a railway. St. Louis R. Co. v. Northwestern St. L. Ry. Co., 2 Mo. App. 69, 75.

"Railway" is synonymous with "railroad," so that where an action was begun against the Houston & Texas Central Railway Company a judgment against the Houston & Texas Central Railroad Company was not erroneous. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Weaver (Tex.) 41 S. W. 840, 848.

The words "railway" and "railroad" have identically the same meaning, and an indictment charging the breaking and entering of a depot belonging to a "railroad" company is sustained by proof of the entering of a depot belonging to a "railway" company. Davis v. State, 32 S. E. 158, 159, 105 Ga. 808.

The legal signification of the term "railroad" is not only a road or way on which iron rails are laid, but a road as incident to the possession or ownership of which important franchises and rights affecting the public are attached. Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147, 149, 26 Am. Rep. 700.

A railroad is a road or way on which iron rails are laid for wheels to run on for the conveyance of heavy loads and vehicles. Dinsmore v. Racine M. R. Co., 12 Wis. 640, 657 (citing Webst. Dict.).

A "railroad" should be confined to the highway on which the railway is laid, and the word "railway" to the rails of the road. Johnston v. Morrow, 60 Mo. 339, 341.

In Pennsylvania it is held that the words "railroad" and "railway" have been used indiscriminately by the legislature in that state, and have no technical meaning in a statute. City of Philadelphia v. Philadelphia Traction Co., 55 Atl. 762, 763, 206 Pa. 35.

The term "railroad," as used in the chapter relating to railroads, shall be construed to mean a railroad or railway operated by steam power. Civ. Code S. C. 1902, § 2024.

The term "railroad," as used in the chapter relating to railroads and street railways, means a railroad or railway of the class usually operated by steam power. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 978, c. 111, § 1.

Bridges and ferries.

A bridge owned by a railroad company on its line of road is properly returned for taxation as so much mileage of railroad, and cannot be again taxed as a bridge. Schmidt v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex.) 24 S. W. 547.

The term "railroad," as used in the act relating to the railroad and warehouse commission, shall include all bridges or ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating the railroad, whether owned and operated under a contract, agreement, or lease. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 379b. So in that part of the chapter on railroad corporations relating to the regulation of common carriers, and defining the duties of the commissioner of railroads. Rev. Codes N. D. 1889, § 3012; Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 10,047; U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 3154, 3206; Code Iowa 1897, § 2122. See, also, Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. Ed. 1047.

As building.

See "Building."

Cable road.

A short line of inclined cable railroad, located wholly within one county, and operated by means of a cable and stationary steam power, chartered under Acts Gen. Assem. 1887, c. 16, providing for the incorporation of cable or cog railroads for ascending mountain heights, does not come within the provisions of Acts 1897, c. 5, authorizing the assessment of railroad property by the state railroad commissioners. While the word "railroad" appears in the name of the corporation, and while in one sense it is a railroad, it is also apparent that it is a peculiar character of railroad. It is a character of railway specially designed for ascending mountain heights, and is a character of railroad that of course is not of common construction. Lookout Incline & L. L. Ry. Co. v. King (Tenn.) 59 S. W. 805, 808.

Capital stock.

"Road," as used in a contract providing that the road, rolling and live stock of a street car company should be exempt from taxation for a term of 50 years, cannot be construed to mean capital stock, because a part of the companies' capital stock, namely, that which was invested in live stock and rolling stock, was expressly exempted, and, if the word "road" includes capital stock, no meaning whatever would be given to the words "rolling and live stock." They would constitute unnecessary tautology in the exempting clause. Atlanta St. R. Co. v. City of Atlanta, 66 Ga. 104, 109.

Completed road.

The word "railroad," as found in Act Assem. April 23, 1861 (Laws 1861, p. 410), providing that any railroad may purchase and hold the stock and bonds, or either, of any other railroad, and that any railroad can enter into a contract for the use or lease of any other railroad, means a finished railroad, and does not embrace the transfer of a franchise. Wood v. Bedford & B. R. Co. (Pa.) 8 Phila. 94, 95.

A railroad, within the meaning of its charter requiring its completion to a certain point by a certain date, and exempting it from taxation, is to be construed as including the entire road, consisting of several tracks, although but one track was constructed to the designated terminus within the time fixed in the charter. State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 48 Md. 49, 74.

"Railroad," as used in a statute authorizing a contract for the use of a railroad, means one capable of being used, not a road-bed capable of receiving rails. Troy & B. R. Co. v. Boston, H. T. & W. Ry. Co., 86 N. Y. 107, 121.

"Road," as used in Act May 12, 1846, authorizing the Hudson River Railroad Company to issue so many additional shares, not exceeding 10 per cent. of its original capital, as might be necessary to enable the company to provide for and pay interest on the installments paid in for the construction of the road until it should be completed and put in operation, meant the road as an entirety on its completion. Manice v. Hudson River R. Co., 10 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Duer) 426, 441.

"Road," as used in a mortgage by a railroad company on the road and its franchise, means the road in its completed condition, proper and ready for use in running over it in the ordinary manner of that kind of business. It was not a road—that is, a railroad—but only a roadway, when it was only located between two termini and in the process of construction, but in no part completed ready for use. Miller v. Rutland & W. R. Co., 36 Vt. 452, 493.

"Road," as used in Laws 1890, c. 565, § 78, providing that any railroad corporation leasing any of its road for a longer period than one year, unless such lease is approved by two-thirds of the stockholders, will be held to mean a lease of the entire road or an entire portion of a road, and will not cover a mere contract for passage of cars over a road of which otherwise the owner remains in possession and control. Chapman v. Syracuse Rapid-Transit Ry. Co., 56 N. Y. Supp. 250, 253, 25 Misc. Rep. 628.

Depots and other buildings.

"Railroad," as used in Gen. St. § 3476, providing that when it shall be necessary for the construction of a railroad to intersect or cross any water course or any public highway it may be constructed across or upon the same, etc., embraces main tracks, side tracks, turnouts, and depots; in fact all the land and buildings owned by the corporation, and necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business. State v. Railroad Com'rs, 15 Atl. 758, 757, 56 Conn. 308.

"Railroad," as used in Laws Kan. 1872, p. 110, c. 68, authorizing counties, incorporated cities, and municipal townships to issue bonds for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, should be construed to include the depots and side tracks of an existing railroad. Such constructions are constituents—essential parts—of any railroad, without which it would be incomplete, and incapable of serving the uses for which it is intended. Rock Creek Tp. v. Strong, 96 U. S. 271, 276, 24 L. Ed. 815.

"Railroad," in its ordinary acceptation, fairly includes all the structures which are necessary and essential to its operation, and as used in a congressional grant in aid of a construction of a railroad has a more extended signification than "track" or "roadway," and includes station houses, etc. United States Trust Co. v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 47 Pac. 725, 729, 8 N. M. 673.

In common parlance a railway consists of the road and the rolling stock. The former includes everything that is immovable or affixed to the soil, such as station houses, round houses, platforms, water tanks, and machine shops. The road cannot be operated without these, or considered constructed until they are built. A license to take material for the construction of a railroad should not be confined to material necessary for the construction of the mere track. United States v. Chaplin (U. S.) 31 Fed. 890, 895.

In its ordinary acceptation, the term "railroad" fairly includes all structures which are necessary and essential to its operation. As used in the special act of June 8, 1872, granting to the Denver & Rio Grande Railway Company the right to take the material necessary for the construction of said railroad, the term is not limited merely to the roadbed or roadway, but includes also structures essential to the operation of the road. Thus a grant of timber for construction of a railroad would be a grant of timber for construction of depots and necessary station buildings. United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 11, 15, 150 U. S. 1, 37 L. Ed. 975.

An exemption from taxation of the capital stock of a railroad company and the "road" with fixtures and appurtenances, including workshops, warehouses, and vehicles of transportation, does not include a hotel building erected within the space which the company is entitled to hold for a right of way, though it is built under a lease from the company, and is a convenience to passengers, and a means of profit to the road. The ticket offices, however, which are kept within such building, are exempt. Day v. Joiner, 65 Tenn. (6 Baxt.) 441, 442.

"Road," as used in St. §§ 4044, 4045, providing that if a railroad fails to fence its road it shall be liable for the injuries resulting from such failure, does not include depot grounds. Moses v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 23 Pac. 498, 500, 18 Or. 385, 8 L. R. A. 135.

The word "railroad" shall be held to include, in addition to the track of said railroad, including the rails, couplings, spikes, ties, bridges, culverts, tunnels, cuts, fills, embankments, and the land owned by the right of way of such railroad, all the structures, fixtures, improvements, and buildings of said railroad owned thereon or used in connection therewith. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 1237.

A power granted to a corporation to construct a railroad and establish transportation lines upon it necessarily includes the essential appendages required to complete and maintain such a work and carry on such a business, as the power to erect and maintain suitable depots, carhouses, water tanks, shops for repairing engines, houses for bridge and switch tenders, coal and wood yards for fuel and for the use of their locomotives, etc.; but there is a limit to this incidental power of the company, which must be fixed where the necessity ends and the mere convenience begins. The necessary appendages of a railroad and transportation company are one thing and those appendages which may be convenient means for increasing the advantages and profits of the company are another thing. It might be advantageous for the company to purchase lands and erect houses in the right location and of the right kind for all their constant employes, to establish factories for making their own rails, engines, and cars, and even to purchase coal mines and supply themselves with fuel; but these are not among the necessary powers of such a company. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. v. Mansfield Tp. Com'rs, 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 510, 514, 57 Am. Dec. 409.

"Road," as used in the charter of a railroad company declaring that the company should pay an annual tax of one-half of 1 per cent. "upon the cost of said road," means the actual roadbed and its rails with its appendages, including bridges, viaducts, wharves, piers, depots, and depot grounds, machine shops, and other similar erections which are essential either to its completion or its advantageous and convenient operation. State Treasurer v. Somerville & E. R. Co., 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 21, 27.

Elevated railway.

"Railway," as used in Code 1873, § 464, requiring compensation to owners of lots abutting on a street in which there is a railway, should be construed to include an elevated railroad located in a street for the transportation of passengers only, so as to require compensation to the owners of abutting lots for damages for the erection of such railway; since it could not be held that elevated railroads were within the contemplation of the Legislature as a street railroad when the act was passed. Freiday v. Sioux City Rapid Transit Co., 60 N. W. 656, 658, 192 Iowa, 191, 28 L. R. A. 246.

Ferry distinguished.

See "Ferry."

Gauge.

When the word "railroad" or "railroads" is used in any general or special law of this state, the same shall be deemed to apply alike to all railroads, without reference to the gauge thereof. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 256.

As necessary land.

The term "railroad" in a mortgage of a railroad company includes not only the whole road, but also the lands belonging to it and essential to the enjoyment of its franchise. Chapman v. Pittsburg & S. R. Co., 28 W. Va. 299, 308.

The term "railroad" in a mortgage of a railroad does not include after-acquired lands, unless they are used in connection with the actual operation of the road as a part thereof. Calhoun v. Memphis & P. R. Co. (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 1045, 1047.

As a nuisance.

See "Nuisance."

Operation of train required.

A railroad track is of no use to its owner or the public unless cars are run upon it. It is the movement of the trains upon the track which constitutes it a "railroad." That is the consummation of the whole business. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Elliott (U. S.) 102 Fed. 96, 106, 42 C. C. A. 188.

Railways in pneumatic tubes.

When the Constitution and general laws of New York speak of "railways," they always mean railways either for the general carriage of property or of passengers or of both, and a railway which may be operated in small pneumatic tubes by atmospheric pressure for the transmission of small packages is not within such meaning. Such a tube may contain vehicles placed on wheels, and the wheels may run upon rails or in grooves, and yet the structure could not, according to the popular sense, or in a legal sense, be what is generally known as a railway. The tubes may be so constructed that in a technical or scientific sense the structure might be called a railway, and so, too, any structure upon which vehicles may be moved upon rails, however peculiar or small, may in some limited sense be called a railway, and yet not be a railway within the meaning of the Constitution and the general laws of the state. Astor v. New York Arcade Ry. Co., 113 N. Y. 93, 105, 20 N. E. 594, 596, 2 L. R. A. 789.

All property of company included.

In commonly accepted usage the meaning of the term "railway" has been extended to include not only the permanent way, but everything necessary to its operation, as the rolling stock, the buildings, including stations, warehouses, roundhouses, locomotive shops, car shops, repair shops, and all other property of the operating company, as stocks, bonds, and other securities. Atchison, T. & S. F. Co. v. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co., 70 Pac. 939, 943, 67 Kan. 569.

A railroad is a unit every part contributing to its purposes as a whole. This unit is made up of lands, personal property, choses in action, easements, all dependent upon and inseparable from each other, deriving their value from this inseparability—from the fact that they contribute to this unit. They differ from every other species of property. Chamberlain v. Walter (U. S.) 60 Fed. 788, 793.

The general term "railroad," as ordinarily used, includes many kinds of property, both real and personal, and cannot, with any degree of propriety, be confined to the track, or the land simply necessary to lay the track upon. The word, with no further specifications and modifications, may well be taken as covering the entire property of the company connected with the use and purposes of the road. Knevals v. Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. (U. S.) 66 Fed. 224, 231, 13 C. C. A. 410.

As highway, road or street.

As public improvement, purpose or use.

See "Public Improvements"; "Public Purpose"; "Public Use"; "Public Work."

As railroad company.

The term "railroad" is frequently used to mean "railroad company." Calhoun v. Memphis & P. R. Co. (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 1045, 1047.

"Railroads," as used in Const. art. 17, § 12, providing that all railroads which may be built and operated in the state shall be responsible for all damages to persons and property under regulations prescribed by the General Assembly, does not mean railroad corporations or companies, but the railroad owned and operated by them. Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Daniels, 56 S. W. 874, 875, 68 Ark. 171.

The term "railroad" includes and applies to every person, firm, association of persons, and company, whether incorporated or not, who or which shall own or operate a railroad as a common carrier. Code Miss. 1892, § 4336.

Railroad company distinguished.

The word "railroad" is defined to be the roadbed, right of way, track, rolling stock, and appurtenances actually constructed and in operation as a public highway. The words "railroad company" do not mean the same thing as the word "railroad." The former may exist without the latter, and the latter without the former. The one applies to the agency which may construct or own, the other to the thing constructed or owned. International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Anderson Co., 59 Tex. 654, 663.

As real estate.

A railroad is real estate. Newark & H. Traction Co. v. Borough of North Arlington, 48 Atl. 568, 65 N. J. Law, 150 (citing People v. Cassity, 46 N. Y. 46; People v. Commissioner of Taxes & Assessments of City of New York, 82 N. Y. 459; People v. Commissioners of Taxes & Assessments of City of New York, 101 N. Y. 322, 4 N. E. 127).

As right of way.

The word "railroad" may sometimes mean the track or ground upon which the rails constituting the track are laid, or it may mean the right of way, including the track and the land on either side of the track, according to the connection in which the word is used. As used in Rev. St. c. 134, § 2, authorizing a telegraph company to construct lines along and upon a railroad means the right of way of the railroad company. St. Louis & C. R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Co., 51 N. E. 382, 386, 178 Ill. 506.

"Railroad," as used in Gen. St. c. 63, § 59, providing that the mayor and aldermen of cities and selectmen of towns cannot lawfully lay out and establish a townway across a railroad without first obtaining authority therefor from the county commissioners, should be construed to mean all the land, not exceeding five rods in width, taken by a railroad corporation for their road, which is included within the location thereof, filed according to law with the commissioners of the county within which the land is situated. The track or iron rails on which cars and carriages are to pass and travel may be laid down on any part of the surface of the land within the limits of the location, and they may be changed and shifted from place to place thereon as may be required for the convenience or reasonable accommodation of the company, which may also erect on the land such structures and buildings as are reasonably incident to the support of the road. Commonwealth v. Inhabitants of Haverhill, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 523, 524 (citing Inhabitants of Worcester v. Western R. Corp., 45 Mass. [4 Metc.] 564).

A relinquishment of a right of way of a certain width for a railroad to be located on the section line dividing two sections does not mean that the track of such railroad should be on the section line and nowhere else. It means that the strip of land given for the right of way should be located on the section line, which line and the track were both to be included in the strip. The word "railroad," says a leading lexicographer, should be confined to the highway in which the railroad is laid, the word "railway" to the rails when laid. In common parlance these words are used interchangeably. Munkers v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 60 Mo. 334, 337.

The word "road," when applied to a railroad, is often used in a sense which comprehends not only the ground on which the ties and rails are laid, but the strip of ground on either side thereof, extending to the limits of its authorized right of way; and was so used in the conveyance of a city lot to a railroad conditioned that the grantee should construct and maintain its road through the tract. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Cook (U. S.) 98 Fed. 281, 283, 39 C. C. A. 86.

The word "road," as used in the statute regulating the manner of operating trains when any person, animal, or other obstruction appears on the road of the railroad, does not mean what is strictly called the roadbed or track of the railroad, but includes the whole road. Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Anthony, 69 Tenn. (1 Lea) 516, 519.

Rolling stock.

"Railroad," as used in a mortgage of the railroad, real estate, chattels real, and franchises of the company, means the roadbed and track with its superstructure; all that enters into and forms a part of a completed road. The rolling stock is no part of the railroad, though it is essential to the successful operation of the railroad. It is an accessory to the trade and business of the road, and not to the road itself. The road is completed when the bed is graded, the superstructure laid, the rails put down, and everything ready for the reception of the locomotive and cars. Beardsley v. Ontario Bank (N. Y.) 31 Barb. 619, 624.

Act Cong. May 5, 1864 (13 Stat. 64), granting land in the usual form to the state of Minnesota to aid in the construction of a railroad, and providing that the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the government of the United States, free from all toll or any charge for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States, refers only to the permanent structure of the road, and does not include the rolling stock or other personal property of the railway company. Lake Superior & M. R. Co. v. United States, 98 U. S. 442, 455, 23 L. Ed. 965.

Side tracks and branch lines.

The term "railroad" includes all the side tracks and turnouts necessary or convenient for the transaction of the company's business. State v. Railroad Com'rs, 15 Atl. 756, 757, 56 Conn. 308; Rock Creek Tp. v. Strong, 96 U. S. 271, 276, 24 L. Ed. 815.

"Railroad," as used in Act April 4, 1833, authorizing a defendant to build a railroad ex vi termini, includes sidings and branch lines to the company's wharves. Black v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 249, 253.

Under a code provision authorizing a railroad company to construct its railroad across, along, or upon any street, the railroad is authorized to build a side track on the street, since a side track is an essential part of the railroad. Town of Mason v. Ohio River R. Co., 41 S. E. 418, 420, 51 W. Va. 183.

In an action against a railroad company for damages for obstructing an alley with a side track extending between the engine house and main track of the railroad, in answer to the objection that the company had no authority to construct such side track the court said: "A railroad without switches, sidings, telegraph offices, and buildings for fuel, water, engines, stations, etc., would be useless in a great measure. They are essential to the operations of the railroad and to the transportation of freight and passengers with security and dispatch. The argument that the track and the engine house is the private way of the railroad company not used by the public, and therefore no part of the public highway, is ingenious, but unsound. Admitting that it is not a part of the public highway in the sense that it is not used immediately by the public, but by the company only, it does not follow that the ground is not taken for public use. Under the power of eminent domain it is not the use made of it which characterizes it, but its convenient necessity to that part which is for the public use." Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Williams, 54 Pa. (4 P. F. Smith) 103, 107.

Under Rev. St. 1889, § 7725, which provides that the board of equalization shall apportion the aggregate value of all property belonging to a railroad within the state to each county according to the ratio which the number of miles of road completed in such county shall bear to the whole length of the road of the state, in determining the length of the road for the purpose of apportionment only the length of its main track is to be considered. State ex rel. Murphy v. Stone, 25 S. W. 211, 213, 119 Mo. 668.

Gen. St. 1887, c. 8, provides that every railroad corporation owning and operating a railroad in this state shall be liable for damages under certain circumstances. The question arises whether a "railroad," as used in such statute, includes a street railroad. Railroads in a rude form were in use as early as 1676, but it was not until 1829, when successful experiments in the use of locomotives were made, that they first began to be extensively constructed; and it is only within recent years that another class of railroads, namely, those laid down in the streets of towns and cities, have become very numerous. Judge Robertson, in Louisville & P. R. Co. v. Louisville City Ry. Co., 63 Ky. (2 Duv.) 175, says: "A railroad is for the use of the universal public in the transportation of all persons, baggage, and other freight. A street railway is dedicated to the more limited use of the local public, for the more transient transportation of persons, only and within the limits of the city." In a technical sense, therefore, a street railway is not a railroad. A railroad and a street railroad or way are in both their technical and popular import as distinct and different things as a road and a street, or a bridge and a railroad bridge; and it has been authoritatively adjudged that the simple term "bridge" means a viaduct in a road dedicated to common use, and that the qualified phrase "railroad bridge" means a viaduct constructed for the exclusive use of railroad transportation. Perhaps it may be conceded that, technically speaking, the term "railroad" would include a street railway, so far as its roadbed is made of iron or steel rails for wheels of cars to run upon; but where there is doubt about the true meaning of the word or term used in the law the legislative intent is not to be determined from that particular expression, but from the general legislation upon the same subject-matter. It is claimed by counsel that on February 24, 1887, when the general law of that year was passed, there were no cable or electric street railways in existence in this state. If so, what was the legislative intent in using the word "railroad" in the law of 1887, to be deduced from the whole and every part of the statute taken together, upon the subject of railroads? What was the mischief felt which resulted in the passage of this law? Was it a danger known, or one unknown? Was it a danger then felt and realized, or one that might possibly arise in the future? We must assume that it was dealing with and acting upon existing facts within its knowledge. If we were to hold that the term "railroad" in the law of 1887 applied to street railways because the word is broad enough to cover all roads constructed of iron or steel rails for wheels of cars to run upon, we see no reason why it should not be so construed whenever found in the other legislation of this state. This would require street railways to build depots and waiting rooms for passengers, for there is just as much reason to make the word "railroad" applicable in this respect as to personal injury cases. This is but one of the very many instances where by the use of the word "railroad" the company is required to perform certain duties to which it cannot reasonably be said that the meaning of such word includes street railways. Funk v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 68 N. W. 1099, 1100, 61 Minn. 435, 29 L. R. A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608 (cited and approved in State v. Duluth Gas & Water Co., 76 Minn. 96, 57 L. R. A. 63, 78 N. W. 1032, 1034).

As used in Laws 1893, c. 4115, §§ 48, 49, relating to the taxation of "railroads," that term should be construed to include a street railroad, such being the practical construction given to the act by the executive department of the government for a considerable period of time. The word "railroad" in its broadest signification includes a street railroad, all railroads being more or less alike in their physical construction. When the word is used in a statute there is no definite rule of construction as to whether it so includes street railroads or not. It may or it may not include them. The meaning of the word must depend upon the context and the general intent of the statute in which it is used. As generally used, it applies to commercial railways engaged in the transportation of freight and passengers for long distances, and, as a general rule, steam engines for motive power, and making stops at regular stations for the receipt and discharge of freight and passengers. The term "street railroad" applies only to such road the rails of which are laid to conform to the grade and surface of the street, and which is otherwise constructed so that the public are not excluded from the street as a public highway; which runs at a moderate rate of speed compared with commercial railroads; which carries no freight, but only passengers from one part of a thickly populated district to another in a town or city and its suburbs, and for that purpose runs its cars at short intervals, stopping at street crossings or other places irregularly, as the convenience of its patrons may require, for the receipt and discharge of its passengers. The cars upon such roads may be propelled by animal or mechanical power. Bloxham v. Consumers' Electric Light & Street R. Co., 18 South. 444, 448, 36 Fla. 519, 29 L. R. A. 507, 51 Am. St. Rep. 44.

When used by the Legislature, unqualified by any other word, "railroad" is construed as referring exclusively to ordinary commercial railroads; while, on the other hand, when it is intended to refer to street railroads, they have qualified the word by the prefix "street." State v. Duluth Gas & Water Co., 78 N. W. 1032, 1034, 76 Minn. 96, 57 L. R. A. 63.

City passenger railroads are included in the term "railroads" in Act May 6, 1861, relating to railroads. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 210, 219.

The term "railroad" is not understood to mean a street railway engaged in the business of carrying passengers the entire distance or any part of the distance over which the road lies for one and the same fare. Board of Railroad Com'rs v. Market St. Ry. Co., 64 Pac. 1065, 1067, 132 Cal. 677 (citing Gyger v. Philadelphia City P. Ry. Co., 136 Pa. 96, 20 Atl. 399; Louisville & P. R. Co. v. Louisville City Ry. Co., 63 Ky. [2 Duv.] 175; Front St. Cable Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 2 Wash. St. 112, 25 Pac. 1084, 11 L. R. A. 693; 1 Foot & E. Incorp. Co. p. 668, note 5).

"Railroad," as used in Code, § 1298, providing that "every railroad shall keep" some person upon the locomotives always upon the lookout ahead, includes a railroad operating within a city a train pulled by a small engine called a "dummy," and exclusively engaged in carrying passengers. Katzenberger v. Lawo, 16 S. W. 611, 612, 90 Tenn. 235, 13 L. R. A. 185, 25 Am. St. Rep. 681.

"Railroad," as used in Act March 10, 1854, providing for the redress of injuries arising from the neglect or misconduct of "railroad companies," applies to the proprietor of any kind of railroad, whether impelled by horse or steam power, or whether constructed with iron or other kind of rails. Johnson's Adm'r v. Louisville City Ry. Co., 78 Ky. (10 Bush) 231, 232.

"Railway," as used in McClain's Code, § 2006, making a judgment against any railway corporation for injury to person or property a lien superior to that of mortgages on its property, does not apply to street railways. Manhattan Trust Co. v. Sioux City Cable Ry. Co. (U. S.) 68 Fed. 82, 84.

"Railroad corporations," as used in Act Feb. 12, 1855 (Sp. Laws, p. 304), entitled "An act to enable railroad corporations to enter into operative contracts and to borrow money," is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace horse railways as well as railroads whose cars are propelled by steam or other power; as well roads authorized to transport passengers only as roads authorized to transport passengers and freight by other power. City of Chicago v. Evans, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 52, 55.

Act May 4, 1893, defining who are fellow servants, does not, in referring to "any railway corporation," include street railway companies; so that a street railway company is not liable for injuries to one of its servants which were caused by the negligence of a fellow servant. Riley v. Galveston City Ry. Co., 35 S. W. 826, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 247.

"Railway corporations," as used in the tax law (Act 1878, § 1, Supp. Rev. p. 170), which provides for the taxation of certain real and personal property, and that the said section shall not apply to railway and certain other corporations, means those steam railroads which constitute a class well defined, and which are treated as a class in the New Jersey legislative scheme of taxation. The term does not apply to street railway companies. City of Newark v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 26 Atl. 137, 55 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 145.

As used in the laws of Iowa relating to railroad companies, the word "railroad" does not include street railroads. Fidelity Loan & Trust Co. v. Douglas, 73 N. W. 1039, 1040, 104 Iowa, 532; Freiday v. Sioux City Rapid Transit Co., 60 N. W. 656, 657, 92 Iowa, 191, 26 L. R. A. 246 (citing Sears v. Marshalltown St. Ry. Co., 65 Iowa, 744, 23 N. W. 150).

"Railroad," as used in the statute relating to railroads, does not include street railroads, the statutes of the state relating to railroads and to street railroads being separate and distinct. Massillon Bridge Co. v. Cambria Iron Co., 52 N. E. 192, 193, 59 Ohio St. 179.

The word "railroad" has no such fixed definition as to enable a court to determine whether, by its mere use in a statute, it applies to street railways or not. It may be used in its broad sense to include a street railroad and any other kind of railroad on which rails of iron are laid for the wheels of cars to run upon, whether propelled by steam, electricity, horse power, or other power; or it may be used in its technical sense, which does not apply to street railroads. Massachusetts Loan & Trust Co. v. Hamilton, 88 Fed. 588, 590, 32 C. C. A. 46.

"Railroad," as used in Code, § 4438, providing a penalty for obstructing a railroad, includes a street railroad operated by horse power as well as a railroad on which the cars are drawn by a steam locomotive. Price v. State, 74 Ga. 378.

"Railroad," as used in the Ohio statute of March 20, 1889 (86 Ohio Laws, p. 120), giving a lien to mechanics, laborers, etc., for work done upon any railroad, turnpike, plank road, canal, or any public structure, includes street railways. New England Engineering Co. v. Oakwood St. R. Co. (U. S.) 75 Fed. 162, 165.

It is undoubtedly true that the words "railroad" and "railway" are synonymous, and in all ordinary circumstances they are to be treated as without distinction in meaning; but it is evident from the way in which these terms are used in Const. art. 17, that "railroad" is applied to steam railroads and "railway" to street railways, and therefore section 4, which forbids the consolidation by purchase or lease of any railroad companies owning or having under their control parallel or competing lines does not apply to street railway companies, and the latter, though parallel, will not be enjoined from consolidating. Appeal of Montgomery, 20 Atl. 399, 136 Pa. 96, 9 L. R. A. 369; Shipley v. Continental R. Co. (Pa.) 13 Phila. 128, 130.

Ordinarily, when we speak of a "railroad," we mean a railroad over which freight and passengers are transported from one town or city to another. When we speak of these roads on which passengers are transported over the street of a town or city, we call them "street railways." Const. art. 10, § 5, forbidding the acquisition of railroad properties by parallel or competing lines, applies to railroads proper, and not to street railways. Scott v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank (Tex.) 75 S. W. 7, 16.

For some purposes the law recognizes several species of railroads and railroad companies, and recognizes a distinction between a railroad and a street railroad. Statutes using the term "railroad" may or may not apply to a street railroad. Therefore when the word "railroad" is used in a statute, if we want to know if it is intended to embrace in its meaning a street railroad, we must look at the connection in which it is used; and in Rev. St. 1899, § 2873, providing that every railroad corporation shall be liable to damages sustained by any servant by reason of the negligence of another agent or servant thereof, does not apply to street railroads. Funk v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 61 Minn. 435, 63 N. W. 1099, 29 L. R. A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608; Manhattan Trust Co. v. Sioux City Cable Ry. (U. S.) 68 Fed. 82. The very fact of the frequent use of the term "railroad" in the statutes in such connection as to indicate that it would be taken as a matter of course to mean a steam railroad shows that the usual use of the word is with that meaning. Sams v. St. Louis & M. R. Co., 73 S. W. 686, 690, 174 Mo. 53, 61 L. R. A. 475.

In the construction of the act relating to the railroad commissioner the phrase "railroad" shall be construed to include all railroads and railways operated by steam except cable street railroads in cities or towns, whether the same shall be operated by the corporation owning any such railroad, or by any other corporation or corporations, or otherwise. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 3740.

A horse railroad is not a railroad within the meaning of a statute providing that every engine or train shall be brought to a full stop before crossing a railroad. Byrne v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. (U. S.) 61 Fed. 605, 9 O. C. A. 666, 24 L. R. A. 693. And a statute referring to any railroad corporation whose line is wholly or partly within Montana or reaches the boundary thereof, and giving a judgment for injury to the person a lien superior to a mortgage, does not include street railroads. In Kentucky a street railroad is said to be in a technical and popular sense as different from an ordinary railroad as a road and a street, or as a bridge and a railroad bridge. Louisville & P. R. Co. v. Louisville City R. Co., 63 Ky. (2 Duv.) 175. In Funk v. St. Paul Ry., 61 Minn. 435, 63 N. W. 1099, 29 L. R. A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, it is said that a statute making every railroad company liable for injuries inflicted by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant did not include street railroads operated by cable. This reasoning is not applicable in Georgia, where the contrary is true, and where the word "railroad" includes a street railroad, unless the context shows that a particular kind of railroad is meant. In the Constitution, statutes, and decisions of Georgia the word "railroad" is recognized as generic, and includes street railroads, narrow-gauge roads, horse car companies, dummy lines, and street railroads operated by electricity; and a chartered street railroad is a railroad company within Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2297, 2323, making railroads liable to one servant for injuries inflicted by a fellow servant. Savannah, T. & I. of H. R. v. Williams, 43 S. E. 751, 752, 753, 117 Ga. 414, 61 L. R. A. 249.

"Railroad," as used in Comp. St. 1897, c. 72, § 3, providing that every railroad company shall be liable for damages for injuries caused by negligence, does not include street railroads. Lincoln St. Ry. Co. v. McClellan, 74 N. W. 1074, 1075, 54 Neb. 672, 69 Am. St. Rep. 736.

"Railroad," as used in the law, is broad enough to include street railways, but as used in the Constitution of Kansas will not be held to include such street railways. Ferguson v. Sherman, 47 Pac. 1023, 1025, 116 Cal. 169, 37 L. R. A. 622.

A railroad is for the use of the universal public in the transportation of persons, baggage, and other freight. A street railway is dedicated to a more limited use of the local public, for the mere transient transportation of persons only, and within the limits of the city. In the technical sense, therefore, a street railway is not a railroad, and the court held that it was not included within the provisions of the statute authorizing the condemnation of lands for railroad purposes. Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Simon, 25 Pac. 147, 149, 20 Or. 60, 10 L. R. A. 251, 23 Am. St. Rep. 86.

Iron tracks or rails securely fastened to the soil, whether of a street or a prairie, constitute a railroad, irrespective of the propelling power by which vehicles are transported thereon; and the use of such a railroad may be contracted for under Act April 13, 1837, entitled "An act authorizing railroad companies to contract with each other," without any reference to the question whether such use is to be effected by horses or steam, or any other known or unknown motor power, and equally without regard to the nature of the locality through which such road may extend. Central Crosstown R. Co. v. Twenty-Third St. R. Co. (N. Y.) 54 How. Prac. 168, 185.

As limited to street railroads.

Though the term "railroad" is broad enough to cover steam railroads, yet as used in St. 1893, p. 288, providing that franchises to operate railroads can be granted only to the highest bidder, it will be limited to street railroads. People v. Craycroft, 44 Pac. 463, 111 Cal. 544; Z. Russ & Sons Co. v. Crichton, 49 Pac. 1043, 1045, 117 Cal. 695.

The act incorporating a certain passenger railway company authorizes construction of a railroad from a point within the city to a point outside, with the right to use steam as a motor power, and to transport freight as well as passengers, the words not implying that a street railway only was intended, but the words "railway" and "railroad" are popularly used as synonymous, and Webster defines both alike. Millvale Borough v. Evergreen Ry. Co., 18 Atl. 993, 995, 131 Pa. 1, 7 L. R. A. 369.

As structure.

See "Structure."

Telegraph line.

An authority to construct a railroad is sufficient authority to also construct a telegraph line to be used in connection with the railroad. Snell v. Leonard, 8 N. W. 425, 426, 55 Iowa, 553.

As track.

A railroad is a road especially laid out and graded, having parallel rails of iron or steel for the wheels of carriages or cars drawn by steam or other motive power to run upon. As used in a deed describing land as lying, adjoining, and parallel with the land of a certain "railroad," the nearest part being 20 feet distant from the center line of said railroad, the word "railroad" should be construed to mean the railroad track, or the road between the rails or under the rails, and does not refer to railroad right of way. Peoria & P. U. Ry. Co. v. Tamplin, 40 N. E. 960, 962, 156 Ill. 285.

"Railroad," as used in a city ordinance providing that the line of a railroad erected in a street should not approach nearer than fifteen feet of the curbstone, means the rails; they being the only portion of the track necessarily or properly rising above the surface of the grade. In a broader sense a railroad includes all the land, works, buildings, and machinery required for the support and use of the road and way, with its rails. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. v. Eisert, 26 N. E. 759, 761, 127 Ind. 156.

Tramways in mines and marine railways.

The term "railroads and railways," as used in the chapter relating to railroads and street railways, means all railroads and railways except tramways in mines and marine railways. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 978, c. 111, § 1.

As used in the chapter relating to railroads and railways, the term "railroads and railways" includes all railroads and railways operated by steam, except marine railways, doing business as common carriers in this state, and whether operated by the corporations owning them or by other corporations or otherwise. Civ. Code S. C. 1902, § 2024.

Unused land.

A lease of a railroad purporting to lease the "railroad of the party of the first part" means and includes "the railroad belonging to the lessor which has been used or which it was necessary to use in operating the road, and not land which has never been used in connection with it." New York Cent. R. Co. v. Buffalo & N. Y. & E. R. Co. (N. Y.) 49 Barb. 501, 504.

RAILROAD AFFAIRS.

RAILROAD APPENDAGE.

See "Appendage."

RAILROAD BRIDGE.

As bridge, see "Bridge."

A viaduct constructed for the exclusive use of railroad transportation is a railroad bridge. Louisville & P. R. Co. v. Louisville City Ry. Co., 63 Ky. (2 Duv.) 175, 178.

RAILROAD CAR.

See "Car."

As carriage, see "Carriage."

The word "railroad car," in 2 Hill's Code, p. 662, § 46, which defines "burglary" as an unlawful entry, with intent to commit a felony, of an office, shop, store, warehouse, malthouse, stillhouse, mill, factory, bank, church, schoolhouse, railroad car, barn, stable, ship, steamboat and water craft, or any building in which goods, merchandise, or valuable things are kept for use, sale, or deposit, means any railroad car, without regard to whether any valuable things are kept therein or not, as the latter clause of the statute only refers to buildings not specifically designated. State v. Sufferin, 82 Pac. 1021, 6 Wash. 107.

RAILROAD COMMISSION.

A railroad commission is a state instrumentality having the power, and obliged as a body, to regulate the rates on railroads of the state. It may do so on one and all, according to the condition and circumstances of each. Surely so if the roads be under separate ownership and management, and may be so when united in ownership or management. Southern Pac. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs (U. S.) 78 Fed. 236, 252.

RAILROAD COMPANY.

See "Commercial Railroad Company."

As common carrier, see "Common Carrier."

As moneyed corporation, see "Moneyed Corporation."

As public corporation, see "Public Corporation."

Railroad distinguished, see "Railroad—Railway."

The term "railroad company," as used in the chapter relating to the listing of personal property for taxation, includes any person or persons, joint-stock association, or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, when engaged in the business of operating a railroad either wholly or partially within this state, whether on rights of way acquired and held exclusively by such company, or otherwise. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 2780—17.

In the construction of the act relating to the railroad commissioner, the phrases

"railroad corporation" and "railroad company" shall be construed to mean the corporation, company, or individual, whether owner, trustee, receiver, or otherwise, that maintains or operates a railroad operated by steam power. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 3740.

In construing the act relating to railroads, unless such meaning be repugnant to the context or the manifest intention of the Legislature, the term "railroad company" shall include and be construed to mean any incorporated railroad company, or any express or transportation company or other common carrier, or any railroad bridge company, or any person or persons, lessee, assignee, trustee, receiver, partnership, joint-stock company, or corporation, engaged wholly, partially, jointly, or severally in laying out, constructing, owning, operating, using, or maintaining any railroad operated by steam, or any portion or part of such railroad line. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 5997.

In the construction of statutes the phrase "railroad company" shall be construed to mean and include all corporations, trustees, receivers, or other persons that lay out, construct, maintain, or operate a railroad operated by steam power, unless such meaning would be repugnant to the context or to the manifest intention of the Assembly. Gen. St. Conn. 1902, § 1.

A railroad company is a carrier of goods for the public, and as such is bound to carry safely whatever goods are intrusted to it for transportation within the course of its business to the end of its route, and there deposit them in a suitable place for their owners or consignees. If the road of the company connects with other roads, and goods are received for transportation beyond the termination of its own line, there is super-added to its duty as a common carrier that of a forwarder of the connecting line; that is, to deliver safely the goods to such line—the next carrier on the route beyond. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Myrick, 107 U. S. 102, 110, 1 Sup. Ct. 425, 429, 27 L. Ed. 325, 328.

A railway company, although it is designed to enhance the general prosperity, is a private corporation. Directors for Leveeing Wabash River v. Houston, 71 Ill. 318, 322.

A company to which a charter was granted for the purpose of "carrying on the general business of sawing all kinds of lumber by machinery run by steam or such power as may be best adapted to the business, to place that lumber on market," etc., is not a railroad company, though it had authority by its charter to buy, lease, sell, use, and operate locomotives and railroad engines on tramroads and railroads, and to build, construct, and project railroads and tramroads contiguous to and in connection with and for the purpose of facilitating and easily carrying on its business of sawing, manufacturing, etc., and though it did on some occasions transport passengers and freight for hire. Ellington v. Beaver Dam Lumber Co., 19 S. E. 21, 98 Ga. 53.

The expression "railroad company," used in an indictment for willfully obstructing the engines of a railroad corporation, does not necessarily import "corporation," but might mean either a corporation or a voluntary association. State v. Mead, 27 Vt. 722, 724.

"Railroad company," as used in Sayles' Civ. St. art. 4258b, § 7, prescribing a penalty for unjust discrimination in freight rates by railroad companies, does not include receivers operating such road. Bonner v. Franklin Co-op. Ass'n, 23 S. W. 317, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 166.

A "railroad company" means a corporation which lays out, constructs, maintains, or operates a railroad operated by steam power, according to the express provisions of Pub. St. c. 112. Holland v. Lynn & B. R. Co., 11 N. E. 674, 676, 144 Mass. 425.

A corporation which is given authority to construct, complete, and operate a railroad between certain designated points, and to extend its road by lateral branches to connect with other branches, with the power of eminent domain, and to take and transport upon its road all persons and property, and fix such established rates of toll for such transportation, is a "railroad company" within the meaning of the Illinois statutes authorizing cities and counties to subscribe for stock in railroad companies. Such corporation is none the less a railroad company because it is also a coal or mining or a furnace or a manufacturing company. Randolph County v. Post, 93 U. S. 502, 511, 23 L. Ed. 957.

A railroad company is a quasi public corporation, and owes certain duties to the public, among which are the duties to afford reasonable facilities for the transportation of persons and property, and to charge only reasonable rates for such service. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. (U. S.) 61 Fed. 993, 997, 9 C. C. A. 659.

RAILROAD CORPORATION.

Railroad receivers are liable under Pub. St. c. 112, § 214, making every railroad corporation liable for property destroyed by fire communicated by its engines, though they are not named therein, and other sections of chapter 112 had mentioned them, in view of section 1, providing that a "railroad corporation" means a corporation operating a railroad by steam power, "unless such meaning would be repugnant to the context or to the manifest intention of the general court." Wall v. Platt, 48 N. E. 270, 272, 169 Mass. 398.

Railroad corporations are quasi public corporations, and enjoy privileges and franchises granted by the state in consideration of the general benefits which the public may be expected to derive from the operation of the road. Farwell Farmers' Warehouse Ass'n v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 55 Minn. 8, 12, 58 N. W. 248.

A horse railroad company is a "railroad corporation" within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 118, § 113, authorizing domestic corporations to institute insolvency proceedings, except railroad and banking corporations. Central Nat. Bank of Worcester v. Worcester Horse R. Co., 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 105, 106.

A railway corporation is an artificial being, created by the state for the public good. To this end the artificial creation is clothed with great privileges and powers. It may, and generally does, exercise the right of eminent domain. The railway corporation must not recklessly and willfully use its powers to the injury of the citizens, and it must use its privileges in such manner as may be necessary to meet the objects of its creation with reasonable skill and care. Sinai v. Louisville, N. O. & T. Ry. Co., 71 Miss. 547, 553, 14 South. 87.

A corporation which has the possession, control, and management, and is engaged in the business of running and operating a railroad, is a "railway corporation" within chapter 94, Laws 1874, making railway corporations liable for the killing of stock because of the absence of a fence, notwithstanding that the road was so engaged in the execution and discharge of a trust for the benefit of the bondholders of the corporation which built and owned the railway, and was not itself the absolute owner thereof. Union Trust Co. v. Kendall, 20 Kan. 515, 517.

"Railroad corporation," as used in Laws 1872, c. 26, providing for the assessment and taxation of the property of railroad companies, is not used to distinguish the character of the owner of the property taxed, but to distinguish the property, and the provisions of the charter would apply as well to an individual or a partnership operating a railroad as to an incorporated company. City of Dubuque v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 47 Iowa, 196.

A "railroad corporation" means a corporation which lays out, constructs, maintains, or operates a railroad, operated by steam power, by the express provisions of Pub. St. c. 112. Holland v. Lynn & B. R. Co., 11 N. E. 674, 676, 144 Mass. 425.

A railroad corporation is a carrier of passengers by virtue of the franchise granted to it by its charter—a franchise intended to be used for the public good. By asking for and receiving the franchise, the corporation comes under the obligation to answer in damages to every one who may be injured by any negligence in the use of the privilege it has received. And public policy will not permit the corporation to relieve itself from this obligation by any contract with others. Murray v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., 34 Atl. 506, 507, 66 Conn. 512, 32 L. R. A. 539.

A "railway corporation," within Laws 1874, c. 94, creating a cause of action for the recovery of damages against any railway company killing stock, is a corporation which has the possession, control, and management, or is engaged in the business of renting and operating a railroad within the state, though it is so engaged in the execution and discharge of a trust for the benefit of bond and stock holders of a corporation which built and owned the road, and is not itself the absolute owner thereof. Union Trust Co. v. Kendall, 20 Kan. 515, 517.

"Railroad corporation," as used in Gen. St. p. 812, § 2798, providing that every railroad corporation shall be liable for all damages for fire that is set out or caused by operating any line of road, should be construed to mean any body, company, or association of persons, whether technically incorporated or not, engaged in the operation of railroads. Union Pac. Ry. v. De Busk, 20 Pac. 752, 757, 12 Colo. 294, 3 L. R. A. 350, 13 Am. St. Rep. 221.

A railway construction company organized for the purpose of furnishing materials for building and equipping railroads is a "railway corporation" within the meaning of the statute exempting stockholders from liability beyond the amount of their stock. The court said: "That there can be a railroad company which does nothing but construct the road, and a railroad company which does nothing but operate the constructed road, cannot be doubted. It is not essential to the idea of a railroad company that it should both construct and operate a railway. The words 'constructing and operating,' 'constructing or operating,' and 'constructing' simply, are applied to railway corporations in the statute." First Nat. Bank v. Davies, 43 Iowa, 424, 433.

The term "railroad corporations" in Gen. St. c. 118, § 113, authorizing any corporation created by authority of the state to institute insolvency proceedings, except railroad and banking corporations, includes a horse railroad corporation or a street railway corporation. The chief characteristics of a railroad company, under the laws of the state, are that it is created mainly for the public benefit, and only incidentally for its own profit; intrusted with its right of eminent domain for the purpose of taking land, at least outside of common highways, and, by laying iron rails and preparing the soil to support them, authorized and directed to carry passengers for fare in its own cars, over its own rails; punishable for transgression of the rules prescribed for the public safety and convenience, and protected from interference with its rights by indictment in behalf of the public; obliged to transport the cars and passengers of other smaller corporations on terms fixed by commissioners appointed by this court; having a franchise which cannot be alienated, absolutely or in mortgage, without permission of the Legislature; required to make annual returns showing its pecuniary condition, and the mode in which it has discharged its public duties; and bound to render its charter and duties to the public on being paid a sum sufficient to reimburse its expenditures and a reasonable interest or profit. Central Nat. Bank of Worcester v. Worcester Horse R. Co., 95 Mass. (18 Allen) 105, 106.

A railroad corporation is an artificial person, created by positive law, and invested with franchises involving specific powers and privileges, conferring some of the attributes of sovereignty, to be exercised primarily for the benefit and advantage of the public. Such corporate franchises can never arise and be invested by any kind of implication. Bradley v. Ohio R. & C. R. Co. (U. S.) 78 Fed. 387, 389.

Statutory definitions.

The term "railroad corporation," as used in that part of the chapter on railroad corporations, providing for the regulation of common carriers, and defining the duties of the commissioner of railroads, means all corporations, companies, or individuals now owning or operating or using, or which may hereafter own, operate or use, as a common carrier, any railroad operated by steam, in whole or in part, in this state, or leasing cars, by whatever name known, for the purpose of transportation. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3012.

The term "railroad corporation," or "railroad company," as used in the chapter relating to railroads, shall be deemed and taken to mean all corporations, companies, or individuals now owning or operating, or which may hereafter own or operate, any railroad, in whole or in part, in this state. Civ. Code S. C. 1902, § 2024.

The terms "railroad corporation" and "railroad company," as used in the chapters relating to railroads and street railways, mean the corporation which lays out, constructs, maintains, and operates a railroad of the class usually operated by steam power. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 978, c. 111, § 1.

In the construction of the act relating to railroad commissioner, the phrases "railroad corporation" and "railroad company" shall be construed to mean the corporation, company, or individual, whether owner, trustee, receiver, or otherwise, that maintains or operates a railroad operated by steam power. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 3740.

The term "railroad corporation," as used in the act regulating railroads and fixing freight rates, means all corporations, companies, or individuals now owning or operating, or which may hereafter own or operate, any railroad, in whole or in part, in the state. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, §§ 10,047-10,063.

By the term "railroad corporation or other corporation," as used in a provision prohibiting the consolidation of railroads, is meant any corporation, company, person, or association of persons who own or control, manage or operate, any line of railroad in this state. Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 4530.

"Railroad corporation or other corporation," as used in the act relating to miscellaneous offenses, is declared to mean any corporation, company, person, or association of persons who own or control, manage or operate, any line of railroad in this state. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 421.

The term "railway corporations," as used in the chapter relating to the regulation of carriers, shall mean all corporations, companies, or individuals owning or operating any railroad, in whole or in part, in the state. Code Iowa 1897, § 2122.

RAILROAD CROSSING.

A railway crossing is an intersection of railway tracks. The word "tracks," as applied to a railroad, is defined in the Century Dictionary to be "the two continuous lines of rails on which the railway cars run." Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co., 70 Pac. 939, 940, 67 Kan. 569.

RAILROAD DEPOT.

See "Depot."

RAILROAD EMPLOYEE.

"Railroad employé," as contained in an accident insurance policy providing that the insurance does not cover injuries resulting wholly or partly "from walking or being on any railroad bridge or roadbed (railway employes excepted)," means one whose employment requires him to work on or about a railroad, and whose employer is one who operates a railroad, either as owner or otherwise, and a traveling salesman for a coal company will not be deemed a railway employé because the duties of his occupation render it necessary that he should go upon the roadbeds of railroads, and he cannot recover for injuries received while between the tracks of a railway company on its roadbed. Yancy v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 33 S. E. 979, 980, 108 Ga. 349.

RAILROAD EQUIPMENT.

As fixtures, see "Fixture."

RAILROAD FACILITIES.

See "Facilities."

RAILROAD FERRY.

A railroad ferry is a means of connecting railroad tracks or two railroads, the same as a railroad bridge is the continuation of railroad tracks across a stream of water. It is a substitute for a railroad bridge, and is a part of a railroad route for the transportation of cars which are used upon a railroad track and the burden which they bear, and is not for the accommodation of any persons except those who happen to be for the time being railroad passengers. It differs widely, except in name, from a general and unlimited ferry. City of New York v. New England Transfer Co. (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 137, 141.

RAILROAD LINE.

See "Line of Railroad."

RAILROAD OFFICERS.

Railroad officers are not governmental agents whose laches creates no bar to the defense of the statute of limitations to actions for encroachment upon streets and roads. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Stickley, 58 N. E. 192, 193, 155 Ind. 312.

RAILROAD PROPERTY.

"Railroad property" is not an equivalent term with "the property of a railroad company." The term "railroad property" is commonly understood to mean the property essential to a railroad company to enable it to discharge its functions and duties as a common carrier by rail. It includes the roadbed, right of way, tracks, bridges, stations, rolling stock, and such like property. On the other hand, lands owned and held for sale or other disposition for profit, and in no way connected with the use or operation of the railroad, are not "railroad property" in the sense mentioned, but are the property of the railroad company independently of its functions and duties as a common carrier. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Walker (U. S.) 47 Fed. 631, 685.

"Railroad property," as used in Laws Dak. 1883, c. 99, providing for the taxation of railroad property, means the property necessary for use in the usual daily conduct of the business of the company as a common carrier by rail, and lands outside of that use, although owned by a railroad company, cannot be classified and taxed under the head of "railroad property." McHenry v. Alford, 18 Sup. Ct. 242, 243, 168 U. S. 651, 42 L. Ed. 614.

"Railroad property," as used in Pub. Laws 1888, p. 269, authorizing the taxation of railroad property, means property in the possession of a railroad company as of right, if suitable and proper to the purposes of its franchise, and used by it for such purpose, irrespective of its ownership by the railroad company. The right or interest of the railroad that is deemed to be property, within the meaning of this act, may be an absolute fee, or any less interest, down to simple possession as of right. In re Erie R. Co., 43 Atl. 601, 602, 65 N. J. Law, 608.

"Railroad property," within the meaning of the statute exempting the property of a railroad from taxation, cannot be construed to include a steamboat, though used in connection with the railroad. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Irvin, 72 Ill. 452, 455.

"Railroad property," within the meaning of the statute exempting railroad property from taxation, does not include warehouses erected by private individuals upon lands leased by the railroad company along and on the company's right of way and intended for the private benefit of the lessees who have a right to renew the same before the termination of their lease. Gilkerson v. Brown, 61 Ill. 486, 488.

The railroad track and the rolling stock, taken together, include the entire railroad property. A statute providing for the taxation of railroad track and rolling stock includes all property owned or used by the railroad company, in the operation of its road, which may come within the term "railroad property." Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 1118, 154 U. S. 421, 38 L. Ed. 1031.

RAILROAD PURPOSES.

Where a railroad company uses a freight yard for the purpose of carrying on a private coal business upon its own account with coal from its own mines, transported in its own cars to such yard, and then from such yard by the railroad company through its own agents, sold to others in its own name and upon its own account, such yard so used is not property retained or used for "railroad purposes" within Gen. St. p. 3332, § 212, providing that all property of a railroad not used for railroad purposes shall be assessed and taxed by the same assessors and in the same manner and at the same time as the taxable property of other owners in the same assessing district. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. City of Newark, 87 Atl. 629, 630, 60 N. J. Law, 60.

"Railroad purposes," as used in the statute exempting lands used for railroad purposes from taxation, should be construed to include the use of the land for the erection of a grain elevator thereon. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Jersey City, 9 Atl. 782, 784, 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom) 540, 60 Am. Rep. 648.

RAILROAD SHOP.

Commonly, the word "shop" means a building inside of which a mechanic carries on his work. It is obvious, however, that the term "railroad shop" includes much more than would be included in the terms "shoe shop" and "tailor shop." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (U. S.) 45 Fed. 804, 814.

RAILROAD STATION.

A railroad station is a place where passengers are received upon and discharged from railroad trains, and, under an Arkansas statute providing that local freights shall carry passengers from and to their stations, a railroad company running a local freight must at any event carry the passenger to the yard of the station at his destination at a place not unreasonably distant from the station platform. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Neal, 51 S. W. 1060, 68 Ark. 548.

RAILROAD SWITCH.

See "Switch."

RAILROAD TICKET.

A railroad ticket is a receipt or voucher. It has more the character of personal property than that of a negotiable instrument. Lawson, in his work on Contracts of Carriers, p. 116, § 106, says that: "A railroad or steamboat ticket is nothing more than a mere voucher that the party to whom it is given, and in whose possession it is, has paid his fare and is entitled to be carried a certain distance." Where possession of railroad tickets was obtained by fraud, the purchaser from the person so obtaining them obtains no title thereto. Frank v. Ingalls, 41 Ohio St. 560, 563.

While a railroad ticket is in one sense property, yet it is not merchandise or a chattel, but it is merely the evidence of the contract of the carrier to transport the holder between the points, and on the conditions therein named. Treating the ticket as the contract itself, it is in the nature of a chose in action. No one with whom a carrier makes such a contract has any inherent constitutional right to insist that it should be assignable. State v. Corbett, 59 N. W. 317, 318, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L. R. A. 498.

A railroad ticket purchased at the usual full fare, and for a special occasion, is not a contract in itself, but the mere token or the evidence of the contract which the law creates, and which lies behind the ticket. In such case the law makes the contract and regulates the reciprocal rights and duties of both carriers and passengers, and the ticket is a mere token that such contract exists, and that under it the passenger is entitled to be carried to and from the points named, without regard to a time limit printed upon it. The ticket itself is not, however, to be presumed to set out the terms of the contract, and the passenger is not required or expected to look to it for any stipulations or conditions different from what the law imposes. Watson v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 56 S. W. 1024, 1026, 104 Tenn. 194, 49 L. R. A. 454.

A passenger's ticket is both a receipt and a contract. It is an acknowledgment of receipt of the fare, and the obligation to carry him for the purposes and on the terms specified; and, where a railroad company has sold a passenger a ticket to a certain station, it is liable for refusal to stop there. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Ashby, 79 Va. 130, 133, 52 Am. Rep. 620.

A railroad ticket is a mere token or voucher showing that the holder has paid his fare and is entitled to passage as thereon indicated. Elmore v. Sands, 54 N. Y. 512, 515.

RAILROAD TRACK.

Under the revenue laws, lands occupied by a railroad company with its main track, side tracks, depot, roundhouse, coalsheds, and water tanks are to be valued and assessed by the State Board of Equalization as "railroad track," and cannot be assessed by the local authorities. Pfaff v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 9 N. E. 93, 94, 108 Ind. 144.

The term "railroad track" embraces all fixed railroad property of a railroad corporation. Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. v. Worthen, 7 Sup. Ct. 469, 120 U. S. 97, 30 L. Ed. 588.

For the purpose of the title relating to the revenue, "railroad track" shall be deemed to include the right of way, station, superstructures upon such right of way, station and other grounds, and all other immovable property used, operated, or occupied by any person, company, or corporation owning, operating, or constructing lines of railroad wholly or partly within the state, and reasonably necessary to the maintenance and operation of such road. Pol. Code Idaho 1901, § 1357.

Lands occupied by a railroad company with its main track, side tracks, depot, roundhouse, coal sheds, and water tanks are to be valued and assessed by the State Board of Equalization as "railroad track." Pfaff v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 9 N. E. 93, 94, 108 Ind. 144. It includes lands occupied by a railroad company with its main tracks, side tracks, depots, roundhouses, coal sheds, and water tanks. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co. v. Yeates, 17 Pac. 457, 460, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 397.

Main track, side tracks, right of way, and improvements thereon are all "railroad track," and taxable as such, under Rev. St. c. 120, § 42. Cairo, V. & C. Ry. Co. v. Mathews, 38 N. E. 623, 625, 152 Ill. 153; Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. v. People, 41 N. E. 162, 164, 156 Ill. 437.

The term "railroad track," as used in a statute classifying the property of the railroad for taxation purposes into capital stock, railroad track, etc., "embraces property held for right of way, including superstructures thereon." Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 443, 448.

"Railroad track," as used in a deed bounding the land by the line of a railroad track, should be construed to mean the line of the rails, if the grantor could convey so far, and not simply to the right of way. Reid v. Klein, 37 N. E. 967, 970, 138 Ind. 484.

Bridge.

The railway bridge of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company across the Mississippi, from Henderson county to Burlington, built by it, and used solely as a part of its track, is, so far as it is within the jurisdiction of Illinois, assessable as "railroad track" by the State Board of Equalization, and is not assessable by the township or county assessors. 2 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 120, pars. 42, 110. This is not changed by the act of 1873 (Id. par. 299 et seq.) as to bridges on the border of the state, providing that they be assessed as real estate. That act applies to bridges owned by bridge companies. Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 7 N. E. 129, 131, 117 Ill. 26.

Railroad property, to be assessable by the State Board of Equalization as "railroad track," must not only be so used, but it must be the property of a railroad company, and hence does not include a bridge, belonging to a bridge company, leased to a railroad company. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 38 N. E. 1075, 1076, 153 Ill. 409, 29 L. R. A. 69.

Embankment.

"Railroad track," as used in Code, § 464, providing that no railroad company shall occupy a street with its railway track until the resulting injury to property abutting thereon has been ascertained and compensated, includes an embankment forming the roadbed and embankments forming approaches to highways or street crossings, rendered necessary by the construction of the railroad. Nicks v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 50 N. W. 222, 223, 84 Iowa, 27.

The "track" of a railroad is not merely the rails and ties upon which cars run, but it is the "road, course, way" (Webster), and includes all that enters into and composes the road, the course, and way. The embankment upon which the rails and ties are laid is a part of the whole that makes the railroad track. Gates v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 48 N. W. 1040, 1041, 82 Iowa, 518.

Realty held for future use.

Under Rev. St. c. 120, § 42, which defines the "railroad track" which must be assessed by the State Board of Equalization as the "right of way, including the superstructure, of main, side, and second track and turn-outs, and the station and improvements of the railroad company on such right of way," city lots which have been bought by a railroad company with the intention of using them as a site for its station, when it should acquire title to other adjoining lots, but which it has held for four or five years without attempting to acquire title to such other lots, form no part of its railroad track. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. People, 27 N. E. 200, 201, 136 Ill. 660.

Under sections 40-42 of the Illinois revenue act, property held by a railway, "located" and in process of construction for right of way, is to be listed in its schedule of "railway track." The fact that lots held for the right of way have buildings on them which are occupied, and that the company permits such occupancy to continue during the construction of the track, does not change the character of such property. People v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co., 4 N. E. 480, 481, 116 Ill. 181; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. People (Ill.), 4 N. E. 480, 481.

Right of way.

"Railroad track," in Revenue Act 1872, § 42, requiring certain property of a railroad company to be listed and valued for taxes as "railroad track," includes town or city lots used by the company as right of way. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 72 Ill. 144, 146.

Roadbed.

"Track," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 1816, subd. 1, providing for recovery by a railway employé who, without contributory negligence, is injured by a defect in the track, clearly includes the roadbed upon which the track rests. Crouse v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 78 N. W. 446, 450, 102 Wis. 196.

"Track," as used in an instrument relating to special assessments against the track right of way of a railroad, does not mean the right of way, but is merely a part of the right of way; that is, that part on which the rails and ties are laid. Drainage Com'rs of Dist. No. 3 v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 41 N. E. 1073, 1076, 158 Ill. 353.

Side track.

"Track," as used in Laws 1853, c. 62, authorizing villages to lay out streets and highways across the track of any railroad, signifies the entire roadbed, and not merely the iron or railway, but roadbed, including turn-outs and switches, or other contrivances for passing engines or cars from one line of rails to another, or for public traffic purposes (citing Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Village of Whitehall, 90 N. Y. 21), so that a street may be laid out over the side tracks running with the main track and within the yard limits. In re Folts St. in Village of Herkimer, 46 N. Y. Supp. 43, 46, 18 App. Div. 568.

The phrase "railroad track" is defined to be a right of way, including superstructures on main, side, or second tracks, and turn-outs, and the stations and improvements of the railroad company on such right of way. Huck v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 86 Ill. 352, 358.

A railroad company owned a tract of land of about 30 acres adjoining its right of way, on which were buildings and conveniences for yarding and feeding sheep, and for loading and unloading sheep to and from cars on the main and side tracks. The track was entirely surrounded by a fence, and the only railroad track thereon was a stub about 500 feet long, used for conveying feed to the buildings, and shut off from the right of way by a grade when not so in use. The revenue law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, p. 1401, § 42) provides that a railroad "right of way including the superstructures of main, side or second track and turn-outs and the station and improvements of the railroad company on such right of way shall be held to be real estate for the purpose of taxation and denominated 'railroad track.'" Held, that such 30-acre tract was no "railroad track" within the meaning of such section. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. People, 62 N. E. 869, 871, 195 Ill. 184.

Under the revenue act of 1872, a strip of land, with tracks and shops, etc., thereon, occupied by a railroad company and adjoining the main track, should be assessed as "railroad track," and not as "other real estate," the same being a part of the right of way. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. People, 4 Ill. App. (4 Bradw.) 468, 470.

The word "track," as used in Laws 1853, c. 62, authorizing highways to be carried across railroad tracks, does not include grounds upon which tracks are laid for storing cars or exclusively for making up trains. The word may include one or more single tracks, but should be limited to the track used for public traffic, whether composed of one or more, including turn-outs and switches, or, in other words, what may fairly be regarded as the roadway. People v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 51 N. E. 312, 314, 156 N. Y. 570; Boston & Albany R. R. Co. v. Village of Greenbush, 52 N. Y. 510, 511.

Spur track.

Under Rev. St. c. 120, § 109, which provides that all "railroad track" shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization, a track to a quarry, constructed for the sole purpose of providing material to keep the roadbed in proper repair, is "railroad track," and cannot be assessed by the local assessor, and a tax levied upon an assessment by him is void. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 22 N. E. 864, 865, 129 Ill. 571.

Street railroad track.

"Railway track," as used in Code 1873, § 464, relating to compensation to owners of land abutting on streets in which a railway track is proposed to be located and laid down, does not apply to a horse railway track. Sears v. Marshalltown St. Ry. Co., 23 N. W. 150, 151, 65 Iowa, 742.

A "railway track," as generally understood, means only a track on which steam is used as motive power, and it will be presumed that the Legislature used such words in that sense in providing for compensation to abutting owners where a railway track is laid in the street. Freiday v. Sioux City Rapid Transit Co., 60 N. W. 656, 657, 92 Iowa, 191, 26 L. R. A. 246.

As a structure.

See "Structure."

Tracks in yard.

The word "track," as used meaning the track of a railroad company, applies as well to tracks or lands devoted to the purpose of the railroad yards. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. City of Pontiac, 48 N. E. 485, 486, 169 Ill. 155.

"Tracks," as used in Act 1872, art. 5, § 1, par. 89, providing that city councils shall have power, by condemnation or otherwise, to extend any street, alley, or highway over or across any railroad track, right of way, or land of any railroad company within the corporate limits, should not be limited to such right of way, tracks, and land as are appropriated to the active operation of a company's railway, but to include tracks or land devoted to the purposes of a railroad yard. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. City of Chicago, 37 N. E. 842, 845, 151 Ill. 348.

Under Rev. St. 1874, c. 24, art. 5, § 1, par. 89, declaring that a city council shall have power by condemnation to extend any street over or across any "railroad track," right of way, or land of any railroad company, it is held that a city is authorized to extend the street across a railroad yard consisting merely of a collection of tracks. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 80 N. E. 1044, 141 Ill. 586, 17 L. R. A. 530.

RAILROAD YARD.

See, also, "Switch Yard."

The words "railroad yard," as employed in connection with and descriptive of railway service, consists of side tracks upon either side of the main track, and adjacent to some principal station or depot grounds where cars are placed for deposit, and where arriving trains are separated and departing trains made up. It is the place where such switching is done as is essential to the proper placing of cars either for deposit or for departure. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Little, 48 N. E. 862, 863, 149 Ind. 167; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. City of Chicago, 37 N. E. 842, 844, 151 Ill. 348.

The "yard" of a railroad company is a place for the deposit of cars and the making up of its freight trains. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Burkhardt, 34 Atl. 1010, 1011, 83 Md. 516.

The word "yard," as employed in connection with and as descriptive of railway service, consists of side tracks upon either side of the main track, and adjacent to some principal station or depot grounds where cars are placed for deposit, and where arriving trains are separated and departing trains made up. It is the place where such switching is done as is essential to the proper placing of cars either for deposit or for departure. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Little, 48 N. E. 862, 863, 149 Ind. 167; Harley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (U. S.) 57 Fed. 144, 145.

RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

"Railway accident," as used in a policy of insurance against death or injury in a railway accident, means an accident occurring in the course of traveling, and arising out of the fact of the journey. It does not necessarily depend on any accident to the railway or machinery connected with it. Theobald v. Railway Passengers' Assur. Co., 26 Eng. Law & Eq. 432, 441.

RAILWAY CUT.

A "railway cut" includes the sloping sides as well as the deepest part of the excavation, or, in other words, the bottom thereof; so that a deed conveying the land "south of a railway cut" conveys only the land to the upper and outer edge of the cut. Newton v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 19 South. 19, 20, 110 Ala. 474.

RAINY DAYS.

A charter party provided that the charterer should have 30 days, not counting "rainy days," in which to load. It was claimed, in an action for demurrage, that any day on which any rain fell was a "rainy day," but it was held to mean a day on which at least a moderate rainfall occurred during a greater portion of the time, and that this was the meaning that should be attached to the phrase in the contract, the intention being to except only those days on which the rainfall was sufficient to prevent the vessel from loading with safety and convenience. Balfour v. Wilkins (U. S.) 2 Fed. Cas. 539, 540.

RAISE.

A statute authorizing a millowner to "raise the dam and waterworks" to the height of the natural surface of the water at the line of his lands will be construed to authorize the raising of the water in the dam to that height, and not to authorize the raising of the structure of the dam so that the water would be made to flow back on the land of the adjoining proprietor. Colwell v. May's Landing Water Co., 19 N. J. Eq. (4 O. E. Green) 245, 248.

The expression "raise the dam," in a lease and contract giving the right to raise the dam, "implies that there is a dam in existence which may be raised, and applies to the whole dam, to one part of it as well as to another." Smith v. Moodus Water Power Co., 35 Conn. 392, 399.

Under a will providing that the testator's widow should receive the benefits and proceeds of his real estate to help her "raise" and school his children, and that after they had been "raised" his widow and children should continue to receive the benefits of his real estate during the widow's lifetime, it is held that the children are "raised" when they arrive at the age of 21 years. Shoemaker v. Stabaugh, 59 Ind. 598, 600.

To "raise" money, in its ordinary import, is simply to procure it. When applied to an individual or a business corporation, it means the procuring of money in any of the usual methods—by note, mortgage, or obligation. As applied to municipal corporations, its ordinary import is the procuring of money by taxation or by the obligations of the corporation; and, where a statute authorizes the borrowing of money, the words "to raise money" are equally apt to signify raising by taxation or by municipal obligations. Black's Law Dictionary defines "raising money" as follows: "To raise money is to realize money by subscription, loan, or otherwise." New York & R. Cement Co. v. Davis, 86 N. E. 9, 10, 173 N. Y. 235.

The term "to raise money," in its ordinary import, is simply to procure it. When applied to an individual or business corporation, it means the procuring of money in any of the usual methods—by notes, mortgages, or other obligations. As applied to municipal corporations, its ordinary import is the procuring of money by taxation or by the obligations of the corporation. Where a statute authorizes the borrowing of money, the words "to raise money" are equally apt to signify raising by taxation or by municipal obligation. That this is the commonly accepted significance of the words seems to be beyond controversy, and this, too, is their legal significance, except where used in a statute in which it appears that they were intended to be used in a more restricted sense. The authority given by Village Law, § 128, authorizing a village board of trustees to raise money for a certain purpose, was construed to authorize the issuance of bonds, as well as the securing of funds by taxation. New York & R. Cement Co. v. Keator, 71 N. Y. Supp. 185, 186, 62 App. Div. 577.

The use of the word "raised," in a subscription paper in which a certain subscription is conditioned on an additional sum being raised, whether it means "subscribed" or "paid," at least requires one or the other, and, unless the amount in question is in good faith subscribed, the conditional subscriber is released. The condition is not performed by subscriptions of responsible residents, if it was understood by the payee and any of the subscribers that they should pay nothing and that understanding has been carried out. New London Literary & Scientific Inst. v. Prescott, 40 N. H. 330, 333.

"Raised," as used in a chattel mortgage describing the property as all the crops raised by the mortgagor in any part of a county for the term of three years, does not of itself convey the idea of past time. It does not convey the thought that the crops have been raised before the mortgage was executed. Muir v. Blake (Iowa) 9 N. W. 345, 346.

As borrow.

"Raised," as used in a municipal ordinance providing that a certain amount of money shall be raised by the pledge or hypothecation of the stock held by the city, means "borrowed." City of Baltimore v. Gill, 81 Md. 375, 388.

As collect.

As used in a letter to the president of a college, stating that if he could "raise" a certain sum to aid the college he might rely upon the writer for a certain sum. "raise" means "collect." Bates College v. Bates, 135 Mass. 487, 488.

To "raise" money, as the word is ordinarily understood, is to collect or procure a supply of money for use, as in the case of a municipal corporation by taxation or a proposed loan. Money cannot be actually given or appropriated before it is raised. The promise to give or appropriate money may be made before the money is actually procured. But in such case the promise binds the promisor to have the money on hand when it becomes due, and, so in a sense, the money is "raised" by the promise. As authority to grant money includes authority to promise a grant of it, so an exception in respect to raising money includes an exception of a promise by which money must be raised. Childs v. Hillsboro Electric Light & Power Co., 47 Atl. 271, 272, 70 N. H. 318.

The term "raise," in How. Ann. St. § 483, subds. 1, 2, 6, empowering boards of supervisors to purchase real estate and erect various county buildings, and authorizing them to borrow or raise, by tax, money necessary for any of the purposes of the act, is held to mean "obtain." Dickinson County v. Warren, 98 Mich. 144, 146, 56 N. W. 1111.

Increase not implied.

"Raising revenue," as used in Const. 1868, art. 4, § 15, declaring that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, does not imply increase of revenue. The transitive verb "to raise," in this connection, means to bring together, to collect, to levy, to get together for use or service. The precise meaning in this clause is to levy a tax as a means of collecting revenue. Perry County v. Selma, M. & M. R. Co., 58 Ala. 546, 559.

Power of sale implied.

A proviso in a will that if testator's personal estate, and his house and lands at a certain place, should not pay his debts, his executors were "to raise" the sum out of his copyhold premises, gave the executors power to sell the copyhold lands to satisfy the testator's intention. Bateman v. Bateman, 1 Atk. 421.

Where money is directed to be "raised by rents and profits," unless there are other words to restrain the meaning and to confine them to the receipts of the rents and profits as they accrue, the court, in order to obtain the end which the party intended by raising the money, has, by liberal construction of these words, taken them to amount to a direction to sell, and, as a devise of the rents and profits will at law pass the land, the raising by rents and profits is the same as raising by sale. Green v. Belchier, 1 Atk. 505, 506.

As produce or realize.

"Raised," as used in a statute requiring the managers of a lottery to pay into the treasury of the state the whole proceeds, after deducting the amount allowed them for their services and expenses, "not exceeding 25% on the sum 'raised' by such lottery," means actually produced and realized in cash ready to be paid into the treasury of the state, and not a sum of money ineffectually attempted to be raised, and bad debts made by trusting out tickets are not to be considered as money "raised." As used in the act granting a lottery to "raise a sum," etc., it means to create or produce a fund. State of Maine, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 502, 504.

As raise by taxation.

"Raised," as used in 2 Rev. St. c. 11, tit. 2, art. 1, which provides that the electors of a town at the annual meeting shall have power to direct the institution or defense of suits at law or in equity, etc., and to direct such sums to be "raised" in such towns for prosecuting or defending such suits as they may deem necessary, means raised by taxation, and does not mean borrowed. Wells v. Town of Salina, 23 N. E. 870, 871, 119 N. Y. 280, 7 L. R. A. 759.

Under the provision of a municipal charter that the amount that may be voted or "raised" within a year shall not exceed a certain per cent. of the valuation, the word "raised" means raised by taxation. Schneewind v. City of Niles, 61 N. W. 498, 499, 103 Mich. 301.

RAISE AND REBUILD.

A reservation of the right of raising and rebuilding a certain milldam, in case it was washed away, amounted to a reservation of the right to raise as well as rebuild the dam. State v. Suttle, 20 S. E. 725, 726, 115 N. C. 784.

"Raised," as used in Const. § 184, providing that no sum shall be raised or collected for education, other than in common schools, until the question of taxation is submitted to the legal voters, and the majority of the votes cast at said election shall be in favor of such taxation, construed in its common meaning, means "borrowed." Brown v. City of Newport, 57 S. W. 612, 613, 108 Ky. 783.

RAISED BOTTOMS.

Round copper plates turned up at the edges are not "raised bottoms," within the acts of Congress imposing a duty on raised bottoms. United States v. Potts, 9 U. S. (5 Cranch) 284, 287, 3 L. Ed. 102.

RAM.

A ram is an uncastrated male sheep. State v. Royster, 65 N. C. 539.

RANCHMAN.

See, also, "Stock Rancher."

A person who leaves his farm, and goes to work for wages in herding, or feeding, or keeping cattle, is not a "ranchman" within the meaning of Gen. St. § 1705, providing that any ranchman to whom cattle shall be intrusted for the purpose of feeding, herding, etc., shall have a lien thereon for his services; the word "ranchman," as used in the statute, being construed to mean a ranchman who takes the stock to his farm and keeps it there. This conclusion was based on the ground that if any other meaning were given to the word "ranchman," as used in the statute, the use of the specific designation would be rendered superfluous, since all that would have been necessary, if it had been intended to give a lien to any one except to the owner and operator of the ranch, would have been to say that any "person intrusted with the feeding, herding," etc., of cattle should have a lien. Hooker v. McAllister, 40 Pac. 617, 618, 12 Wash. 46.

RANDOM.

The word "random," in its popular sense, means done at hazard, or without any settled aim, purpose, or direction; left to chance, or casual or haphazard; and, when the phrase "at random" is used, it is applied to anything done at haphazard or chance, and one who intentionally shot a dog is not guilty of shooting "at random" on the public highway, the person having a fixed purpose to shoot the dog. Commonwealth v. Bynum (Ky.) 50 S. W. 843.

RANGE.

See "Cattle Range."

The expression "range" or "accustomed range," as used in the statute making it a criminal offense to willfully drive stock of another from its accustomed range, is a matter of local description, and, unlike a generic term requiring the species to be stated, it admits of proof under the general allegation, without defining by averments the limits of the range. Foster v. State, 21 Tex. App. 80, 87, 17 S. W. 548, 549 (citing State v. Thompson, 40 Tex. 515).

RANK.

In a case involving the question concerning the duty of a husband to support his wife, and a deprivation of such support by the sale of liquor to the husband, the court say that the social position of the wife in society is a synonym of "rank" or "station." Thill v. Pohlman, 41 N. W. 385, 386, 76 Iowa, 638.

Army officer.

"Rank," as used in Act Cong. July 28, 1866 (14 Stat. 337, c. 299) § 2, providing that officers of the regular army entitled to be retired on account of disability occasioned by wounds received in battle may be retired upon the full "rank" of the command held by them, whether in the regular or volunteer service, at the time such wounds were received, is not identical with "office." "Rank" is often used to express something different from "office." It then becomes a designation or title of honor, dignity, or distinction conferred upon an officer in order to fix his relative position with reference to other officers in matters of privilege, precedence, and sometimes of command, or by which to determine his pay and emoluments. A person, being a colonel in the line of the army, who is retired with the rank of major general under an act authorizing it, did not have conferred on him a new office, and therefore did not become a major general. He remained a colonel of cavalry, to which office he had been duly appointed, and he acquired only a new and higher rank by the act of Congress authorizing his retirement. An order of the War Department styling a person "brigadier general, formerly major general," refers by those designations only to his rank, and not to his office. Wood v. United States (U. S.) 15 Ct. Cl. 151, 158.

"Rank," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1493, requiring claims against decedent's estate to be filed in court and "rank" among the acknowledged debts of the estate to be paid in due course of administration, did not include claims not properly legal debts. The first two examples given by Mr. Webster of authorized uses of the verb "to rank" are as follows: "Poets were 'ranked' in the class of philosophers. Heresy is 'ranked' with idolatry and witchcraft." The first does not necessarily mean nor imply that poets are philosophers, nor the second that heresy is idolatry or witchcraft. Nor does the requirement that an allowed claim shall be "ranked" among debts exclude from the ranks all claims which may not properly be termed "legal debts." Verdier v. Roach, 31 Pac. 554, 557, 96 Cal. 467.

RANSOM.

The word "ransom" in St. 5 Rich. II, forbidding forcible entry on lands under pain of imprisonment and "ransom," meant not only a fine, but a severe one. United States v. Griffin, 6 D. C. 53, 57.

RAPE.

See "Assault with Intent to Commit Rape."

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will. Maxey v. State, 52 S. W. 2, 3, 66 Ark. 523; Charles v. State, 11 Ark. 389, 409; Harvey v. State, 14 S. W. 645, 646, 53 Ark. 425, 22 Am. St. Rep. 229; Croghan v. State, 22 Wis. 444, 445 (citing 2 Bouv. Law Dict.); Sowers v. Territory, 50 Pac. 257, 260, 6 Okl. 436; Walton v. State, 15 S. W. 646, 647, 29 Tex. App. 163; State v. Montgomery, 63 Mo. 296, 298; Richards v. State, 53 N. W. 1027, 1029, 36 Neb. 17; Stephen v. State, 11 Ga. 225, 238 (citing 1 Hale, P. C. 628); Lowry v. Commonwealth, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1553, 1554, 65 S. W. 434, 435; People v. Crego, 38 N. W. 281, 282, 70 Mich. 319.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud. Jones v. State, 18 Tex. App. 485, 488.

The word "rape" has no technical value which renders its use in an indictment imperatively necessary, and if words be employed which describe such offense they will be taken according to their legal import. If they charge the crime in the language employed by the statute to define rape, they will be taken to charge the crime of rape; and if they charge an "assault with intent to" do the act denominated rape, the construction will be the same. People v. McDonald, 9 Mich. 150, 152.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent. It must not only be obtained by force and threats, but without the consent and against the will. It must be forcible and against the will of the prosecutrix. Felton v. State, 139 Ind. 531, 541, 39 N. E. 228, 231.

Statutory definitions.

Rape is defined by Rev. St. 1858, c. 164, § 40, as the unlawfully knowing and abusing a female child under the age of 10 years. A female child under 10 years is incapable of consenting to the act of carnal connection, consequently any carnal connection with a child under that age is necessarily against her consent. In order to constitute rape, under section 39, the carnal connection must have been done with force and against the will of a female over the age of 10 years. State v. Erickson, 45 Wis. 86, 89.

Rev. St. § 4381, provides that any person who shall "ravish and carnally know any female of the age of 12 years or more by force and against her will" shall be imprisoned in the state prison. State v. Mueller, 55 N. W. 165, 166, 85 Wis. 203.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will. Every male person of the age of 16 years and upwards, who shall have carnal knowledge of any female person under the age of 14 years, either with or without her consent, shall be adjudged guilty of the crime of rape. Addison v. People, 193 Ill. 405, 417, 62 N. E. 235, 238 (citing Cr. Code, div. 2, § 237).

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a female under the age of 16 years, other than the wife of the person, with or without her consent, and with or without the use of force, threats, or fraud. Rice v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 36, 37, 38 S. W. 801 (citing Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 633).

By Rev. St. Pen. Code, art. 528, rape is defined to be the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud, or the carnal knowledge of a female under the age of 10 years, with or without consent, and with or without the use of fraud, force, or threats. Mayo v. State, 7 Tex. App. 342, 347; Reagan v. State, 12 S. W. 601, 602, 28 Tex. App. 227; White v. State, 1 Tex. App. 211, 214; Williams v. State, 1 Tex. App. 90, 91, 28 Am. Rep. 399; Burk v. State, 8 Tex. App. 336, 342; Hardin v. State, 46 S. W. 803, 806, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 426.

Laws of 1868-69, c. 167, par. 2, provides that every person who is convicted of ravishing any female over 10 years of age by force and against her will, or of knowing and abusing any female child under the age of 10 years, shall suffer death; and paragraph 3 provides that every person convicted of an assault with intent to commit a "rape" shall be imprisoned, etc. Held, that under these statutes rape is the carnal knowledge of any woman above the age of 10 years against her will, and of a woman child under the age of 10 years with or against her will. State v. Johnston, 76 N. C. 209, 211.

Sess. Laws 1895, p. 67, provides that "if any person over the age of 16 years shall carnally know any female child under the age of 16 years" he shall be deemed guilty of rape. State v. Knighten, 64 Pac. 866, 39 Or. 63, 87 Am. St. Rep. 647.

"Rape" is defined by Sess. Laws 1895, p. 104, as "an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: First, when the female is under the age of 16 years, of previous chaste and virtuous character; second, where she is incapable, through lunacy or any other unsoundness of mind, whether temporary or permanent, of giving legal consent; third, when she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence; fourth, where she is prevented from resisting by threats of immediate and great bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution; fifth, where she is prevented from resisting by any intoxicating narcotic or anæsthetic administered by or with the privity of the accused; sixth, where she is at the time unconscious of the nature of the act, and this is known to the accused; seventh, where she submits under a belief that the person committing the act is her husband, and this belief is induced by artifice, pretense, or concealment practiced by the accused with intent to induce such belief. Parker v. Territory, 59 Pac. 9, 10, 9 Okl. 109; Asher v. Territory, 54 Pac. 445, 446, 7 Okl. 188.

"Rape" is defined by Pen. Code, § 450, as sexual intercourse either with a female under 16, or with one whose resistance is overcome by force or violence. State v. Mahoney, 61 Pac. 647, 24 Mont. 281.

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 1990, whoever unlawfully has carnal knowledge with a woman forcibly against her will, or of a female child under 14 years of age, is guilty of rape. When perpetrated against a female child under 14 years of age, consent or non-consent forms no element of the crime. Hanes v. State, 57 N. E. 704, 706, 155 Ind. 112.

Under Sess. Laws 1887, c. 150, § 1, carnal knowledge of a female under the age of 18 years is in itself, ipso facto, rape; that is, force, threats, or fraud and want of consent need not be averred or established. State v. Crawford, 18 Pac. 184, 185, 39 Kan. 257.

Rape is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: With a child of tender years, with a lunatic or insane woman, by intimidation, the administration of intoxicating or narcotic substances, etc. Pen. Code, § 221; People v. Snyder, 17 Pac. 208, 209, 75 Cal. 323.

If any person shall carnally know any female child under the age of 14 years, or shall forcibly ravish any woman of the age of 14 years or upward, such person shall be deemed guilty of rape, etc. Pen. Code, § 1733; State v. Jarvis, 23 Pac. 251, 18 Or. 360.

The statute provides that whoever ravishes and carnally knows a female of the age of 10 years or more, by force and against her will, or unlawfully or carnally knows and abuses a female child under the age of 10 years, shall be punished by death or by imprisonment in the state prison for life. Barker v. State, 40 Fla. 178, 188, 24 South. 69, 70.

Rev. St. 1879, § 3480, defines "rape" as follows: "Every person who shall be convicted of rape, either by carnally and unlawfully knowing any female child under the age of 14 years, or by forcibly ravishing any woman of the age of 14 years or upwards, shall suffer death," etc. State v. Wray, 109 Mo. 594, 599, 19 S. W. 88, 87; State v. Meinhardt, 73 Mo. 562, 566.

Adultery distinguished.

See "Adultery."

Age of prosecutrix.

Rape may be committed on a female under the age of puberty, as well as on one above it, and even on one so young as not to be capable of giving consent or of exercising any judgment in the matter at all. Dawson v. State, 29 Ark. 116, 120.

Assault and battery included.

The word "rape" imports not only force and violence on the part of the man, but resistance on the part of the woman. Every charge of rape necessarily includes a charge of an assault and battery. Mills v. State, 52 Ind. 187, 193 (citing 2 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 955).

Rape necessarily includes an assault and battery. To sustain an indictment for assault with intent to commit a rape, it is not necessary to allege or prove a battery. But a battery may be one of the facts by which the offense is made out. It then constitutes a part, though not an essential part, of the offense. If not alleged, there is no variance; if alleged, there is no duplicity. Commonwealth v. Thompson, 116 Mass. 346, 348.

The common-law definition of rape is "the carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will." The same definition is adopted by our statute. Under this definition an assault is a necessary ingredient of every rape or attempted rape. But it is not a necessary ingredient of the crime of carnally knowing a child under the age of 12 years, with or without her consent, defined in the statute, and also called "rape." Here are two crimes differing essentially in their nature, though called by the same name. To one force and resistance are essential ingredients, while to the other they are not essential. They may be present or absent, without affecting the criminality of the fact of carnal knowledge. So, under an indictment charging rape upon a female under the age of 12 years, where the offense was not fully committed, the defendant may be convicted of an attempt to commit rape, though the child consented to all he did, but in such case he cannot be convicted of "assault with intent to commit rape." There can be no assault upon a consenting female, although there may be what the statute designates rape. State v. Pickett, 11 Nev. 255, 257, 258, 259, 21 Am. Rep. 754.

Chastity of prosecutrix.

It is as much rape to force an unchaste woman to have sexual intercourse as it is to force a virtuous woman. People v. Crego, 33 N. W. 281, 282, 70 Mich. 319.

Consent.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud, or carnal knowledge of a female under the age of 12 years with or without the use of force, threats, or fraud, and in such a case it is immaterial whether the female did consent. Gonzales v. State (Tex.) 31 S. W. 371.

Under Rev. St. § 3840, providing that "every person who shall be convicted of rape, either by carnally and unlawfully knowing any female child under the age of 14 years, or by forcibly ravishing any woman of the age of 14 years or upwards, shall," etc., sexual intercourse with a female under the age of 14 years constitutes rape, whether she consents or not. State v. Lacey, 20 S. W. 238, 111 Mo. 513.

A rape may be committed on an infant, and a child under 10 years of age cannot consent to carnal intercourse, so as to rebut the presumption of force. Stephen v. State, 11 Ga. 225, 238.

Rape is defined as an act against the will of the prosecuting witness. The word "will," as employed in defining the crime of rape, is not construed as implying the faculty of mind by which an intelligent choice is made between objects, but rather as synonymous with inclination or desire, and in that sense it is used with propriety with reference to persons of unsound mind. But where a man has criminal connection with a woman of mature years, but who is shown by the testimony to be in a state of dementia, not idiotic, but approaching it, and no fraud or force is used, the act did not constitute rape. Crosswell v. People, 13 Mich. 427, 432, 87 Am. Dec. 774.

As a legal conclusion.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud, and in an indictment for attempt to commit rape the intended means to effect the rape must be charged. Rape being the conclusion of law from the allegation of all the constituent acts, to allege an assault with intent to rape, or that defendant did rape, without setting forth all of the elements of the offense, would be simply to charge that defendant committed a certain offense. Hewitt v. State, 15 Tex. App. 80, 81.

Emission.

At common law and in Ohio emission is a necessary element in the crime of rape. Blackburn v. State, 22 Ohio St. 102, 111.

To constitute carnal knowledge, there must be both penetration and emission. Williams v. State, 14 Ohio, 222, 224, 45 Am. Dec. 536.

Rape is defined to be the unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will. Pen. Code, § 91. It was at one time held that to constitute and complete the offense it was necessary to prove emission in the body of the female; but such is not the law now, either in England or here, and penetration alone is sufficient, even though the fact of emission is negated by the evidence. Commonwealth v. Childs (Pa.) 2 Pittsb. R. 391, 394, 395.

Fear.

On a prosecution for rape defendant could be found guilty, though the force or threats by which the act was accomplished did not create a reasonable apprehension of death in the mind of prosecutrix. Waller v. State, 40 Ala. 325, 331.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will, or the unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly when she does not consent. The offense is complete when the woman is made to yield through fear or the use of drugs. Hooper v. State, 17 South. 679, 680, 106 Ala. 41.

As felony.

See "Felony."

Force.

Force is an essential ingredient in the crime of rape. People v. Bartow (N. Y.) 1 Wheeler, Cr. Cas. 378, 380.

The word "rape" imports not only force and violence on the part of the man, but resistance on the part of the woman. Mills v. State, 52 Ind. 187, 193.

Where sexual intercourse is obtained by representations that it is necessary in order that prosecutrix may recover from disease, the act will not constitute rape unless there was an intent to use force in case the fraud failed. The force used in ordinary sexual intercourse will not of itself be sufficient to support a conviction. Walter v. People (N. Y.) 50 Barb. 144, 146.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force. The force must be such as might reasonably be supposed to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the relative strength of the parties and other circumstances of the case. Shields v. State, 23 S. W. 893, 895, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 498.

Force is a necessary element in the crime of rape. The employment of arts and devices, without violence, by which the moral nature of a female is corrupted, so that she is no longer able to resist the temptation to yield to sexual desires, is not sufficient. People v. Royal, 53 Cal. 62, 64.

All the elements of the crime of ravishing—the assault with physical force, resulting in copulation against the will or consent of the victim—are signified by the word "rape." Violence and force—that is, the use of physical force for the purpose of compelling submission—is one of the circumstances essential to make the successful attempt a rape. Rookey v. State, 38 Atl. 911, 913, 70 Conn. 104.

Rape is defined as the having unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will. 1 Bish. Cr. Law; Code, § 3861. In order to sustain a conviction for assault with intent to commit a rape, the evidence must show that the accused had a purpose, not only to have sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, but must have intended also to use whatever degree of force might be necessary to overcome her resistance and to accomplish his object. State v. Canada, 27 N. W. 288, 289, 68 Iowa 397.

Carnal connection with a female under 10 years of age is rape, no matter what the circumstances; and the question of consent of the female, or whether there was force, threats, or fraud employed in obtaining the connection or not, is wholly immaterial. Pen. Code, art. 523. It is provided by the Code that the definition of force, as applicable to assaults and batteries, applies also to the crime of rape; and, further, "it must have been such as might reasonably be supposed sufficient to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the relative strength of the parties and other circumstances of the case." Pen. Code, art. 542; Anschicks v. State, 6 Tex. App. 524, 534.

Force is an essential element in the crime of rape. The term is general, and in its application the quantum of force is not to be taken into consideration, provided the act be consummated against the will of the female. Bradley v. State, 32 Ark. 704, 710.

Whoever unlawfully has carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly, against her will, is guilty of rape, and upon conviction thereof, etc. Rev. St. 1881, § 1917. Under this statute, where there is a carnal connection and no consent in fact, there is in the wrongful act itself all the force which the law demands as an element of the crime. Pomeroy v. State, 94 Ind. 96, 100, 48 Am. Rep. 146.

By the statute rape is defined to be an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence, or where she is prevented from resisting by threats of great bodily harm accompanied by apparent power of execution, and unless at the time the female is of sound mind, and not under the influence of drugs or anaesthetics. Held, that without force, actual or constructive, there can be no rape. To authorize a conviction the testimony must show that prosecutrix resisted to the extent of her ability, but, if she submits from terror or dread of greater violence caused by threats, the intimidation becomes equivalent to force. Sowers v. Territory, 50 Pac. 257, 260, 6 Okl. 436.

Under the laws of this state "rape" means "the carnal knowledge of a woman with or without her consent, obtained by force, and such force as might reasonably be supposed sufficient to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the relative strength of the parties and other circumstances of the case." Price v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 143, 146, 35 S. W. 988, 989.

Fraud.

Rape is the unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will. Act 1839, c. 23, § 13. The offense of rape can only be perpetrated by the use of force in overcoming the female. If the carnal knowledge of a woman be the result of a fraudulent stratagem, whereby the female is induced to yield her consent, the act is not rape. Wyatt v. State, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 394, 397.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of any female of 10 years or more by force and against her will, and fraud in this connection is not equivalent to force, except in that class of cases in which the prisoner has been in some way instrumental in disabling the prosecutrix to make resistance. Hence, where one attempts to have illicit connection with a woman by impersonating her husband, he is not guilty of assault with intent to commit rape. State v. Brooks, 76 N. C. 1, 2.

Incest distinguished.

Under Hill's Ann. Code, § 1873, the crime of rape by forcible ravishment and incest cannot be committed by the same act. Rape is accomplished by the impelling force of one person, and incest by the concurring assent of two. State v. Jarvis, 26 Pac. 802, 803, 20 Or. 437, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141.

Assent by both parties is a necessary ingredient of the crime of incest. If the carnal intercourse is obtained by force the crime is rape, and not incest. This decision seems to rest to some extent upon the peculiar wording of the Iowa statute under which the case arose, the court remarking in the course of the argument that the theory of the state was that if a man has carnal knowledge with a woman related to him within the prohibited degrees he is necessarily guilty of incest, and if he has carnal knowledge of her by force he is also guilty of rape; so that the crime of rape committed by one person on another related within the prohibited degrees necessarily includes incest, and that the guilty person may be charged with both in the same indictment, and convicted of the latter, if not of the former. In answer to this contention the court says that consent, of course, excludes rape, and that whether force and want of consent include incest must be determined by the construction which should be put upon the section of the Code punishing the crime of incest. The Code declares (section 4030) that if any persons within the prohibited degrees carnally know each other they shall be deemed guilty of incest. In construing this section it is to be observed that to constitute the crime of incest the parties must have carnal knowledge of each other. It is not sufficient that the man should have carnal knowledge of the woman, unless it follows that in such case she would necessarily have carnal knowledge of him. We come, then, to the question whether it can be said that a woman who is ravished has carnal knowledge of the man, within the meaning of the statute. In our opinion, it cannot. The very use of the word "knowledge" indicates that the connection is to be deemed one of the mind as well as of the body. It is further to be observed that a person is not to be deemed singly guilty of incest, for the language is, "they shall be deemed guilty of incest." Again, it is easy to see that incest and rape have each a distinct element of criminality. The use of force is criminal, but the criminality is essentially different from the corruption of the mind of the other party where force is wanting. State v. Thomas, 4 N. W. 908, 909, 53 Iowa, 214.

Legal status of prosecutrix.

Rape is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: Where the female is under the age of 15 years, etc. Comp. Laws, p. 509, § 46. Under this section it is not necessary to allege that the female was not defendant's wife. State v. Williams, 23 Pac. 335, 336, 9 Mont. 179.

"Rape" is defined by the Revised Statutes in the following language: "Any person who shall ravish and carnally know any female of the age of 10 years or more by force and against her will shall be punished in the state's prison not more than 30 years nor less than 10." Held, that the fact that the female is a married woman is immaterial, and hence words in an indictment alleging her to be a married woman are mere surplusage. State v. Hooks, 33 N. W. 57, 58, 69 Wis. 182, 2 Am. St. Rep. 728.

Unwarranted liberty with person.

Evidence of an unwarranted liberty with the person of a female, however gross, not showing an attempt to commit a rape by force, threats, or fraud, will not sustain a conviction. Thompson v. State, 43 Tex. 583, 584.

Mental capacity of prosecutrix.

By Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 2, rape "is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: * * * (2) Where she is incapable, through lunacy or unsoundness of mind, of giving legal consent." Held, that the fact that defendant did not know that the woman was too feeble minded to give consent was no defense to a charge of rape. People v. Griffin, 49 Pac. 711, 712, 117 Cal. 583, 59 Am. St. Rep. 216.

Rape is defined by the Penal Code as "the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud, or the carnal knowledge of a female under the age of 10 years, with or without her consent, and with or without force, threats, or fraud." Neither in this nor in any other provision does the Code recognize mental incapacity of the female as a consideration affecting the offense of rape; and therefore whatever may have been the mental condition of the female, if she was over the age of 10 years at the time of the alleged rape, it is incumbent on the state to allege and prove that the carnal knowledge was obtained without her consent, and by means of force, threats, or fraud. Baldwin v. State, 15 Tex. App. 275, 280.

"Rape" is defined to be the having carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will. There is here no limit to the use of the word "female." There is nothing said as to the soundness or unsoundness of the mind, as to the idiocy or insanity, and the offense embraces the case of one having intercourse forcibly and against the will or resistance of an insane female. State v. Crow (Ohio) 10 West. Law J. 501, 502.

To constitute rape the act must be intended to be done with force, and without the woman's consent, and, if done with these intentional elements, it can make no difference that the woman was insane, and that the accused did not know she was incapable of giving her consent; but if the man does not know that the woman is non compos, and from her conduct is led to believe he has her consent, the act cannot be rape. State v. Cunningham, 12 S. W. 376, 379, 100 Mo. 382.

Penetration.

In rape the least penetration is sufficient. State v. Le Blanc (S. C.) 3 Brev. 339, 341.

On a prosecution for rape proof of penetration alone is sufficient to sustain the indictment. Waller v. State, 40 Ala. 325, 332.

On a prosecution for rape the fact of penetration must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Davis v. State, 43 Tex. 189, 191.

Under Act Feb. 22, 1861 (Acts 1860-61) the least penetration of the person of a female against her will constitutes the crime of rape, and it is not necessary that the hymen should be ruptured. State v. Hargrave, 65 N. C. 466.

Rape is defined to be the having unlawful and carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will. To constitute this carnal knowledge there must be both penetration and emission. The law presumes that an infant under the age of 14 years is incapable of committing or attempting to commit the crime of rape, but this presumption may be rebutted by proof that such person has arrived at the age of puberty. Williams v. State, 14 Ohio, 222, 224, 45 Am. Dec. 536.

Rape is the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will. A female under 12 years of age is incapable of consenting to carnal knowledge of her person. Therefore carnal knowledge of her, even with her nominal consent, is in legal contemplation forcible and against her so as to constitute rape. Whether or not the female is sufficiently developed to admit of it, penetration, however slight, is necessary to constitute carnal knowledge. White v. Commonwealth, 28 S. W. 340, 341, 96 Ky. 180.

Resistance.

In order to constitute the crime of rape of a female over 10 years of age, when it appears that at the time of the alleged offense she was conscious, had the possession of her natural mental and physical powers, was not overcome by numbers, or terrified by threats, or in such place and position that resistance would have been useless, it must also be made to appear that she did resist to the extent of her ability at the time and under the circumstances. People v. Dohring, 59 N. Y. 374, 382, 17 Am. Rep. 349.

To constitute rape, the act of the defendant must have been without any consent on the woman's part; he must have used sufficient force to accomplish his purpose; and the degree of resistance is frequently essential in determining whether the want of consent was real, though there is no rule of law requiring the jury to be satisfied that the woman, according to their measure of her strength, used all the physical force in opposition of which she was capable. Commonwealth v. McDonald, 110 Mass. 405, 406.

The crime of rape can only be committed where there is on the part of her on whom the attempt is made the utmost reluctance and the utmost resistance. A passive course of conduct or slight resistance is not sufficient; there must be no consent, however reluctant. State v. Burgdorf, 53 Mo. 65, 67.

By Sess. Laws 1895, c. 20, art. 2, p. 104, rape is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator under either of the following circumstances: "(3) Where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence."

Held, that an allegation in an indictment for rape which charged that defendant feloniously made an assault, and attempted by force, threats, and violence to have carnal knowledge of a female without her consent, was equivalent to a statement that she resisted, and under such an allegation evidence that she resisted or was prevented from resisting was admissible. Harmon v. Territory, 49 Pac. 55, 56, 5 Okl. 368.

"Rape" is defined to be the unlawful carnal knowledge by a man of a woman or female child, forcibly and against her will. The jury must find on the part of the woman not merely a passive or equivocal submission to the defendant. Such resistance will not do. Voluntary submission on her part, while she has the power to resist, no matter how reluctantly yielded, removes from the act the essential element of the crime of rape. Richards v. State, 36 Neb. 17, 23, 53 N. W. 1027, 1029.

It is essential to constitute rape that the attempt and its consummation throughout be against the will of the female, and that she resisted the attempt to ravish her to the extent of her ability at the time and under the circumstances. The utmost resistance which otherwise is required may not be requisite to the offense if the female was not in the possession of her mental and physical powers, or is terrified by threats serious in character, or in such a place and position as to render resistance useless. Dean v. Raplee, 27 N. Y. Supp. 438, 441, 75 Hun, 389.

Seduction distinguished.

In rape, force, actual or constructive, is necessary, and the character of the female for virtue and chastity, except as it bears on the question of consent, is utterly immaterial, as is also whether she be a married or an unmarried woman. In seduction, on the other hand, the female must be an unmarried woman, and her consent to the act of sexual intercourse and the surrender of her chastity must have been obtained by means of temptation, deception, arts, flattery, or a promise of marriage; hence it is that an acquittal of a charge of rape will not support a plea of autrefois acquit in a trial for seduction based upon the same act. Hall v. State, 32 South. 750, 758, 134 Ala. 90.

Surprise.

To constitute the crime of rape it has always been held that there must be force, and an act accomplished by surprise will not amount to rape. McNair v. State, 53 Ala. 453, 455.

Virginity of prosecutrix.

The fact that the complainant was not a virgin does not lessen the crime of rape in the slightest degree. Higgins v. People (N. Y.) 1 Hun, 307.

RASCAL

A statement that a physician is a "damned rascal" conveys the idea of moral turpitude. Brown v. Mims (S. C.) 2 Mill, Const. 235, 236.

RATE

See "Joint Through Rates"; "Regular Rate"; "Tariff Rate"; "Unreasonable Rate"; "Usual Rates"; "Water Rate."

"Rate" is defined by Webster to be the price or amount stated or fixed for anything. Raun v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 14, 19.

A railroad organized under a state charter fixing two rates for the transportation of property, and one for the transportation of passengers, leased its road to another company, "subject to the rates above mentioned." It was held that the word "rates" clearly related to the charges fixed for the transportation of property and the conveyance of persons, for there was only one rate as to passengers. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Maddox, 42 S. E. 315, 318, 116 Ga. 64.

Const. art. 9, § 1, directs that the Legislative Assembly shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation. It was held that the word "rate" was used in different senses, in relation to assessment and taxation. "An equal and uniform rate of assessment" means proportional valuation; relative, not absolute, equality. And "equal and uniform rate of taxation" means that the percentage of taxation shall be the same, or absolutely equal. Crawford v. Linn County, 5 Pac. 738, 739, 11 Or. 482.

Amount distinguished.

See "Amount."

As price.

"Rate" means price; value. "Going rate," as to freight, like "market price" for produce, means a fixed and established price for the time. Barrett v. The Wacousta (U. S.) 2 Fed. Cas. 928, 929.

"Rate," as used in Pub. St. 1880, c. 149, prescribing a certain sum per week as the rate of board charged by the trustees of state lunatic hospitals for the support of paupers, means nothing more than the word "price." Gould v. City of Lawrence, 35 N. E. 462, 463, 160 Mass. 232.

Within the meaning of Starr & O. Ann. St. 1896, c. 24, conferring on cities and villages power to provide for water supply for use and protection from fire, and paragraph 445, authorizing the city council to tax, assess, and collect from the inhabitants such tax, rates, or rents for the use and benefit of water used or supplied to the inhabitants by such waterworks, the words "tax,"

"rents," and "rates" refer to the mere operation of the plant and the collection of its revenues, and not to any mode of taxation, strictly speaking. The revenues and rates that are spoken of are the earnings of the plant from the use of the water by those persons who take the same, and hence the city is not authorized to levy a tax not for the use of the water, but in addition thereto. Village of Lemont v. Jenks, 64 N. E. 362, 364, 197 Ill. 363, 90 Am. St. Rep. 172.

Under a statute prohibiting the charge of a greater rate of fare than two cents, the word "rate" may be construed as meaning proportion or standard; the clause reading that "a road charging a greater proportion or standard of the price or sum paid for carrying a passenger than that allowed by law shall forfeit," etc. Chase v. New York Cent. R. Co., 26 N. Y. 523, 528.

The word "rate," in statutes relating to taxation, in connection with the provision of the statute prescribing a land tax in any rate not exceeding $4 to the quarter section, denotes that, 160 acres being taken as a unit of quantity, whatever may be the ratio between it and the tax, the same relative proportion must be observed as to any other given quantity of land, more or less, that falls within the apportionment. Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Lancaster County, 4 Neb. 293, 304.

In a statute providing for the taxation of shares in a corporation, "but not at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals in the state," the term "rate" or "ratio" means the percentage, merely; the proportion; the degree. Webster and Worcester. If the state imposed a tax of five mills on the dollar on all the real and personal property, then said five mills is the rate agreed on; the proportion; the percentage of taxation. This is distinct from the question of exemption. The exemption of certain property may compel the payment of a larger amount by the remaining taxpayers in an indirect manner, for the reason that so large a sum does not come into the treasury of the state as if there were no exemptions. If so, it is not because the rate is altered, but because there is less material upon which the tax may attach itself. People v. Dolan, 36 N. Y. 59, 67.

"Rate," as used in Const. art. 9, § 1, declaring that the Legislative Assembly shall provide by law for a uniform and equal rate of taxation and assessment, applies to the percentage of taxation, as used in connection with "taxation," and to the valuation of the property, as used in connection with "assessment." Crawford v. Linn County, 5 Pac. 738, 739, 11 Or. 482.

The word "rate" is used with reference both to a percentage or proportion of taxes, and to a valuation of property. Coventry County v. Assessors of Taxes of Coventry, 14 Atl. 877, 16 R. I. 240.

An ordinance giving exclusive privileges to a gas company, but requiring it to furnish gas at rates as favorable as furnished by a certain gas company in another city, should be construed to mean prices as low, irrespective of any circumstances or conditions. Decatur Gaslight Co. v. City of Decatur, 11 N. E. 406, 408, 120 Ill. 67.

As public rate.

The word "rates," in Laws 1897, c. 137, § 16, as amended by Laws 1877, c. 31, providing that cemetery lands and property of any association formed pursuant to the act, and any property held in trust for the purposes mentioned in section 9 thereof, shall be exempt from all public taxes, rates, and assessments, is to be construed to mean public rates. Batterman v. City of New York, 73 N. Y. Supp. 44, 45, 65 App. Div. 576.

As valuation.

"Rate," as used in Act March 9, 1849 (Nix Dig. 945, pl. 57), providing that, where any person or corporation shall be assessed at too low a rate, the commissioners of appeal shall make such addition to the assessment as shall be agreeable to the principles of justice, must be construed as applying either to the percentage of taxation or to the valuation of property. "Rate," in Cunningham's Law Dictionary, is said to be a "valuation of every man's estate"; and hence the commissioners of appeal had jurisdiction to add the accumulated surplus of a life insurance company to its assessment. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Utter, 34 N. J. Law (5 Vroom) 489, 494.

"Rate," as used in Revenue Law, § 33, providing that the taxation of national bank stock shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital, etc., applies as well to the valuation of the shares of the stockholder as to the ratio of tax to be levied thereon. Bressler v. Wayne County, 49 N. W. 787, 789, 32 Neb. 834, 13 L. R. A. 614. See Coventry County v. Assessor of Taxes, 14 Atl. 877, 16 R. I. 240; Crawford v. Linn County, 5 Pac. 738, 739, 11 Or. 482.

RATE OF EXCHANGE.

See "Current Rate of Exchange."

RATE OF INTEREST.

See "Equitable Rate of Interest."

In common acceptance, the expression "rate of interest" refers to the percentage or amount of interest, and not to the manner of computing; and the phrase "rate of interest," in a statute providing that parties might agree on any rate of interest, meant the amount of interest, and did not refer to the means of computation. Raun v. Reynolds, 11 Cal. 14, 19.

RATABLE.

The word "ratable," found in the statute providing for the distribution of the effects of an insolvent national bank, and requiring the distribution to be ratable, means on one rule of proportion, applicable to all alike. Merrill v. National Bank, 19 Sup. Ct. 360, 371, 173 U. S. 131, 43 L. Ed. 640.

A ratable estate, within the meaning of the tax law, is a taxable estate. State v. Camp Sing, 18 Mont. 128, 145, 44 Pac. 516, 519, 32 L. R. A. 635, 56 Am. St. Rep. 551.

"Ratable estate," as used in Gen. St. c. 19, providing that every person whose ratable estate shall be set in the list of the town in which he resides at the sum of $3 or upwards for five years in succession shall thereby gain a settlement in such town, means taxable estate—the real and personal property that the Legislature designates as taxable. Town of Marshfield v. Town of Middlesex, 55 Vt. 545, 546.

The word "ratable," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 46, § 7, requiring a person returning an account to make oath before an assessor that it contains, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true and full account and valuation of all his ratable estate, is not equivalent to the word "taxable." In re Newport Reading Room, 44 Atl. 511, 512, 21 R. I. 440.

"Ratable," as used in Pub. St. c. 43, § 6, providing that before assessing a tax the assessors shall give a notice requiring every person to bring into the assessor a true and exact account of all his ratable estate, means all property that is in its nature capable of being appraised, and not simply that which is taxable. The words "ratable estate" often denote that estate which is to bear its proportion or rate in taxation. As used in the statute, it does not relate to the property actually taxed, but to that which is in its nature taxable, and which the assessors rate or value in discharging their duty. Coventry County v. Assessors of Taxes of Coventry, 14 Atl. 877, 16 R. I. 240.

RATABLE POLLS.

The polls of male aliens above the age of 16 years are "ratable polls," within the meaning of the Constitution. Opinion of Justices, 7 Mass. 523, 529.

Within the meaning of the Constitution, providing that "all public taxes shall be assessed on the polls and ratable estates in manner following, namely, each male poll from eighteen to seventy years of age will be valued at $1.10," aliens are ratable polls, and liable to be taxed as such. It is reasonable that it should be so. They reside within the government, and enjoy all the benefits of its protection, and this without being subject to some of the burdens imposed upon the citizens; and it is but just that, for the protection thus afforded, they should pay, as an equivalent, similar taxes to those assessed upon the citizens. Opinion of Justices, 8 N. H. 573, 574.

RATABLY.

"Ratably," as used in a will making provision for testator's children, and providing that, in case any child should die without issue, then his or her share should be paid ratably to testator's surviving children, is equivalent to the words "pro rata." Brombacher v. Berking, 39 Atl. 134, 135, 56 N. J. Eq. 251.

RATES, TAXES, AND DUTIES.

"Rates, taxes, and duties," in a lease of city property, obligating the lessee to pay the rates, taxes, and duties, include an assessment under the betterment acts, though it is local and special. Curtis v. Pierce, 115 Mass. 186, 187.

RATING.

The expression "rate" or "rating," of vessels, as used in policies of assurance, means relative state in regard to insurable qualities; and where a policy required that a vessel should not be below a certain rate, as "not below A2," this rate is not, in the absence of agreement to that effect, to be established by the rating register alone of the office making the insurance, but may be established by any kind of evidence which shows what the vessel's condition really was. Insurance Cos. v. Wright, 68 U. S. (1 Wall.) 456, 472, 17 L. Ed. 505.

RATIFY.

To ratify is to give validity to the act of another, and implies that the person or body ratifying has at the time power to do the act ratified. A ratification is, in its effect upon the act of an agent, equivalent to the possession by him of a previous authority. It operates on the act ratified in the same manner as though the authority of the agent to do the act existed originally. It follows that a ratification can only be made when the party ratifying possesses the power to perform the act ratified. Norton v. Shelby County, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 1130, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. Ed. 178.

To ratify is to give sanction and validity to something done without authority by one individual on behalf of another. Ratification may be expressed or implied. When there is no express ratification, the facts and circumstances from which a ratification may be inferred must be such as are inconsistent with a different intention. Heyn v. O'Hagen, 26 N. W. 861, 863, 60 Mich. 150.

The word "ratify" means to make valid; to confirm; to sanction. In legal phrase, it usually means to approve or confirm by a principal what has been done by an agent or one assuming to act for another. Laws 1879, p. 47, authorizes the municipal authorities of any city to contract with water companies for a supply of water, and provides that such contract shall have no binding force until submitted to a vote of the qualified electors, and ratified by a two-thirds majority. Held, that the requirement as to ratification does not require that the contract be submitted after it has been accepted by the water company, but it may be ratified by the people before such acceptance. City of Lexington ex rel. Price v. Lafayette County Bank, 65 S. W. 943, 945, 165 Mo. 671.

The terms "adopt" and "ratify" are properly applicable only to contracts by a party acting or assuming to act for another. The latter may then adopt or ratify the act of the former, however unauthorized. To adoption or ratification there must be some relation, actual or assumed, of principal and agent. Hence it is held that the board of trustees of a civil town, having no authority to levy a tax for a special school fund, but which has in fact levied such a tax, cannot have such unauthorized levy adopted or ratified by the board of trustees of the school town. Shepardson v. Gillett, 31 N. E. 788, 789, 133 Ind. 125.

The words "ratify" and "approve" are not, in their abstract meaning, the equivalents of such terms as "to adopt" or "to incorporate into," and, where a statute is ratified and approved by a constitutional amendment, it is not necessarily embodied into the Constitution, but may have been thereby simply validated and made constitutional; remaining still nothing more than mere valid legislation. State ex rel. Saunders v. Kohnke, 33 South. 793, 801, 109 La. 838.

"Ratified, confirmed, and made valid," as used in St. 1863, c. 338, declaring that "the acts and doings of cities and towns in paying and agreeing to pay bounties and recruiting expenses for soldiers already furnished by them are hereby ratified, confirmed, and made valid," only applies to past acts or doings of cities and towns in paying or agreeing to pay bounties or recruiting expenses, and does not apply to future acts of the same character. Barker v. Inhabitants of Chesterfield, 102 Mass. 127, 128.

RATIFICATION.

See "Implied Ratification"; "Subsequent Ratification."

Webster defines "ratification" to be the act of giving sanction and validity to something done by another, as the ratification of a treaty. Carter v. Pomeroy, 30 Ind. 438, 441.

A ratification is the adoption of a previously formed contract. Ordinarily ratification, like a contract, includes within it an intention. Gallup v. Fox, 30 Atl. 756, 757, 64 Conn. 491.

Ratification is the adoption of a contract made on behalf of some one whom we did not authorize, which relates back to the execution of the contract, and renders it obligatory from the outset. Reid v. Field, 1 S. E. 395, 399, 83 Va. 28.

A ratification, when fairly made, will have the same effect as an original authority has, to bind the principal, not only in regard to the agent himself, but in regard to third persons; and the ratification relates back to the inception of the transaction, and has a complete retroactive efficacy. Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585, 604, 605.

Ratification is equivalent to antecedent authority. Lorab v. Nissley, 27 Atl. 242, 156 Pa. 329; Bell v. Borough of Waynesboro, 45 Atl. 930, 931, 195 Pa. 299; Municipal Security Co. v. Baker County, 54 Pac. 174, 178, 33 Or. 338; Story v. Maclay, 13 Pac. 198, 201, 6 Mont. 492.

Ratification bears upon the act ratified in the same manner as though the authority of the agent to do the act existed originally. It follows that the ratification can only be made when the party ratifying possesses power to perform the act ratified. Bell v. Borough of Waynesboro, 45 Atl. 930, 931, 195 Pa. 299.

Ratification is where a person adopts a contract made on his behalf by another without his authority, and requires that the agent must have contracted as agent, and not on his own account. Backhaus v. Buells, 73 Pac. 342, 344, 43 Or. 558.

Burrill, in his Law Dictionary, says that ratification is the confirmation of a previous act done either by the party himself or by another; that it is the confirmation of a justifiable act. First Nat. Bank v. Drake, 29 Kan. 311, 324, 44 Am. Rep. 646 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.; Burr. Law Dict.).

"Ratification" means the adoption by a person, as binding upon himself, of an act done in such relations that he may claim it as done for his benefit, although done under such circumstances as would not bind him except for his subsequent assent. Town of

Ansonia v. Cooper, 33 Atl. 905, 907, 66 Conn. 184.

"Ratification" is the approval, by act, word, or conduct, of that which was attempted (of accomplishment), but which was improperly or unauthorizedly performed in the first instance. Hartman v. Hornsby, 142 Mo. 368, 44 S. W. 242, 244.

The doctrine of ratification proceeds on the theory that there was no previous authority, and that the relation of principal and agent did not in fact exist, but implies it from the acts and conduct of the parties, and, when so implied, is equivalent to previous authority, and results as effectively to establish the relation of principal and agent as if the agency had been authorized in the beginning. Ballard v. Nye, 72 Pac. 156, 159, 138 Cal. 588.

Ratification, when fairly made, will have the same effect as an original authority has to bind a principal not only in regard to the agent himself, but in regard to third persons. In short, the act is treated throughout as if it were originally authorized by the principal, for the ratification relates back to the time of the inception of the transaction, and has a complete retroactive efficacy. Shuenfeldt v. Junkermann (U. S.) 20 Fed. 357, 359.

Ratification is an agreement to adopt an act performed by another for one's use, and is either express or implied. Bouv. Law Dict. Ratification can only be express, or by acts and conduct inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that he approved and intended to adopt what had been done in his name. Hatton v. Stewart, 70 Tenn. (2 Lea) 233, 235 (citing 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 317).

It is beyond controversy that the ratification by the alleged principal of a contract made by another, who assumed in that regard to act as the former's agent, is an adoption of the contract by such principal, and subjects him to liability thereunder, the same as if the contract had been sanctioned by him at its inception. Henry Hess & Co. v. Baar, 35 N. Y. Supp. 687, 688, 14 Misc. Rep. 286.

The use of the term "ratification" in an instruction on the question of the ratification by a bank of the illegal act of its cashier, so as to bind the bank, and render it liable for the cashier's act, without expressly defining the term "ratification," was not objectionable, since the word was not a word of rare use, nor was it also a technical term applicable to any branch of learning or science, but was a word in common use and commonly understood, and was applicable to the case, and, as used in the instruction, it was used in its usual and ordinary acceptation to mean "acceptance," etc. Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Block, 59 N. W. 283, 284, 91 Iowa, 490.

done in such relations that he may claim it as done for his benefit, although done under such circumstances as would not bind him, except for his subsequent assent, as where an act was done by a stranger having at the time no authority to act as his agent, or by an agent not having adequate authority. The acceptance of the results of the act with an intent to ratify, and with full knowledge of all the material circumstances, is a ratification. Ratification makes the contract in all respects what it would have been if the requisite power had existed when it was entered into. It relates back to the execution of the contract, and renders it obligatory from the outset. The party ratifying becomes a party to the contract, and is, on the one hand, entitled to all its benefits, and, on the other, is bound by all its terms. Town of Ansonia v. Cooper, 30 Atl. 760, 762, 64 Conn. 536; Goodwin v. Town of East Hartford, 38 Atl. 876, 884, 70 Conn. 18.

The requisites and form of ratification are prescribed by the Civil Code as follows: Section 2309 declares that an oral authorization is sufficient for any purpose, except that an authority to enter into a contract required by law to be in writing can only be given by an instrument in writing. Section 2310 provides that a ratification can only be made in the manner that would have been necessary to confer original authority for the act ratified, or where an oral authorization would suffice by accepting or retaining the benefit of the act with notice thereof. Blood v. La Serena Land & Water Co., 45 Pac. 252, 253, 113 Cal. 221.

Generally the word "ratification" expresses the idea of the adoption of the act of one who has assumed to be an agent without the grant of an antecedent authority. In its application to different conditions, legal accuracy requires the observance of very wide differences in the significance of the term. There is a marked difference between the ratification of the acts of an agent possessing a general authority to represent his principal, who steps outside the usual limits of his business, or the adoption of what has been done by one having a special authority, which he has exceeded in the terms of the engagement into which he had entered, which might otherwise have been deemed authorized, or the liability incurred by the principal, who has permitted another to be misled by the conduct of his agent, and who has received the benefits of the transaction, or suffered injury to come to the other, whereby he is estopped, and the case of a ratification of a completed act, performed by one without authority, where the failure to repudiate worked no injury, and the principal has not accepted or received any benefit from the transaction. Where one assuming to act as agent without authority signs another's name as surety on a bond, mere silence on the part of the person whose name is so signed, after receiving information of the act, is not of itself a ratification, since his failure to repudiate works no injury. Smyth v. Lynch, 43 Pac. 670, 675, 7 Colo. App. 383.

Adoption distinguished.

In reference to the adoption and ratification of a contract, there is, in their primary significance, a manifest distinction between the two. The one signifies to take and receive as one's own that with reference to which there existed no prior relation, either colorable or otherwise; while the other is a confirmation, approval, or sanctioning of a previous act or an act done in the name or on behalf of the person ratifying, without sufficient or legal authority; that is to say, the confirmation of a voidable act. But as relating to contracts, some lexicographers treat them as synonymous. Thus, when a person affirms a voidable contract, or ratifies a contract made by his agent beyond his authority, he is said to adopt it. And a corporation will be bound by contracts made on its behalf by promoters before organization, if, after it is organized, with full knowledge of all the facts, it assumes the contract, and agrees to pay the consideration or acceptance, and retains the benefit, whether such act is called "adoption" or "ratification." Schreyer v. Turner Flouring Mills Co., 43 Pac. 719, 720, 29 Or. 1.

Confirmation distinguished.

See "Confirm—Confirmation."

As consent.

See "Consent."

Consideration.

A ratification is not a contract, but is merely an adoption of one previously made in the name of the ratifying party, and requires no consideration. Wilson v. Hayes, 42 N. W. 467, 471, 40 Minn. 531, 4 L. R. A. 196, 12 Am. St. Rep. 754.

Contract in ratifier's behalf.

"Ratification" means adoption of that which was done for and in the name of another. Hence the contract, at its inception, must purport to be the contract of the principal. It is not sufficient to constitute ratification that the contract may have inured to the benefit of a person sought to be charged as principal. Minnich v. Darling, 36 N. E. 173, 175, 8 Ind. App. 539.

Ratification is only effected when the act is done by a person professedly acting as the agent of the party sought to be charged. Mitchell v. Minnesota Fire Ass'n, 51 N. W. 608, 609, 48 Minn. 278.

Where a corporation adopts as its own contracts made on its behalf by its promoter, such act does not constitute a ratification which relates back to the date of the making of the contract by the promoter, but is the legal effect of the adoption. There cannot be a ratification of a contract which could not have been made binding on the ratifier at the time it was made. McArthur v. Times Printing Co., 51 N. W. 216, 48 Minn. 319, 31 Am. St. Rep. 653.

Correction of defects.

Ratification is, in general, the adoption of a previously formed contract. A mere ratification cannot, of course, correct any defects in the terms of the contract. Negley v. Lindsay, 67 Pa. (17 P. F. Smith) 217, 228, 5 Am. Rep. 427.

Extent.

Where a ratification is established as to a part of a transaction, it operates as a ratification of the whole of that particular transaction. Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585, 604, 605.

Formality.

"Ratification" is equivalent to original authority, and, where a statute requires the original authority to be in writing, on principle the ratification must also be. Long v. Poth, 37 N. Y. Supp. 670, 672, 16 Misc. Rep. 85.

Knowledge.

Ratification is an act with knowledge, and must be unequivocal in its character. Harris v. Tumbridge (N. Y.) 8 Abb. N. C. 291, 299 (citing Hays v. Stone [N. Y.] 7 Hill, 132).

Ratification refers to a past act or transaction. It would strain the doctrine of ratification to hold that a person had ratified or adopted the unauthorized act of another, of which he had no information. First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 14 South. 335, 337, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L. R. A. 426, 46 Am. St. Rep. 80.

Ratification is in the nature of a contract. It is the adoption of, and assent to be bound by, the act of another. There can be no ratification unless there is previous knowledge of all the facts and circumstances attending the act to be ratified. Herring v. Skaggs, 73 Ala. 446, 454, 455.

Ratification presumes the existence of knowledge of all the facts, and one not informed of the whole transaction is not in a position to ratify the same. Hommel v. Meserole, 45 N. Y. Supp. 407, 409, 18 App. Div. 106; King v. Mackellar, 16 N. E. 201, 203, 109 N. Y. 215; Beck v. Donohue, 57 N. Y. Supp. 741, 742, 27 Misc. Rep. 230.

Knowledge of all material facts and circumstances is an essential element to an effective ratification. Without such knowledge, the adoption of the acts of an unauthorized agent, or one who has exceeded his authority, will not bind the principal; but, on the contrary, if he has given his assent while in ignorance of the facts of the case, he may, on being informed, disapprove the unauthorized transaction. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 1189; Shull v. New Bird-sall Co., 86 N. W. 654, 656, 15 S. D. 8.

Ratification presupposes a knowledge of the thing ratified. A corporation may ratify an unauthorized transaction of its agent, either by the unanimous acquiescence of the shareholders, or by a vote of the majority, if the transaction is of such a character that the majority might have authorized it at the outset. San Diego, O. T. & P. B. R. Co. v. Pacific Beach Co., 44 Pac. 333, 336, 112 Cal. 53, 33 L. R. A. 788 (citing Mor. Priv. Corp. [2d Ed.] § 525).

A ratification is the affirmance and approval of an act; giving sanction and validity to something done by another. Whether there is a ratification is a question of fact. Before a person can be said to have ratified an act, it is absolutely necessary that he should know the character of such act, before ratification could be made. Hull v. Young, 30 S. O. 121, 123, 8 S. E. 695, 3 L. R. A. 521.

Presumption.

Long acquiescence, with a full knowledge of the situation, amounts to a ratification, and bars the right to recover. Egan v. Grece, 45 N. W. 74, 77, 79 Mich. 629.

Ratification of a past and completed transaction, into which an agent has entered without authority, is a purely voluntary act on the part of the principal. Combs v. Scott, 94 Mass. (12 Allen) 493; Greenfield Bank v. Crafts, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 269. If, however, one is acting in the execution of a general power, but in a mode not sanctioned by its terms, and if any benefit comes to the principal from the act, ratification may be presumed pretty quickly from lapse of time with the knowledge of the circumstances. Brown v. Henry, 52 N. E. 1073, 1074, 172 Mass. 559.

Ratification is when a person assumes in good faith to act as agent for another in a given transaction, but acts without authority. Whether the relation of principal and agent does or does not exist between them, the person in whose behalf the act was done, upon being fully informed thereof, must within a reasonable time disaffirm the act, at least in cases where his silence might operate to the prejudice of innocent parties, or he will be held to have ratified such unauthorized act. Heyn v. O'Hagen, 26 N. W. 861, 864, 60 Mich. 150 (citing rule in Save-laud v. Green, 40 Wis. 431, 438).

"Ratification," strictly speaking, means adoption, but it is sometimes said to result from acts or conduct which constitute an estoppel. Where a landowner instructed her agent to sell certain lands, and the agent employed a broker to sell the lands, without being authorized to do so, who effected a sale, and the landowner signed the contract for such sale without knowing the broker's connection therewith, but was afterwards informed that the broker claimed compensation, and the purchaser offered to release the owner if she was dissatisfied with the terms of the sale, her voluntary execution of the deed to the purchaser, but without acknowledging her liability to the broker or promising to pay him, was not a ratification of the act of the agent, so as to make her liable for the compensation for the broker. Williams v. Moore, 58 S. W. 953, 956, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 402.

The act relied on as a ratification must amount to a promise or undertaking to pay the debt. Where an infant bought goods that were not necessities, and, three days before he became of age, the vendors, in an action against him for the price, attached the goods, which remained in the hands of the attaching officer at the time of the trial of the action, the fact that defendant gave no notice to plaintiffs, after he became of age, of his intention not to be bound by the contract of sale, did not amount to a ratification thereof. Smith v. Kelley, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 309.

To raise the presumption of ratification, slight circumstances and small matters will sometimes suffice. Story, Ag. § 253. Authority to do the act is presumed from subsequent acts of assent and acquiescence. One act from which the acquiescence of the principal may be presumed is from his action in treating the transaction as his own. There is no necessity for a positive or direct confirmation on his part of the acts of the agent. The ratification may arise by implication from the acts or proceedings of the principal in pais. Byrne v. Doughty, 18 Ga. 46, 53.

The word "ratification" involves the idea of a previous assumption by the doer of the character of agent for the ratifier. It presupposes the act to be done for another, but without competent authority from him; and where a suit was brought by a husband and wife for personal injury to the wife, and the wife died, and the husband prosecuted the suit, his action was not susceptible of ratification by her administrator. Saltmarsh v. Town of Candia, 51 N. H. 71, 76.

Silence.

Mere silence in relation to a libel published over one's signature, and a failure to disavow it to the injured party within a reasonable time after knowledge of the publication, does not amount to a ratification, as a matter of law. Dawson v. Holt, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 583, 587, 47 Am. Rep. 312.

Long acquiescence, without objection and even silence of the principal, will in many cases amount to a conclusive presumption of the ratification of an unauthorized act, especially where such acquiescence is otherwise not to be accounted for. Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585, 604, 605.

RATIHABITIO.

"Ratihabitio" is defined as the act of assenting to what has been done by another in one's name. Saltmarsh v. Town of Candia, 51 N. H. 71, 76 (citing Broom, Leg. Max. 833).

"Ratihabitio priori mandato seculparatur" is translated as follows: "A subsequent ratification of an act is equivalent to a prior authority to perform such act." It is a maxim borrowed from the Roman law, and now an element in the jurisprudence of every civilized nation. Palmer v. Yates, 5 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Sandf.) 137, 151.

RATIO.

"Ratio" is variously defined to be the relation between two magnitudes of the same kind; the relation between two similar magnitudes in respect to quantity; the relation between two similar quantities in respect to how many times one makes so many times the other; especially the relation expressed by the division of one quantity by the other, or by the factor that, multiplied into one, will produce the other; relative amount; proportion. In re Klock, 30 App. Div. 24, 41, 51 N. Y. Supp. 897.

Where a payment is to be made according to a certain ratio, the word "ratio" imports a payment to such certain persons in certain proportions. Shattuck v. Balcom, 49 N. E. 87, 90, 170 Mass. 245.

RATIO IMPERTINENS.

Ratio impertinens is an impertinent reason; that is, an argument not pertaining to the question. Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs (U. S.) 90 Fed. 33, 34.

RATIO PERTINENS.

Ratio pertinens is a pertinent reason; that is, a reason pertaining to the question. Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs (U. S.) 90 Fed. 33, 34.

RATIONAL.

Webster gives "rational" as a synonym for "sane." "Sanity" is a term more frequently found in the books than "rational," but it is more the result of habit and convenience than because of any inherent or substantial difference in their meaning. State v. Leehman, 49 N. W. 3, 5, 2 S. D. 171.

RATIONAL DOUBT.

A "rational doubt" is equivalent, in an instruction, to "reasonable doubt." Shipp v. Commonwealth, 10 S. E. 1065, 1066, 86 Va. 746.

A rational doubt which should result in acquittal of an accused is a doubt as to all or any one of the constituent elements essential to legal responsibility or punishable guilt, and, unless they all concur, acquittal is the legal consequence. Smith v. Commonwealth, 62 Ky. (1 Duv.) 224, 228.

RATIONAL INTENT.

A rational intent is one founded on reason, as a faculty of the mind, and opposed to an irrational purpose. Thus, under a policy declaring that the company should not be liable for the death if it should be by his own suicidal act, sane or insane, an instruction that, to render that company not liable, the insured must have formed a rational intent to take his own life, would destroy the defense, and was erroneous. Supreme Lodge Order Mutual Protection v. Gelbke, 64 N. E. 1058, 1060, 198 Ill. 865.

RATIS.

The word "ratis," in the Roman law, answers properly to our word "raft." Raft of Cypress Logs (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 169, 170.

RATTOONS.

Rattoons are the shoots which spring up in the following years from the roots from which sugar cane has been cut and recut for sugar in the two years succeeding the first cutting, after which it is usual to plant the ground anew. Viterbo v. Friedlander, 7 Sup. Ct. 962, 976, 120 U. S. 707, 30 L. Ed. 776.

RAVINE.

A ravine is a long, deep, and narrow hollow worn by a stream or torrent of water; a long, deep, and narrow hollow or pass through mountains; hence the presence of water, at least occasionally, is almost inseparable from the idea of a ravine, and authority to construct a bridge across it is given by an act authorizing the construction of bridges across streams. Long v. Boone County, 38 Iowa, 60, 65.

RAVISH.

See "Forcibly Ravishing."

"Ravish," from the Latin word "rapuit," imports the use of force, and an indictment for rape, charging that the defendant ravished a certain female against her consent, sufficiently alleges the crime, without an express allegation of the use of force. Commonwealth v. Fogerty, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 489, 490, 69 Am. Dec. 264.

In an indictment, a charge that the defendant "did ravish" is equal to an allegation that rape was effected by force and against the consent of the female, the word "ravish" being equal to, and of the same import with, having carnal knowledge by force. Elschlep v. State, 11 Tex. App. 301, 302, 303; Gibson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 574, 577; Williams v. State, 1 Tex. App. 90, 92, 28 Am. Rep. 399.

All the authorities concur that the word "ravish" is indispensable in an indictment for rape. State v. Marsh, 43 S. E. 828, 829, 132 N. C. 1000.

The term "ravish" has always been held necessary in an indictment for rape, and no other word, nor any circumlocution, would answer the purpose. The words "feloniously did ravish, and carnally know," imply that the act was done forcibly and against the will of the woman. People v. Quinn (N. Y.) 1 Cow. Cr. R. 301, 303 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

An indictment charging rape, and alleging that defendant "feloniously did ravish and carnally know" the woman, is sufficient, without stating that the act was committed "forcibly and against her will." The word "ravish" implies force and violence in the man, and want of consent in the woman. Harman v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 12 Serg. & R. 69, 70; Rookey v. State, 38 Atl. 911, 913, 70 Conn. 104.

The term "ravish" imports both force and resistance, and includes the meaning of the phrase "carnally know by force and against her will," and therefore the omission of the latter phrase in an indictment for rape is harmless, if the former word is used, though the phrase is contained in the statutory form of indictment. O'Connell v. State, 6 Minn. 279, 285 (Gil. 190, 191).

The word "ravish" or "ravished" is the essential word in all indictments for rape, and imports not only force and violence on the part of the man, but resistance on the part of the woman. When, therefore, it is charged in an indictment that A. B. feloniously ravished C. D., it is but a repetition to add that he carnally knew her forcibly and against her will. O'Connell v. State, 6 Minn. 279, 285 (Gil. 190, 191).

As carnally know.

Under a statute which, in defining rape, uses the terms "carnal knowledge," and does not use the term "ravish," an indictment charging that defendant did "then and there ravish and have carnal of the said" female was not insufficient because of the omission of the word "knowledge" after the word "carnal," as the defect was supplied by the word "ravish." This word, at common law, included the idea that the party charged, forcibly and against the will of the woman, had carnal knowledge of the female, and is equivalent to the words "carnal knowledge." Fields v. State, 46 S. W. 814, 815, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 488.

An indictment for rape is not duplicious in using the words "ravish" and "carnally know" in connection with the allegation of the age of the female as being under 15 years, as they charge two separate and distinct kinds of rape—that with force and that without force.—Buchanan v. State, 52 S. W. 769, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 127.

The word "ravish," as used in indictments for rape, presupposes force in carnal knowledge, but the term "carnally know" does not charge force; and, where an indictment alleges that the accused did "ravish and carnally know" a party under 15 years of age, the prosecution can be successfully maintained by proving force, or not, according to the proof of the case. McAvoy v. State, 51 S. W. 928, 929, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 56.

Rape synonyms.

In Rev. Code 1845, art. 2, § 26, defining rape to be, first, carnally to know any female child under 10 years of age; or, secondly, forcibly ravishing any woman of the age of 10 years or upwards, the words "rape" and "ravish" are used, as in common parlance, as synonymous terms, and the only difference in the statute between the two species of the offense is that the latter contemplated force, while the former may consist in the act of sexual intercourse alone, irrespective of actual violence or consent. McComas v. State, 11 Mo. 116, 117.

RAW.

Hay is a raw or unmanufactured article, within Rev. St. § 2516, providing that a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem shall be paid on the importation of all raw or unmanufactured articles. Frazee v. Moffitt (U. S.) 18 Fed. 584.

The term "raw or unmanufactured article not enumerated or provided for," in the McKinley tariff act, fixing a duty on such articles at 10 per cent., was construed not to include natural gas, which was held to be a crude mineral, within the meaning of the latter term in the free list. United States v. Buffalo Natural Gas Fuel Co. (U. S.) 78 Fed. 110, 112, 24 C. C. A. 4.

"Raw material," as used in Code, §§ 189, 193, providing that if any corporation carrying on any business in the county of A. shall for 30 days fail to pay the furnishers of any raw material used in the business, it shall be liable to a receivership, etc., is not limited to such raw materials as become incorporated in the course of manufacture with the product involved, but includes coal. Hicks v. Consolidated Coal Co., 25 Atl. 979, 980, 77 Md. 86.

Straight whiskies are not raw materials, under the Dow law, so as to be exempt from taxation, though used in making compound whiskies and blends. Block v. Lewis, 5 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 370, 5 N. P. 392.

RAZOR.

As a weapon, see "Weapon."

REACHED.

See "Next Port Reached."

"Reached" means stretched out or forth; extended. It does not indicate direction. As used in Rev. St. § 3374, providing that railroad fare shall always be made "that multiple of five nearest reached by multiplying the rate by the distance," it indicates the object in closest proximity; closest to reach by the least extension or stretching forth without reference to direction. Wells v. C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 9 O. C. D. 527, 530.

READ.

"Read and write," as used in Code Cr. Proc. art. 636, providing that it shall be a cause of challenge if a juror cannot read and write, means read and write the language in which the business of the courts is conducted—the English language, and not any other language, such as the German. Wright v. State, 12 Tex. App. 163, 166.

As explained.

A statement in a certificate of the acknowledgment of a deed stating that, "the deed being read to her," the wife had joined in the acknowledgment, was not equivalent to the statutory requirement that the deed should be fully explained to her. The words "the deed being read to her" might import a reading without an understanding. Watson v. Michael, 21 W. Va. 568, 573.

As read at length.

"Read," as used in Const. art. 4, § 15, providing that no bill shall become a law unless the same shall be read on three separate days in each house, means read at length, and is not satisfied by reading the title and a portion of a bill twice, and reading the whole once. The verb "to read," in all its modes and tenses, when applied to bills for acts pending before legislative bodies, has not acquired a purely technical signification which absolutely excludes its ordinary meaning. Well v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111, 112.

A constitutional requirement which simply declares, in general terms, that a bill should be read twice or three times in each house before it can be enacted into a law, cannot be said to carry with it the necessity of reading over each section of the bill at each reading, though the word "bill," in its meaning, covers the proposed legislation in its entirety. Saunders v. Board of Liquidation of City Debt, 34 South. 457, 463, 110 La. 313.

READ AS FOLLOWS.

Where a provision in an act is amended by the form "to read as follows," the intention is manifest to make the provision following a substitute for the old provision, and to operate exclusively in its place. It is intended to prescribe the only rule to govern. Cortez v. Territory, 32 Pac. 504, 505, 7 N. M. 89; City of Helena v. Rogan, 69 Pac. 709, 710, 27 Mont. 135.

READ LAW.

"Read law," as used in a will bequeathing a law library to testator's nephews who may read law, while not strictly a technical legal term, to which a certain meaning must attach, to the exclusion of all others, is yet an expression which should find its interpretation in the common understanding of lawyers. Among lawyers, "to read law" means to take up the study of the law with the purpose of being admitted to the bar and practicing the profession. Its meaning is not confined to a preparatory course. It may properly be said to include that reading of cases and text-books of which every lawyer does more or less after his admission. It certainly does not mean to read law-books casually for amusement or general instruction, nor in a desultory manner. As used by the testator it means "become lawyers." In re Benson's Estate, 32 Atl. 654, 169 Pa. 602.

READILY.

The word "readily," according to the dictionaries that are acceptable authority, means quickly, speedily, easily (Cent. Dict.); at hand, immediately, available, convenient, handy (Stand. Dict.). The use of the term in an instruction requiring a mine operator to use all appliances readily obtainable, known to science for the prevention of accidents arising from the accumulation of gas or other explosive substances, is not erroneous, as imposing an unreasonable burden. Western Coal & Mining Co. v. Berberich (U. S.) 94 Fed. 329, 334, 36 C. C. A. 364.

In an action for injuries alleged to have been caused by the absence of sufficient lights at or near a ditch of which defendants had control, the court instructed that, to render defendants free from fault, the lights must have been such that the ditch could have been readily seen. It was held that the term "readily seen," in the connection in which it was used in the charge, while perhaps not the best or clearest expression of the idea, was the equivalent of "patent" or "obvious." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Johnson (Tex.) 67 S. W. 769, 771.

READJUSTED LUMBER.

In common parlance, "readjusted lumber" is simply veneering cut with a knife, instead of being cut with some one of the many kinds of saws used in sawmills. Talbot v. Fear (U. S.) 89 Fed. 197, 200, 32 C. C. A. 186.

READY.

"Ready," as used in Equity Rule 83, providing that the master, as soon as his report is ready, shall return the same into the clerk's office, means when the report is written. Hatch v. Indianapolis & S. R. Co. (U. S.) 9 Fed. 856, 859.

An averment that a patent and specification are "ready in court to be produced" is equivalent to a profert in its most formal terms. Wilder v. McCormick (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 1220, 1221.

The use of the word "ready" in a charge "that if the defendants committed the assault, and the other defendants were ready, if necessary, to aid, assist," etc., "such other defendants were also guilty," conveys the same meaning, in connection with the words "aid and assist," as the expression "for the purpose and with the intent to aid and assist, if necessary." Webster defines "ready" thus: (1) "Prepared at the moment; not behindhand or backward when called upon; causing no delay for lack of being fitted or furnished. (2) Prepared in mind and disposition; not reluctant; willing; free; inclined; disposed." Hence, according to this definition, if defendant was ready, if necessary, to assist, etc., he was prepared at the moment; was not reluctant; was willing, free, inclined, disposed, if necessary, to assist.

State v. Gooch, 16 S. W. 892, 893, 105 Mo. 392, 398.

Ready for cargo.

A charter party providing that a ship shall be ready for cargo at a certain time refers to the condition of the ship, and not to the act of loading; and a ship is ready for cargo at the time she comes to anchor in the stipulated port, in actual readiness to receive cargo. Gill & Fisher v. Browne (U. S.) 58 Fed. 394, 397, 3 C. C. A. 573.

A shipmaster cannot report himself ready to receive cargo before he is permitted by the revenue laws of a port to receive it. The expression in the charter party is that "the lay days commence from the time the master reports himself ready to receive cargo." They do not commence, however, until he has a right to report himself ready, and he has no such right until the ship is actually ready, and she is not ready as long as she is prohibited by law from receiving cargo in consequence of the nonperformance of certain things to be done on her part, and there can be no delay on the part of the charterer until she has been so made ready. Pierson v. Ogden (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 632.

A contract whereby a party agreed, for a certain price, to move a house, do certain work upon it, and to finish said house "ready for occupancy," means that everything shall be done on the house which is reasonably necessary and proper to make it ready for occupation; taking into consideration, in determining what should be done, the character of the house to be finished. Cunningham v. Washburn, 119 Mass. 224, 226.

Ready for sea.

A regulation in a policy of insurance by which the time of clearing was to be deemed the time of sailing, provided the ship was then "ready for sea," meant that the ship at the time of clearing ought to be ready for sea in every respect short of heaving the anchor. It was not enough that a crew was engaged, but the men must be on board. It could not have been intended that if the vessel cleared without being ready for sea, and became ready afterwards, it should operate as a compliance with the regulation. Graham v. Barras, 5 Barn. & Adol. 1011.

Ready to discharge.

"Ready to discharge," within the meaning of the provision of a bill of lading that all goods are to be taken from alongside as soon as the vessel is ready to discharge, means ready to make a proper discharge, and excludes a discharge of fruit when the weather is so cold as to freeze it. The Aline (U. S.) 19 Fed. 875, 876.

The phrase "ready to unload," in a charter party providing that lay days for unloading should commence when the steamer was ready to unload, meant actually ready to discharge. New Ruperra S. S. Co. v. 2,000 Tons of Coal (U. S.) 124 Fed. 937, 938.

Ready to pay or deliver.

In actions for breach of covenant for the delivery of property, a plea of "ready to pay or deliver" is not a sufficient plea of tender, although the covenantee may not have appeared at the specified time and place to receive the property, since it does not appear from such plea in what manner the covenantor was ready, or if he had the property at the time and place specified as required in order to constitute a tender. Mitchell v. Gregory, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 449, 452, 4 Am. Dec. 655.

READY AND WILLING.

In common sense, the meaning of an averment of readiness and willingness in an action on a contract, in which the plaintiff alleged that delivery of the goods was prevented by the purchasers' refusal to accept, must be that the noncompletion of the contract was not the fault of the plaintiff, and that they were disposed and able to complete it, if it had not been renounced by the purchaser. Cort v. Ambergate, N. & B. & E. Junction Ry. Co., 17 Q. B. 127, 144.

READY-MADE.

The words "ready-made clothing" will not include a garment which has been made for a customer at a stipulated price, as used in a note payable in ready-made clothing. Vance v. Bloomer (N. Y.) 20 Wend. 196, 200.

READY MONEY.

A deed of assignment, directing that the assigned property be disposed of for ready money, means for cash. Cox v. Palmer, 60 Miss. 793, 798.

In 1877 plaintiff's testatrix made her will, providing that "I further give and bequeath to my beloved husband all the ready money I may have either in bank or elsewhere at my decease." In 1879 she gave to defendant, her husband, authority to collect a legacy due to her, which he collected in 1880. From January 1, 1880, until her death, the testatrix was of unsound mind and incompetent to transact business. The money so collected was used by defendant, with his own money, in defraying household expenses, and in procuring nurses and medical attendance for his wife, and none of which remained at her death. Held, that such money should be included in the term "ready money," as used in the will, and that defendant was entitled to retain the same; it remaining in his hands as ready money, liable to be paid on demand; he holding it simply as a depository, and using it subject to this liability. Smith v. Burch, 92 N. Y. 228, 231.

Cash in bank.

"Ready money," as used by a testator in bequeathing to his wife all his ready money, applies to cash balances in the hands of the testator's bankers and of his agent, and dividends of stock due on the testator's death; but the rent of a house and the interest of a sum due on a mortgage did not pass by the bequest. Fryer v. Ranken, 11 Sim. 55.

"Ready money," as used in a will bequeathing a testator's ready money, comprehended not only cash in the house, but money of the testator in the hands of his banker. Parker v. Marchant, 1 Younge & C. 290, 306.

REAL.

See "Chattels Real"; "Things Real."

In common law, the term "real" is used as relating to land, as distinguished from personal property. The word is applied to land, tenements, and hereditaments. In civil law the term refers to a thing, whether movable or immovable, as distinguished from a person. Black, Law Dict.

The word "real," in a deed which recites that the grantor granted, assigned, bargained, and sold all goods, chattels, and all other goods whatsoever, as well real as personal, to the grantee, etc., cannot operate to extend the grant to land, though it might embrace chattels real, such as leasehold estates, if in the possession of the grantor. Ingell v. Nooney, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 362, 366, 13 Am. Dec. 434.

REAL ACTION.

Ejectment as, see "Ejectment."

A real action is one in which the title to real estate is actually brought in question. Crocker v. Black, 16 Mass. 448.

"Real actions are those brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, and hereditaments. The essential and distinguishing fact that gives the action the character of a real action is that it seeks to recover specifically the land and its possession." Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 255, 256.

"Real actions" are defined in 1 Chit. Pl. 97, as actions "for the specific recovery of real property only, and in which the plaintiff, then called the demandant, claims title to lands, tenements, or hereditaments." In such actions the judgment is, if in favor of the plaintiff, that he have and recover, or, if against him, that he take nothing; and for defendant, that he have and recover his costs. A suit brought pursuant to Rev. St. § 2326 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1430], which provides that one who has filed in a land office an adverse claim to an application for patent shall commence proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction to determine the question of the right of possession, is a purely statutory proceeding, cognizable in equity, and is not a real action. Doe v. Waterloo Min. Co. (U. S.) 43 Fed. 219, 220.

Real actions are those brought for specific recovery of land, tenements, and hereditaments. Trespass quare clausum fregit is to be regarded as a personal action, and hence may be commenced by trustee process. Linacott v. Fuller, 57 Me. 406, 408.

Real actions are those which concern the realty only, by which the demandant claims title to have any lands or tenements, rents, or other hereditaments, in fee simple, fee tail, or for life. Dower is an estate for life created by law. An action for the recovery of dower is a real action. Kidder v. Blaisdell, 45 Me. 461, 463.

REAL ADVANCEMENT.

Real advancements differ from the general term "advancements" only in that they consist of portions of the parent's real estate. Williams v. Stonestreet (Va.) 3 Rand. 559, 561.

REAL COST.

"Real cost," as used in 1 Stat. 677, c. 22, § 66, providing that the valuation of imports made by the collector shall not, in case of a prosecution for forfeiture, exclude other proof of the real cost of the goods at the place of exportation, means "the true and real price paid for the goods upon a genuine, bona fide purchase." United States v. Sixteen Packages (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 1111, 1113.

REAL COVENANT.

Covenants real are of two kinds: First, where a man binds himself to pass a real thing; and, second, where the covenant runs with the land. Chapman v. Holmes' Ex'rs, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 20, 23.

A covenant to pay off a certain mortgage on real estate is not a real covenant running with the land, but a mere personal covenant. Skinner v. Mitchell, 48 Pac. 450, 452, 5 Kan. App. 366.

REAL DANGER.

Real danger is a danger such as is manifest to the physical senses. Allen v. State, 6 S. W. 187, 189, 24 Tex. App. 216.

REAL ESTATE BROKER.

A real estate broker is a person who, for commission or other compensation, is engaged in the selling of, or negotiating sales of, real estate belonging to others. Buckley v. Humason, 52 N. W. 385, 386, 50 Minn. 196, 16 L. R. A. 423, 36 Am. St. Rep. 637; Latta v. Kilbourn, 14 Sup. Ct. 201, 208, 150 U. S. 524, 37 L. Ed. 1169.

Real estate brokers are brokers who negotiate the sale or purchase of real property. They are a numerous class, and, in addition to the above duty, sometimes procure loans on mortgaged security, collect rents, and attend to the letting and sale of houses and land. City of Little Rock v. Barton, 33 Ark. 436, 444.

Section 215 of an ordinance of Chicago passed June 11, 1897, defines a real estate broker as one who, for a commission or other compensation, is engaged in the selling of, or who negotiates sales of, real estate belonging to others, or obtains or places loans for others on real estate. Banta v. City of Chicago, 50 N. E. 233, 235, 172 Ill. 204, 40 L. R. A. 611.

Those who hold themselves out to the public as such, generally having offices or places of business, the character of which is indicated by clear and unmistakable evidence, are engaged in the business or occupation of real estate brokers, within the meaning of an act providing for the licensing of such brokers. Chadwick v. Collins, 28 Pa. (2 Casey) 138, 139.

One who, while engaged in other business, negotiates a sale of land for another, is entitled to compensation, even though he has no license, and though there is in the city where the transaction occurred an ordinance declaring it unlawful to exercise within the city the business of real estate broker without a license therefor, since effecting a single sale does not constitute the exercise of the business of real estate brokerage, or constitute the person effecting such sale a real estate broker, within the meaning of the ordinance declaring a real estate broker to be one who, for commission or other compensation, is engaged in selling or negotiating sales of real estate belonging to others. O'Neill v. Sinclair, 39 N. E. 124, 125, 153 Ill. 525.

It is held in New York that the tenth section of the statute of frauds in that state, which provides that no broker or real estate agent selling lands on account of the owner shall be entitled to receive any commission for such sale unless the authority for selling is in writing, signed by the owner or his authorized agent, applies to any person who acts as broker or real estate agent in the very transaction out of which the claim for compensation arises, even though his customary business was the practice of law. Stout v. Humphrey, 55 Atl. 281, 282, 69 N. J. Law, 436.

A real estate broker is one employed to negotiate the sale of real property. His contract is complete when he has found a purchaser who is willing and able to buy on the terms specified, or will respond to damages, and has executed a valid written contract to that effect. Brauckman v. Leighton, 60 Mo. App. 38, 42.

A real estate broker is one who negotiates the sale of real property. His business generally is only to find a purchaser who is willing to buy the land on the terms fixed by the owner. He has no authority to bind the principal by signing a contract of sale. McCullough v. Hitchcock, 42 Atl. 81, 71 Conn. 401.

"A real estate agent is a person who, generally speaking, is engaged in the business of procuring purchasers or sales of lands for third persons upon a commission contingent upon success. He owes no affirmative duty to his client, is not liable to him for negligence or failure, and may recede from his employment at will without notice. On the other hand, courts almost unanimously unite in holding that, in case of an ordinary employment to sell, when he has procured a party able and willing to buy upon the terms demanded by his principal, and has notified him of the purchaser's readiness to buy, the agent's work is ended, and he is entitled to his commission. It is not his duty to procure a contract or to make one, and he is not in default if he fails to do either. Therefore ordinarily it is not within the contemplation of the owner and agent, where property of this character is placed in the hands of the latter for sale, that he shall, without consultation with his client, execute a contract." Carstens v. McReavy, 25 Pac. 471, 1 Wash. St. 359. A sale of real estate involves the adjustment of many matters besides the fixing of the price. The delivery of the possession has to be settled, generally the title has to be examined, and the conveyance, with its covenants, is to be agreed upon and executed by the owner. For obvious reasons, these duties are not within the authority of a real estate agent, and others which might be suggested make it a wise provision of the law which withholds from a real estate agent any implied authority to sign a contract of sale on behalf of the principal. Donnan v.

Adams, 71 S. W. 580, 582, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 615 (citing McCullough v. Hitchcock, 42 Atl. 81, 71 Conn. 401); Halsey v. Monteiro, 24 S. E. 253, 259, 92 Va. 581. This is true whether the authority of the broker is confirmed by writing or by parol. Brandrup v. Britten, 92 N. W. 453, 454, 11 N. D. 376.

REAL OBLIGATION.

When obligations are attached to immovable property, they are called "real obligations." Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 2010.

REAL PARTY IN INTEREST.

Assignee.

One to whom a bond was assigned by his debtor as collateral security is the "real party in interest," within the meaning of the New York Code of Procedure, § 111, providing that "every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as otherwise provided," and the proper person to bring action on such bond. Chew v. Brumagen, 80 U. S. (13 Wall.) 497, 504, 20 L. Ed. 663.

Under the statute requiring suits to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, a judgment in favor of the assignor of a note, to the use of the assignee, should be arrested; the suit not having been brought by the real party in interest. Hutchings v. Weems, 35 Mo. 285, 286.

Gen. St. § 3028, reads, "Every action shall be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as otherwise provided for in this act." The only interpretation that can be placed upon this section of the statute is that whenever a thing in action, transferable by law, is absolutely assigned, so that the ownership passes to the assignee without conditions or reservations, and the legal title or equitable claim is fully vested in him, he is the real party in interest, and must sue in his own name. Gruber v. Baker, 23 Pac. 858, 861, 20 Nev. 453, 9 L. R. A. 302.

Under Acts 1848-49, providing that every civil action must be prosecuted in the name of the "real party in interest," the assignee to whom a promissory note has been assigned for collection is the real party in interest, and may sue thereon in his own name. Webb v. Morgan, 14 Mo. 429, 430.

Where a statute of a state, applicable by express adoption to the practice in the federal court sitting therein, requires that an action shall be brought by the real party in interest, an order on an insurance company given by the assured to a creditor after loss, directing the company to pay such creditor the amount due under the policy, makes the person receiving such an order an assignee of the cause of action, and entitles him, under such statute, to sue on the policy for the loss in his own name. Spratley v. Hartford Ins. Co. (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 973.

Plaintiff, as assignee of a note and account sued on, is the real party in interest, within the meaning of the Code, though the consideration of the assignment may have been a payment to the assignor after recovery in the suit by the assignee. Bassett v. Inman, 3 Pac. 383, 385, 7 Colo. 270.

The phrase "real party in interest," as used in Code, § 29, providing that an action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, means the person entitled to the avails of the suit; and a mere assignee, having no interest in the result of the suit, and who obtains an assignment on a promise to pay the assignor the amount he may derive from the action, is not the real party in interest, and cannot maintain the action. Hoagland v. Van Etten, 85 N. W. 869, 870, 22 Neb. 681.

Executor.

Where a creditor of an insolvent estate purchased property at an executor's sale on credit, the executor, in bringing suit for the purchase price, was the real party in interest, inasmuch as the contract was made with him, and the promise to pay runs to him, and he was personally accountable for the price of the assets which he has sold. Thompson v. Whitmarsh, 2 N. E. 273, 274, 100 N. Y. 35.

Lessee.

In an action by the lessee of land against a trespasser for damages to growing crops, the lessee is the real party in interest, within the meaning of Code, § 177, providing that actions shall be brought in the name of the real party in interest. Bridgers v. Dill, 1 S. E. 767, 97 N. C. 222.

Payee of draft.

The payee of a draft is not the real party in interest, notwithstanding an agreement between him and the drawer that it is taken for collection. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. v. Heipier, 52 N. W. 33, 49 Minn. 395.

REAL PROPERTY.

See "Incorporeal Real Property."
See, also, "Property."

The term "real property" at common law was deemed coextensive with "lands, tenements, and hereditaments." Fretwell v. Mc-

Lemore, 52 Ala. 124, 145; Field v. Higgins, 35 Me. 339.

"Real property" is coextensive with "lands, tenements, and hereditaments," and includes any interest in land. Martinovich v. Mariscano, 70 Pac. 459, 137 Cal. 354.

"Real estate includes every possible interest in land, except a mere chattel interest." Jackson v. Parker (N. Y.) 9 Cow. 73, 81.

The term "real property" includes real estate, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal. In re Ehram, 55 N. Y. Supp. 942, 944, 37 App. Div. 272.

Real estate is something which may be held by tenure or will pass to the heir of the possessor at his death, instead of his executor, and includes lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whether the latter be corporeal or incorporeal. Gillett v. Gaffney, 3 Colo. 351, 364.

In this country, both by statute and common law, the term "real estate" is generally used for the phrase "lands, tenements, and hereditaments." Murphy v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 70 Pac. 1070, 138 Cal. 69.

At common law real property consists of land and all rights and profits arising from and annexed to land that are of a permanent and immovable nature, and included under the words "lands, tenements and hereditaments." Scogin v. Perry, 32 Tex. 21, 28.

Whatever technical meaning may be given to the words "real estate," in the different provisions of the Revised Statutes, the term "real property," as used in Code, § 132, providing that, in actions affecting the title to real property, notice of its pendency may be filed, etc., is sufficiently comprehensive to include all estates in land, and as estates in land are expressly declared to include estates for life, for years, at will, and by sufferance, as well as estates of inheritance, it is not easy to perceive any reason why all such estates should not be deemed to be included in the generic designation of "real property." Wilmont v. Meserole, 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. (9 Jones & S.) 274, 278.

Hence either of these terms includes a leasehold interest. Kelley v. Shultz, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 218, 219.

The words "real estate" or "land" shall be construed to mean tenements and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interest therein, other than a chattel interest. Ky. St. 1903, § 458; Code Va. 1887, § 5; Code W. Va. 1899, p. 134, c. 13, § 17.

The term "real estate," as used in the chapter relating to conveyances of real estate, shall be construed as coextensive in meaning with lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and as embracing all chattels real. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 936; Stull v. Graham, 60 Ark. 461, 474, 31 S. W. 46; Cloyes v. Beebe, 14 Ark. 489, 494.

The term "real property," when used in the chapter of the Code relating to taxation, shall be held to mean and include not only land, city, town, and village lots, but also all things thereunto pertaining, and all structures and other things so annexed or attached thereto as to pass to a vendee by the conveyance of the land or lot. Civ. Code Ala. 1896, § 3906, subd. 1; Citizens' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Lott, 45 Ala. 185, 195; Purifoy v. Lamar, 20 South. 975, 977, 112 Ala. 123.

By statute (Mansf. Dig. § 2540) the term "real estate" is to be construed to include every estate, interest, and right, legal and equitable, in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, except such as are determined or extinguished by the death of the intestate seised or possessed thereof in any manner other than by lease for years and estate for the life of another person. Lenow v. Fones, 4 S. W. 56, 59, 48 Ark. 557; Cloyes v. Beebe, 14 Ark. 489, 494.

By the statute (Sand. & H. Dig. § 6401) it is provided that the terms, "real property" and "lands," as used in the act relating to taxation, include not only the land itself, with all things therein contained, but also all buildings, structures, improvements, and other fixtures of whatever kind thereon, and all rights and privileges belonging or in any wise pertaining thereto. Union Compress Co. v. State, 41 S. W. 52, 64 Ark. 136; School Dist. of Ft. Smith v. Board of Improvement, 46 S. W. 418, 419, 65 Ark. 343.

The term "real estate," as used in the revenue act, includes: (1) The possession of, claim to the ownership of, or right to the possession of land. (2) All mines, minerals, and quarries in and under the land, all timber belonging to individuals or corporations growing or being on the land of the United States, and all rights and privileges appertaining thereto. (3) A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, when land is pledged for the payment or discharge thereof, shall, for the purpose of assessment or taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the land so pledged. (4) Improvements. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3617, subd. 2; California & N. R. Co. v. McCartney, 38 Pac. 448, 449, 104 Cal. 616.

Real or immovable property consists of: (1) Land; (2) that which is affixed to land; (3) that which is incidental or appurtenant to land; (4) that which is immovable by law. Land is the solid material of the earth, whatever may be the ingredients of which it is composed, whether soil, rock, or other substance. A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by root, as in the case of trees, etc. A thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, as in the case of a way or water course, or of a passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another. Mt. Carmel Fruit Co. v. Webster, 73 Pac. 826, 828, 140 Cal. 183; Lavenson v. Standard Soap Co., 22 Pac. 184, 185, 80 Cal. 245, 13 Am. St. Rep. 147.

The term "real estate," as used in the chapter relating to the revenue, includes, first, all lands within the state to which title, or the right to title, has been acquired from the government of the United States; second, all mines, mineral, and quarries in and under the land, and all rights and privileges appertaining thereto; third, improvements. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 3782, cl. 1; Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. v. Pueblo Water Co., 53 Pac. 232, 233, 11 Colo. App. 352.

The terms "land" and "real estate," as used in the chapter relating to conveyances, shall be construed as coextensive in meaning with the terms "lands, tenements, and hereditaments," and as embracing all mining claims and other chattels real. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 456.

Real property, or real estate, consists of (1) lands, possessory rights to land, ditch and water rights, and mining claims, both lode and placer; (2) that which is affixed to land; (3) that which is appurtenant to land. Civ. Code Idaho 1901, § 2348.

The term "real estate," as used in the title relating to the revenue, includes: (1) The possession of claim and ownership of or right to the possession of all land; (2) all mines, minerals, and quarries in or under the land, and all rights and privileges appertaining thereto; (3) improvements. Pol. Code Idaho 1901, § 1313, subd. 1.

The term "real property," "real estate," "land," "tract," or "lot," when used in the revenue act, shall be construed to include, not only the land itself, whether laid out in town or city lots or otherwise, with all things contained therein, but also all buildings, structures, and improvements and other permanent fixtures, effects of every kind thereon, and all rights and privileges belonging or in any wise pertaining thereto, except where the same may be otherwise denominated by this act. Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1901, p. 1494, c. 120, § 292, subd. 12.

Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 38, provides that the phrase "real estate," as used in that statute, shall be construed as coextensive with lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and as embracing chattels real. Knapp v. Jones, 38 Ill. App. 489, 495; Willoughby v. Lawrence, 4 N. E. 356, 357, 360, 116 Ill. 11, 56 Am. Rep. 758; First Nat. Bank v. Adam (Ill.) 25 N. E. 576, 577; Turpin v. Ogle, 4 Ill. App. (4 Bradw.) 611, 620; Potter v. Couch, 11 Sup. Ct. 1005, 1012, 141 U. S. 296, 35 L. Ed. 721.

By the statute of Illinois making judgments a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, the term "real estate" is defined to include all interest of the defendant, or any person to his use, held or claimed by virtue of any debt, bond, covenant or otherwise for a conveyance, or a mortgagee or mortgagor of lands, in fee, for life, or for years. Brandles v. Cochrane, 5 Sup. Ct. 194, 196, 112 U. S. 344, 28 L. Ed. 760; Cottingham v. Springer, 88 Ill. 90, 94.

The term "real estate," when used in the act relating to judgments, decrees, and executions, shall include lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all legal and equitable rights and interests therein and thereto, including estates for the life of the debtor or of another person, and estates for years, and leasehold estates, when the unexpired term exceeds five years. For the purpose of taxation, real property shall include all lands within the state, and all buildings and fixtures thereon and appurtenances thereto, excepting in cases otherwise expressly provided by law. Horner's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 6272.

The term "real estate," as used in the act relating to descents and distributions, shall be construed to include every estate, interest, and right, legal and equitable, in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, except such as are determined or extinguished by the death of the intestate seized or possessed thereof in any manner other than by lease for years and estate for life of another person. Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 1838.

The term "real estate," as used in the act relating to the recording of decrees for the conveyance of real estate, shall be construed to include all estates and interests in the lands and tenements, whether legally or equitably liable to be sold under execution. Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 2636.

By Gen. St. 1901, § 7503, it is declared that the terms "real property," "real estate," and "land" usually, except as otherwise provided, include not only the land itself, but the buildings, fixtures, improvements, etc. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Miami County Com'rs, 73 Pac. 103, 105, 67 Kan. 434.

For the purpose of taxation, "real property" shall include all lands within the state, and all buildings and fixtures thereon, and the appurtenances thereto, except such as are expressly exempt by law. Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 3825.

The terms "real property," "real estate," and "land," when used in the article relating to cities of the second class, shall include, not only the land itself, but all buildings, fixtures, improvements, rights, and privileges appertaining thereto. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 5647.

The term "real property," "real estate," "land," or "lot," whenever used in the chapter relating to the assessment and collection of the revenue, shall be held to mean and include, not only the land itself, whether laid out in town or city lots or otherwise, with all things pertaining therein, but also all buildings, structures, and improvements, and other permanent fixtures, of whatsoever kind, thereon, all shot towers, and all machinery therewith connected, all smelting furnaces, and all machinery therewith connected, all gristmills, sawmills (except portable mills of every description), oil mills, tobacco, hemp, and cotton factories, tobacco stemmeries, ropewalks, manufactories of iron, nails, glass, clocks, and all other property belonging to manufactories, of whatever kind, all wool-carding machines, all distilleries, breweries, all tanneries, all iron, copper, brass, and other foundries, and all rights and privileges belonging or in any wise pertaining thereto, except where the same may be otherwise denominated by the chapter. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 9123; Mound City Const. Co. v. Macgurn, 71 S. W. 460, 461, 97 Mo. App. 403.

The words "real property" are coextensive with lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and possessory titles to public lands. Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 16, subd. 2; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 4662, subd. 2; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 3463, subd. 2.

Code Mont.* 1895, § 3680, subd. 2.

The term "real estate," as used in the chapter relating to real property, shall be construed as coextensive with "lands, tenements and hereditaments," and as embracing all chattels real, except leases for a term not exceeding one year. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 10,245.

The terms "real property," "real estate," and "lands," when used in the revenue act, except as otherwise provided, shall include city and village lots, and all other land and buildings, fixtures, improvements, mines, minerals, quarries, mineral springs, and wells, oil and gas rights, and privileges pertaining thereto. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 10,400.

The words "real estate" or "real property," as used in the civil practice act, shall be deemed to include mining claims. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 3687.

The term "real estate," when used in the revenue act, shall be deemed and taken to mean and include, and it is hereby declared to mean and include, all houses, buildings, fences, ditches, structures, erections, railroads, toll roads and bridges, or other improvements, built or erected upon any land, whether such land be private property, or property of the state or of the United States, or of any municipal or other corporation, or of any county, city, or town in the state, the ownership of, or claim to, or possession of, or right of possession to any lands within the state, and the claim by or the possession of any person, firm or corporation, association or company to any land. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 1082.

The term "real estate," as used in the chapter relating to revenue, includes all lands within the territory to which title or right to title has been acquired, all mines, minerals, and quarries in and under the land, and all rights and privileges appertaining thereto, and improvements. Comp. Laws N. M. 1897, § 4019.

The term "real estate," as used in the act relating to conveyances, is applicable to lands, tenements, and hereditaments, including all real and immovable property. Comp. Laws N. M. 1897, § 3940.

1 Rev. St. p. 754, provides that the term "real estate," as used in the chapter relating to the descent of property, shall be construed to include every estate, interest, and right, legal and equitable, in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, except such as are determined or extinguished by the death of an intestate seized or possessed thereof or in any manner entitled thereto, except leases for years and estates for the life of any other person. Barber v. Brundage, 63 N. Y. Supp. 347, 348, 50 App. Div. 123.

The term "land," in the chapter of the New York statute in reference to taxation, is expressly defined "to include the land itself, all buildings and other articles erected upon or affixed to the same, all trees and underwood growing thereon, and all mines, minerals, quarries, and fossils in and under the same, except mines belonging to the state." People v. Board of Assessors of City of Brooklyn, 39 N. Y. 81-87.

The expression "real property" includes every estate, interest, and right, legal or equitable, in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, except those which are determined or extinguished by the death of a person seised or possessed thereof, or in any manner entitled thereto, except those which are declared by law to be assets. Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. 1899, § 2514, subd. 13.

Laws 1893, c. 189, entitled "An act to provide for the sanitary protection of the sources of the water supply of the city of New York," defines, in section 2, the term "real estate," as used in the act, to "signify and embrace all lands, including lands under water, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal." In re Daly, 72 App. Div. 394, 397, 76 N. Y. Supp. 28, 30.

Real property, for the purposes of taxation, shall be construed to include the land itself, whether laid out in town lots or otherwise, and all buildings, structures, and improvements, or other fixtures of whatever kind, thereon, and all rights and privileges thereto belonging or in any wise appertaining, and all quarries and fossils in and under the same, which the law defines, or the courts may interpret, declare, and hold to be real property under the letter, spirit, intent, and meaning of the law, for the purposes of taxation. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. 1897, § 1656.

The terms "real property," "real estate," and "land," when used in the title relating to taxation, shall include, not only the land itself, but all buildings, fixtures, improvements, rights, and privileges pertaining thereto. Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 1035; Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Price Co., 26 N. W. 93, 99, 64 Wis. 579; Edwards & McCulloch Lumber Co. v. Mosher, 60 N. W. 264, 265, 88 Wis. 672.

Buildings.

Code, § 2218, defines real estate as including "lands and the buildings thereon and all things permanently attached to either, or any interest therein or issuing out of or depending thereon. The right of the owner of lands extends downwards and upwards indefinitely." Accordingly, where there is a conveyance of land by deed containing no reservation as to buildings, a parol understanding that the vendor retains the ownership of a house thereon, with the right to enter and remove it, is inconsistent with the deed. Smith v. Odorn, 63 Ga. 499, 502.

Under Rev. St. 1891, c. 30, § 38, declaring that the term "real estate," as used in the statute regulating conveyances, shall include chattels real, a grain elevator, of permanent structure, built by a lessee on ground held under a lease which provides that the lessor may terminate the lease on 60 days' notice, and that the lessee may remove his buildings at any time before the expiration of the lease, is, together with the leasehold estate, to be classed as real estate. Knapp v. Jones, 32 N. E. 382, 383, 143 Ill. 375.

Lands and the buildings thereon are known as "real estate," and the buildings, where nothing is shown to the contrary, are presumed to be held by the fee-simple owner of the land by the same title as the land on which they are situated. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. of Muncy v. Haven, 95 U. S. 242, 245, 24 L. Ed. 473.

"Buildings permanently annexed to the freehold are regarded as real estate." So held in construing the representations in an application for fire insurance. Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 29 N. W. 475, 62 Mich. 638.

Under Rev. St. § 29, subd. 8, providing that "the word 'land,' and the phrases 'real estate' and 'real property,' include lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, equitable as well as legal," a person erecting improvements on real estate under a parol contract for its purchase acquired an interest in the land to the extent of such improvements, and such interest is, under the statute, a mortgagable one. White v. Butt, 32 Iowa, 335, 345.

Where a wooden building is moved to a place within the fire limits of a city in violation of the ordinances of the city, it is personal property while being removed, and, though it is permanently located, it is not thereafter to be regarded as real estate, as it became such only through the illegal conduct of the persons removing it, and must, in an action to enjoin the destruction of the same by the city officers, be regarded as personal property. Hine v. City of New Haven, 40 Conn. 478, 484.

"At common law real estate or property comprehended everything included in the term 'lands, tenements, and hereditaments'; that is, the surface of the earth and everything attached thereto. The difficulty in any case is determining whether a piece of property where movable, and yet attached, is the one or the other species of property; and the general rule has never been changed, but more particularly explained in modern times. Thus, while a building and things fastened for use in it are prima facie real estate, because they answer the general definition of the common law, yet many circumstances are liable to intervene by which the classification of these articles, coming under the head of 'fixtures,' may become personal property." Bemis v. First Nat. Bank, 40 S. W. 127, 128, 63 Ark. 625.

Real property, as defined by Civ. Code Cal. §§ 658, 660, consists of land and that which is affixed to it. A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings. A warehouse, with concrete foundation, built by a lessee on land held under a lease for a term of years, and authorizing its removal before the expiration of the term, is real estate as between the holder of a mortgage on the lessee's interest in the land and a subsequent purchaser of the warehouse. Commercial Bank v. Pritchard, 59 Pac. 130, 132, 126 Cal. 600.

An action for the use and occupation of a certain grain elevator, with the "fixtures and appurtenances thereto belonging," is, in the absence of any allegation to the contrary, an action for the rent of real property, since the presumption is that the elevator is real property. Indianapolis, D. & W. Ry. Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis, 33 N. E. 679, 184 Ind. 127.

The revenue law enacts that the terms "real property" and "land," whenever used in the act, shall be held to mean and include, not only the land itself, etc., with all things contained therein, but also the buildings, structures, and improvements, and other fixtures, of whatsoever kind, thereon. Grain warehouses, built by private individuals upon lands leased by a railroad company, along and on the company's right of way, and intended for the private benefit of the lessees, who reserved the right to remove the same before the termination of their leases, are personal property of the lessees, and taxable as their personal property. Gilkerson v. Brown, 61 Ill. 486, 489.

Chattels real.

The term "real estate," as used in the Code, means any interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace that interest which by the common law was regarded as a mere chattel, and was therefore termed a "chattel real." Rankin v. Oliphant, 9 Mo. 239, 241.

Coal.

Coal, before it is mined, is a part and parcel of the "real estate"; and, as between the owner of the land and the assignee of a mortgage executed prior to the sale of the coal in the land, money derived from such sale will be treated as realty. Appeal of Duff (Pa.) 14 Atl. 364, 367.

Dams and waterways.

For the purpose of taxation "real estate" includes dams, sluices, and waterways connected with the land, within Pub. St. c. 11, § 3, declaring real estate to include things erected or affixed to the land. Flax Pond Water Co. v. Lynn, 16 N. H. 742, 744, 147 Mass. 31.

Electric light wires and poles.

The term "real property" includes the poles, wires, and lamps erected in the streets for lighting purposes by an electric light company. Keating Implement Co. v. Marshall Electric Light & Power Co., 12 S. W. 489, 490, 74 Tex. 605.

Equitable interest.

"Real property," as used in a statute providing that, if the real property of any minor or lunatic is sold for taxes, the same may be redeemed, etc., includes an equitable interest in land, as Revision, § 29, subd. 8, provides that the phrase "real property" shall include lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, equitable as well as legal. Burton v. Hintrager, 18 Iowa, 348, 351.

The term "real estate" includes an equitable estate. Avery's Lessee v. Dufrees, 9 Ohio (9 Ham.) 145, 147.

Under Act Jan. 16, 1840 (Sess. Acts, p. 76), providing that the term "real estate" must be construed to include lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, a judgment was made a lien on equitable as well as legal interests in real estate. Blain v. Stewart, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 378, 381.

Although the words "real property" include equitable as well as legal estates, they cannot be construed to cover land in which the defendant never had any estate or right, and as to which his creditors had only a right in equity to follow a personal fund which had been converted into land as a gift to the defendant's children and in fraud of his creditors. Wall v. Fairley, 77 N. C. 105, 109.

"Real property," as used in the statutes regulating attachments, means lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and the holder of an equitable title to lands for which the purchase money has been fully paid is the owner of the land, within the meaning of the law, and hence liable to the summary proceeding by attachment. Louisville Bank v. Barrick, 62 Ky. (1 Duv.) 51, 54.

Estate for years.

"Real estate," as used in 2 Rev. St. p. 370, § 42, providing that within one year real estate sold by a sheriff under execution may be redeemed by the execution debtor, his devisee, heirs, or grantees, comprehends lands, tenements, and hereditaments, which would include terms for years. People v. Westervelt (N. Y.) 17 Wend. 674, 675.

Rev. St. 1879, § 3295, providing that the rents, issues, and products of the real estate of any married woman, and all moneys and obligations arising from the sale of such estate, shall be exempt from attachment or levy of execution for the sole debts of her husband, should be construed to include the interest which a wife had in lands under a will giving and devising all of the husband's real estate situated in a certain county, to be held by the wife for 20 years from the date of the will and at the end of that period the real estate to be divided among the wife and their children. Burns v. Bangert, 4 S. W. 677, 680, 92 Mo. 167.

Under Code Tenn. § 51, providing that the words "real estate" include lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, equitable as well as legal, leaseholds are to be treated, for the purposes of levy and sale under execution, as real estate, and judgments are a lien on them. Steers v. Daniel (U. S.) 4 Fed. 587, 599.

A leasehold interest from year to year is not "real estate," within the meaning of a statute providing how "all the real estate of a debtor may be sold under execution for the payment of a judgment against him," but is a chattel real, to be sold as personal property. Buhl v. Kenyon, 11 Mich. 249, 251, 83 Am. Dec. 788.

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 3253, restricting the taxation of costs in actions to foreclose mortgages on real estate to a certain sum, the term "real estate" does not include an action to foreclose a mortgage on a leasehold interest, since such interest is not "real estate," even though the lease may exceed a period of three years, and for that reason be entitled to record. Huntington v. Moore, 13 N. Y. Supp. 97, 59 Hun. 351; Barnes v. Meyer, 41 N. Y. Supp. 210, 211.

The term "real estate" has a precise and well-settled meaning in the jurisdiction of this state, and the interest of a tenant of realty under a lease for years is not real estate, but is a chattel real, and is not liable to sale on an execution. The term "real estate," in Laws 1893, c. 560, § 4, providing that any person whose real estate is injured by the change of grade made in erecting a bridge may recover damages for the same, does not include the interest of a tenant under a lease for years. In re Ehrsam, 55 N. Y. Supp. 942, 944, 37 App. Div. 272.

The term "real estate," when applied to an interest in lands or other real property, includes all estates or interests in such real property which are held for life or some greater estate, but does not embrace terms for years and other chattels in land, which, as between the heirs at law and the personal representative, belong to the latter upon the death of the owner thereof. Westervelt v. People (N. Y.) 20 Wend. 416, 417.

When the term "real estate" is used in statutes protecting the property of married women, or giving mechanics' liens, or providing for the descent of property, leaseholds are embraced, as Code, § 51, provides that, when such word is used in the Code, it shall include lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, equitable as well as legal. Lewis v. Glass, 20 S. W. 571, 572, 92 Tenn. 147.

The term "real estate" comprises those lands and tenements or rights in lands and tenements in which the owner has the absolute estate. The legal seisin must be, as respects the duration of his interests, at least a freehold estate. Bates v. Sparrell, 10 Mass. 323, 325.

A lease for years is a chattel real, and, being less than a freehold, is considered as personal estate or property, and in statutory interpretation is not included under the word "land" or the phrases "real estate" or "real property," but is included in the phrase "personal property" or the word "chattel." Meni v. Rathbone, 21 Ind. 454, 466.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1430, provides that the expression "real property," as used therein and in chapter 13, arts. 3, 4, relating to the execution sale of land, includes leasehold property, where the lessee or his assignee is possessed at the time of the sale of at least five years' unexpired term of the lease. Taylor v. Wynne, 8 N. Y. Supp. 759, 55 Hun. 610.

Laws 1892, c. 677 (Statutory Construction Act), defining "real property" as meaning "real estate, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal," and "personal property" as including "chattels and everything except real property," does not render applicable to mortgages of leasehold interests in land Laws 1883, c. 279, requiring mortgages of "goods and chattels" to be filed. State Trust Co. v. Casino Co., 41 N. Y. Supp. 1, 3, 18 Misc. Rep. 327.

The right to the possession of a farm for five years under a contract is a chattel interest, and, if subject to seizure on attachment, it can be attached as a chattel interest, and not as real estate, and a levy on the farm, as a part of the real estate, making no reference to the mere possessory right, does not reach that interest. Grover v. Fox, 36 Mich. 453, 459.

Interest of purchaser at execution sale.

This term, which is defined by the Illinois statute to include "lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all legal and equitable rights and interests therein and thereto, including estates for the life of a debtor or of another person, and estates for years, and leasehold estates where the unexpired term exceeds four years," does not include the interest acquired by the purchaser of land at an execution sale before the expiration of the time allowed for redemption, and such interest is not liable to be levied on and sold on an execution against him. Bowman v. People, 82 Ill. 246, 248, 25 Am. Rep. 316.

Equity of redemption.

"Real estate," as used in a mortgagor's assignment conveying all his real estate and things in action in trust to sell and dispose of the same and to apply the proceeds for the benefit of his creditors, was sufficient to pass not only the mortgagor's land, in which he held the legal title, but was used in a popular sense, including all the mortgagor's property, consisting of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, which included an equity of redemption.—Borst v. Boyd (N. Y.) 3 Sand. Ch. 501, 509.

Fee-simple title.

Since the only title the owners of real estate in Texas have is a fee simple, and those who have the fee simple, and those only, are the owners of the land, it follows that "real estate" and a "title in fee simple to real estate" are convertible terms, and that no one can be the owner of land or real estate unless he has a title to it in fee simple. A road is not real estate. Therefore a judgment, whether recorded or not, does not appear as a lien thereon. Scogin v. Perry, 32 Tex. 21, 28.

Fixtures.

Ordinarily the distinction between real estate and personal property exists in the nature of the thing itself, and does not depend upon the convention of the parties with respect to it; but where things originally personal in their nature are attached to the realty in such a manner that they may be detached without being destroyed or materially injured, they are subject to the convention of the parties, who may agree that they shall remain personal and be subject to removal. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co. (U. S.) 11 Fed. 1, 7.

Franchise.

The franchise of a corporation is not real estate. Fidelity Title & Trust Co. v. Schenley Park & H. Ry. Co., 42 Atl. 140, 142, 189 Pa. 363, 69 Am. St. Rep. 815.

Ground rents.

Ground rents are real estate, bound by judgment, and may be mortgaged like other real estate. McKibbin v. Peters, 40 Atl. 288, 290, 185 Pa. 518.

Growing trees.

Standing timber is realty. Balkcom v. Empire Lumber Co., 17 S. E. 1020, 1021, 91 Ga. 651, 44 Am. St. Rep. 58.

"Real estate," as used in 3 Rev. St. (5th Ed.) p. 59, § 70, declaring that the term "conveyance," as used in the recording act, shall embrace every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real estate is created, aliened, mortgaged, or assigned, includes standing trees, as they are a part of the land; and hence a contract for the sale thereof is a contract for the sale of an interest in land. Vorebeck v. Roe (N. Y.) 50 Barb. 302, 306.

Growing trees are real estate, and cannot pass except by an instrument in writing. Where they are wrongfully cut down and converted into lumber, the legal title to the property continues in the original owner so long as their identity can be traced. Pierrepont v. Barnard (N. Y.) 5 Barb. 304, 371.

Incorporeal hereditaments.

In Act 1872, authorizing the Metropolitan Railway Company to acquire title to such real estate and interests therein as might be necessary to enable it to construct, maintain, and operate its railway in the manner specified in said general railroad act, the term "real estate" should be construed to include all the incorporeal hereditaments, easements, rights, and privileges which the railroad company seeks to acquire. In re Metropolitan El. R. Co., 2 N. Y. Supp. 278, 281. See, also, State v. Superior Court of King County, 72 Pac. 80, 92, 31 Wash. 445.

"Real estate," within Gen. St. c. 3, § 7, cl. 10, declaring that real estate shall include lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, includes easements thereon.—Googins v. Boston & A. R. Co., 30 N. E. 71, 155 Mass. 505.

P. L. p. 957, provides for the appraisalment of damages occasioned by an alteration of a grade of a highway to the owners of any land and real estate on the line of the road. Held, that the words "real estate," as there used, included not only land held in fee by the owners, but hereditaments of an immovable nature, such as easements, and covered all persons having rights in land. Brower v. Tichenor, 41 N. J. Law (12 Vroom) 345, 346.

Improvements.

"The term 'real estate' embraces not only lands, but all improvements of a permanent character placed on real estate, that are regarded as a part of the land." Mathes v. Dobschuetz, 72 Ill. 438, 441.

Improvements on public land.

"Real estate," as used in a revenue act relating to the taxation of real estate, cannot be construed to include improvements on lands belonging to the United States. People v. Owyhee Lumber Co., 1 Idaho, 420, 421.

As any interest in land.

The phrase "real estate" in legal signification includes all interests in land, whether in possession, reversion, or remainder. Floyd v. Carow, 88 N. Y. 560, 569.

Under a statute making all real estate whereof the defendant, or any person for his use, was seised in law or equity, subject to sale on execution, real estate was defined to be all "estate and interest in lands, tenements, and hereditaments." Block v. Morrison, 20 S. W. 340, 342, 112 Mo. 343.

In Act Oct. 22, 1779, providing for the forfeiture by attainder of treason of a person's "real estate," that term signifies such an interest as the tenant has in land. It is the condition or circumstance in which the owner stands with regard to his property, which implies, therefore, a right, interest, or ownership existing in the soil. It must be an interest in the land existing in possession, reversion, remainder, by executory devise, or contingent remainder. Jackson v. Catlin (N. Y.) 2 Johns. 248, 259, 3 Am. Dec. 415.

In 1 Chase's St. p. 926, providing that, if the personal property or estate of a decedent be insufficient to pay his debts, the court shall direct the administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be sufficient to discharge all such demands, "real estate" means the interest which a man has in lands, tenements, or hereditaments. If it be such an interest as can be enforced in a court of law, it is a legal estate or interest. If it be such as can only be enforced in a court of chancery, it is an equitable estate. But in every case it is real estate. Avery's Lessee v. Dufrees, 9 Ohio (9 Ham.) 145, 147.

Lands synonymous.

"Real estate" as used in the Montana statutes, is synonymous with the words "lands." Black v. Elkhorn Min. Co. (U. S.) 49 Fed. 549, 551.

"Real estate," in 2 Rev. St. p. 102, § 20, relating to the sale or lease of decedent's real estate to pay debts, and providing that if it appear that such real estate has been devised, and not charged therein with the payment of debts, the surrogate shall order that the part descended to the heirs be sold before that so devised, and if it appear that any lands devised or descended have been sold by the heirs or devisees, then the lands remaining in their hands unsold shall be ordered to be first sold, is synonymous with "lands," designating the real property of the testator, and is coextensive in meaning with "lands, tenements and hereditaments." Pelletreau v. Smith (N. Y.) 30 Barb. 494, 496.

"Real estate security," as used in a will directing that money loaned by the executors should be loaned on real estate security, meant mortgages on land, and was satisfied by a mortgage executed by an individual member of a firm on land the legal title of which was vested in him, but which was in fact owned and used by the firm as partnership property. Miller v. Proctor, 20 Ohio St. 442, 448.

Manure.

The term "realty," in the rule that a tenant at the end of his term cannot take away anything belonging to the realty, includes manure on a rented farm. Daniels v. Pond, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 367, 371, 32 Am. Dec. 269.

Realty, which passes to the heirs, includes manure made in the course of husbandry on a farm, though in piles, and not in a fit condition for incorporation with the soil. Fay v. Muzzy, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 53, 55, 74 Am. Dec. 619.

Mining claim.

The term "real estate" should be construed to include the possessory title to a mining claim, which is a grant by the government to the locator of an interest in the public domain. Hopkins v. Noyes, 2 Pac. 280, 282, 4 Mont. 550.

A mining claim, being a possessory right, is "real estate," under the provisions of 2 Comp. Laws 1888, § 2997, subd. 2, providing the words "real property" are coextensive with "lands, water rights, possessory rights, and claims." Lavagnino v. Uhlig (Utah) 71 Pac. 1046, 1051.

Pier.

A pier built upon land belonging to a city is real estate, and as such subject to taxation, under the statutory definition of land and real estate, as including "all buildings and other articles erected upon or affixed to" the land. Smith v. City of New York, 68 N. Y. 552, 555 (citing 1 Rev. St. p. 87, §§ 1, 2).

Pipe line.

Real estate includes a pipe line for carrying petroleum which is laid underground, under a grant by the owner of a fee, and is taxable as real estate within the meaning of Act. 1866, § 3, declaring that the term "real estate" shall include all lands, all water power thereon or appurtenant thereto, and all erections thereon or affixed to the same, and all trees and underwood growing thereon. Tide Water Pipe Line Co. v. Berry, 21 Atl. 490, 53 N. J. Law, 212.

Railway property.

Real estate, houses, lands, or lots of ground does not include the property of railroads that is ordinarily and properly appurtenant for their proper operation, such as freight stations, offices, roundhouses, machine shops, grounds covered by tracks and used as ways of approach to the station and buildings in connection with the railroads, and all public works of the company used as such, within the general laws of the state, making "real estate, houses, lands, or lots of ground" taxable. Northumberland County v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Pa.) 9 Atl. 504, 507.

In Act 1844, § 82, declaring that all real estate should be subject to taxation "real estate" cannot be construed to include water stations, depots, offices, oil houses, places to hold cars, and such buildings and places as may be deemed necessary and indispensable to the construction and operation of a railroad, for all such things are to be regarded as a part of a franchise or the principal structure. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. City of Pittsburgh (Pa.) 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. 333, 334.

The rolling machinery of a railroad is intimately connected with the purposes and uses of the track and superstructure, and it is within the power of the legislature to treat such machinery as real property for purposes of taxation. Louisville & N. A. R. Co. v. State, 25 Ind. 177, 179, 87 Am. Dec. 358.

The term "real estate" cannot be construed to embrace the rolling stock of a railroad company. Nelson v. Iowa Eastern R. Co., 1 N. W. 434, 439, 51 Iowa, 184.

Railway roadbed.

The roadbed of a railroad company is "real property" within the meaning of Amended Code, c. 11, § 1, providing that all real and personal property, etc., with certain exceptions, shall be liable to taxation for public purposes. Neary v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 9 Atl. 405, 412, 7 Houst. 419.

A street railway, including its bed and superstructure, is liable to taxation as real estate, under 2 Rev. St. (7th Ed.) p. 981, § 2, providing that land, real estate, or real property, as used in the chapter concerning taxation, shall include all surface and elevated railroads, structures, etc. People v. Commissioners of Taxes & Assessments, 4 N. Y. Supp. 41, 42, 51 Hun, 641.

Rev. St. p. 387, c. 13, tit. 4, relating to taxation, declares that the term "land," as used in said chapter, is to be construed to include the land itself, all buildings and other articles erected upon or affixed to the same, all trees and underwood growing thereon, and all mines, minerals, quarries, and fossils in and under the same, except mines belonging to the state, and the terms "real estate" and "real property," wherever they occur in said chapter, are to be construed as having the same meaning as the term "land" thus defined. Within the meaning of this statute, the foundations, columns, and superstructure of an elevated railway are real estate, and so taxable. People v. Commissioners of Taxes & Assessments, 82 N. Y. 459, 462.

Where the roadway of a railroad is in the bed of a public street, or in a tunnel under the street, such easement may be assessed and taxed as real estate. Appeal Tax Court v. Western Maryland R. Co., 50 Md. 274.

Under Rev. St. c. 6, § 4, regulating the taxation of railroad corporations, the track of the road and the land on which it is constructed are not "real estate" for the purposes of taxation. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. v. City of Saco, 60 Me. 196.

The revenue acts of this state declare that a railroad right of way shall be held to be real estate for the purposes of taxation. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Village of Elmhurst, 46 N. E. 437, 438, 165 Ill. 148.

A railroad right of way in a public street is "real estate," within the meaning of a statute authorizing special assessments on the "real estate" benefited thereby, etc., for local improvements. Rich v. City of Chicago, 38 N. E. 255, 260, 152 Ill. 18.

Real estate embraces not only lands, but rights in lands, including all hereditaments of an immovable nature; and hence a right of way appurtenant to land is embraced within the phrase "land and real estate." State v. Tichenor, 41 N. J. Law (12 Vroom) 345, 346.

Under Gen. St. Nev. §§ 256, 273, giving authority to condemn real estate necessary to carrying on the business of mining, the term "real estate" is held to apply to all lands, whether agricultural, timber, or mineral, and hence to include the power to condemn a right of way for a tunnel to a mining claim, when necessary to the development of the mine. Douglass v. Byrnes (U. S.) 59 Fed. 29, 31.

The expression "real estate," in the eleventh section of the Essex public road board act, approved March 31, 1869 (P. L. p. 957), includes a way appurtenant to a farm, because such easement is a hereditament of an immovable nature. Brower v. Tichenor, 41 N. J. Law (12 Vroom) 345, 346.

Remainder.

"Real estate," as used in a statute authorizing the sale of lands, tenements, and real estate on execution, will be construed to include a remainder in real estate, which will vest in possession if the remainderman outlives the holder of a precedent life estate. Sheridan v. House (N. Y.) 4 Abb. Dec. 218, 226.

The term "real estate," as used in the Statutes of 1814 and in the Revised Statutes, includes every freehold estate and interest in lands (that is, an estate in fee or for life), as also every estate, interest, and right, legal and equitable, in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, except such as are determined by the death of an intestate seised or possessed thereof or in any manner entitled thereto, and except leases for years and estates for the life of another person. A remainder in fee in lands is clearly real estate, as that term is used in common law, as well as defined by the statutes, and under the statute of Illinois, authorizing the sale of real estate of an infant, the court has jurisdiction to direct the sale of a remainder in fee, vested in interest in an infant. Jenkins v. Fahey, 73 N. Y. 355-362.

The term "real estate" applies as well to life estates or estates in remainder as to absolute or entire fees. Cooper v. Hepburn (Va.) 15 Grat. 561, 563.

Interest of remote assignee of bond to convey.

Rev. St. p. 111, § 18, provides that all deeds, conveyances, and agreements in writing, of or affecting title to real estate or any interest therein, may be recorded in the office of the recorder of the county where the real estate is situated, and that therefore such rights shall take effect as to subsequent bona fide purchasers and incumbancers not having notice thereof. Held, that an assignment by the assignee of the second party in a bond for the conveyance of real estate comes within the provision of the statute, and, unless recorded, will not take effect as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser. McFarran v. Knox, 5 Colo. 217, 219, 221.

"Real estate," as used in Comp. Laws, § 4844, requiring actions for the recovery of real estate or for the recovery of possession thereof, or trespass thereon and trespass on the case for injuries thereto, to be tried in the county where the subject of the action shall be situated, means the real estate of the plaintiff—"an interest or property distinct from that of the public at large, and which may be acquired by purchase, grant, or prescription, and conveyed or disposed of as property. Nor do we think the right of navigation in a public river can with propriety be treated as real estate, vested in the public or the state for the benefit of every individual who may have occasion to use it." An action on the case for obstructing a navigable stream is not rendered local by the statute. Barnard v. Hinkley, 10 Mich. 458, 459.

Several tracts.

The term "real estate," as generally used, embraces lands, tenements, and hereditaments. It includes several distinct parcels of land, as well as entire tracts. Under Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that "all actions for recovery of possession of, quieting title to, or for the enforcement of liens upon, real estate shall be commenced in the county in which the real estate or any part thereof . . . is situated," an action for partition of several distinct tracts of land situate in different counties may be brought in the superior court in any county in which any one of the tracts is situated. Murphy v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 70 Pac. 1070, 138 Cal. 69.

Room.

A testator by his last will ordered that his wife should have one room in his dwelling house and a comfortable maintenance out of his estate during her natural life or her widowhood. On the same principle that a house is real estate, a room in a house must likewise be so, as having its share in the foundation. If the widow should be put out of the room, she may recover in ejectment and have a writ of possession. White v. White, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 202, 214, 31 Am. Dec. 232.

Street railway track.

The statutory definition of "real property," as fixed by Gen. St. 1878, c. 11, § 2, enacting that "real property," for the purpose of taxation, shall be construed to include the land itself, and all buildings, structures, and improvements, trees, or other fixtures of whatever kind thereon, and all rights and privileges thereto belonging or in any wise appertaining, has no application to assessments for local improvements. A portion of the track of the St. Paul City Railway Company in a public street is not real estate, and therefore not assessable for the expenses of paving. State v. District Court, 17 N. W. 954, 956, 31 Minn. 354.

As testator's realty.

In a will giving testator's wife one-third of all real estate as long as she remained his widow, and to one son the north half of the real estate and to another son the south half of the real estate, the term "real estate" should be construed to mean testator's real estate, though he does not say "my real estate," or "the real estate I own," or "the real estate of which I shall die seised." Case v. Young, 8 Minn. 209, 215 (Gil. 140, 142).

Toll bridge.

A toll bridge erected by two individuals across a river, between their own lands, by authority of the Legislature, is real estate. In re Meason's Estate (Pa.) 4 Watts, 341, 346.

"Real estate," as used in tax laws, would include a toll bridge; and hence the owner would be taxable for such bridge as real estate. Kittery v. Proprietors of Portsmouth Bridge, 2 Atl. 847, 78 Me. 93.

Trust property.

In Wag. St. p. 542, § 23, providing that the widow shall have dower of real estate, though there may have been no actual possession by the husband in his lifetime, and though the same may have been held by him as partner, the term "real estate" cannot be construed to include real estate charged with a trust held by a tenant in common, whether the trust is expressed on the face of the conveyance under which he holds, or is raised by legal implication from its being expressed on the face of the transaction itself, though not expressed in the deed. Willet v. Brown, 65 Mo. 138, 148, 27 Am. Rep. 265.

Unlocated land certificate.

Unlocated land certificates are chattels, and not real estate, and descend to the heirs of the owner as personalty, and not as real estate. Porter v. Burnett, 60 Tex. 220, 222.

Vendor's lien.

"Real estate," as defined by Gen. St. § 1835, declaring that the term includes all interest of the defendant, or any person to his use, held or claimed by virtue of any deed, bond, covenant or otherwise for conveyance, or as a mortgagor, cannot be extended to embrace the right of a vendor who releases his trust deed for the purchase price and merely reserves a lien; that being only a chose in action, and no interest in the land.

Fallon v. Worthington, 22 Pac. 960, 962, 13 Colo. 559, 6 L. R. A. 708, 16 Am. St. Rep. 231.

Water and ice.

"It is well settled that under some conditions water and ice are to be regarded as real estate, belonging to the owner of the land which is beneath it, and when that is the case the owner or assignee has the exclusive right to gather and dispose of the ice for his own benefit, subject to the rights of other riparian owners. Where he does not own the soil under the stream, as where it is meandered and his ownership does not include its bed, he has no exclusive right to the ice which forms on it." Marsh v. McNider, 55 N. W. 469, 88 Iowa, 390, 21 L. R. A. 833, 45 Am. St. Rep. 240.

Water pipes and hydrants.

"Real estate," as used in Rev. St. c. 6, § 9, which declares that taxes on real estate are to be assessed in the town where the estate lies to the owner or person in possession thereof, includes the water pipes, hydrants, and conduits of a water company laid through the streets of a city or town. Paris v. Norway Water Co., 27 Atl. 143, 145, 85 Me. 330, 21 L. R. A. 525, 35 Am. St. Rep. 371.

Water power.

Real property, for the purpose of taxation, being defined by the statute to include all rights and privileges belonging or appertaining thereto, includes listed water powers, which are a part of one's right to the use of the water. State v. Minneapolis Mill Co., 2 N. W. 839, 841, 26 Minn. 229.

Waterworks plant.

Code Iowa, § 45, subd. 8, provides that the word "land," and the phrases "real estate" and "real property," include lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, equitable as well as legal. In that state the buildings and machinery of a waterworks company located on land under a lease, to continue as long as the waterworks are operated, are for the purpose of taxation real estate, and the whole plant, with the mains, pipes, and hydrants, is assessable in a township where the main works are located. Oskaloosa Water Co. v. Board of Equalization of State of Iowa, 51 N. W. 18, 19, 84 Iowa, 407, 15 L. R. A. 206.

REAL RELEASE.

According to Pothier there are two kinds of release—one called a "real release," and the other a "personal discharge." A real release is where the creditor declares that he considers the debt as acquitted. It is equivalent to a payment, and renders the thing no longer due, and consequently it liberates all the debtors of it, as there can be no debtors without something due. Booth v. Kinsey (Va.) 8 Grat. 560, 568 (citing Pothier, p. 111, c. 3, art. 2, §§ 1, 11).

REAL SECURITY.

Real security is security on property, as distinguished from personal security. Merrill v. National Bank, 19 Sup. Ct. 360, 371, 173 U. S. 131, 43 L. Ed. 640.

REAL SERVICES.

Ang. Water Courses, § 142, states that easements were treated by the civil law under the name of services, where they were divided into real and personal. The former were defined to be services which one estate owes to another, or the right of doing something or of having a privilege in one man's estate for the advantage and convenience of the owner of another's estate. Morgan v. Mason, 20 Ohio, 401, 402, 410, 55 Am. Dec. 464.

REAL SERVITUDE.

"Real servitudes," which are also called "predial or landed servitudes," are those which the owner of an estate enjoys on a neighboring estate for the benefit of his own estate. They are also called "predial or landed servitudes" because, being established for the benefit of an estate, they are rather due to the estate than to the owner personally. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 646.

REAL STATUTE.

According to the jurists of Holland and France, a personal statute is that which follows and governs the party subject to it wherever he goes. The real statute controls things, and does not extend beyond the limits of the country from which it derives its authority. The personal statute of one country controls the personal statute of another country, into which a party once governed by the former, or who may contract under it, should remove; but it is subject to a real statute of the place where the person subject to the personal statute should fix himself, or where the property on which the contest arises may be situated. Bartolus, who was one of the first by whom this subject was examined, and the most distinguished jurist of his day, established as a rule that whenever the statute commenced by treating of persons it was a personal one, but if it began by disposing of things it was real. So that if a law was written thus, "The estate of the deceased shall be inherited by the eldest son," the statute was real; but if it said, "The eldest son shall inherit the estate," it was personal. This distinction, though purely verbal and most unsatisfactory, was followed for a long time, and sanctioned by many whose names are illustrious in the annals of jurisprudence, but was ultimately discarded by all. Voet has two definitions—one that a real statute is that which affects principally things, though it also relates to persons; and the other that a personal statute is that which affects principally persons, though it treats also of things. Saul v. His Creditors (La.) 5 Mart. (N. S.) 569, 582, 16 Am. Dec. 212.

"The reality of the claim made," as used in the statement that the compromise of a disputed claim is good consideration for a promise, and that the only elements necessary to a valid agreement of compromise are the reality of the claim made and the bona fides of the compromise, means that the claimant shall assert his claim in good faith, believing it is real. Rue v. Meira, 12 Atl. 369, 371, 43 N. J. Eq. 377.

REALIZE.

When used in connection with the conversion of claims or demands into money, "realize" is a very broad term, and may reasonably be said to include the term "compromise," so that, where defendants agreed to pay an attorney a certain sum for his services in case they realized not less than a certain amount, and they compromised for a less amount, the attorney cannot recover. Bittiner v. Gomprecht, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1011, 1013, 28 Misc. Rep. 218.

The word "realize," as used in a contract whereby a party agreed to pay another a certain sum of money in case he should realize a certain amount for certain land, etc., means to bring into actual possession. It is ordinarily used in contrast to "hope" or "anticipation." Lorillard v. Silver, 86 N. Y. 578, 579.

The payee of a draft assigned it to one who gave his promissory note; the payee agreeing to release the assignee from paying the note in case he should be unable to "collect or realize" on the draft. The assignee afterwards became indebted to the drawer. Held, that until a suit should be brought by the drawer, enabling the assignee to set off the draft against the debt, it could not be predicated that the assignee had been able to realize on the draft by means of the indebtedness. Hall v. Henderson, 84 Ill. 611, 612.

"Realized," as used in a contract for selecting and planting swamp and overflowed lands granted to the county, to be paid for out of the "first money and government scrip" there is realized by said county for state lands, cannot be construed to include a contract for the sale of lands, before it is executed by the purchaser and before any work is done or any benefits result to the county from the contract; for it cannot in justice or truth be said that it realizes anything, either money or government scrip, as soon as such contract was made. Stanford v. Greene County, 18 Iowa, 218, 220.

REALM.

The term "realm," throughout which it is presumed that legal proceedings during their continuance are publicly known, means the state or sovereignty where the property is which is the subject of litigation. Carr v. Lewis Coal Co., 8 S. W. 907, 909, 96 Mo. 149, 9 Am. St. Rep. 323.

REALTY.

See "Real Property."

REAR.

"Rear," as used in a will by which the testator devised his messuage No. 90 B. street, and the two stable lots "in the rear thereof," should be construed to apply to both the lots devised, though only one of them was directly behind No. 90; the other being behind No. 89. They are properly described as being in the rear of the testator's dwelling house lot. Read v. Clarke, 109 Mass. 82, 83.

REAR BRAKEMAN.

"Rear brakeman," as used in the business of railroading, means the brakeman posted at or near the rear of the train. Erb v. Eggleston, 60 N. W. 98, 41 Neb. 860.

REASON.

See "Good and Lawful Reasons"; "Good Reason to Believe"; "No Reason to Doubt."

Reason for appeal.

It is a sufficient statement of the reasons for the appeal from an order denying probate of a will to say that the evidence given before the court showed due execution of the will, and the judge denied the probate of it; for it is nothing more than saying that the judge decided contrary to the evidence, and that the proof showed that a will had been made, while the court decided otherwise and that no such will had been made. Nelson v. Clongland, 15 Wis. 392, 393.

Reason to believe.

Where defendant in slander said his watch had been stolen, and that he had reason to believe plaintiff took it, the words

"had reason to believe" amounted to an averment that plaintiff took the watch. Miller v. Miller (N. Y.) 8 Johns. 77.

"Reason to believe," as used in a charge that one accused of homicide need not retreat if he had reason to believe that he was in danger of great bodily harm, is not equivalent to "reasonable belief." Howard v. State, 20 South. 865, 866, 110 Ala. 92.

Reason to know.

In regard to the liability of warehousemen for a defect existing in their warehouse, of which they knew or had reason to know, means such a defect as could have been discovered by the use of ordinary care. Moulton v. Phillips, 10 R. L. 218, 223, 14 Am. Rep. 663.

REASONABLE.

An attempt to give a specific meaning to the word "reasonable" is trying to count what is not number, and measure what is not space. Altshuler v. Coburn, 38 Neb. 881, 57 N. W. 836.

The only limit to the legislative power in prescribing conditions to the right of practicing a profession is that they should be reasonable. By the term "reasonable" is not meant expedient, nor that the conditions must be such as the court would impose if it were called on to prescribe what should be the conditions. They are to be deemed reasonable where, although perhaps not the wisest and best that might be adopted, they are fit and appropriate to the end in view, to wit, the protection of the public, and are manifestly adopted in good faith for that purpose. If the condition should be clearly arbitrary and capricious; if no reason with reference to the end in view could be assigned for it; and especially if it appeared that it must have been adopted for some other purpose—such, for instance, as to favor or benefit some persons or class of persons—it certainly would not be reasonable, and would be beyond the power of the Legislature to impose. State v. Vandersluis, 42 Minn. 129, 43 N. W. 789, 6 L. R. A. 119.

"Reasonable" is a relative term, and the facts of the particular controversy must be considered before the question as to what constitutes a reasonable delay can be determined. In re Nice & Schreiber (U. S.) 123 Fed. 987, 988.

Discretion involved.

"Reasonable," as used in reference to a license tax, does not mean that a tax is unreasonable if it is larger than the judges think wise; but, if it is allowed by an authority endowed with discretion, it must be presumed by the courts to be reasonable. Ex parte Mirande, 14 Pac. 890, 892, 73 Cal. 365.

Fair synonymous.

Webster's Dictionary gives as a synonym for "fair" the word "reasonable." An instruction, therefore, which used the term "fair" as a synonym of "reasonable" in defining the care required of a physician was not erroneous. Jones v. Angell, 95 Ill. 376, 382.

Impartial synonymous.

The word "impartial" signifies not partial; not favoring one party more than another; unprejudiced; disinterested; equitable; just. The words "impartial" and "reasonable" are held to be practically synonymous, so that it is held that in a suit for malicious prosecution a definition of probable cause as the existence of such facts and circumstances as would excite in a reasonable mind the belief of the guilt of the person charged is not erroneous because of the use of the word "reasonable" instead of "impartial." Thompson v. Beacon Valley Rubber Co., 56 Conn. 493, 498, 16 Atl. 554.

As just.

"Reasonable," as used in a clause of the Constitution requiring taxes levied upon inhabitants and residents and upon estates not only to be proportional, but to be reasonable, should be construed to mean "just." Opinion of the Justices, 4 N. H. 565, 569.

As ordinary.

The words "ordinary" and "reasonable," used in defining the nature of the care and skill expected of a physician or surgeon in his employment, have been interchangeably used. Ritchey v. West, 23 Ill. (13 Peck) 385. Perhaps the word "ordinary" would indicate more clearly to the common mind the degree of care and skill which he is bound to exercise in his professional engagements, or answer in damages for the want of it. Kendall v. Brown, 74 Ill. 232, 237.

REASONABLE AGREEMENT.

"Reasonable agreement," as used in an application for mandamus, alleging that relator had sought to enter into a reasonable agreement with respondent, which was alleged to be a corporation controlling a monopoly, to admit relator as one of its patrons, is of too vague and indefinite meaning to furnish a basis for a judgment. State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 60 S. W. 91, 93, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L. R. A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368.

REASONABLE ALLOWANCE.

"Reasonable allowance," as used in Act April 27, 1864, relative to costs in cases of partition, and providing that the costs, with a reasonable allowance for counsel fees, should be paid by all the parties, the reasonable allowance contemplated does not include expenses of adversary proceedings resulting from a defense to plaintiff's demand for partition or from any other cause. Appeal of Fidelity Ins. Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 108 Pa. 339, 343.

REASONABLE ATTORNEY'S FEE.

The phrase "reasonable attorney's fee," as used in the act of 1874 concerning actions for the killing of live stock by railroad trains, requires that the fee shall be a reasonable fee, reasonable considering all the elements in the particular case which affect the proper amount of the attorney's compensation. The fee is for the prosecution of the suit, and this covers the entire prosecution, from the commencement until its termination. Missouri River, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Shirley, 20 Kan. 660.

"Reasonable attorney's fee," as used in Code, § 2961, providing that if an attachment is wrongfully sued out, and there is no reasonable cause to believe the ground upon which same issued to be true, defendant may recover the actual damages sustained and a reasonable attorney's fee, to be determined by the court, cannot be construed as meaning a fair and reasonable fee for the trial of the whole case, though the question as to whether the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff was in issue, as the fees are to be allowed if the ground upon which the attachment was issued is not true. The action for the supposed debt can be brought, whether there is ground for the attachment or not. The attachment is an auxiliary proceeding, and may be commenced when the action is brought or afterwards, and the attorney's fee is allowed only when it is found that there was no ground for the commencement of such auxiliary proceeding. Porter v. Knight, 19 N. W. 282, 285, 63 Iowa, 365.

The amount of the estate must to a large extent govern the court's discretion in determining what is a reasonable attorney's fee to the attorney for the petitioning creditors of a bankrupt, and it must be controlled by the general policy of the law, which requires such estates to be administered with severe economy. In re Goldville Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 123 Fed. 579, 584.

Where a deed of assignment provided that after paying the expenses of executing the trust, including reasonable attorney's fees, the balance should be divided among the creditors, the phrase "reasonable attorney's fees" should be interpreted as meaning such fees as the trustee might be allowed to charge by law, and hence it could not include fees for services rendered by himself to himself. Kentucky Nat. Bank v. Stone, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 645, 647, 20 S. W. 1040, 1041, 93 Ky. 623.

"Reasonable attorney's fee," as used in the sixty-fifth section of the act concerning partition, which enacts that the judge of the court before whom any case of partition is had shall allow a reasonable attorney's fee in favor of the attorney bringing the suit, which shall be collected and taxed as other costs, means that the attorney's fee shall be taxed as costs; the judge seeing that it is not too great, leaving the attorney and client to contract for its amount, and not that the judge shall decide as to the amount of the fee. Draper v. Draper, 29 Mo. 13, 16.

REASONABLE BELIEF.

"Reasonable belief" of impending danger, sufficient to justify homicide in self-defense, must be a belief begotten by attendant circumstances fairly creating it, and must be honestly entertained. Howard v. State, 20 South. 365, 368, 110 Ala. 92.

REASONABLE CARE.

Reasonable care and prudence implies the converse of negligence. Buck v. People's St. Ry., Electric Light & Power Co., 46 Mo. App. 555.

Reasonable and proper care and caution is that degree of care and caution that reasonably prudent persons should exercise. Gawlack v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. 59, 64, 5 O. C. D. 318.

Reasonable care is that care and foresight which men of ordinary prudence are accustomed to employ, and which they probably would have employed under the exact circumstances of the particular case. Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co., 13 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 633, 646; Larsh v. City of Des Moines, 38 N. W. 384, 385, 74 Iowa, 512; Helfenstein v. Medart (Ky.) 36 S. W. 863, 866.

Due and reasonable care and caution means that degree of care and caution which might reasonably be expected of a reasonably prudent man under the circumstances surrounding him or her at the time in question. Atherton v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 71 Pac. 39, 42, 30 Wash. 395 (citing Spurrier v. Front St. Cable Ry. Co., 3 Wash. St. 659, 29 Pac. 346); Jegglin v. Roeder, 79 Mo. App. 428, 436.

"Reasonable care" means according to the usages, habits and ordinary risks of the business. Bonner v. Pittsburg Bridge Co., 38 Atl. 896, 897, 183 Pa. 195; Titus v. Railroad Co., 136 Pa. 618, 20 Atl. 517, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944; Keenan v. Waters, 37 Atl. 342, 343, 181 Pa. 247.

As governed by circumstances.

What is due diligence or reasonable care, which are practically synonymous, is nearly always, if not always, a manifest question of law and fact, difficult of definition, and still more so of determination; that depending on the relative facts in each case, and coming peculiarly within the province of the jury.

Hendricks v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 35 S. E. 543, 543, 128 N. C. 304, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658.

"Reasonable care" means such care as is proportionate to the probability of injury. Gannon v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 47 S. W. 907, 912, 145 Mo. 502, 43 L. R. A. 505; Tompert v. Hastings Pavement Co., 55 N. Y. Supp. 177, 179, 35 App. Div. 578.

"Reasonable care and skill" as used in a contract providing that work to be done by one party for the other shall be done with reasonable care and skill, is a relative phrase, and in its application as a rule or measure of duty varies in its requirements, according to all the circumstances under which the care and skill are to be exerted. Cunningham v. Hall, 86 Mass. (4 Allen) 268, 276.

Reasonable care "is care in proportion to the danger involved. Whatever may be the dangerous circumstances, reasonable care must be exercised to prevent harm. In deciding whether one exercises reasonable care, all the surrounding circumstances must be considered, and it must be determined therefrom what would be the conduct of a person of ordinary prudence and discretion under such circumstances." Dexter v. McCready, 5 Atl. 855, 856, 54 Conn. 171.

Ordinary and reasonable care and diligence are relative terms, and what will constitute the amount or kind of diligence that will be regarded as ordinary and reasonable must necessarily vary under different conditions. It cannot be measured or ascertained by any fixed and inflexible standard, and what under some circumstances would be ordinary and reasonable diligence might under other conditions amount even to gross negligence. Consumers' Electric Light & Street R. Co. v. Pryor (Fla.) 32 South. 797, 805; Read v. Morse, 84 Wis. 815, 818.

Reasonable care is at least such care as a person whose conduct is in question should have exercised in the particular emergency, in the opinion of the final judge or judges of each case. If there is reasonable room for variation of opinion on that subject, then the criterion is that measure or degree of care which a jury regards as obligatory upon that person in the circumstances of the case in hand. Appel v. Eaton & Price Co., 71 S. W. 741, 743, 97 Mo. App. 428.

Ordinary care synonymous.

The term "reasonable care" is synonymous with the term "ordinary care." The terms may be used interchangeably in instructions. Black v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 46 N. W. 428, 430, 30 Neb. 197; Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Faith, 51 N. E. 807, 808, 175 Ill. 58; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Yorty, 42 N. E. 64, 65, 153 Ill. 321; Nolan v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 4 Atl. 106, 111, 53 Conn. 461;

Taylor v. City of Ballard, 64 Pac. 143, 147, 24 Wash. 191.

Reasonable care "must be understood as meaning ordinary care, since otherwise the word 'reasonable' would have no fixed meaning, and when used in an instruction would authorize the jury to apply any rule as to care and caution which they might deem reasonable." Instructions in which the term "reasonable care" is used are to be treated as though the phrase "ordinary care" had been employed. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Noble, 32 N. E. 684, 685, 142 Ill. 578.

The term "reasonable care," like the term "ordinary care," is an apt term to use in an instruction to describe the care required by a contractor in keeping a street in a safe condition. Tompert v. Hastings Pavement Co., 55 N. Y. Supp. 177, 179, 35 App. Div. 578.

An instruction that plaintiff could not recover unless she was in the exercise of "reasonable," instead of "ordinary," care, was properly refused in an action against a city for personal injuries resulting from a defective street. City of Peoria v. Gerber, 48 N. E. 152, 153, 168 Ill. 818.

As necessary care.

The use of the word "reasonable," in an instruction in an action against a carrier for loss of goods by fire while on a railroad train, that the defendant is not liable if the person in charge of the train took all reasonable care and observed all reasonable precautions in the management and conducting of the train, etc., is intended to convey the idea that the carrier is bound to use that care and foresight which is appropriate to the action and necessary to be used in like exigencies and employments, as contradistinguished from that ordinary care which devolves upon an ordinary bailee. A reasonable act is such as the law requires. Levering v. Union Transp. & Ins. Co., 42 Mo. 88, 95, 97 Am. Dec. 320.

By "reasonable care" is meant that degree of care which a person of prudence would ordinarily exercise under the same circumstances as those in question. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams, 50 S. W. 732, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 587.

The reasonable care which a plank road company is required to exercise to keep its road in proper repair and safety includes acts of omission as well as those of commission. When the danger is such as to imperil human safety, the care required should be such as may reasonably be regarded as enough to prevent the probability of mischief. Carver v. Detroit & S. Plank Road Co., 25 N. W. 183, 185, 69 Mich. 616.

Commission merchants.

"Reasonable care," as used in the rule that commission merchants are liable for reasonable care of property in their possession, means "such care as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under the same circumstances with reference to his own property, taking into consideration the usages of trade, the state of the market, and the situation of the property." Rice v. Brook (U. S.) 20 Fed. 611, 614.

Physicians and surgeons.

The reasonable and ordinary care, skill, and diligence which the law requires of physicians and surgeons are such as those in the same general line of practice in the same general locality ordinarily have and exercise in like cases. Surgeons should, however, keep up with the latest advance in medical science, and use the latest and most improved methods and appliances, having regard to the general practice of the profession in the locality where they practice. Akridge v. Noble, 41 S. E. 78, 80, 114 Ga. 949.

Shipbuilders.

"Reasonable care or skill" is a relative phrase, and what this requires is always to be determined by consideration of the subject-matter to which it is applied. In its application as a rule or measure of duty to which a builder is subject in the building of a ship, and especially when it is constructed in part of materials known to be subject to defects which may essentially impair its strength or endanger its safety, it calls for the most vigilant inspection of every article used and the employment of every known test or means by which they may be detected. Cunningham v. Hall, 86 Mass. (4 Allen) 268, 276.

Trustees.

Reasonable care, as applied to the duties of trustees in connection with the securities in which the trust fund was invested, requires such trustees to act according to the best of their judgment, and to exercise such care as a man of average prudence, under precisely the same circumstances, would use. Smith v. Bank of New England (N. H.) 54 Atl. 385, 387.

REASONABLE CAUSE.

Other reasonable cause, see "Other."

In Act 1799, providing that a district attorney and customs collector shall not be liable to an action for the seizure of goods for which they believed there was "reasonable cause," that term is synonymous with probable cause, and means a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that a ground existed for the seizure, or such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution to believe, or to entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that such ground existed. Stacey v. Emery, 97 U. S. 642, 646, 24 L. Ed. 1035.

In a reference in the bankrupt act to a security taken for a debt by a creditor having reasonable cause to believe the person giving such security insolvent, the phrase "reasonable cause to believe" means a knowledge of some fact or facts calculated to produce a belief of the debtor's insolvency in the mind of an ordinarily intelligent man, and not a mere suspicion of the debtor's insolvency. Grant v. First Nat. Bank, 97 U. S. 80, 81, 24 L. Ed. 971.

To constitute a reasonable cause to believe that a debtor is insolvent, it is not enough that a creditor or purchaser has merely some cause to suspect his solvency, but there must be knowledge of some fact or facts calculated to produce a reasonable belief that the debtor is insolvent. Daniels v. Bank of Zumbrota, 29 N. W. 165, 35 Minn. 351.

"Reasonable cause to believe," as used in Bankr. Law, § 52, relating to fraudulent preferences made by the debtor to one having reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent, does not mean that the creditor has some cause to suspect the insolvency of his debtor. A man may have many grounds of suspicion that his debtor is in failing circumstances, and yet have no cause for a well-grounded belief of the fact. He may be willing to trust him further. He may feel anxious about his claim, and have a strong desire to secure it; and yet such belief as the act requires may be wanting. Morey v. Milliken, 30 Atl. 102, 106, 86 Me. 464 (citing Grant v. First Nat. Bank, 97 U. S. 80, 24 L. Ed. 971; King v. Storer, 75 Me. 62, 63).

Bankr. Act 1867, § 35, enacts that if any creditor receiving an assignment, transfer, or conveyance from his debtor has reasonable cause to believe such debtor insolvent, and he be insolvent, the conveyance shall be void. Held, that the phrase "reasonable cause" means such a state of facts brought to the creditor's notice respecting the affairs and the pecuniary condition of the debtor as would lead a prudent business man to the conclusion that the debtor is unable to meet his obligations as they mature in the ordinary course of business.—Toof v. Martin, 80 U. S. (13 Wall.) 40, 50, 20 L. Ed. 481.

The "reasonable cause" which will justify a wife or husband in quitting and abandoning the other is that which would entitle the party so separating himself or herself to a divorce. "The contention that reasonable cause in this connection is not definable by any precise rule of law, but includes rather such causes as in any case submitted will satisfy a court or jury that the separation was a justifiable act, should not be sustained, since too liberal a construction given to the words 'reasonable cause' could not fail to invite separation between husband and wife which might otherwise never occur, while a construction too limited might subject those most meriting legal protection, because most needing it, to hardships and sufferings which are revolting to every right-minded man." Butler v. Butler (Pa.) 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. 329, 337.

"Reasonable cause," as used in the bankrupt act (14 Stat. 534), providing that if any insolvent debtor, within four months before filing his petition in bankruptcy, shall suffer his property or any part thereof to be attached or seized on execution, or makes any payment, assignment, transfer, or conveyance of his property within that period, such assignment, transfer, or conveyance shall be void, if the person receiving the same or to be benefited thereby had reasonable cause to believe that such debtor was insolvent, signifies that the debtor was actually insolvent, and that such facts and circumstances were known to the creditor securing the preference as clearly ought to have put a prudent man on inquiry as to such insolvency. Dutcher v. Wright, 94 U. S. 553, 557, 24 L. Ed. 130.

REASONABLE CERTAINTY.

Reasonable certainty means that which on a fair and reasonable construction may be called certain, without resorting to possible facts which do not appear. Hollingsworth v. Holsbousen, 17 Tex. 41, 44.

"Reasonable certainty is the being free from reasonable doubt." As used in an instruction in a criminal case, stating that the jury should be satisfied to reasonable certainty of the defendant's guilt, it is equivalent to an instruction that they should be "free from reasonable doubt as to his guilt," and the instruction is not erroneous. State v. Shaw, 49 N. C. 440, 443.

REASONABLE COMPENSATION.

"Reasonable compensation," as applicable to V. S. 5384, authorizing the probate court to allow a special administrator, "in case of unusual difficulty or responsibility, such further sum as it judges reasonable," means such as will fairly compensate, when the character, effectiveness, and ability entering into the service are considered. Powell v. Foster's Estate, 44 Atl. 96, 97, 71 Vt. 160.

A statute which permits the damages on the condemnation of land to be assessed as of the date of the former taking, but postpones interest until possession is actually taken, provides the reasonable compensation which the Constitution requires in such cases. Norcross v. City of Cambridge, 44 N. E. 615, 616, 166 Mass. 508, 83 L. R. A. 843.

An assignment in trust for creditors, providing for the payment of all expenses which might be incurred by the assignment in the execution of the trust, including a reasonable compensation for labor, time, and services of such assignees, means a compensation or commission for labor, time, services, and attention of the assignee, actually done, spent, given, and bestowed in and about the business of the trust created, and can be construed as meaning no more than the commissions fixed by law. Campbell v. Woodworth, 24 N. Y. 304, 306.

P. L. 49, authorizing cities of the second class by ordinance to issue certain bonds, which shall not be sold at less than par, with accrued interest, but providing that the councils may allow a reasonable compensation for the sale or negotiation of said bonds, does not authorize the allowance of a commission to the purchasers thereof. Appeal of Whelen, 108 Pa. 162, 1 Atl. 88.

What is a reasonable compensation for physical and mental suffering is for the jury to ascertain and assess under the facts in each case. Such compensation cannot be measured by any unvarying mathematical rule or standard. Larkin v. Chicago & G. W. Ry. Co., 92 N. W. 891, 892, 118 Iowa, 652.

REASONABLE COSTS.

The term "reasonable costs," as used in V. S. 1403, providing that, in case of discontinuance, the defendant is entitled to judgment for reasonable costs, covers also such costs as had accrued to the defendant before the suit was discontinued, though before the return day, as costs for summoning witnesses or in taking depositions. Woods v. Darling, 45 Atl. 750, 751, 71 Vt. 348.

REASONABLE CREATURE.

Under the common-law rule that murder is taking away the life of a reasonable creature under the king's peace with malice aforethought, express or implied, the phrase "reasonable creature" means a human being, and includes a lunatic, an idiot, or even a child unborn, or a slave. State v. Jones (Miss.) Walk. 83, 85.

REASONABLE DANGER.

"Reasonable danger" is defined, as the force of the term imports, as a danger to be judged of by an exercise of reason and judgment, exercised on acts which require construction to render their meaning apparent. Allen v. State, 6 S. W. 187, 189, 24 Tex. App. 216.

REASONABLE DILIGENCE.

The phrase "reasonable diligence" is held to be incapable of exact definition and to have only a relative signification. Paul Hopkins & Son v. Seattle Scandinavian Fish Co., 73 Pac. 495, 496, 32 Wash. 513.

Reasonable diligence means such diligence as an ordinarily prudent and diligent person would exercise under similar circumstances. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Gist, 73 S. W. 857, 858, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 662.

Reasonable diligence is that diligence which would be deemed reasonable by reasonable and prudent men under the same circumstances. Bacon v. Casco Bay Steamboat Co., 37 Atl. 328, 329, 90 Me. 46.

"By reasonable diligence is meant merely reasonable attention to business, and a person who settles a store account and waits more than five years to examine the same cannot have the same reopened on an alleged discovery of mistakes of addition of credits therein," not having exercised reasonable diligence. Bodkin v. Rollyson, 37 S. E. 617, 48 W. Va. 453.

A person in the act of purchasing a piece of property is required to exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain the character of the title thereof. What is meant by reasonable diligence is, not the diligence or skill that would be employed by a practiced conveyancer or an acute or skillful attorney, but the diligence exercised by ordinary men generally. If, after he has found that there appears in the case presented to him that which would lead a reasonable man to the conclusion that the conveyance received by him would give a good title, and he acts in good faith upon that, he exercises reasonable diligence. Latta v. Clifford (U. S.) 47 Fed. 614, 620.

By the words "reasonable diligence," as used in Act April 22, 1856 (P. L. 532), limiting to five years the time within which an action may be brought to enforce any implied or resulting trust as to realty, "provided that as to any one affected with a trust by reason of his fraud the said limitation shall begin to run only from the discovery thereof, or when by reasonable diligence the party defrauded might have discovered the same," is meant where there is some reason to awaken inquiry and direct diligence in a channel in which it would be successful. Maul v. Rider, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 167, 171.

Reasonable diligence, in cases of absent debtors, requires that the plaintiff shall at least take some steps from time to time to ascertain whether his debtors can be reached by suit or not. Dukes v. Collins (Del.) 30 Atl. 639, 7 Houst. 3.

Reasonable diligence, within the meaning of the rule that presentment and notice of dishonor of negotiable paper must be made with reasonable diligence, means that the diligence required must be measured by the general convenience of the commercial world and the practicability of accomplishing the end required by ordinary skill, caution, and effort. A bill of exchange deposited in a post office within due time to reach the place of payment before it fell due, but taken to the wrong place by mistake of the postmaster, and reaching the place where payable on the day after it became due, was held to have been presented with sufficient diligence. Windham Bank v. Norton Converse & Co., 22 Conn. 213, 221, 56 Am. Dec. 397.

As the term is used in speaking of the duty of a commission merchant to exercise "reasonable diligence" in the care of property which is in his possession, it means "such diligence as an ordinarily prudent and diligent man would exercise under the circumstances with reference to his own property, taking into consideration the usage of trade, the state of the market, and the situation of the property." Rice v. Brook (U. S.) 20 Fed. 611, 614.

REASONABLE DOUBT.

"A reasonable doubt is an honest misgiving generated by the insufficiency of the proof, which reason sanctions as a substantial doubt." United States v. Means (U. S.) 42 Fed. 599, 607; United States v. Graves (U. S.) 53 Fed. 636, 659.

"A reasonable doubt is the doubt which makes you hesitate as to the correctness of the conclusion which you reach. If under your oaths and upon your consciences, after you have fully investigated the evidence and compared it in all its parts, you say to yourselves, 'I doubt if he is guilty,' then it is a reasonable doubt. It is a doubt which settles in your judgment and finds a resting-place there." Brown v. State, 42 Atl. 811, 828, 62 N. J. Law, 666.

An instruction in a criminal case that jurors have sometimes said, after the acquittal of the prisoner, that they had no doubt of his guilt, but did not think there was sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction, but that this is wrong, for if a juror goes into the trial with his mind unprejudiced and knowing nothing of the facts, and becomes satisfied without doubt from the testimony offered that the prisoner is guilty, then there can be no reasonable doubt in his mind, is not prejudicial to the accused. State v. James, 37 Conn. 355, 360, 361.

Every person charged with an offense is to be considered innocent, unless his guilt is proved so clearly that the jury can conscientiously see that no reasonable doubt remains in their minds as to his guilt. The term "reasonable doubt" does not signify a mere skeptical condition of the mind. It does not require that the proof should be so clear that no possibility of error can exist, for if that were the case no criminal prosecution would prevail. It means simply that it must be so conclusive and complete that all reasonable doubts of the fact are removed from the mind. Tompkins v. Butterfield (U. S.) 25 Fed. 558, 558.

If, after an impartial comparison and consideration of all the evidence, the jury can candidly say that they are not satisfied of defendant's guilt, then they have a reasonable doubt. United States v. Meagher (U. S.) 37 Fed. 875, 881; United States v. Lewis (U. S.) 111 Fed. 630, 636.

What the law refers to as a reasonable doubt is such a doubt as would exist if the jury, after a careful review of all the evidence, rejecting that which they considered unreliable, and retaining that which they considered reliable, and weighing all the facts and circumstances, find that its judgment is not convinced of the guilt of the prisoner. State v. Zdanowicz, 55 Atl. 743, 746, 69 N. J. Law, 619.

Reasonable doubt is such a doubt as honest, conscientious, painstaking men may entertain upon a state of facts presented to them. People v. Stott, 4 N. Y. Cr. R. 306, 816.

By reasonable doubt is ordinarily meant such a one as would govern or control in business transactions or the usual pursuits of life. State v. Millain, 3 Nev. 409, 451.

Absolute certainty.

By "reasonable doubt" is not meant certainty beyond all doubt whatever, but that defendant should be acquitted if there is some substantial doubt arising from the evidence, or the want of it, which is not a mere possibility of innocence. State v. Turner, 19 S. W. 645, 647, 110 Mo. 196; United States v. Youtsey (U. S.) 91 Fed. 864, 868; State v. Fisher (Del.) 41 Atl. 208, 213, 1 Pennewill, 303; State v. Miller (Del.) 32 Atl. 137, 141, 9 Houst. 564.

Absolute, mathematical, or metaphysical certainty is not essential, and, besides, in judicial investigation it is wholly unattainable. Moral certainty is all that can be required. The truth should be such as to control and decide the conduct of men in the highest and most important affairs of life, and not a mere vague conjecture, a fancy, a trivial supposition, a bare possibility of innocence. To acquit upon such doubts is a virtual violation of the juror's oath, and an offense of great magnitude against the interests of society, tending directly to the disregard of the obligation of a judicial oath, the hindrance and disparagement of justice, and the encouragement of malefactors. Giles v. State, 6 Ga. 276, 285 (citing 1 Starkie, Ev. 514).

Captious or imaginary doubt.

"Reasonable doubt is not a mere imaginary, captious, or possible doubt, but a fair doubt, based on reason and common sense, and growing out of the testimony in the case." State v. McCune, 51 Pac. 818, 819, 16 Utah, 170; United States v. Youtsey (U. S.) 91 Fed. 864, 868; United States v. Graves (U. S.) 53 Fed. 636, 659; State v. Maxwell, 42 Iowa, 208, 210; State v. Williamson, 62 Pac. 1022, 1024, 22 Utah, 248; People v. Swartz, 76 N. W. 491, 494, 118 Mich. 292; Maxey v. State, 52 S. W. 2, 3, 66 Ark. 523.

A doubt which demands an acquittal must be a reasonable doubt. A possible or speculative doubt is not sufficient. It is only a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt which entitles him to an acquittal, not a speculative or imaginary doubt. State v. May, 72 S. W. 918, 924, 172 Mo. 630 (citing Watson v. State, 83 Ala. 60, 3 South. 441).

A reasonable doubt is not every doubt. It is not a captious doubt. It is such a condition of mind resulting from the consideration of the evidence as makes it impossible for the jury as reasonable men to arrive at a conclusion. It is not a consciousness that a conclusion arrived at may possibly be erroneous, but such a state of mind that deprives the jury of the ability to reach a conclusion that is satisfactory. State v. Roberts, 13 Pac. 896, 900, 15 Or. 187.

A reasonable doubt is not a whimsical, arbitrary, or purely speculative doubt, nor a mere conjecture or guess, but one which rests on a reasonable foundation. United States v. Wyatt (U. S.) 122 Fed. 816, 817.

A reasonable doubt, which would justify a jury in acquitting upon that ground, is a state of mental uncertainty arising out of the testimony in the case, the facts and circumstances of which, under the direction of the court, have been given the jury in evidence as bearing upon the issue. "It must not be some mere fancy of the imagination, some ideal, unsubstantial figment of the brain, conjured up outside of the evidence as a possible hypothesis of innocence, unfounded in any reasonable view of the testimony, but some substantial and tangible perception, which, arising out of the facts and circumstances before you, would cause you to hesitate and pause as to the guilt of the party charged." Commonwealth v. Childs (Pa.) 2 Pittsb. R. 391, 400.

Reasonable doubt is not a mere imaginary, whimsical, or even possible doubt of the guilt of the accused, but is such a real and substantial doubt as intelligent and impartial men may reasonably entertain upon a careful consideration of all the facts proven in the case. State v. Di Guglielmo (Del.) 55 Atl. 350, 352.

Concurrence of all jurors.

An instruction that "a reasonable doubt is such a doubt as fairly and naturally arises in the minds of the whole jury," when preceded by an instruction that, if the jury were "satisfied of the defendant's guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, they should convict, and otherwise acquit," was erroneous, as the jury was liable to be misled, and conclude that, unless the doubt arose in the minds of all the jurors, it was something less than a reasonable doubt, and should be disregarded. State v. Sloan, 7 N. W. 516, 517, 55 Iowa, 220.

An instruction that a reasonable doubt is such a doubt as fairly and naturally arises in the minds of the whole jury, after fully and carefully weighing and considering all the facts and circumstances surrounding the same, is prejudicial to defendant, as authorizing a conviction when one or more of the jurors may have entertained a reasonable doubt of his guilt. State v. Stewart, 3 N. W. 99, 101, 52 Iowa, 284.

Reasonable doubt must be such doubt as is raised by the evidence in the case, or by the want of evidence, and each juror and all the jurors must be satisfied from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty before they can agree upon a verdict of guilty; that is, if a juror has in his mind a reasonable doubt, it would be the duty of such juror not to agree to a verdict of guilty. This, however, does not mean that, if some of the jurors are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty, such jurors so satisfied must agree to a verdict of acquittal.—State v. Nicholson, 32 S. E. 813, 815, 124 N. C. 820.

As arising from any one defense.

Where the jury has a reasonable doubt as to the truth of any one of his defenses, the defendant is entitled to an acquittal (Code Civ. Proc. § 389), for in such case there would be a reasonable doubt whether his guilt was satisfactorily shown. People v. Downs, 8 N. Y. Supp. 521, 524, 56 Hun, 5.

As doubt arising from evidence.

A reasonable doubt must be such as fairly and naturally arises in the mind after comparing the whole evidence and deliberately considering the whole case. State v. Hennessy, 7 N. W. 641, 642, 55 Iowa, 300; State v. Lynn (Del.) 51 Atl. 878, 884, 3 Pennw. 316; United States v. Youtsey (U. S.) 91 Fed. 864, 868; Welsh v. State, 11 South. 450, 96 Ala. 92; United States v. Niemeyer (U. S.) 94 Fed. 147, 149; United States v. Jones (U. S.) 31 Fed. 718, 724, 725; Hoffman v. State, 73 N. W. 51, 52, 97 Wis. 571; Langford v. State, 49 N. W. 766, 32 Neb. 782; Lovett v. State, 11 South. 550, 554, 30 Fla. 142, 17 L. R. A. 705; State v. David, 33 S. W.

28, 29, 131 Mo. 380; State v. Senn, 11 S. E. 292, 295, 32 S. C. 392; People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177, 184, 63 N. W. 69.

A reasonable doubt must be a doubt arising out of the evidence, and not a fanciful conjecture or a strained inference. United States v. Politzer (U. S.) 59 Fed. 273, 279.

A reasonable doubt must be a doubt arising from the evidence in the case, and not derivable from or dependent upon any extraneous fact or circumstance. State v. Kruger, 61 Pac. 463, 464, 7 Idaho, 178.

A reasonable doubt is a strong doubt based on the testimony, and not on some imaginary matter outside. State v. Summer, 32 S. E. 771, 55 S. C. 32, 74 Am. St. Rep. 707.

A reasonable doubt is a doubt which arises from the evidence and its character, or from the absence of satisfactory evidence in the case, and is such a doubt as a reasonable man might entertain after a fair review and consideration of the evidence. People v. Barberi, 47 N. Y. Supp. 168, 174.

"The law presumes that a defendant in a criminal case is innocent of the offense charged, and it is necessary to conviction that the state overcome such presumption and prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and if the jury have a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt they must acquit. But a doubt, in order to authorize an acquittal, must be a substantial one arising from the insufficiency of the evidence, and not from the mere possibility of innocence. State v. Talmage, 17 S. W. 990, 991, 107 Mo. 543.

Reasonable doubt means that the doubt should arise out of the case, not outside of it, not some outside suggestion or reflection of a juror, that a juror might create in his mind, but it means a doubt that ought to arise from an examination of the case itself, seeking to determine the truth, either from the evidence, statement of the defendant, the conflict in the evidence, or some deficiency or lack of testimony. Lewis v. State, 15 S. E. 697, 699, 90 Ga. 95; Harris v. State, 58 N. E. 75, 77, 155 Ind. 265.

An instruction that by the words "reasonable doubt" was meant an actual substantial doubt of guilt arising from the evidence or want of evidence in the case was not erroneous, on the theory that it was impossible to tell whether the doubt of guilt must arise from the evidence on the part of the state or want of evidence on the part of defendant. Ferguson v. State, 72 N. W. 590, 591, 52 Neb. 432, 66 Am. St. Rep. 512.

The jury have no right to go outside of the evidence to search for or hunt up doubts (in order to acquit the defendant) not arising ing from the evidence or want of evidence. Earl v. People, 73 Ill. 329.

"It is error to limit a reasonable doubt to something which is suggested by, or arises from, or springs out of, the evidence adduced, as this gives too narrow a definition of a reasonable doubt. Such a doubt may arise from a want of evidence as to some fact having a natural connection with the cause. It has reference to that uncertain condition of mind which may remain after considering what has not been proved, as well as what has." Knight v. State, 20 South. 860, 74 Miss. 140 (quoting note to Burt v. State, 48 Am. St. Rep. 570).

A reasonable doubt is one that exists in the mind after a full and careful examination and comparison of all the evidence, and one that is consistent with the facts that are fully proved to the satisfaction of the jury. The doubt must not be an unreasonable one, nor a mere supposition inconsistent with the evidence which the jury credit and believe. State v. Conally, 8 Or. 69, 73.

Reasonable doubt is a doubt that grows out of the evidence, if it exists at all. It cannot originate anywhere else. It is not an imaginary doubt, not a speculative doubt, not a doubt based on fancy. People v. Rich (Mich.) 94 N. W. 375, 377.

"A reasonable doubt is one that must grow out of the evidence alone; one that keeps your mind from reaching a clear conclusion of the guilt of the accused after a careful and conscientious consideration of the case, interpreting the facts in the light of the rules ordinarily governing human actions under like circumstances." State v. Brown (Del.) 53 Atl. 354, 355.

A reasonable doubt is not a remote and far-fetched or fanciful doubt. It must be suggested by the evidence in the case, and of such strength as would influence a reasonable man in the conduct of his own affairs. United States v. Carr (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 306, 308.

A reasonable doubt is one that arises reasonably from the evidence. State v. Harris, 97 Iowa, 407, 409, 66 N. W. 728.

An instruction that a reasonable doubt must be one suggested by the proof is too narrow, as implying that the doubt must be such a one as is created by the proof. Densmore v. State, 67 Ind. 306, 307, 33 Am. Rep. 96.

A doubt, to justify an acquittal, must be reasonable, and it must arise from a candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence. If, after considering all the evidence in this case, you can say that you have an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge, then you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, and should convict. State v. Gile, 8 Wash. 12, 22, 35 Pac. 417, 421.

A reasonable doubt, such as will entitle an accused on trial for crime to an acquittal, need not necessarily arise out of the testimony, but it may be the result of a want of testimony sufficient to satisfy the mind. Hence an instruction that, if the jury have a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt he is entitled to an acquittal, but it must be a reasonable doubt arising from and growing out of the evidence, and not an unreasonable doubt not growing out of the evidence, is erroneous. Massey v. State, 1 Tex. App. 563, 570.

Where there is a plain conflict of testimony, and one side or the other must be believed without qualification, there is no room for a reasonable doubt, and the error in defining it to the jury is immaterial. People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117, 124.

As not including every doubt.

Not every doubt which may arise is of necessity a reasonable doubt, but, in order to be a reasonable doubt, it must amount to a real doubt of the guilt of defendant. Williams v. United States (Ind. T.) 69 S. W. 871, 874.

A mere doubt, however honestly entertained, is not enough on which to base an acquittal, nor is a doubt for which a reason may be given necessarily a reasonable doubt, although a reasonable doubt may be a doubt for which a reason can be assigned. Roberts v. State, 25 South. 238, 240, 122 Ala. 47.

"A reasonable doubt is not every possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possible doubt. It is that state of a case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say and feel that they have an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. * * *

A reasonable doubt does not consist of possible or conjectural doubts," etc. Carleton v. State, 61 N. W. 699, 714, 43 Neb. 373.

As excluding every hypothesis but guilt.

Evidence sufficient to convince beyond a reasonable doubt must exclude every other hypothesis but that of defendant's guilt. Pullen v. State, 12 S. W. 502, 508, 28 Tex. App. 114; Cox v. State, 12 S. W. 493, 494, 28 Tex. App. 92; Stout v. State, 90 Ind. 1, 12; State v. Wilcox, 44 S. E. 625, 631, 132 N. C. 1120; Carlton v. People, 37 N. E. 244, 247, 150 Ill. 181, 41 Am. St. Rep. 340; Commonwealth v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1, 23.

An instruction that, in applying the rule as to reasonable doubt, the jury would be required to acquit if all the facts and circumstances proven can be reasonably reconciled with any other theory than that the defendant is guilty, is held to be an erroneous definition of "reasonable doubt"; the court observing that this attempted explanation of the term "reasonable doubt" would eliminate it from the Criminal Code, and leave juries to find verdicts in criminal cases upon the mere preponderance of the evidence. The doctrine expressed in this explanation is, says the court, exactly that which is applicable in a civil action, in which, if the facts proven can be reasonably reconciled with the theory that the defendant owes what he is sued for, as that he does not, the defendant is entitled to a verdict. State v. Shaeffer, 1 S. W. 293, 296, 89 Mo. 271.

A charge that the prisoner's guilt must be proved to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt, and that, if the testimony could be reconciled with any rational theory other than the guilt of the accused, the jury should acquit, held all that defendant was entitled to. Hall v. People, 39 Mich. 717, 719.

As incapable of explanation.

The term "reasonable doubt" is so plain that an attempt to explain it would lead to confusion. Endowment Rank K. P. v. Steele, 69 S. W. 336, 337, 108 Tenn. 624; State v. Wilcox, 44 S. E. 625, 631, 132 N. C. 1120.

It is impossible to frame a satisfactory definition of the expression "reasonable doubt." Kane v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 39 N. J. Law (10 Vroom) 697, 706, 23 Am. Rep. 239.

In most cases it is better to leave the phrase "reasonable doubt" undefined, save as the words carry their own definition. People v. Cox, 33 N. W. 235, 240, 70 Mich. 247.

The phrase "reasonable doubt," while well understood, is difficult to define; but the idea may, no doubt, be sufficiently expressed in other language conveying the same meaning. Lawless v. State, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 173, 180.

As has been often said by this court, the term "reasonable doubt" best defines itself. All attempts at definition are likely to prove confusing and dangerous. State v. Morrison, 72 Pac. 554, 559, 67 Kan. 144 (citing State v. Wilson, 71 Pac. 849, 66 Kan. 472; State v. Davis, 48 Kan. 1, 28 Pac. 1092).

The idea intended to be expressed by the words "reasonable doubt" can scarcely be expressed so clearly or truly by any other words, and generally attempted definitions by courts or others are simply misleading, and not proper explanations of their meaning at all. State v. Davis, 28 Pac. 1092, 1096, 48 Kan. 1.

There is no exact mathematical test by which we may certainly know whether a doubt entertained in any given case is reasonable or otherwise. What would be reasonable to one person might be far otherwise to another. Therefore no certain line, as upon a plan, can be drawn, that shall be recognized by every one as the dividing line between the mere skeptical doubt and that which has the sanction of reason. Hence, whatever explanations may be given to the phrase, its meaning practically must depend very largely upon the character of the mind of the person acting. Lexicographers tell us that reasonable is that which is "agreeable or conformable to reason." The doubt, therefore, which conforms to the reason of the person examining, is to him a reasonable doubt. If it does not so conform to him, it is unreasonable, and will not be entertained. When the jurors are told that, in order to convict, the proof must remove every reasonable doubt of guilt from their minds, whatever the form of words used, if any heed is given to the instruction the result must be that each individual juror will understand it, and act according to the dictates of his own reason; and if, tried by that test, the doubt is reasonable, conviction must fail, otherwise it would follow. State v. Reed, 62 Me. 129, 143.

It is so nearly impossible to define precisely in a few words what a reasonable doubt is, that courts instructing jurors in criminal cases should make no such attempt, but merely follow the language of the Code—that, where there is a reasonable doubt of the defendant being proven guilty, he is entitled to an acquittal. Mickey v. Commonwealth, 72 Ky. (9 Bush) 593, 596.

The terms of the expression "reasonable doubt" import the most exact idea of its meaning, and are incapable of simplification, and there is no equivalent phrase more easily understood. Lipscomb v. State, 23 South. 210, 212, 75 Miss. 559.

All the definitions are little more than metaphysical paraphrases of an expression invented by the common-law judges for the very reason that it was capable of being understood and applied by plain men in the jury box. Barney v. State, 68 N. W. 636, 639, 49 Neb. 515 (citing Thomp. Trials, § 2469).

After a circuit judge had given the jury the benefit of what others had said in their efforts to accurately define the meaning of "reasonable doubt," it was proper for him to say that the phrase was self-explanatory. State v. Aughtry, 26 S. E. 619, 623, 49 S. C. 285.

"It would seem * * * that the phrase 'reasonable doubt' explains itself. Certainly the meaning is obvious, and will be readily appreciated by the average juror without further explanation. Mr. Bishop, in his new Criminal Procedure, says there are no words plainer than 'reasonable doubt.'" Battle v. State (Ga.) 29 S. E. 491, 492, 108 Ga. 53.

It is difficult to define a reasonable doubt in any plainer terms than the words themselves import. To attempt to define a reasonable doubt is like attempting to define a definition, and the better practice is not to attempt it. Chavez v. Territory (N. M.) 30 Pac. 903, 905, 6 N. M. 455.

It is difficult to explain simple terms like "reasonable doubt" so as to make them plainer. Every attempt to explain them renders an explanation of the explanation necessary. State v. Robinson, 23 S. W. 1066, 1069, 117 Mo. 649.

In answer to a contention that failure to define "reasonable doubt" in a criminal case was error, the court says: "We do not think it is customary for courts to undertake such a task. Miles v. United States, 103 U. S. 304, 26 L. Ed. 481; Costley v. Commonwealth, 118 Mass. 1; Commonwealth v. Tuttle, 66 Mass (12 Cush.) 502; Commonwealth v. Cobb, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 57. The reason why courts are generally disinclined to enter into an explanation of the term is that, while the expression is itself well calculated to convey to the jurors a correct idea of what is expected of them, any effort at further elucidation tends to misleading refinements. To attempt to give a specific meaning to the word 'reasonable' would be 'trying to count what is not number, and to measure what is not space.'" State v. Smith, 81 Atl. 206, 207, 65 Conn. 263.

It is held that an instruction stating that it is very difficult to explain what is a reasonable doubt more fully than the words imply, but that it means fully satisfied, or satisfied to a moral certainty, is not error. State v. Whitson, 16 S. E. 332, 334, 111 N. C. 695.

The court's statement to a jury, who returned to ask additional instruction as to the meaning of the term "reasonable doubt," to the effect that the words "reasonable doubt" were words of common use, which the jury could understand as well as the court could, and that he had a reasonable doubt as to whether he could instruct them as to their meaning, was held not error, in Lenert v. State (Tex.) 63 S. W. 563, 565.

In approving an instruction in a homicide case, that, to raise a reasonable doubt, the evidence must be such as to produce in the minds of prudent men such certainty that they would act without hesitation in their own most important affairs, Brewer, J., said: "It has been often said by courts of the highest standing that perhaps no definition or explanation can make any clearer what is meant by the phrase 'reasonable doubt' than that which is imparted by the words themselves." State v. Kearley, 26 Kan. 77, 87.

When the jury, in the performance of their duties, applying the correct principles of the law given them by the court, as conscientious men, naturally and reasonably from the evidence, either of a positive or circumstantial character, reach the conclusion of guilt, the principle that the conviction must be beyond reasonable doubt has been satisfied. If the jury cannot reach such conclusion naturally and reasonably, then innocence must be declared, for then reasonable doubt of guilt exists; and to all intelligent jurors the term "reasonable doubt" best defines itself. State v. Collins, 43 Atl. 896, 898, 63 N. J. Law, 316.

Reasonable doubt is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of the evidence, leaves the minds of the jury in that condition that they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. "I think it very questionable," says the court, "whether the trial court, in giving instructions to the jury, should undertake to define 'reasonable doubt.'" The term reasonably imports its own signification, and an attempt to explain its meaning is liable to be misleading." State v. Ching Ling, 18 Pac. 844, 848, 16 Or. 419.

If a jury cannot understand their duty when told that they must not convict when they have a reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt, or of any fact essential to prove it, they can very seldom get any help from such subtleties as require a trained mind to distinguish. Jurors are presumed to have common sense and to understand good English, but they are not presumed to have professional or any high degree of technical or linguistic training. Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173, 194.

A failure to define "reasonable doubt" is not error, where a defendant did not ask further instructions. People v. Waller, 38 N. W. 261, 262, 70 Mich. 237.

May be raised by evidence of good character.

It is held that evidence of good character only may operate to raise a reasonable doubt in criminal prosecution. Commonwealth v. Cleary, 19 Atl. 1017, 1018, 135 Pa. 64, 8 L. R. A. 301.

Evidence of good character may generate a doubt where without such proof the jury would be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, but proof of good character, independent of the other evidence in the case, is not sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, but is to be taken into consideration with all the evidence, and weighed with it; and if, upon the whole evidence, the jury entertain no reasonable doubt of guilt, they must convict. Shepperd v. State, 10 South. 663, 666, 94 Ala. 102.

As one sufficient to cause hesitation in important affairs.

Evidence is sufficient to remove a "reasonable doubt" when it convinces the judgment of an ordinarily prudent man of the truth of a proposition with such force that he would voluntarily act upon that conviction, without hesitation, in his own most important affairs. Stout v. State, 90 Ind. 1, 12; Jarrell v. State, 58 Ind. 293, 296; Arnold v. State, 23 Ind. 170; Toops v. State, 92 Ind. 13, 16; Harris v. State, 58 N. E. 75, 77, 155 Ind. 265; *Williams v. E. 51, 92 Ga. 601.

A reasonable doubt is one based on reason. It is not mere possible doubt, but is such a doubt as would govern or control a person in the more weighty affairs of life. If the minds of the jurors, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, are in such a condition that they can say they feel an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge, there is not a reasonable doubt. Doubt, to be reasonable, must be actual and substantial, not mere possibility or speculation. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 4648.

A reasonable doubt is a doubt based on reason, and which is reasonable in view of all the evidence, and if, after an impartial comparison and consideration, the jury can say candidly that they are not satisfied of defendant's guilt, they have a reasonable doubt; but if, after such comparison and consideration of the evidence, the jury can truthfully say that they have an abiding conviction of defendant's guilt, such as they would be willing to act upon in more weighty and important matters relating to their own affairs, they have no reasonable doubt. United States v. Lewis (U. S.) 111 Fed. 630, 636.

A doubt, to justify an acquittal, must be reasonable, etc., and it must arise from a candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence in the case; and unless it is such that, were the same kind of doubt interposed in the graver transactions of life, it would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause, it is insufficient to authorize a verdict of not guilty. If, after considering all the evidence, you can say that you have an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge, you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt. In May v. People, 60 Ill. 119, a "reasonable doubt" was defined as follows: "A reasonable doubt, beyond which the jury should be satisfied, in a criminal case, before finding the accused guilty, is one arising from a candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence, and such as in the graver transactions of life would cause a reasonable man to hesitate and pause." Willis v. State, 43 Neb. 102, 111, 61 N. W. 254, 256.

"A reasonable doubt is one arising from a candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence, and such as, in the graver transactions of life, would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause." Dunn v. People, 109 Ill. 635, 645 (citing May v. People, 60 Ill. 119; Miller v. People, 39 Ill. 457; Connaghan v. People, 88 Ill. 460).

The proof is deemed to be beyond a reasonable doubt when the evidence is sufficient to impress the judgment and understanding of ordinarily prudent men with a conviction on which they would act in their most important concerns or affairs of life. While there are some decisions which probably do not sustain this definition of "reasonable doubt," there are others which do, and we are satisfied with and approve it. It is not visionary, but has the qualities of being reasonable, practical, and capable of being understood by ordinary minds. Polin v. State, 16 N. W. 898, 900, 14 Neb. 540.

In defining "reasonable doubt," the court quotes with approval Starkie's statement that a juror ought not to condemn unless the evidence exclude from his mind all reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, or, in other words, unless he be so convinced by the evidence that he would venture to act upon that conviction in matters of the highest concern and importance to his own interest. There must be this certainty of conviction before a reasonable doubt can be excluded, and, says the court, we may add to Mr. Starkie's definition this qualification: that it must be such a conviction of the truth of the proposition that a prudent man would feel safe to act upon it under circumstances where there was no compulsion resting upon him to act at all. In other words, a prudent man compelled to do one of two things affecting matters of the utmost moment to him might, and doubtless would, do that thing which the mere preponderance of the evidence would satisfy him was for the best, and yet such a conviction would fall short of that required to satisfy the mind of a juror in a criminal case. So it is held that an instruction stating that a moral certainty sufficient to justify conviction in a criminal case was reached when the jury were convinced to such an extent as would induce one to act in regard to his own important affairs, was too narrow; but that there must be such a certainty as would justify action not only in matters of importance, but in those of the highest import; nothing short of this constituting that moral certainty which alone can authorize a verdict of guilty. Bradley v. State, 31 Ind. 492, 506.

An instruction defining "reasonable doubt" as such a doubt as would make a man waver or hesitate in arriving at a conclusion in considering a matter of like importance to himself as the case on trial is to defendant is not objectionable as requiring less positive proof of facts in cases of minor importance than in those of a graver nature. State v. Rosener, 35 Pac. 357, 358, 8 Wash. 42.

It is held that a definition of "reasonable doubt" as "such a doubt as would influence or control your actions in any of the important transactions of life" is an incorrect definition of reasonable doubt. A doubt that would control our actions in the important transactions of life would, says the court, be one that was so strong as not to be overcome by contrary arguments, and hence would be practically an unconquerable one. Commonwealth v. Miller, 21 Atl. 138, 140, 139 Pa. 77, 23 Am. St. Rep. 170.

A doubt which would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate before accepting a given proposition as not true is not necessarily a reasonable doubt. A man, of whatever prudence and reason, might pause and hesitate and consider because of a doubt as to the propriety or expediency of proposed conduct, though such doubt would not be one for the existence of which a good reason could be given, and the hesitation to act might well be only for the purpose of considering whether the doubt was substantial and reasonable, or chimerical and shadowy; and, the consideration resulting in a conclusion that the intruding was without foundation, he may then proceed to act without any reasonable doubt of the wisdom of his course. Jurors are assumed to be careful and prudent men. In considering a case submitted to them, many doubts of guilt may arise which will cause them to pause and hesitate before reaching a verdict. But if, after stopping to think over the matter, they conclude that the doubt is unsubstantial and unsupported by any sufficient reason, they cannot be said to have entertained a reasonable doubt of guilt. Allen v. State, 20 South. 490, 494, 111 Ala. 80.

In a murder trial, an instruction "that by 'reasonable doubt' is ordinarily meant such a one as would govern or control you in your business transactions or usual pursuits of life," was erroneous. The jurors are not, by this instruction, so satisfied as to convince them that they would venture to act on such conviction in matters of the highest concern and importance to their own interests. Ordinarily men act in the usual business pursuits of life without considering that their acts involve any question of the life or liberty of an individual. Men frequently act in their business transactions or usual pursuits of life without any firm or settled conviction that the conclusion upon which they act is correct. In these transactions, men usually obtain such information as is within their reach, and, after deliberating upon the same, they form a conclusion upon which they are willing to act without being fully convinced of its correctness; but if it was a matter of the highest concern and importance to their own interests they would not, or at least should not, venture to act, unless convinced to a moral certainty of the truth of the proposition on which they are called upon to act. The preponderance or weight of testimony on which men ordinarily will be willing to act in their business transactions, or in the usual pursuits of life, is not the rule that should govern jurors in deciding questions that involve the life or liberty of an individual. In such cases, the law requires a much greater degree of certainty, and the guilt of the accused must be fully proved. State v. Rover, 11 Nev. 343, 344.

"The rule of law touching reasonable doubt is a practical rule for the guidance of practical men when engaged in the solemn duty of assisting in the administration of justice. It is not, therefore, a rule about which there is anything whimsical or chimerical. It is not a mere possibility of error or mistake that constitutes such reasonable doubt. Despite every precaution that may be taken to prevent it, there may be in all matters pertaining to human affairs a mere possibility of error. If, then, you are so convinced by the evidence, of whatever class it may be, and considered all the facts and circumstances in the evidence as a whole, of the guilt of the defendant, that, as prudent men, you would feel safe to act upon such conviction in matter of the highest concern and importance to your own dearest and most important interests, under circumstances where there was no compulsion or coercion upon you to act at all, then you will have attained such degree of certainty as excludes reasonable doubt and authorizes conviction." Garfield v. State, 74 Ind. 60, 62.

As not arising from ingenuity of counsel or jury.

A doubt suggested by the ingenuity of counsel, or that of the jury, not legitimately warranted by the evidence, or the want of it, or one born of a merciful inclination to permit defendant to escape the penalty of the law, is not a reasonable doubt. Coffin v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 394, 402, 156 U. S. 432, 39 L. Ed. 481; United States v. Allis (U. S.) 73 Fed. 165, 167; United States v. Graves (U. S.) 53 Fed. 636, 659; United States v. Carpenter (U. S.) 41 Fed. 830, 841.

"A doubt suggested by the ingenuity of counsel, or by the ingenuity of the jury, not legitimately warranted by the testimony, or one born of a merciful inclination or disposition to permit the defendant to escape the penalty of the law, or one prompted by sympathy for him, or those connected with him, is not a reasonable doubt." United States v. Harper (U. S.) 33 Fed. 471, 483.

As requiring moral certainty.

Reasonable doubt is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge—a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 295, 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Commonwealth v. Kendall, 162 Mass. 221, 222, 38 N. E. 504; People v. Wreden, 59 Cal. 392, 395; *State v. Tex. App. 67, 68; Collins v. State, 64 N. W. 432, 436, 46 Neb. 37; State v. Nelson, 11 Nev. 334, 340; People v. Schryver (N. Y.) 1 Cow. Cr. R. 188, 189, 194; State v. Van Winkle, 6 Nev. 340, 341; State v. Harrison, 23 Mont. 79, 81, 57 Pac. 647.

In People v. Kernaghan, 72 Cal. 609, 610, 14 Pac. 566, it is said: "The definition, or, rather, description, of 'reasonable doubt' given by Chief Justice Shaw in the Webster Case, has been adopted by this court, and by nearly all American courts, as a statement of that mental condition sufficiently accurate. Therefore, where a court had given the language used by Chief Justice Shaw, and confined itself to such language, we would be slow to reverse the case, though other instructions upon the subject, not objectionable, have been asked by defendant and refused." People v. Paulsell, 46 Pac. 734, 115 Cal. 6.

In criminal cases the practice prevails, in instructing juries, for the courts to attempt to define "reasonable doubt," and the familiar definition of Chief Justice Shaw in the celebrated Webster Case is generally adopted. This definition, although it has been criticised as not being strictly accurate, is perhaps more generally recognized as a correct one than any other to be found in the books; and trial courts should adopt it, rather than struggle for originality. State v. Morey, 36 Pac. 573, 577, 25 Or. 241.

Proof "beyond a reasonable doubt" is synonymous with "moral certainty." Woodruff v. State, 12 South. 653, 658, 31 Fla. 320; Jones v. State, 14 South. 772, 773, 100 Ala. 88; Taylor v. Pegram, 37 N. E. 837, 839, 151 Ill. 106. What is meant by the term "reasonable doubt" is "fully satisfied," or "satisfied to a moral certainty." State v. Wilcox, 44 S. E. 625, 631, 132 N. C. 1120 (citing State v. Matthews, 66 N. C. 106); State v. Hamilton, 13 Nev. 386, 394.

To be convinced from the facts in evidence of the accused's guilt to a reasonable and moral certainty is to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of such fact of guilt. State v. Abrams, 8 Pac. 327, 332, 11 Or. 169; State v. Long, 43 Atl. 493, 495, 72 Conn. 39; Territory v. Owings, 8 Mont. 137, 138; United States v. Allis (U. S.) 73 Fed. 165, 167; Miles v. United States, 103 U. S. 304, 309, 26 L. Ed. 481; Carr v. State, 37 N. W. 630, 631, 23 Neb. 749; State v. Miller (Del.) 32 Atl. 137, 141, 9 Houst. 564; People v. Swartz, 76 N. W. 491, 494, 118 Mich. 292; State v. Williamson, 62 Pac. 1022, 1024, 22 Utah, 248, 83 Am. St. Rep. 780; Dick v. State, 6 South. 395, 87 Ala. 61; State v. Staley, 14 Minn. 105, 123 (Gil. 75, 91).

An instruction that a reasonable doubt is that state of the case which, after hearing all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge, was not error. People v. Sensabaugh, 2 Utah, 473, 478.

A reasonable doubt, to authorize an acquittal, must be a substantial doubt, arising from the full and fair consideration of all the facts and circumstances in proof, and not a mere possibility of innocence. A juror is understood to entertain a reasonable doubt when he does not have an abiding conviction of truth of the charge to a moral certainty. State v. Milligan, 70 S. W. 473, 475, 170 Mo. 215.

Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is proof to a moral certainty, as distinguished from absolute certainty. The two phrases "proof beyond a reasonable doubt" and "proof to a moral certainty" are synonymous and equivalent. Each signifies such proof as satisfies the judgment and conscience of the jury, as reasonable men, on applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other conclusion possible. Carlton v. People, 37 N. E. 244, 247, 150 Ill. 181, 41 Am. St. Rep. 346.

A reasonable doubt is such a doubt as will leave one's mind, after a careful examination of all the evidence, in such a condition that he could not say that he has an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of defendant's guilt. An instruction in the foregoing words was not prejudicial, though the court failed to charge that the accused was presumed to be innocent; the court having stated that nothing could be presumed against him. People v. Parsons, 105 Mich. 177, 184, 63 N. W. 69.

No error can be predicated on the refusal of the court to define a reasonable doubt as an impression, after a full comparison and consideration of all the evidence, that does not amount to a certainty that the charge against the accused is true, since the word "certainty" is unqualified by the terms "reasonable and moral." State v. Powers, 59 S. C. 200, 214, 37 S. E. 690.

A reasonable doubt is a doubt that arises naturally in the mind after a fair and impartial consideration of all the evidence in the case, and leaves the mind in that condition that a person does not feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. The law, in order to convict, does not require the guilt of a defendant to be established to an absolute certainty, but it does require his guilt to be established to a moral certainty, and that is a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of the truth of the charge. Maxey v. State, 52 S. W. 2, 3, 66 Ark. 523.

Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is proof to a moral certainty, as distinguished from an absolute certainty. As applied to a judicial trial for crime, the two phrases are synonymous and equivalent. Each has been used by eminent judges to explain the other, and each signifies such proof as satisfies the judgment and conscience of the jury, as reasonable men, by applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible. Baron Parke, in Reg. v. Sterne, expressed the same thought conversely thus: "Such a moral certainty as convinces the minds of a tribunal of reasonable men beyond all reasonable doubt." Commonwealth v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1, 23.

As doubt not arising from the oath.

In a trial for murder, an instruction upon the subject of "reasonable doubt" is not erroneous, on the ground that it contains the words, "You are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors if from the evidence you believe as men." Spies v. People, 12 N. E. 865, 989, 122 Ill. 1, 8 Am. St. Rep. 320.

On a criminal prosecution, it was not error to state to the jury that they were not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors if they believed as men. Bartley v. State, 73 N. W. 744, 759, 53 Neb. 310.

The expression, "You should be convinced as juror where you would be convinced as citizens, and you should doubt as jurors only as you would doubt as men," is not erroneous when it occurs in the charge of the court, immediately following an instruction that "reasonable doubt" is not one that the jury will reach out for, to relieve them from finding a verdict for guilt, but such a doubt as is left from the failure of the evidence to convince your minds of the guilt of the defendant." However, since the doubt or the verdict of guilt should always be found from the evidence alone, and since the expression, standing alone, does not convey this idea, it would be better if it had never found its way into the books. McMean v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 9 Atl. 878, 879.

As not arising from obstinacy or sympathy.

"Reasonable doubt" does not mean an obstinacy or resolution not to consider the testimony of the witnesses carefully, but is that condition of the mind in which hesitancy arises after having given the evidence a fair consideration. Commonwealth v. Mudgett, 34 Atl. 588, 593, 174 Pa. 211.

Reasonable doubt is not a doubt born of a merciful inclination to permit the defendant to escape conviction, nor prompted by sympathy with him or those connected with him. United States v. Graves (U. S.) 53 Fed.

634, 659; United States v. Carpenter (U. S.) 41 Fed. 330, 341.

It is held that a charge that a reasonable doubt is a doubt growing out of the facts of the case, and not a doubt generated by sympathy, is not error. State v. Robinson, 4 S. E. 570, 571, 27 S. C. 615; United States v. Youtsey (U. S.) 91 Fed. 864, 868.

As not a bare possibility.

"By a 'reasonable doubt' is meant a substantial doubt, based on the evidence or want of evidence in the case, and not a bare possibility of defendant's innocence." State v. Gonce, 79 Mo. 600, 602; State v. Wells, 20 S. W. 232, 233, 111 Mo. 533; State v. Clayton, 13 S. W. 819, 820, 821, 100 Mo. 516, 18 Am. St. Rep. 565; State v. Holloway, 58 S. W. 734, 735, 156 Mo. 222; State v. Fannon, 59 S. W. 75, 76, 158 Mo. 149; State v. Ashcraft, 70 S. W. 898, 900, 170 Mo. 409; State v. Taylor, 71 S. W. 1005, 1008, 171 Mo. 465; State v. Privitt, 75 S. W. 457, 459, 175 Mo. 207; State v. McMullin, 71 S. W. 221, 225, 170 Mo. 608; State v. Duncan, 142 Mo. 456, 461, 44 S. W. 263, 264; State v. Jefferson, 10 South. 199, 200, 43 La. Ann. 995; Harris v. State, 58 N. E. 75, 77, 155 Ind. 265; State v. Neel, 65 Pac. 494, 495, 23 Utah, 541; United States v. Allis (U. S.) 73 Fed. 165, 167; United States v. Kenney (U. S.) 90 Fed. 257, 262; Carr v. State, 37 N. W. 630, 631, 23 Neb. 749; Polin v. State, 16 N. W. 898, 900, 14 Neb. 540; Collins v. State, 64 N. W. 432, 436, 46 Neb. 37; Chapman v. State, 3 Tex. App. 67, 68; Earl v. People, 73 Ill. 329; May v. People, 6 Pac. 816, 823, 8 Colo. 210; Little v. State, 8 South. 82, 83, 89 Ala. 99; State v. Long, 43 Atl. 493, 495, 72 Conn. 39; Territory v. Barth (Ariz.) 15 Pac. 673, 676; State v. Rounds, 76 Me. 123, 125; State v. Van Winkle, 6 Nev. 340, 341.

"Reasonable doubt" does not mean beyond a mere doubt or possibility of innocence. If guilt is established by evidence beyond any doubt founded in reason and common sense, as applied thereto, a conviction should follow, though the jury may believe there is doubt on the question, not arising, however, to the certainty of a reasonable doubt, or though the jury yet believe in the possibility of innocence. Emery v. State, 78 N. W. 145, 152, 101 Wis. 627.

An instruction on "reasonable doubt" that "if, however, all the facts established necessarily lead the mind to the conclusion that the defendant is guilty, though there be a bare possibility that he is innocent, you should find him guilty," is not erroneous, where there are other clear instructions on the subject favorable to defendant, and all the instructions on the subject requested by defendant were also given. McIntosh v. State, 51 N. E. 354, 356, 151 Ind. 251.

Reasonable doubt must be actual and substantial doubt, and not merely possible or ideal, and the expressions "It is possible," or "it may be," or "perhaps the defendant is not guilty," constitute only a possible conjecture or imaginary doubt, and a conviction is not inhibited on the existence of such doubt, merely; and the different phrases, "beyond a reasonable doubt," "a moral certainty," and "so convincing as to lead to the conclusion that the defendant cannot be guiltless," are equivalent expressions of the same rule. McKleroy v. State, 77 Ala. 95, 97.

A reasonable doubt must be a substantial doubt. It must be a doubt of the guilt of the accused before a jury can acquit by reason of such doubt. This doubt must be a real state or condition of the jurors, in which they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. It is not a mere possible doubt. It must be an actual and substantial one, not mere possibility or speculation. State v. Nueslein, 25 Mo. 111, 124 (citing Commonwealth v. Harman, 4 Pa. [4 Barr] 270).

Preponderance of evidence distinguished.

"Preponderance" and "reasonable doubt" are not synonymous terms, so that an instruction that, if the jury believe from the preponderance of the evidence that defendant took certain cattle under the honest belief that he was the owner, they should acquit, is erroneous, as the state is bound to show guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Richardson v. Harrell, 36 S. W. 573, 576, 62 Ark. 469.

Presumption of innocence distinguished.

The "presumption of innocence" is a conclusion drawn by law in favor of the citizen, by virtue whereof, when brought to trial on a criminal charge, he must be acquitted unless proven guilty. In other words, this presumption is an instrument of proof created by law in favor of one accused, whereby his innocence is established until sufficient evidence is introduced to overcome the proof which the law has created. Reasonable doubt is, of necessity, the condition of mind produced by the proof resulting from evidence in the cause; it is the result of the proof, not the proof itself; whereas the presumption of innocence is one of the instruments of proof going to bring about the proof from which reasonable doubt arises. Thus, one is a cause; the other, an effect. Coffin v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 394, 404, 156 U. S. 432, 39 L. Ed. 481. See, also, Davis v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 353, 358, 160 U. S. 469, 40 L. Ed. 499.

The legal presumption of innocence which arises in favor of the defendant on the trial of every criminal case is to be regarded by the jury as a matter of evidence in favor of the accused, introduced by the law in his behalf, to be considered as proof by the jury, and involves more in the trial of the case than reasonable doubt, which is only the result of insufficient proof. State of North Carolina v. Gosnell (U. S.) 74 Fed. 734, 737.

As a rational doubt.

A rational doubt is equivalent, in an instruction, to reasonable doubt. Shipp v. Commonwealth, 19 S. E. 1065, 1066, 86 Va. 746; McCabe v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 8 Atl. 45, 47.

A "reasonable doubt," within the meaning of the law, is not a mere imaginary or possible doubt, but a substantial doubt, based upon reason and common sense, and induced by the facts and circumstances attending the particular case, and growing out of the testimony. State v. Harrison, 23 Mont. 79, 81, 57 Pac. 647, 648.

As a real and substantial doubt.

In a trial for murder, an instruction on the subject of reasonable doubt that, to authorize an acquittal on the ground of reasonable doubt alone, such doubt should be real, substantial, well-founded doubt, arising out of the evidence in the cause, and not a mere possibility that the defendant is insane, is held not to be a ground for reversal, although the use of the word "real" in the definition is criticised. State v. Blunt, 4 S. W. 394, 91 Mo. 503; State v. Payton, 2 S. W. 394, 396, 90 Mo. 220; United States v. Fitzgerald (U. S.) 91 Fed. 374, 376.

"A reasonable doubt, in legal contemplation, is not a mere imaginary, whimsical, or even possible doubt of the guilt of the accused, but is such a real and substantial doubt, naturally arising out of all the relevant evidence in the case, as intelligent and impartial men may reasonably entertain after a careful consideration of all such evidence." State v. Magnell (Del.) 51 Atl. 606, 607, 3 Pennewill, 307.

As doubt influencing reasonable men.

A reasonable doubt is such as reasonable and prudent men ordinarily listen to, and such as controls their consciences, so that they are unable clearly and honestly to reach a conclusion of guilt. Such a doubt, when founded on the evidence, and not tainted with sentiment, passion, or prejudice, should inure to the acquittal of the defendant. State v. Davis (Del.) 45 Atl. 394, 395, 2 Pennewill, 139.

What is meant by a "reasonable doubt" is such doubt as honest, conscientious men, acting under the solemn obligations of their oaths, in full view of all the testimony, find themselves constrained to entertain. State v. Mills (Del.) 52 Atl. 266, 267, 3 Pennewill, 508.

"Reasonable doubt" does not mean the doubt of a man of eccentric mind or a crank, or a man with oversensitive conscience. It means the doubt of ordinary men, sworn jurors, who try cases. Lewis v. State, 15 S. E. 697, 699, 90 Ga. 95.

It is error to charge that a "reasonable doubt" is such a doubt "as would induce a man of reasonable firmness and judgment to act on it in matters of importance to himself," for the judgment of reasonable men, in the ordinary affairs of life, however important, is influenced and controlled by the preponderance of evidence, while in a criminal case there must be in the minds of the jury an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge, derived from a comparison and consideration of the evidence. People v. Bemmerly, 87 Cal. 117, 121, 25 Pac. 266.

A doubt founded on reason.

A "reasonable doubt," the absence of which is essential to a conviction for a crime, means a doubt founded on reason. State v. Meyer, 58 Vt. 457, 462, 3 Atl. 195; State v. Neel, 65 Pac. 494, 495, 23 Utah, 541; United States v. Graves (U. S.) 53 Fed. 634, 659; United States v. Allis (U. S.) 73 Fed. 165, 167; United States v. Meagher (U. S.) 87 Fed. 875, 881; United States v. Lewis (U. S.) 111 Fed. 630, 636; Welsh v. State, 11 South. 450, 451, 96 Ala. 92.

It would be difficult to select words that would define their meaning better than those defining "reasonable doubt" in St. N. M. 1889, p. 27, declaring that a reasonable doubt is one based on reason. State v. Potts, 22 Pac. 754, 758, 20 Nev. 389.

As doubt for which reasons could be given.

The able law writer, Austin Abbott, in his Brief for Criminal Cases, at page 487, says: "The gist of the rule is that the law contemplates a doubt for which a good reason, arising on the evidence, can be given." State v. Serenson, 64 N. W. 130, 132, 7 S. D. 277.

An instruction defining "reasonable doubt" as "a doubt arising out of the facts and circumstances of the case, in maintaining which you can give some good reason," while not accurate, held not of sufficient consequence, in a trial for manslaughter, to be error. People v. Stubenvoll, 23 N. W. 883, 885, 62 Mich. 329.

An instruction defining a "reasonable doubt" as one that the jury are able to give a reason for is erroneous. State v. Lee, 85 N. W. 619, 620, 113 Iowa, 348; Childs v. State, 51 N. W. 837, 34 Neb. 236.

It is very doubtful whether the statement that a reasonable doubt must be one for which a reason is given is correct. Rhodes v. State, 27 N. E. 866, 868, 123 Ind. 189, 25 Am. St. Rep. 429.

"The definition of 'reasonable doubt,' setting over the requirement of a reason for doubt against capriciousness, conjecture, indulgence of speculation upon possibilities, and the invasion of the realm of imagination, has been approved in the following cases: Hodge v. State, 97 Ala. 37, 12 South. 164, 38 Am. St. Rep. 145; Vann v. State, 83 Ga. 44, 9 S. E. 945; State v. Jefferson, 10 South. 199, 200, 43 La. Ann. 995; People v. Guidici, 3 N. E. 493, 495, 100 N. Y. 503; State v. Harras (Wash.) 65 Pac. 774, 775; Wallace v. State, 26 South. 713, 724, 41 Fla. 547; Butler v. State, 78 N. W. 590, 591, 102 Wis. 364; State v. Rounds, 76 Me. 123, 125; State v. Serenson, 64 N. W. 130, 132, 7 S. D. 277. And judges of the federal courts have frequently employed equivalent phrases in charging juries in criminal cases. United States v. Butler (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 213; United States v. Johnson (U. S.) 26 Fed. 682, 685; United States v. Jackson (U. S.) 29 Fed. 503, 504; United States v. Jones (U. S.) 31 Fed. 718, 724. Similar instructions have been criticised, however, in a number of states. State v. Morey, 36 Pac. 573, 577, 35 Pac. 655, 25 Or. 241; State v. Sauer, 38 Minn. 438, 38 N. W. 355; People v. Stubenvoll, 28 N. W. 883, 885, 62 Mich. 329; Morgan v. State, 48 Ohio St. 371, 27 N. E. 710; Klyce v. State, 78 Miss. 450, 28 South. 827. And like charges have been declared to be erroneous in the following states: Siberry v. State, 133 Ind. 677, 33 N. E. 681, 684; Avery v. State, 124 Ala. 20, 27 South. 505; State v. Cohen, 78 N. W. 857, 858, 108 Iowa, 208, 75 Am. St. Rep. 213; Carr v. State, 23 Neb. 749, 37 N. W. 630." State v. Patton (Kan.) 71 Pac. 840, 841.

"A reasonable doubt is a doubt for which a reason may be given." Approved by the courts as one of the correct definitions of a reasonable doubt. Jones v. State, 25 South. 204, 206, 120 Ala. 303; Cohen v. State, 50 Ala. 108; Hodge v. State, 12 South. 164, 166, 97 Ala. 37, 38 Am. St. Rep. 145; Ellis v. State, 25 South. 1, 2, 120 Ala. 333; State v. Serenson, 64 N. W. 130, 132, 7 S. D. 277; United States v. Jones (U. S.) 31 Fed. 718, 724; United States v. Cassidy (U. S.) 67 Fed. 698, 782; United States v. Johnson (U. S.) 26 Fed. 682, 685; State v. Jefferson, 10 South. 199, 200, 43 La. Ann. 995; State v. Gilbert (U. S.) 69 Pac. 62, 63; Woodruff v. State, 12 South. 653, 657, 31 Fla. 320. By "reasonable doubt" is meant a doubt of guilt for which a reason can be given arising out of the evidence. Secor v. State, 95 N. W. 942, 947, 118 Wis. 621; People v. Rich (Mich.) 94 N. W. 375, 377.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" means a doubt for which one could give a reason is not a desirable one, since it is liable to be misunderstood as meaning a doubt for which a juror could express or state a reason in words, and a juror might feel a reasonable doubt, and yet find it difficult to state the reason for the doubt. State v. Sauer, 38 Minn. 438, 38 N. W. 355.

An instruction defining a reasonable doubt as one that the jury are able to give a reason for is erroneous, as, in effect, placing the burden on defendant to furnish reasons for acquittal, and is also erroneous as requiring jurors to give reasons for their conclusions. State v. Cohen, 78 N. W. 857, 858, 108 Iowa, 208, 75 Am. St. Rep. 213.

A reasonable doubt is a doubt for which a reason can be given, based on the evidence in the case. A doubt cannot be reasonable unless a reason therefor exists, and, if such reason exists, it can be given. Butler v. State, 78 N. W. 590, 591, 102 Wis. 364.

A charge that a reasonable doubt is a doubt growing out of the evidence, for which a reason may be given, was confusing and misleading, and hence properly refused. A charge that a reasonable doubt is such a doubt growing out of the evidence as would occur to the mind of a reasonable man was also confusing and misleading, and properly refused. Avery v. State, 27 South. 505, 124 Ala. 20.

Instructions to the effect that a reasonable doubt is a doubt for which a reason could be given, or one for which some good reason arising from the evidence may be given, or a serious, sensible doubt, "such as I could give a good reason for, or one for which some fair, just reason could be given," has been approved in Hodge v. State, 97 Ala. 37, 12 South. 164, 38 Am. St. Rep. 145; Ellis v. State, 25 South. 1, 120 Ala. 333; People v. Guidici, 100 N. Y. 503, 3 N. E. 493. The authorities pro and con have been fully considered in State v. Morey, 25 Or. 242, 35 Pac. 655, and the court declined to reverse the conviction because the trial judge, in his definition of reasonable doubt, stated that it is such a doubt as a juror can give a reason for. Wallace v. State, 26 South. 713, 723, 41 Fla. 547.

"Reasonable doubt" is said to be a term pretty well understood, but not easily defined. The term "reasonable doubt" would seem to imply a doubt for which there is a reason; but, when analyzed and considered in the connection in which it is used in a criminal case, this definition seems to be erroneous and misleading. It is possible that the term "beyond a reasonable doubt," which has crept into the criminal law as expressing the degree of certainty with which the guilt of the accused shall be proven to justify a conviction, is not as comprehensive as some other language would be; that the term, of itself, is uncertain. We have a doubt in relation to things about which we can give no reason, and of which we have imperfect knowledge. It is the want of sufficient knowledge in relation to the facts constituting the guilt of the accused that causes the juror to doubt. It is the want of information and knowledge that creates the doubt. The court has said, in effect, that, to justify a conviction, the evidence must satisfy such juror of the guilt of the accused with such a degree of certainty as he would not hesitate to act in matters of the highest importance to himself, affecting his dearest and nearest interests, under circumstances where he was not compelled to act, but was free to act or not, as he deemed proper. It is the lack of information and knowledge satisfying the members of the jury of the guilt of the accused with that degree of certainty required by the law which constitutes a reasonable doubt, and, if jurors are not satisfied of the guilt of the accused with such degree of certainty as the law requires, they must acquit, whether they are able to give a reason why they are not satisfied to that degree of certainty or not. The burden is on the state to furnish each juror such information as, that he, acting under oath, is so convinced of the defendant's guilt that he would not hesitate to act upon his convictions of the guilt of the defendant in relation to matters involving his most important interests. Siberry v. State, 33 N. E. 681, 684, 183 Ind. 677.

As doubt spontaneously arising.

By the term "reasonable doubt" is not meant a possible doubt or an imaginary doubt, or a doubt which might arise in a supposed case, but such a doubt as naturally presents itself to the mind in view of the evidence. Robertson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 209; Smith v. State, 9 Tex. App. 150; State v. Neel (Utah) 65 Pac. 494, 495.

A reasonable doubt is such a doubt as naturally and spontaneously arises in, or suggests itself to, the mind of a reasonable man, after a full, careful, and considerate examination of all the evidence. State v. Maxwell, 42 Iowa, 208, 210.

As state of uncertainty.

If the whole evidence in the case leaves the jurors' minds in such condition that they are neither morally certain of the defendant's guilt, nor morally certain of his innocence, then a reasonable doubt exists. State v. David, 33 S. W. 28, 29, 131 Mo. 380.

A reasonable doubt is an honest misgiving as to the guilt of the defendant upon the proof, which the reason entertains or sanctions as a substantial doubt. When, after the evidence, the arguments, and the charges have all gone to the jury, and have been thoroughly weighed and considered, the ingenious and impartial juror, in an honest quest of the truth, finds himself hesitating and pausing to ask himself if all these things may not be true and yet this man innocent, and still reasoning upon his doubts, and finding a substantial reason for them all, then we would say the juror entertained such reasonable doubts as would demand an acquittal. Purkey v. State, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 26, 28.

A reasonable doubt is that condition of the case when the jury, after fully examining, comparing, and considering all the evidence of the case, including the testimony of the defendants, cannot say to a reasonable certainty whether the defendants are guilty or not. Commo wealth v. Hollister, 27 Atl. 386, 387, 157 Pa. 13, 25 L. R. A. 349.

As not vague or speculative.

Reasonable doubt is not a vague, fanciful, whimsical doubt, but a doubt naturally arising out of all the evidence in the case, and such a doubt as intelligent, impartial, fair-minded jurors may reasonably entertain after a careful consideration of all the relevant evidence before them. State v. Davis (Del.) 50 Atl. 99, 100, 3 Pennewill, 220; State v. Conlan (Del.) 50 Atl. 95, 3 Pennewill, 218; State v. McKinney, 3 Pac. 356, 364, 31 Kan. 570. A reasonable doubt is a doubt arising out of the evidence, and not imaginary doubt, a fanciful conjecture, or a strained inference. United States v. Cassidy (U. S.) 67 Fed. 698, 782; United States v. Knowles (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 800, 802; United States v. Jones (U. S.) 31 Fed. 718, 721; United States v. Kenney (U. S.) 90 Fed. 257, 262; State v. Deputy (Del.) 50 Atl. 176, 177, 3 Pennewill, 19; State v. Miller (Del.) 32 Atl. 137, 141, 9 Houst. 564; Wallace v. State, 26 South. 713, 723, 41 Fla. 547 (citing Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 11 South. 550, 17 L. R. A. 705; Woodruff v. State, 31 Fla. 320, 12 South. 653); Powell v. State, 20 S. E. 483, 95 Ga. 502; State v. Fisher (Del.) 41 Atl. 208-213, 1 Pennewill, 303; Welsh v. State, 11 South. 450, 451, 96 Ala. 92; State v. Gilbert (Idaho) 69 Pac. 62, 63.

A reasonable doubt is not a mere whim, guess, or surmise, nor is it a mere subterfuge to which resort may be had in order to avoid doing a disagreeable thing, but is such a doubt as reasonable men may entertain after a careful and honest review and consideration of the evidence in the case. People v. Barker, 47 N. E. 31, 32, 153 N. Y. 111.

A "reasonable doubt" which will justify an acquittal on a criminal charge is a rational doubt; that is, it must not be fanciful, conjured by an overwhelming sense of responsibility or apprehension of consequences, but must arise out of the evidence in the case. It exists where the careful consideration of all the evidence leaves upon the mind an honest and conscientious difficulty in believing; where the evidence, by reason of its insufficiency or want of credibility, fails to convince the mind. In this connection, the evidence should be scrutinized with the greatest carefulness, but the mind should not be placed in an attitude of resistance, and so doubt because of unwillingness to be convinced. McCabe v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 8 Atl. 45, 47.

As doubt arising from the whole evidence.

The reasonable doubt that will justify and require an acquittal must be as to the guilt of the accused when the whole of the evidence is considered, and not as to any particular fact in the case. Little v. People, 42 N. E. 389, 391, 157 Ill. 153.

It is proper to refuse to instruct the jury to acquit if they entertain a reasonable doubt as to defendant's sanity, since reasonable doubt, in order to acquit, must be a doubt as to defendant's guilt, and not as to any particular fact in the case. Hornish v. People, 32 N. E. 677, 142 Ill. 620, 18 L. R. A. 237.

The reasonable doubt the jury is permitted to entertain must be as to the guilt of the accused on the whole of the evidence, and not as to any particular fact in the case. The rule is so well settled by repeated decisions that the reasonable doubt that will justify and require an acquittal must be as to the guilt of the accused where the whole of the evidence is considered, that citation of cases is unnecessary. Weaver v. People, 24 N. E. 571, 573, 132 Ill. 536.

There is no error in refusing to instruct that every material fact must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, where the court has instructed the jury to acquit if entertaining a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt on the whole of the evidence in the case. State v. Whalen, 11 S. W. 576, 577, 98 Mo. 222.

A "reasonable doubt" means such a doubt as fairly and naturally arises in the mind when comparing the whole evidence and deliberately construing the whole case. If the jury, in construing the whole case, have a reasonable doubt upon any essential ingredient of the offense, this entitles the defendant to an acquittal, because it generates a doubt of guilt. State v. Hennessy, 7 N. W. 641, 642, 55 Iowa, 299; United States v. Allis (U. S.) 73 Fed. 165, 167; United States v. Kenney (U. S.) 90 Fed. 257, 262; May v. People, 60 Ill. 119, 120; Gannon v. People, 21 N. E. 525, 528, 127 Ill. 507, 11 Am. St. Rep. 147; Painter v. People, 35 N. E. 64, 72, 147 Ill. 444; Wacaser v. People, 25 N. E. 564, 565, 134 Ill. 438, 23 Am. St. Rep. 683; Polin v. State, 16 N. W. 898, 900, 14 Neb. 540; State v. Neel, 65 Pac. 494, 495, 23 Utah, 541.

"The well-settled rule that a defendant shall not be convicted unless the evidence proves his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt applies to the whole and every material part of the case, no matter whether it is as to the act of killing, or the reason for, or manner of, its commission. People v. Bushton, 22 Pac. 127, 129, 80 Cal. 160.

A reasonable doubt, to warrant a conviction of crime, does not require that the jury should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of each link in the chain of circumstances relied on to establish the defendant's guilt. It is sufficient if, taking the evidence all together, the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty. Gott v. People, 58 N. E. 293, 297, 187 Ill. 249.

REASONABLE EFFORT.

"Reasonable effort," as the term is used in speaking of the reasonable effort required to be made by an officer in the service of an attachment, means such effort as "men ordinarily would exercise in their own business to protect their rights and interests." Springett v. Colerick, 34 N. W. 683, 688, 67 Mich. 362.

REASONABLE EXPECTATION.

An expectation of a company to meet a bill, based only upon assets and credits, and that utterly ignores the general financial condition of the company, no matter how stringent and pressing it may be, is not necessarily a reasonable expectation of ability to pay. It is entirely possible the general indebtedness may be of such a character and amount, and in part or in whole to mature at such periods, as to stamp any expectation of being able to pay the particular indebtedness at a specified time as utterly unreasonable. Edelhoff v. Horner-Miller Mfg. Co., 39 Atl. 314, 318, 86 Md. 595.

"Reasonable expectation," as used in the law of negligence, means an expectation that some such disaster as that which occurred will arise in the long run from a series of such negligences as those with which the defendant is charged. Clifford v. Denver, S. P. & P. R., 12 Pac. 219, 221, 9 Colo. 333.

REASONABLE EXPENSES.

Reasonable expenses which are allowable to a wife for the purpose of prosecuting an action for divorce should be construed to include her attorney's fees. Yost v. Yost, 41 N. E. 11, 12, 141 Ind. 584.

The word "reasonable," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 184, § 7, entitling a guardian to recover the reasonable expenses incurred in resisting an application by the ward for his removal, includes such expenditures as are made in good faith and in the exercise of a sound discretion. Dearborn v. Batten, 15 Atl. 149, 150, 64 N. H. 568.

"Reasonable," as used in Gen. St. 626, § 24, providing that it should be the duty of an overseer of the poor of a town or city in which a person not an inhabitant thereof should be lying sick, or in distress, without friends or money, who should die, to employ some person to provide for and superintend the burial of such deceased person, and the necessary and reasonable expense thereof should be paid by and upon the order of such overseer, must be construed to mean "reasonable" in fact. Commissioners of Pottawatomie County v. Morrall, 19 Kan. 141, 143.

The phrase "reasonable and necessary expenses actually paid in the discharge of his official duties," in Rev. St. § 897, authorizing the allowance of such expenses to a county commissioner, means official expenses only, as distinguished from those which pertain to the commissioner's personal comfort and necessities. The statute contemplates that emergencies may arise when it will become reasonable and necessary to pay out money in the performance of some official duty by the commissioner, in order to properly protect the interests of the county, without awaiting a meeting of the board; and the purpose of the provision was to reimburse him when, in the language of the statute, the money had been actually paid in the discharge of his official duty. For his personal expenses of any kind he can claim nothing beyond his per diem and mileage. It is a fair inference that, if it had been intended to reimburse the commissioner for board or traveling expenses in addition to mileage, when traveling on county business, the Legislature would have expressed that intention in plain terms. Richardson v. State, 63 N. E. 593, 594, 66 Ohio St. 108.

REASONABLE FACILITIES.

"Reasonable facilities," as used in Acts 1876, c. 64, describing the rates to be charged by a railroad for the transportation of coal over its road, and making it such road's duty to provide and furnish reasonable facilities and all cars where required for local trade, and other vehicles for receiving and forwarding of coal that may be offered for transportation over such railway, means cars, motive power, and other conveniences necessary for such purposes, and does not impose upon the company the obligation of permitting all persons and corporations having coal for transportation to make connections with its road. Frostburg Min. Co. v. Cumberland & P. R. Co., 31 Atl. 698, 699, 81 Md. 28.

REASONABLE GROUND OF SUSPICION.

"Reasonable ground," as used to define a defense to an action of false imprisonment, means such a state of facts known to influence the person who made, or caused to be made, the arrest and detention, as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence, acting reasonably and impartially and without prejudice, to entertain an honest belief or strong suspicion that the person accused is guilty of the matters charged against him. Zimmerman v. Knox, 8 Pac. 104, 106, 34 Kan. 245.

The reasonable ground of suspicion which will justify an officer in arresting a person without a warrant is a deceptive appearance of guilt, arising from facts and circumstances misapprehended or misunderstood so far as to produce belief. State v. Cushenberry, 56 S. W. 737, 742, 157 Mo. 168 (citing Smith v. Ege, 52 Pa. [2 P. F. Smith] 419).

REASONABLE IMPROVEMENTS.

Where a testator devises land to a trustee, and directs that all reasonable repairs and improvements shall be provided for out of the annual rents before certain devises of the annual income be paid, the words "reasonable improvements" will be construed to include the paving of a street in front of a lot, and the putting down of a sewer therein, for which the trustee may pay special assessments therefor out of the rents. Warren v. Warren, 36 N. E. 611, 614, 148 Ill. 641.

REASONABLE INQUIRY.

Under Code, § 1816, imposing a penalty on any register of deeds who shall knowingly and without reasonable inquiry issue a marriage license to persons under the age of 18 years, or to a person to whose marriage there is any lawful impediment, the question as to what is reasonable inquiry, under a known state of facts, is one of law for the court. Trollinger v. Boroughs, 45 S. E. 662, 133 N. C. 312.

REASONABLE INSPECTION.

A rule that a railroad company is bound to make a reasonable and ordinary inspection of foreign cars received for transportation means such an inspection as the time, place, means, and opportunity and the requirements and exigencies of commerce, will permit. Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Bates, 45 N. E. 108, 111, 146 Ind. 564.

REASONABLE LINE OF CREDIT.

"Reasonable line of credit," as used in a contract by defendant with the plaintiff sewing machine company to purchase and sell its machines, and make settlements therefor in cash or by note at four months, providing that on this basis of settlement he should have any reasonable line of credit for which satisfactory security would be furnished, must be understood to refer to the quantum of goods to be furnished on credit, and not as modifying the provision that R.'s notes on monthly settlement should be made payable at four months. American Button Hole Overseaming & Sewing Mach. Co. v. Gurnee, 44 Wis. 49, 61.

REASONABLE MANNER.

Within the rule that a navigable stream may be used for both milling and log purposes "in a reasonable manner," notwithstanding such uses may mutually interfere with and injure each other, a "reasonable manner" means in such manner as will not destroy or impair the common-law or constitutional rights of a prior mill operator. Pickens v. Coal River Boom & Timber Co., 41 S. E. 400, 401, 51 W. Va. 445, 90 Am. St. Rep. 819.

REASONABLE MEN.

Reasonable men are those who think and reason intelligently. Patterson v. Nutter, 7 Atl. 273, 275, 78 Me. 509, 57 Am. Rep. 818.

The use of the term "reasonable men," instead of "prudent men," in an instruction that ordinary care is the care which reasonable men exercise under ordinary circumstances, is not of sufficient importance to be erroneous. Overman Wheel Co. v. Griffin (U. S.) 67 Fed. 859, 662, 14 C. C. A. 609.

REASONABLE MIND.

"Reasonable mind," as used in the definition that probable cause for an arrest is the existence of such facts and circumstances as would excite the belief in a reasonable mind, acting on the facts within the knowledge of the prosecutor, that the person charged was guilty of the crime for which he was prosecuted, means "a sensible one, fairly judicious in its actions, and at least somewhat cautious in reaching its conclusions." Brewer v. Jacobs (U. S.) 22 Fed. 217, 222.

The phrase "reasonable mind," as employed in the statement of the principle that probable cause, in malicious prosecution, means existence of facts to excite a belief in a reasonable mind, etc., signifies a sensible mind, fairly judicious in its actions, and at least somewhat cautious in reaching its conclusions. Brewer v. Jacobs (U. S.) 22 Fed. 217, 222.

To make a valid will, testator must have a "reasonable mind"; that is, he must be capable of reasoning upon and comparing, by means of his own recollection (conception and reflection), the facts perceived and remembered, so as to come to the rational conclusion which constitutes the mental and moral will of every dispassionate and unbigoted man, as drawn by his own induction from known facts. Farr v. Thompson (S. C.) 1 Speers, 93, 105.

REASONABLE NOTICE.

Reasonable notice is defined to be such notice or information of a fact as may be expected or required under the particular circumstances. Sterling Mfg. Co. v. Hough, 49 Neb. 618, 621, 68 N. W. 1019, 1020.

The phrase "reasonable notice," as used in the doctrine that an indorsee of a promissory note, in order to hold the indorser liable, must give a reasonable notice of the maker's failure to pay, is, under the circumstances of the particular case, a question of law for the determination of the court. If the parties live in the same town, notice can be given on the same day; if at a distance, by the next post. It will not do to say that among agricultural districts this mercantile strictness need not be observed. If we adopt mercantile law, we must abide by it. Halsey v. Salmon, 3 N. J. Law (3 Penning.) 916, 917.

A person on trial under a commission of alleged lunacy has a right to a reasonable notice of the time and place of the taking of the inquisition of lunacy, and the want or defect of notice is not aided by his appearing before the jury and attempting a defense. This notice must be a reasonable notice—such as will give to the alleged lunatic a fair opportunity for preparing his defense. In re Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. (2 Stockt.) 186, 190.

Under a law requiring the selectmen of a town to give reasonable notice to the owners of land over which they are about to lay out a townway, what is reasonable notice depends on circumstances. Where a majority of the trustees resided in the town, a notice of seven days held sufficient and reasonable. Trustees of Belfast Academy v. Salmond, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 109, 114.

"Reasonable notice" of a defect in a highway means notice presumed from its open exposure and its long existence. Hari v. Ohio Tp., Saline County, 62 Pac. 1010, 1011, 62 Kan. 315.

Creditors of a firm composed of B. and others, then in failing circumstances, entered into a written agreement with the firm that if the firm would assign all their property to a trustee in trust for their benefit, and if B. and wife would give to such trustee a mortgage on certain land, conditioned to make good any deficiency that might accrue in the assets of the firm, for the payment of such creditors, the creditors would extend the time of payment of their claims. The firm conveyed the property to the trustee pursuant to the agreement, and provided that if any portion of the indebtedness remained unpaid, and the firm, after reasonable notice of the sum so unpaid, should fail to pay the same, then B. and wife were to pay such deficiency, and, in case of their failure to pay, the trustee might sell the mortgaged premises, and retain from the proceeds the amount unpaid. The trustee gave a notice to two members of the firm, within 10 days after the assets of the firm had been disposed of, that there was a deficiency, and gave a like notice to the other members of the firm within 12 months thereafter. Held, that such notices constituted a reasonable notice, within the meaning of the agreement. Jamison v. Bancroft, 20 Kan. 169.

"Reasonable notice," as used in Code 1858, § 310, providing that a party to an action could not testify in the cause until he had given the adverse party reasonable notice of his intention so to do, meant such notice as would give the opposite party an opportunity to prepare his case to meet such testimony by being present to testify himself, or to procure the attendance of witnesses who would strengthen his case, contradict the party testifying, or impeach his testimony, and hence a notice given on the day of trial was not reasonable. Mallory v. Leiby, 1 Kan. 97, 102.

The "reasonable notice" to a town of a defect in a highway necessary to fix the liability of the inhabitants of the town for an injury resulting therefrom is undefined in the statute requiring it, and to determine what shall constitute such notice is in many cases attended with difficulty. It is not necessary to prove notice to the town in its corporate capacity, nor that the majority of the inhabitants should have had notice, nor is it even necessary to bring home the knowledge to any officer of the town, and it has sometimes been considered that, if it be proved that some principal inhabitant had notice, it would be sufficient. Where numbers of the inhabitants of the town were concerned in placing the obstruction, which caused the accident across the highway, of whom one, at least, was a man of substance, and the obstruction was so left for a short time, it was held that the notice was sufficient to render the town liable. French v. Inhabitants of Brunswick, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 29 32. 88 Am. Dec. 250.

REASONABLE PERSON.

The words "reasonable person" and the words "ordinarily cautious person" are used synonymously in describing the degree of care that should be exercised in instituting criminal proceedings to avoid the charge of malicious prosecution. Billingsley v. Maas, 67 N. W. 49, 50, 93 Wis. 176.

REASONABLE POSSIBILITY.

In a criminal case it is proper to refuse to charge that, if there is a "reasonable possibility," the jury should acquit. Sims v. State, 14 South. 560, 561, 100 Ala. 23.

A reasonable possibility is no more than a possibility, and hence, in a criminal case, it was proper to refuse an instruction that if there was a reasonable possibility of innocence the jury should acquit. Nichols v. State, 14 South. 539, 540, 100 Ala. 23.

REASONABLE PRECAUTION.

The words "reasonable precaution," as used in an instruction to a jury that a railroad company is bound to use all reasonable precaution for the safety of its employes, are synonymous with "reasonable care." Knott v. Dubuque & S. C. Ry. Co., 51 N. W. 57, 60, 84 Iowa, 462.

In an instruction requiring defendant in an action for negligence to have used all reasonable precautions, no higher degree of care is required than reasonable care and caution. Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. Burke, 67 N. E. 818, 821, 203 Ill. 250.

REASONABLE PRICE.

A contract to furnish a cargo at a reasonable price means such a price as a jury on a trial of the cause would, under all the circumstances, decide to be reasonable. This may or may not agree with the current price of the commodity at the port of shipment at the time when such shipment is made, as the current price may be unreasonable from accidental circumstances. Acebal v. Levy. 10 Bing. 876, 878.

REASONABLE PROMPTNESS.

The term "reasonable promptness," in a contract for the manufacture and sale of gas pipes, which provides that the pipes, when laid, shall be tested with reasonable promptness, without indicating the nature of the test to be used, imports that they shall be tested with reasonable promptness by the usual and customary methods in the trade. Tasker v. Crane Co. (U. S.) 55 Fed. 449.

REASONABLE PROVOCATION.

"Reasonable," as used in the definition of manslaughter as the killing of a person when acting upon a sudden passion, and engendered by reasonable provocation, is used interchangeably with the words "adequate," "sufficient," "lawful," and "legal." State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 207, 217.

"Reasonable," as used in an instruction defining the term "deliberately" as meaning "in a cool state of blood, and not in that state which the law denominates passion, and passion here meant is not that which comes of no cause, but that, and that only, which is produced by some reasonable provocation," is used interchangeably with the words "lawful" and "adequate." State v. Kotovsky, 74 Mo. 247, 251.

"Reasonable provocation" is synonymous with "legal, lawful, or adequate provocation," and to constitute such provocation there must be an assault or personal violence. State v. Bulling, 15 S. W. 367, 371, 105 Me. 204.

REASONABLE PRUDENCE.

The terms "reasonable prudence," "ordinary care," and such like terms, as applied to the conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance, and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be ordinary care in one case may under different surroundings and circumstances be gross negligence. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 683, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. Ed. 485; Crane Elevator Co. v. Lippert (U. S.) 63 Fed. 942, 947, 11 C. C. A. 521; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Charles (U. S.) 51 Fed. 562, 575, 2 C. C. A. 380 (citing Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. Ed. 485). The policy of the law has relegated the determination of such questions to the jury, under proper instructions from the court. It is their province to know the special circumstances of each particular case, and then say whether the conduct of the parties in that case was such as would be expected of reasonably prudent men under a similar state of affairs. It is only where the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion from them that the question is one of law for the court. Johnson v. Boston & M. Consolidated Copper & Silver Min. Co., 40 Pac. 298, 302, 16 Mont. 164.

REASONABLE RATE.

Where a railroad company was authorized by law to charge and receive compensation for the transportation of property, not exceeding a specified rate per mile, when the same was transported a distance of 30 miles or more, and, in case the same is transported for a less distance than 30 miles, such reasonable rate as may be from time to time fixed by the company, a rate fixed by the company for transportation of less than 30 miles, which exceeded the rate that it would be authorized to charge for 30 miles, is not reasonable, and not authorized by such statute. Campbell v. Marietta & C. R. Co., 23 Ohio St. 168, 191.

What is a reasonable rate of freight over a railroad is, at best, a mere matter of opinion, depending on a great variety of complicated facts, which but few persons could intelligently investigate, and which it would be wholly in the power of the company to furnish or withhold. The establishment permanently of less rates of freight at points of competition with other roads than is fixed at other places for the same distance cannot be justified by showing that the rates charged at such other places were reasonably low, and that the rates charged at competing points were unreasonably low, even if the higher rates were reasonably low. When regarded with reference to the profit on the capital invested in the road, they are not "reasonable," in the true sense of the term, if no satisfactory reason can be given for charging less rates for the same or greater services to persons at other stations. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 67 Ill. 11, 21, 16 Am. Rep. 599.

REASONABLE REGULATION.

A rule that the telegraph company will not be responsible for mistakes in the transmission of unrepeatable messages, from whatever cause they may arise, is a reasonable regulation, within 16 & 17 Vict. c. 203, § 66, providing that the use of the telegraph to be constructed shall be open for the sending and receiving of messages by all persons alike, without favor or preferences, subject to "such reasonable regulations as may from time to time" be made by the company. MacAndrew v. Electric Tel. Co., 17 O. B. 3, 10.

REASONABLE REWARD.

A "reasonable reward," in a contract that a boat should pass through a canal for a reasonable reward, was construed to mean prima facie the legal toll. Muir v. Louisville & Portland Canal Co., 38 Ky. (8 Dana) 161.

REASONABLE SAFETY.

"Reasonable safety" means safe according to the usages, habits, and ordinary risks of the business. No man is held to a higher degree of care than the fair average of men in the same line of business, conducted under substantially similar circumstances, Sawyer v. J. M. Arnold Shoe Co., 38 Atl. 333, 334, 90 Me. 369.

REASONABLE SATISFACTION.

An instruction requiring the jury to find the necessary facts to their "reasonable satisfaction" is held in O'Neill v. Blase, 68 S. W. 764, 769, 94 Mo. App. 648, not to be prejudicial to the defendant; but it is said that, if any just criticism can be passed upon the language, it is that it called for too much, rather than too little, proof on the part of the plaintiff.

REASONABLE SKILL.

The reasonable skill in making a collection which an agent is bound to use is understood to be such as is ordinarily possessed and exercised by persons of common capacity engaged in the same business or employment. Mechanics' Bank at Baltimore v. Merchants' Bank at Boston, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 13, 26 (citing Story, Ag. § 183).

REASONABLE SPEED.

The term "reasonable speed," as applied to horse cars, means the average rate of carriages used to convey passengers by horse power, and that is a lawful speed in the absence of statute or ordinance on the subject. Adolph v. Central Park, N. & M. R. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 530, 537.

REASONABLE SUPPORT.

"Reasonable support," as used in a will providing that the testator's wife, together with his daughter, should have a "reasonable and competent support" out of the proceeds of the estate, does not mean merely food and clothing necessary to sustain life, nor any other fixed quantity or allowance, but must depend upon circumstances and exigencies. Ellerbe v. Ellerbe's Heirs (S. C.) 1 Speers, Eq. 328, 340, 40 Am. Dec. 623.

"Reasonable support," as used in a will wherein the testator directed that his wife should receive such sum out of his estate as the executors of his will should think proper and necessary for her reasonable support, must not be determined by the amount necessary for her bare subsistence, but reference must be also had to the extent and income of the estate, and the propriety of her living with her children. Thompson v. Carmichael (N. Y.) 3 Sandf. Ch. 120, 130.

An instruction that it is the duty of a husband to provide for his wife a "reasonable support, according to her rank and station in society, and, to that end, she is entitled to share in his property and the proceeds of his labor," means no more than that the husband shall use his property and labor for the reasonable support of his family, having regard for their station in society. Thill v. Pohlman, 41 N. W. 385, 386, 76 Iowa, 638.

REASONABLE SUSPICION.

Wharton says that "reasonable suspicion" "may be treated as convertible with that of probable cause, as laid down in civil actions of malicious prosecution." State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 135, 49 Am. Rep. 218 (quoting Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 9).

REASONABLE TIME.

"That is a reasonable time that preserves to each party the rights and advantages he possesses, and protects each party from losses that he ought not to suffer." Scannell v. American Soda Fountain Co., 61 S. W. 889, 892, 161 Mo. 606.

"Reasonable time" is defined to be so much time as is necessary, under the circumstances, to do conveniently what the contract or duty requires should be done in a particular case. Bowen v. Detroit City Ry. Co., 54

Mich. 496, 501, 20 N. W. 559, 562, 52 Am. Rep. 822.

If it is proper to attempt any definition of the words "reasonable time," as applied to completion of a contract, the distinction given by Chief Baron Pollock may be suggested, namely, that a "reasonable time" means as soon as circumstances will permit. Lund v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 71 Pac. 1032, 1034, 31 Wash. 288, 61 L. R. A. 506, 96 Am. St. Rep. 906 (citing 2 Thomp. Trials, § 1531).

In determining what is a reasonable time or an unreasonable time, regard is to be had to the nature of the instrument, the usage of trade or business, if any, with respect to such instruments, and the facts of the particular case. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 3178b; Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 653, c. 73, § 209; Code Supp. Va. 1898, § 2841a; Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 4592.

A proposition, to become binding on the one making it, must be accepted within a reasonable time; but what constitutes a reasonable time, when no time is specified, is a question of law, and depends on the subject-matter and the situation of the parties. Morse v. Bellows, 7 N. H. 549, 28 Am. Dec. 372.

What is a reasonable time within which an act must be done may be a question of law. Where the facts are clearly established, or are undisputed or admitted, the reasonable time is a question of law. But where what is a reasonable time depends upon certain other controverted points, or where the motives of the party enter into the question, the whole is necessary to be submitted to a jury, before any judgment can be formed as to whether the time was or was not reasonable. Hill v. Hobart, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 164, 168.

In an application of the rule that, for an unauthorized sale of stock by a broker who is to carry the stock for another, the measure of damages is the difference between the purchase price and the price the owner would have been obliged to pay in the market for the stock within a reasonable time after the sale, it was said that the space of 80 days was a reasonable time, but that the decision was not to be construed as indicating that a less time would not be reasonable. Colt v. Owens, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. (15 Jones & S.) 430, 435.

A "reasonable time" certainly means more protracted space than "directly," as used in a contract to purchase goods to be put on board a ship directly. Duncan v. Topham, 8 Man., G. & S. 225, 230; Stenney v. Kelly, 13 N. Y. Supp. 529, 530, 59 Hun, 512; Lewis v. Hojer, 16 N. Y. Supp. 534, 536.

Acceptance of offer.

What is a reasonable time for the acceptance of an offer to sell goods at a certain price is to be determined by the circumstances and the situation of both parties. Where several letters passed between the parties, prior to which both parties had made prompt replies to letters received, so that at no time more than one day intervened between the receipt of a letter and the posting of a reply, a delay of six days in answering an ultimatum as to the price of goods is unreasonable, so that the seller of such goods is not bound to fill the order. Hargadine-McKittrick Dry Goods Co. v. Reynolds (U. S.) 64 Fed. 560, 563.

Defendant, who resided within 20 miles of plaintiff, offered to sell trees on certain terms, which plaintiff did not accept until after the expiration of 20 days. Defendant refused to deliver the trees. Held, that plaintiff could not recover for breach of contract, as the offer was not accepted within a reasonable time. Mizell v. Burnett, 49 N. C. 249, 252, 49 Am. Dec. 744.

Plaintiff wrote April 25th inquiring the price of 1,000 tons of coal, and was answered on May 1st. June 13th plaintiff wrote, agreeing to take the coal at the price named, and was answered June 16th that he was too late. Held, that there was no contract, plaintiff not having accepted in a reasonable time. Carmichael v. Newell (Pa.) 2 Phila. 289.

Where a party to whom an offer was made neglected for six months to give notice that he had accepted, held, that his notice was not sent in such reasonable time as to make the acceptance binding on the party who made the offer. McCurdy v. Rogers, 21 Wis. 197, 201.

If no definite time is stated, the inquiry as to what is a reasonable time within which a proposition must be accepted is as to what time it is rational to suppose that the parties contemplated; and the law will decide this to be that time which, as rational men, they ought to have understood each other to have in mind. Moxley v. Moxley, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 309, 311.

Acceptance of an offer to sell real estate five days after the offer was made is a reasonable time. Kempner v. Cohn, 47 Ark. 519, 1 S. W. 869, 58 Am. Rep. 775.

Alighting from train.

The reasonable time which a passenger is entitled to in alighting from a train is such time as is usually required by passengers in getting off and on the train in safety at the particular station in question. Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. v. Atkins, 46 Ark. 423, 430.

Appearance for taking of deposition.

A reasonable time to appear and be present at the taking of a deposition, within Gen.

St. c. 36, § 6, providing that the adverse party shall have a reasonable time to appear and be present at the taking of the deposition of a witness, means a reasonable time for such party to appear and be present with his counsel. Kimpton v. Glover, 41 Vt. 283, 285.

Within a statute providing that the adverse party should have a reasonable time to appear and be present at the taking of a deposition, the length of notice to be given was a matter within the discretion of the court. Hough v. Lawrence, 5 Vt. 299, 303.

Appropriation of water.

What constitutes a reasonable time within which the waters of a stream should be appropriated to some beneficial use, in order to establish a right thereto, is a question of fact, dependent on all the circumstances of the case; and it has been held that a prior appropriator of water for irrigation forfeits his right to increase the appropriation by failing for 13 years to increase the area cultivated, during which time subsequent rights have accrued. Low v. Rizer, 37 Pac. 82, 84, 25 Or. 531.

Avoidance of sale of corporate property.

A "reasonable time," within the rule that the right of a corporation to avoid the sale of its property by reason of the fiduciary relations of the purchaser must be exercised within a reasonable time, has never been held to be any determined number of days or years, as applied to every case, like the statute of limitations, but must be decided in each case upon all the elements of it which affect that question. These are generally the presence or absence of the parties at the place of transaction; their knowledge or ignorance of the sale, and of the facts which render it voidable; the permanent or fluctuating character of the subject-matter of the transaction, as affecting its value; and the actual rise or fall of the property in value during the period within which this option might have been exercised. Twin Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 591, 23 L. Ed. 328.

Calling for baggage.

The reasonable time within which the owner of baggage must call for it on the arrival of a train is directly on its arrival, making reasonable allowance for delay caused by the crowded state of the depot at the time. The lateness of the hour makes no difference, if the baggage has been left on the platform. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Terrell (Tex.) 72 S. W. 430 (citing Galveston, H. & S. R. Co. v. Smith, 81 Tex. 485, 17 S. W. 133).

Delivery of goods by carrier.

The reasonable time within which a carrier is bound to deliver goods is the usual time, unless it appears that there were peculiar circumstances which made it practically impossible to deliver in the usual time. Schwab v. Union Line, 13 Mo. App. 159, 162.

Demand for payment of loan.

What is to be considered a reasonable time, within which a demand must be made by a person who is entitled to a payment, does not appear to be settled by any precise rule. It must depend on circumstances. If no cause for delay can be shown, it would seem reasonable to require the demand to be made within the time limited by the statute for bringing the action. What is a reasonable time is a question of law, to be determined with reference to the nature of the contract, and the probable intention of the parties as indicated by it. Where a servant, from time to time, through a series of years, deposited money saved from her earnings with her cousin, in preference to depositing it in a bank—he to keep it for her until she wanted it—the deposit was not an ordinary loan, since an element of trust entered into it, and she was not bound to demand the money within six years (the statutory period), and thirteen years after the date of a memorandum of the amount given her by him was a reasonable time within which to make demand. Campbell v. Whoriskey, 48 N. E. 1070, 1072, 170 Mass. 63.

Demand for deed.

A purchaser of land must demand a deed and tender payment within a reasonable time. Waiting two years before making such a demand and tender is not a reasonable time. Force v. Dutcher, 18 N. J. Eq. (3 Cl. E. Green) 401, 405.

Disaffirmance of infant's deed.

"What constitutes a reasonable time," said the court in Sims v. Bardoner, 86 Ind. 87, 44 Am. Rep. 263, "within which a person who has executed a deed during infancy shall disaffirm it, depends on the particular circumstances of each case. The right must be exercised before the statute of limitations has become a bar to an action to recover the land conveyed, and it may be, under the circumstances of the particular case, that it should be exercised within a shorter period." Shroyer v. Pittenger, 67 N. E. 475, 476, 31 Ind. App. 158.

Duration of offer of reward.

An offer of reward made by a city for the apprehension and conviction of any person engaged in incendiary attempts should not be regarded as an unlimited offer, continuing until it should be formally withdrawn, but is limited to a reasonable time, and in this case it was held that it ceased to be an offer after the lapse of three years and eight months. Loring v. City of Boston, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 409, 414.

Furnishing proofs of loss.

What constitutes a reasonable time within which to furnish proofs of loss under an insurance policy making no provision as to the time within which such proof should be furnished is a question depending on the circumstances. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Brown, 18 Atl. 396, 128 Pa. 392.

Where no time is specified within which a particular account of the loss under a fire policy shall be furnished, it must be furnished within a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time must depend on the circumstances of each particular case, and is probably, under proper instructions, a question for the jury. Miller v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 29 N. W. 411, 413, 70 Iowa, 704.

Holding seized liquors.

Rev. St. c. 27, § 34, provides that, in a case where an officer, is authorized to seize intoxicating liquors, he may seize them without a warrant, and keep them a reasonable time, until he can procure a warrant. Held, that what is a reasonable time must be determined by the circumstances of the case, but, unless a sufficient reason is given for a longer delay, it should not exceed 24 hours from the time of the seizure. Weston v. Carr, 71 Me. 356, 358.

Institution of receivership.

The phrase "reasonable time," under the principles governing the administration of the assets of a railroad operated by receivers, so as to require that all debts for current supplies contracted within a reasonable time before the receivership shall be paid from surplus earnings before any part can be spent on improvements, payment of interest, or any investment favorable to the bondholders, cannot be exactly defined; and what is a reasonable time is a question of law, depending on the circumstances of the particular case. The fact that the receivers were appointed, not at the suit of a mortgagee, but at the instance of creditors and stockholders, to protect the property from disruption and hold it together until the plan to reorganize could be adopted, is a circumstance favoring the equity of supply claimants, and in such a case a claim for steel rails furnished from 9 to 11 months prior to the receivership, was not lost by laches; it appearing that renewal notes were taken for the debt, which were accordingly renewed, and that claim was promptly made at their maturity. Southern Ry. Co. v. Carnegie Steel Co. (U. S.) 78 Fed. 492, 497.

Moving for administrator's sale.

When it becomes necessary to sell the real estate of an intestate to pay his debts, the administrator is required to move for a sale at the earliest opportunity. It is for the court to determine whether the administrator moves for such sale within a reasonable time. Where the administrator, 17 years after the estate was reported insolvent, petitioned for the sale of real estate, it was held, without reference to the question whether the action of the creditors against the administrator was barred by the statute, that the administrator's right to the order of sale was barred by the lapse of time. In re Godfrey's Estate, 4 Mich. 308, 314.

Notice of hearing.

A reasonable time, within the meaning of the rule that notice must be served a reasonable time before the hearing, means such time that the party notified will have ample time to prepare himself, and be able to be present at the time and place of the hearing. Sterling Mfg. Co. v. Hough, 49 Neb. 618, 621, 68 N. W. 1019, 1020.

Notice of tax sale.

What is a reasonable and sufficient notice by a county commissioner of the place where the tax sales will be made, posted at the courthouse, county treasurer's office, and other public buildings, at the county seat, must depend on the circumstances of each particular case. Thus, in the case where the county seat was but a very small place, with but few buildings, all in view of each other, a very short notice would be reasonable, while in a larger town a longer period would be required to bring it within the rule. As there is no tribunal or officer to prescribe in advance what shall be a reasonable time or reasonable notice, each county treasurer must judge for himself, and this under circumstances in which it is impossible for him to know, or for any lawyer to inform him, what such reasonable time or reasonable notice is. A notice by the county treasurer of the place where the tax sale will be made, posted at the courthouse, county treasurer's office, and other public places at the county seat a week before the day of sale, was a reasonable and sufficient notice. Clark v. Mowyer, 5 Mich. 462, 472.

Payment.

Where a guaranty on an overdue judgment note read, "For value received, I hereby guarantee payment of the within note, and waive demand, notice, and protest on the same when due," and was silent as to the time of extension and of payment by the guarantor, the agreement imported a reasonable time, and such reasonable time was applicable both to the time of extension and of payment. Citizens' Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Babbitt's Estate, 44 Atl. 71, 72, 71 Vt. 182.

Performance of contract.

What is a reasonable time for the performance of a contract, when time is not of its essence, is to be determined by all the circumstances of each case, and is a question of law. McFadden v. Henderson, 29 South. 640, 642, 128 Ala. 221.

In an action for breach of contract to purchase land, it appeared that plaintiff was to furnish an abstract, and that the contract did not specify when it was to be performed. The evidence showed that plaintiff had time after receiving defendant's letter of acceptance to execute and forward the deed, and to procure and send an abstract with it, and there was no evidence that he required a longer time. Held, that the question whether or not he had a reasonable time within which to perform the contract was one of law, and that he had such reasonable time. Randolph v. Frick, 57 Mo. App. 400.

Presentation of bill or note.

As to what constitutes a reasonable time within which to present a note payable on demand after date, it is held that the question of reasonable time is identical with that of due diligence. Foley v. Emerald & Phoenix Brewing Co., 39 Atl. 650, 651, 61 N. J. Law, 428.

An averment that a draft was to be presented within a reasonable time will be taken to mean within the time limited by the law merchant and by custom of banks. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 49 N. E. 171, 172, 19 Ind. App. 69.

What is a reasonable time within which the holder of a bank check must present it for payment will depend on the facts of each case. Yet, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, such reasonable time has been fixed. Thus it has been defined to be "the shortest period within which, consistently with the ordinary employment and duties of commercial business, the duty of presentment and demand could be performed." Watt v. Gans, 21 South. 1011, 1012, 114 Ala. 264, 62 Am. St. Rep. 99.

Speaking generally, what is reasonable time depends on the facts of each particular case; but it is thoroughly settled that the reasonable time allowed the holder for presenting a check when he receives it in the same place where the bank on which it is drawn is located is till the close of banking hours on the next secular day; and, if in the meantime the bank fails, the loss will fall on the drawer. Anderson v. Gill, 29 Atl. 527, 528, 79 Md. 312, 25 L. R. A. 200, 47 Am.

St. Rep. 402 (citing Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1591; Byles, Bills, side page 14; Moule v. Brown, 4 Bing. N. C. 266; Boddington v. Schlencker, 4 Barn. & Adol. 752).

That an indorsee of a note has to make a demand on the makers for payment, and give notice of dishonor to the indorser in the event of nonpayment, in order to recover from the indorser, is conceded. The time at which demand must be made and notice of protest given must be within a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time cannot always be measured by months. What constitutes a reasonable time depends upon, and can be ascertained from, the facts of each particular case. Where notice of protest was not given until two weeks after demand of payment was made, the delay discharged the indorser. German-American Bank v. Atwater, 58 N. E. 763, 764, 165 N. Y. 36.

What is a reasonable time, within the meaning of the rule that the holder of a check is bound to present it within a reasonable time, will depend upon the circumstances, and will in many cases depend upon the time, the mode, and the place of receiving the check, and upon the relations of the parties between whom the question arises. Mohawk Bank v. Broderick (N. Y.) 13 Wend. 133, 27 Am. Dec. 192. In a case in which it was understood between the parties to a check that the person receiving the same intended to use it in paying a debt, and it was given on a bank at a distance away, where it did not arrive until three days after it was given, and after the bank had failed, a presentment for payment at such time was held to be within a reasonable time. Woodruff v. Plant, 41 Conn. 344, 347.

The phrase "reasonable time," in the statement of the rule that the holder of a check must present it for payment within a reasonable time, has no fixed meaning, but what is a reasonable time depends on circumstances. But it is a principle of general recognition that, if a bank on which a check is drawn be in the same place where the payee receives it, it should be presented for payment within banking hours on the day it is received, or on the following day, or in the meantime, if the bank fails, the loss will be on the drawer. Industrial Trust, Title & Savings Co. v. Weakley, 15 South. 854, 855, 103 Ala. 453, 49 Am. St. Rep. 45.

What is a reasonable time within the general rule that the holder of a check is bound to present it for payment in a reasonable time, and, if not paid, to give notice thereof to the director in a like reasonable time, will depend on circumstances, and will depend on the time, the mode, and the place of receiving the check, and on the relation of the parties between whom the question arises. Where a check is postdated, and deposited for collection on the day of its date, it will be regarded as issued the day it bears date, in considering whether the holder presented it for payment in a reasonable time. Taylor v. Sip, 30 N. J. Law (1 Vroom) 284, 290.

The reasonable time within which payment must be demanded, in order to render an indorser liable, varies according to the circumstances and situation of the parties, to be determined by the jury under the direction of the court. It is impossible to fix any precise period, each case depending upon its own circumstances. A demand and notice eight months after the date and indorsement of a promissory note payable on demand—all the parties living in the same town—were not given within a reasonable time. Field v. Nickerson, 13 Mass. 131, 136.

What shall be deemed "reasonable time," within which a demand must be made for payment of a promissory note payable on demand, in order that the indorser be not discharged through delay, must depend, to some extent, upon the peculiar circumstances of each case. Sixty days held a reasonable time. Lockwood v. Crawford, 18 Conn. 361, 372.

Removal of goods from depot.

With respect to what is a reasonable time, within the rule that a consignee of goods transported by a railroad company is entitled to a reasonable time in which to remove them after they have arrived at their destination, the courts say the general rule as to what is a reasonable time in such cases is not to be determined by any peculiar circumstances in the condition or situation of the consignee or plaintiff, which might render it necessary, for his convenience or accommodation, that he should have a longer time or better opportunity than if he resided at the place of consignment, and was prepared with the means and facilities for removing the goods. But what is meant by "reasonable time" is such as would give a person residing at the place to which the goods are consigned, and informed of the usual course of business on the part of the company, a suitable opportunity within business hours, after the goods are ready for delivery, to come to the place of delivery, inspect the goods, and take them away. Pinney v. First Division of St. Paul & P. R. Co., 19 Minn. 251, 253 (Gil 211, 212).

Removal of property from leased premises.

A reasonable time within which a lessee may remove personal property placed on the premises after the expiration of his lease is not a fixed period. What would be a reasonable time in one case would not be a reasonable time in another, and therefore in every case the question, what is a reasonable time? must be determined from the facts and cir-circumstances peculiar to that case. Where a lessee places machinery on mining premises for the operation of the mine, his failure for nine months after notice of forfeiture by the lessor to remove is not such unreasonable delay as entitles the lessor to retain possession, where there was no change in the position of the parties, and the lessors suffered no injury from the delay. Updegraff v. Lessem, 62 Pac. 342, 346, 15 Colo. App. 297.

Removal of goods purchased at execution sale.

The reasonable time in which a purchaser at an execution sale may remove the goods from the premises leased by the execution debtor is the time required to remove them with diligence in the ordinary manner of removing such goods. Stern v. Stanton, 39 Atl. 404, 184 Pa. 468.

Rescission of contract.

What is a reasonable time within which a party should rescind a contract on the ground of fraud is a mixed question of law and fact. When the facts are ascertained, it becomes a question of law. Wingate v. King, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 35, 37.

The phrase "reasonable time," as used in the statement of the rule that the purchaser of an article is bound to act within a reasonable time after he discovers a defect, means a reasonable time under all the circumstances of that particular case. Gridley v. Globe Tobacco Co., 39 N. W. 754, 755, 71 Mich. 528.

Where, in a contract of sale of goods, no time is fixed within which the buyer may return the same, the buyer will be obliged to do so within a reasonable time, in order to enable him to rescind the contract. And what is a reasonable time, where the facts are ascertained, is a question of law for the court, to be determined on consideration of all the circumstances; but where the facts are not clearly established, or where the question depends upon controverted matters, it is, under proper instructions, for the jury. Hickman v. Shimp, 109 Pa. 16, 20.

Return of deed.

When a deed is sent to a purchaser for his acceptance, he has an unquestionable right to hold it a reasonable time, in order to investigate the title and the incumbrances on record, and to take advice of counsel before he pays the money. But if he detains it longer than necessary with reasonable diligence, he cannot afterwards return it, but the contract, as to him, will then be no longer open, but closed and executed, and he will be liable for the purchase money, and he must resort to an action on the covenant in the deed, for damages, if the title is defective. Where a vendor had taken seven or eight months' time after the sale for his own convenience to make out the deed, a purchaser retaining it for a week or less, and then rejecting it, could not be deemed to have detained it beyond a reasonable time, and the question whether he detained it an unreasonable length of time was for the jury. Earle v. Earle, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 273, 285.

Service of complaint.

Twenty-four hours after defendant's demand for a copy of plaintiff's complaint is a reasonable time within which plaintiff may serve the same. Littlefield v. Merwin (N. Y.) 2 Code Rep. 128.

Sale of realty by executor.

A will whereby testator, in making certain gifts, ordered and directed his executors to sell and dispose of his lands, and to give deeds for the same, as he might do if alive, and also his household furniture, except such articles as his wife might think proper to keep, gave to his executors a reasonable time, in the exercise of their discretion, within which to make a sale of the land. Held, that a year would be a reasonable time, for the executors should be allowed for the sale of the real estate. McCoury's Ex'rs v. Leek, 14 N. J. Eq. (1 McCart.) 70, 71.

"The reasonable time" within which an executor directed to convert an estate into money may exercise his discretion is determined by no rigid or arbitrary standard, but depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. It seems that, where no special modifying facts are shown to shorten or lengthen the reasonable time, the period allowed before the executor can be compelled to account—that is, 18 months—may serve as a just standard. In re Gray, 91 N. Y. 502, 510.

Suit by cestui que trust.

What shall be termed a reasonable time, within the rule that a cestui que trust must sue in a reasonable time to set aside a sale made by his trustee, is not susceptible of a definite rule, but must, in a degree, depend upon the circumstances of the particular case, and be guided by sound discretion in the court. Thus in the case at bar the lapse of 16 years was held not a reasonable time. Bergen v. Bennett (N. Y.) 1 Caines, Cas. 1, 20, 2 Am. Dec. 281.

Suit for specific performance.

What is a reasonable time within which to file a bill for the specific performance of a contract cannot be fixed with precision by any general rule. Chabot v. Winter Park Co., 15 South. 756, 759, 34 Fla. 258, 43 Am. St. Rep. 192.

Suit for taxes.

Where a city has a reasonable time in which to bring suits for taxes after the statute of limitations takes effect, it is a question of fact for the court whether a suit was brought within a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time in such a case must be determined by the court in each instance. Link v. City of Houston, 50 S. W. 566, 567, 34 Tex. 378.

Suit on note.

There is no fixed period known to be a reasonable time in which to sue on a note, but two years will be deemed more than a reasonable time in which to bring such action. Mehelm v. Barnet, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 88.

Taking possession of purchased personality.

"Reasonable time," within the meaning of the rule that a purchaser of personal property is bound to take possession of the property within a reasonable time, must be construed not with reference to the mere convenience of the party, but only with reference to the time fairly required to perform the act of taking possession, or doing what is equivalent. Seymour v. O'Keefe, 44 Conn. 128, 131.

Transportation by carrier.

"Reasonable time of transportation by a common carrier" means that the transportation must be accomplished with all convenient dispatch, with such suitable and sufficient means as a carrier is required to provide for his business. The question of reasonable time is one of fact, and may be determined by the length of the journey, the modes of conveyance, season of the year, state of the weather, and any other circumstances which may properly be taken into consideration by the jury in finding whether the carrier has been guilty of improper delay. Helliwell v. Grand Trunk Ry. of Canada (U. S.) 7 Fed. 68, 73 (citing Hutchinson on Carriers, §§ 328, 329).

Unloading ship.

"Reasonable time," as used in a declaration alleging that a ship was unloaded within a reasonable time after her arrival at a certain port, means a space of time within which a ship may with proper speed be unloaded, whenever she is in a condition for that process, not a reasonable period to be dated from a given time. Taylor v. Clay, 9 Q. B. 713, 724.

In a case involving the duty of unloading a ship within a reasonable time, it was said that "our reason teaches that the time that is reasonable under ordinary circumstances—that is, customary time—is always unreasonable under extraordinary circumstances. If the extraordinary circumstances can never be considered to determine the reasonableness of the time, then the charter-er must always unload all vessels that arrive under unusual circumstances in an unreasonable time." Lord Blackburn said: "In Taylor v. Great Northern Ry. Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 385, it was laid down that a reasonable time meant what was reasonable under all the circumstances. Byles, J., there says: 'My Brother Hayes treats "ordinary time" and "reasonable time" as meaning the same thing; but I think "reasonable time" means a reasonable time, looking at all the circumstances of the case. The delay in this case was an accident, so far as the defendants were concerned, entirely beyond their control, and therefore I think they are not liable.' " Empire Transp. Co. v. Philadelphia & R. Coal & Iron Co. (U. S.) 77 Fed. 919, 924, 23 C. C. A. 564, 35 L. R. A. 623.

REASONABLE USE.

Reasonable use is that which does not unreasonably prejudice the rights of others. Town of Rindge v. Sargent, 9 Atl. 723, 724, 64 N. H. 294.

What constitutes a reasonable use of water by a riparian proprietor depends upon a number of circumstances, as the subject-matter of the use itself, the size of the stream, the velocity of the current, the nature of the banks, the character of the soil, and a variety of other facts. Low v. Schaffer, 33 Pac. 678, 680, 24 Or. 239.

Under the rules of the common law riparian proprietors have the right to a reasonable use of the waters of a stream running through their respective lands for the purpose of irrigation. It is declared in all the authorities on this subject that it is impossible to lay down any precise rule which would be applicable to all cases. The question must be determined in each case with reference to the size of the stream, the velocity of the water, the character of the soil, the number of proprietors, the amount of water needed to irrigate the lands per acre, and a variety of other circumstances and conditions relating to each particular case; the true test in all cases being whether the use is of such a character as to materially affect the beneficial use of the waters of a stream by the other proprietors. A riparian proprietor is entitled to the reasonable use of running water for irrigation, but not to the exclusion or prejudice of other riparian proprietors. Jones v. Adams, 6 Pac. 442, 444, 19 Nev. 78, 3 Am. St. Rep. 788.

A reasonable use of a stream for mill purposes is one adapted to the character and capacity of the stream. In determining this capacity its condition throughout the year is to be considered. A reasonable use must permit the water to flow in its accustomed way as far as this can be done, and a beneficial use, though a limited one, to be made of the reduced stream; each riparian mill owner having his fair proportion. Mason v. Hoyle, 56 Conn. 255, 262, 14 Atl. 788, 789, 789.

REASONABLE WEAR AND TEAR.

"Natural and reasonable wear and tear," as used in an article of agreement for the sale of real estate, by which the vendor stipulated to deliver possession of the premises at a future day in as good repair as they were at the time of the execution of the contract, natural and reasonable wear and tear excepted, means such decay or depreciation in value of the property as may arise from ordinary and reasonable use, and does not include an injury to the property by a freshet. The word "reasonable" was inserted in the agreement to meet the case of a destruction of the property by the freshet, and to qualify the exception to such wear and tear as might be reasonably supposed to arise from ordinary causes and the action of the elements. Green v. Kelly, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 544, 549.

REASONABLY.

Webster defines "reasonably" as meaning in a reasonable manner; in a moderate degree; moderately. Smith v. City of Brunswick, 61 Mo. App. 578, 581.

"Reasonably" is defined as follows: "In a reasonable manner; consistently with reason; not extravagantly or excessively; tolerably; moderately; fairly." Horn v. Territory, 56 Pac. 846, 847, 848, 8 Okl. 52.

The adverb "reasonably," whatever it may originally have meant, as now used qualifies the condition of things, as well as the conduct of persons. One of its definitions is "in a moderate degree; not fully; moderately; tolerably." The statement that a horse was reasonably or moderately safe, or a reasonably or tolerably good one, would be allowable. Village of Warren v. Wright, 3 Ill. App. (3 Bradw.) 602, 610 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

"Reasonably," as used in Pen. Code, art. 570, providing that, to justify homicide, it must reasonably appear by the acts, or by words coupled with the acts, of the person killed, that it was his purpose and intention to commit one of certain offenses, is not equivalent to "necessarily," as used in an instruction that, to justify homicide in such cases, it must necessarily appear that it was the deceased's purpose to kill or injure the defendant. "Reasonably" is defined by Webster as follows: "In a reasonable manner; in consistency with reason." "Necessary" is defined by Webster: "Unavoidable; necessary; such as must be impossible to be otherwise; not to be avoided; inevitable."

It is quite evident from these definitions that there is a vast difference between "reasonably" and "necessarily." If it must necessarily appear from the acts, or words coupled with the acts, of the party killed, that it was his purpose to commit one of the offenses named, before a person can be justified in killing his adversary, then appearances, whether reasonable or not, would have nothing whatever to do with the case. Stevenson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 618, 634.

REASONABLY ACCESSIBLE.

In Laws 1881, c. 649, amending the general railroad act by limiting the right to condemn land for earth and gravel to lands that are contiguous to its railroad and reasonably accessible to the place where the same are to be used, "reasonably accessible" is utterly meaningless, as applied to the piece of real estate which is to be used as such. In re Long Island R. Co., 21 N. Y. Supp. 489, 490, 66 Hun. 631.

REASONABLY ACCURATE DESCRIPTION.

Under Rev. St. c. 24, art. 9, § 5, providing that a petition in condemnation proceedings shall contain a "reasonably accurate description" of the property to be taken or damaged, a petition to condemn a railroad's "lands, right of way, and tracks," for the purpose of extending a certain street, 66 feet wide, across defendant's right of way, contains a reasonably accurate description, though the land sought to be condemned was used for a railroad yard. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. City of Pontiac, 48 N. E. 485, 486, 169 Ill. 155.

REASONABLY CERTAIN.

"Reasonably certain," as used in an instruction that damages for future consequences of an injury cannot be assessed, unless it be "reasonably certain" that such consequences will ensue, "means that the jury should be satisfied of their occurrence beyond a reasonable doubt." Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Harriett, 15 S. W. 556, 558, 80 Tex. 73.

"Reasonably certain," as used with regard to degree of proof, is equivalent to "beyond reasonable doubt." St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Burns, 9 S. W. 467, 468, 71 Tex. 479.

REASONABLY CONVINCED.

Where a court instructed that, the moment the jury were reasonably convinced that the evidence was sufficient to overcome the presumption of innocence, the same should thereafter cease to influence their minds, the phrase "reasonably convinced" conveyed the same meaning as "moderately convinced," "fairly convinced," or "convinced in a moderate degree," and hence the instruction was erroneous. Horn v. Territory, 56 Pac. 846, 847, 848, 8 Okl. 52.

REASONABLY FORESEEN.

A consequence which cannot have been reasonably foreseen is one which cannot have been foreseen by a man of ordinary prudence. Burns v. Merchants' & Planters' Oil Co., 63 S. W. 1061, 1062, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 223.

REASONABLY NECESSARY.

"Reasonably necessary," as used in a ruling of the court stating that expenditures reasonably necessary for a widow and her child in relation to land left them by a deceased husband and father would be justified, should be construed to include the expense of furnishing the hands and to feed the mules on the farm, which was carried on by the mother after the father died. Berry v. Turner, 77 Ga. 58, 60.

REASONABLY PRUDENT PERSON.

The use of the expression "reasonably prudent person," instead of "ordinarily prudent person," is not erroneous; the words having not infrequently been used interchangeably. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Brown, 69 S. W. 1010, 1011, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 57.

"Reasonably prudent man" may mean the same as "ordinarily prudent man," but a different signification may be attached to "reasonable man." A man may possess ordinary reasoning powers, and yet he may have less caution than a man of ordinary prudence. The conduct of a man of ordinary prudence, under all the circumstances of the case, is the standard by which the law tests the question of ordinary negligence. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Hannig, 43 S. W. 508, 509, 91 Tex. 347.

REASONABLY SAFE.

Whatever is according to the general and ordinary course adopted by those in the same business is "reasonably safe," within the meaning of the law. The test is the general use. Reed v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 68 S. W. 364, 365, 94 Mo. App. 371; Cunningham v. Journal Co., 68 S. W. 592, 593, 95 Mo. App. 47.

"Reasonably safe," as used in reference to the duty of an employer to furnish appliances of ordinary character and reasonably safe, means safe according to the ordinary risks of the business. Geno v. Fall Mountain Paper Co., 85 Atl. 475, 476, 68 Vt. 568.

It is the duty of a railroad company to construct and maintain a crossing and approach thereto, and to maintain the crossing and approach in a condition reasonably safe and convenient for public travel. It is not sufficient that the crossing is so constructed that it is possible to safely pass over it, but it should be so constructed and maintained in such condition as to be reasonably safe for public travel for persons exercising ordinary care. Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 12 S. W. 655, 99 Mo. 310, 42 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 87.

The term "reasonably safe and convenient for travelers," as used in St. 1896, c. 540, providing that no city shall be liable for any injury or damage to person or property suffered in a highway, by reason of snow or ice thereon, if the place at which the injury was received was, at the time of the accident, reasonably safe and convenient for travelers, means that a way shall not be deemed unsafe by reason of snow or ice thereon, if it would be reasonably safe and convenient for travelers but for the presence of snow and ice thereon. Newton v. City of Worcester, 48 N. E. 274, 275, 169 Mass. 516.

A master is required to furnish for his servants reasonably safe appliances and instruments for the work for which they are employed and to keep the same in a reasonably safe condition of repair. For a failure to do so the master is liable if he knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care he might have known, that the appliances were defective or unsafe. O'Mellia v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 21 S. W. 503, 506, 115 Mo. 205.

The phrase "reasonably safe," as used in enunciating the principle of law that a master is obliged to furnish "reasonably safe" appliances for his servants, means safe according to the usages, habits, and ordinary risks of the business. Absolute safety is unattainable, and employers are not insurers. They are only liable for the consequences of negligence, and the unbending test of negligence in methods, machinery, and appliances is the ordinary usage of the business. Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co., 20 Atl. 517, 518, 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944; Schotte v. Meredith, 47 Atl. 844, 846, 197 Pa. 496.

The elements that enter into the question of the reasonably safe condition of a highway or bridge are numerous and difficult to be described, and whether or not a highway or bridge is in a reasonably safe condition is usually determined by the opinions of those who are not experts, but who have personal knowledge of the places in question in connection with the facts stated by them. Taylor v. Town of Monroe, 43 Conn. 36, 45.

REASONABLY SATISFIED.

"Reasonably satisfied," as used in an instruction requiring the jury to be reasonably satisfied of the prisoner's guilt before a conviction could be had, means satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Kernaghan, 14 Pac. 566, 567, 72 Cal. 609.

To satisfy is to free from doubt and uncertainty, to set at rest. The qualifying word "reasonably" means to a reasonable extent or degree, fairly or moderately, and, as used in an instruction requiring plaintiff to reasonably satisfy the jury, it requires him to fairly set at rest the truth of every material fact necessary to prove his cause of action. Ball v. Marquis (Iowa) 92 N. W. 691, 692.

REASSESSED TAX.

A reassessed tax is not, speaking strictly, a new tax. It is a part of the tax of the year in which it is first assessed. It must be based upon the valuation of that year, and must be laid under the original votes of the town and the warrants of the state and county fixing the tax for that year. Market Nat. Bank v. Inhabitants of Belmont, 137 Mass. 407, 408.

REASSIGNMENT.

The word "reassignment," as used in Laws 1897, p. 404, c. 378, § 1117, means something more than the simple transfer of a teacher from one school to another, without affecting the grade. It indicates a reassignment to a lower position after an appointment to the higher, and was doubtless used with a special meaning, to cover cases of removal and reappointment. People v. Board of Education, 66 N. E. 674, 676, 174 N. Y. 169.

REBATE.

"Rebate," says Webster, "is to abate or deduct from; to make a discount from for prompt payment." State v. Schwarzschild, 22 Atl. 164, 165, 83 Me. 261.

In insurance.

In insurance rebates are deductions from stipulated premiums allowed in pursuance of antecedent contract. State v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 38 La. Ann. 465, 467.

Of interest.

Rebate of interest is defined to be a discount or abatement of interest on sums of money not yet due and payable. It is not a payment back of interest due and which has been paid. Hamor v. Eastern R. Co., 133 Mass. 315, 320.

Of legacy.

Where a will provided that the executor should pay the legacies within one year after the decease of the testator, "without any rebate or reduction whatever," the legatee was not entitled to receive his legacy free from the transfer tax, where the will was made before that tax existed; the tax not being, strictly speaking, a rebate or reduction from the legacy. Jackson v. Tailer, 83 N. Y. Supp. 567, 568, 41 Misc. Rep. 36.

REBELLION.

Rebellion "means such an insurrection against lawful authority as is void of all appearance of justice." Hubbard v. Harnden Express Co., 10 R. I. 244, 247.

"Rebellion," as used in a statute making it a capital offense for any free person to aid or assist in any insurrection or rebellion, or intended insurrection or rebellion, of slaves, is synonymous with the term "insurrection" as there used. State v. McDonald (Ala.) 4 Port. 449, 455.

The word "rebellion," as used in a publication alleging that a British subject in Brazil participated in a rebellion there, does not necessarily have the signification which would be attributed to it if that word were applied in connection with acts done in the United States, or in a place in which the person accused of participating in the rebellion would be brought within the peril of the English law, so that such statement is not libelous, as charging a crime. Crashley v. Press Pub. Co., 77 N. Y. Supp. 711, 713, 74 App. Div. 118.

Civil war distinguished.

See "Civil War."

REBELLIOUS MOB.

The difference between a rebellious mob and a common mob is that the first is in treason and the latter a riot. The mob wants the universality of purpose to make it a rebellious mob or treason. Harris v. York Mut. Ins. Co., 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 341, 350 (citing Angell, Ins. § 136).

REBUILD.

The phrase "rebuilt" on another site, used in reference to a bridge, is not strictly accurate; for a new bridge in another place cannot strictly be said to be the old one rebuilt. But the meaning is clear, and "replaced by," or any equivalent phrase, would express it correctly. Seabolt v. Northumberland County, 41 Atl. 22, 23, 187 Pa. 318.

"Rebuild," as used in a contract to remove a school building from where it stood, and reconstruct and rebuild it on a new site, so that it should be in suitable and proper condition for school purposes, means to build up again, to build or construct after having been demolished. Cent. Dict. The meaning of the term is not restricted to the erection of a new building on the site of the old one, so that, notwithstanding the school house was blown down by a storm, it remained possible to reconstruct and rebuild it on the new school site, and thus perform the contract, not only substantially, but strictly and exactly. Bath Tp. v. Townsend, 59 N. E. 223, 224, 63 Ohio St. 514, 52 L. R. A. 868.

Repair distinguished.

In a lease "effectually rebuilding" means something more than "effectually repairing." The second might be understood to signify repairing those parts which merely needed repair, so that they might stand the remainder of the term, and rebuilding those which were not otherwise re-reparable. The other might imply merely putting the whole into the best state which its then condition allowed of. Therefore, where testator devised premises to his son for life, with the power to demise for 61 years for the purpose of new building or "effectually rebuilding and repairing," a lease by the son for that term in which the tenant covenanted for "effectually repairing" was not a good execution of the power. Dymoke v. Withers, 2 Barn. & Adol. 898, 901.

Gen. Laws, c. 72, § 4, providing for an apportionment of the expense of rebuilding or repairing a highway in one town to other towns benefited thereby, fairly means keeping a highway in repair, in view of its continuing interests and the continuing duty of the town benefited by it, and therefore rebuilding or repairing is not to be construed as limited to one point of time, but as including the future as well as the present. Town of Campton v. Town of Plymouth, 8 Atl. 824, 825, 64 N. H. 304.

REBUTTAL

Rebutting testimony is addressed to evidence produced by the opposite party, and not to his pleading, and where the answer avers the new matter, which it is for the defendant to prove, evidence on the part of the plaintiff to meet the evidence given by the defendant in support of his affirmative plea is not given in rebuttal. Lux v. Haggin, 10 Pac. 674, 767, 69 Cal. 255.

REBUTTING EVIDENCE

The word "rebutting" has a twofold signification, both in common and legal parlance. It sometimes means contradictory evidence only. At other times conclusive or overcoming testimony. It may be employed as contravening, or opposing, as well as overcoming, proof. Fain v. Cornett, 25 Ga. 184, 186.

"Rebutting evidence means not merely evidence which contradicts the evidence on the opposite side, but evidence in denial of some affirmative fact which the answering party is endeavoring to prove." State v. Fourchy, 25 South. 109, 114, 51 La. Ann. 228 (quoting Rice, Ev.).

Rebuttal evidence is that which is given to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence by the adverse party. Anything may be given as rebuttal evidence which is a direct reply to that produced by the other side. People v. Page, 1 Idaho, 189, 195.

Bouvier says that rebutting evidence is that evidence which is given by a party in a case to counteract or disprove facts which have been given in evidence by the other party. Toledo & O. C. Ry. Co. v. Wales (Ohio) 5 O. C. D. 168, 170.

Rebutting evidence is that which repels or counteracts the effect of evidence which has preceded it. Evidence which shows that the evidence of the opposite party was not entitled to the force and effect which the law imputes to it prima facie must in its strictest sense be rebutting. Davis v. Hamblin, 51 Md. 525, 539.

RECAPTION.

Recaption is a species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. This happens when any one hath deprived another of his property in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant, in which case the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and retake them wherever he may find them, so it be not in a riotous manner or attended with a breach of the peace. Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 41 U. S. (16 Pet.) 539, 612, 10 L. Ed. 1060 (citing 3 Bl. Comm. 4).

RECEIPT.

See "Accountable Receipt"; "Ship Receipt"; "Warehouse Receipt"; "Wharfinger's Receipt."

A receipt is an acknowledgment of the fact of payment or other settlement between debtor and creditor. Dobbin v. Perry (S. C.) 1 Rich. Law, 82, 83.

A receipt is an acknowledgment of payment or delivery, and may contain a contract to perform something in reference to the thing delivered. The Missouri v. Webb, 9 Mo. 193, 195.

A receipt is not a contract. It is a mere declaration or admission in writing. A receipt for a specified sum of money contains a declaration that so much has been paid upon account or for a particular purpose. Ryan v. Ward, 48 N. Y. 204-208, 8 Am. Rep. 539; Serat v. Smith, 15 N. Y. Supp. 330, 335, 61 Hun, 36; Sargeant v. National Life Ins. Co., 41 Atl. 351, 352, 189 Pa. 341.

Conclusiveness.

A receipt is not usually conclusive as between the immediate parties, and is not within the rule which excludes parol evidence to vary the terms of a written instrument; and where the purposes of a receipt are expressed in short and seemingly incomplete terms, parol evidence is admissible to explain the nature of the transaction. D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Stringham, 57 N. W. 776, 4 S. D. 593.

"A receipt is an admission only, and the general rule is that an admission, though evidence against the person who made it and those claiming under him, is not conclusive, except as to the person who may have been induced by it to alter his condition." State ex rel. Hospes v. Branch, 20 S. W. 693, 694, 112 Mo. 661.

A receipt may be a mere acknowledgment of payment of a certain sum of money, or it may also contain a contract; and of course the rule is very familiar that, so far as it goes to acknowledge payment, it may be contradicted by contradictory evidence that the payment was not made; but in so far as it contains a contract, it stands upon the footing of other written contracts, and cannot be varied or contradicted by parol. Cummings v. Baars, 36 Minn. 350, 353, 31 N. W. 449, 450.

A receipt, in law, must be construed in connection with the facts connected with its origin, and in the light of the circumstances it may mean an acknowledgment of absolute payment of the debt or the conditional payment of the debt. A collector of taxes gave a receipt on receiving a check for the taxes due on a certain lot. The receipt was exhibited to a purchaser to show its discharge from the taxes at the time of the sale. The check being unpaid, the municipality enforced the tax against the property in the hands of the purchaser, and it was held that the purchaser could not maintain a suit for the loss sustained by him against the collector. Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. Law (8 Vroom) 5, 11.

It has been repeatedly held that a receipt is an exception to the general rule that a writing cannot be explained or contradicted by parol. The grossest abuses and fraud would be practiced upon the ignorant and unwary, if receipts were conclusive, and not open to examination. So, where the receipt purported to be in full for two quarters' rent, it was competent to show that it was founded partly on a note given by a third person by the procurement of the tenant, and which the landlord was induced to accept, but which was never paid, because the maker became insolvent before the note became due. The taking of the note was no extinguishment of the debt due for the rent. It is a rule well-settled and repeatedly recognized that taking a note either of the debtor or of a third person for a pre-existing debt is no payment, unless it be expressly agreed to take the note as payment and to run the risk of its being paid, or unless the creditor parts with the note or is guilty of laches in not presenting it for payment in due time. He is not obliged to sue upon it. He may return it, when dishonored, and resort to his original demand. Toby v. Barber (N. Y.) 5 Johns. 68, 72, 4 Am. Dec. 326.

A "receipt" is not a contract, but merely evidence of the performance of a contract, and is always open to explanation; and an instrument reading: "Sold to O. B. one chestnut colt for $145. Received payment by note on three months, payable at Hopkinton Bank. [Signed] H."—was held, so far as the receipt part thereof was concerned, to be open to the explanation that the sale was conditional, with an express stipulation that the horse was not to become the defendant's property until he should deliver in payment a promissory note which would be discounted at such bank without plaintiff's indorsement. Hildreth v. O'Brien, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 104.

The following instrument: "Vincennes, July, 1873. Received from Mr. Irah H. Pauley $542.16 in levee orders taken at eighty cents, say eighty cents per dollar, in full. $542.16. [Signed] Edward Welsart"—is not a contract in the ordinary sense of the term, but purely and simply a receipt, a written acknowledgment of the receipt of a certain amount in levee orders. Such a receipt may be explained, controlled, qualified, or even contradicted by parol evidence. Pauley v. Welsart, 59 Ind. 241, 244, 245.

A "receipt" is not conclusive against the party giving it, but a mistake may be shown by parol. Elwell v. Lesley, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 349.

A receipt is not like a written contract, but may always be explained by parol. Labrabere v. Wise (Cal.) 71 Pac. 175, 176.

Receipts, whether for money paid or for other matter or thing, are regarded as informal, nondispositive writings, open to explanation, modification, or contradiction by parol evidence. Gravlee v. Lamkin, 24 South. 756, 759, 120 Ala. 210.

A receipt, even if absolute on its face, is not a written contract in the sense that it cannot be varied by parol evidence. It is not conclusive evidence of payment, but is open to explanation or contradiction by oral evidence. Joslin v. Giese, 36 Atl. 680, 681 56

N. J. Law, 130 (citing Snyder v. Findley, 1 N. J. Law [Coxe] 48; Cole v. Taylor, 22 N. J. Law [2 Zab.] 59; Crane v. Alling, 15 N. J. Law [3 J. S. Green] 423; Wildrick's Adm'r v. Swain, 34 N. J. Eq. [7 Stew.] 171; Dorman v. Wilson, 39 N. J. Law [10 Vroom] 474).

Receipts are the acknowledgments of one party only, and differ from contracts, in that receipts may be varied by parol evidence, which is not permitted in respect to contracts. Batdorf v. Albert, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 59, 61; Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, 20 Pac. 28, 84, 78 Cal. 15; Wolf v. City of Philadelphia, 105 Pa. 25, 30; Kenny v. Kane, 14 Atl. 597, 598, 50 N. J. Law (21 Vroom) 562; Pendexter v. Carleton, 16 N. H. 482, 489.

A mere receipt is always open to explanation, and may be varied by parol, because simply an admission or declaration in writing, save where it embodies the elements of a contract. Milos v. Covacevich, 68 Pac. 914, 916, 40 Or. 239.

A mere receipt may be explained and controlled in its operation by parol evidence, while a contract as a general rule cannot be; and where a written instrument is made to include a receipt and contract, it cannot, so far as it operates as a contract, be controlled by parol evidence, any further than ordinary contracts may be. Henry v. Henry, 11 Ind. 238, 237, 71 Am. Dec. 354.

"In general a receipt is not a contract. It is usually but the evidence of a fact, as, for instance, the payment of money, the delivery of property, the settlement of accounts, etc., in all of which cases the receipt may be extended and the facts shown to be otherwise." Stewart v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 77 Tenn. (9 Lea) 104, 108.

In 1 Greenl. Ev. § 305, it is said that receipts may be either mere acknowledgments of payment or delivery, or they may also contain a contract to do something in relation to the thing delivered. In the former case, and so far as the receipt goes only to acknowledge payment or delivery, it is merely prima facie evidence of the fact, and not conclusive, and therefore the fact which it recites may be contradicted by oral testimony. But, in so far as it is evidence of a contract between the parties, it stands on the footing of all other contracts in writing, and cannot be contradicted or varied by parol. Thompson v. Williams, 1 Pac. 47, 48, 30 Kan. 114; Cass v. Brown, 44 Atl. 86, 87, 68 N. H. 85.

A receipt is the written acknowledgment of the receipt of money or a thing of value, without containing any affirmative obligation upon either party to it—a mere admission of a fact in writing; but, when a receipt contains stipulations which amount to a contract, it becomes a contract, and must be governed by the law of contracts, and can be avoided only by fraud, mistake, failure of consideration, rescission, or some way known to the law. Krutz v. Craig, 53 Ind. 561, 574 (citing Jones v. Clark, 9 Ind. 341; Barickman v. Kuykendall [Ind.] 6 Blackf. 21; Sherry v. Picken, 10 Ind. 375; Pribble v. Kent, 10 Ind. 325, 71 Am. Dec. 327).

Consignee's receipt.

The term "receipt," in the rule that parol evidence is admissible to vary a receipt, includes an instrument given to a carrier, on receipt of goods, which states that the goods are in good condition; and therefore parol evidence is admissible to show that they were not in good condition, and that the person receiving the goods wished to sign for them in bad order, but was not allowed so to do. Tierney v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (N. Y.) 10 Hun, 569, 570

Indorsement on note.

A receipt may be defined to be such a written acknowledgment by one person of his having received money by another as will be prima facie evidence of that fact in a court of law, and an indorsement on a note of a partial payment in the handwriting of the maker, without any signature, but made in the presence, with the concurrence, and by the direction of the payee, is a receipt. Kegg v. State, 10 Ohio, 75, 79.

Memorandum.

"Receipt," as used in Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2354 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2206), providing that whoever falsely alters, forges, counterfeits, or causes to be so altered, forged, or counterfeited, any acquittance or receipt, with intent to defraud, shall be imprisoned, etc., should be construed to include all that which, when connected together, constitutes such written receipt or instrument; and unless a memorandum or writing indorsed or attached thereto is designed by the parties to import something into such receipt or instrument by which the legal effect of its terms or provisions is in some manner varied or affected, such memorandum cannot be said to be connected with the receipt or instrument so as to form a part thereof, and any change or alteration in the memorandum, indorsed thereon or attached thereto, would not constitute an alteration or change of the legal effect of the receipt or instrument. State v. Hendry, 59 N. E. 1041, 1043, 156 Ind. 392, 54 L. R. A. 794.

Release distinguished.

A receipt is mere evidence of a fact, and differs from a release, which extinguishes a pre-existing right. Equitable Securities Co. v. Talbert, 22 South. 762, 767, 49 La. Ann. 1393.

A receipt in full may be explained and disputed, but a release under seal estops and concludes forever. Crane v. Alling, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 423, 425.

Writing imported.

See, also, "Written Instrument."

A receipt is a written admission of the fact of payment and receipt of money. Thompson v. Layman, 42 N. W. 1061, 41 Minn. 295.

"Receipt," as used in an indictment charging the forgery of a receipt, imports a written instrument, obviating the necessity of alleging that it was written. In State v. Fenly, 18 Mo. 445, it was said: "There is no such thing as a verbal receipt. It is a solecism." State v. Bibb, 68 Mo. 286, 289.

A receipt for money on deposit is a contract in writing for payment of money. Noble School Furniture Co. v. Washington School Tp. of Daviess County, 29 N. E. 935, 937, 4 Ind. App. 270 (citing Long v. Straus, 107 Ind. 94, 6 N. E. 123, 7 N. E. 763, 57 Am. Rep. 120).

Rev. St. § 66, provides that, if property stolen consists of any receipt or other evidence of debt, the money due thereon or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied, or which in any event might be collected thereon, or the value of the property transferred, shall be deemed the value of the article stolen. Held, that the word "receipt" does not mean a written acknowledgment of payment by the debtor of the one making the acknowledgment, but means an actionable receipt, or receipt of money to be accounted for, receipt of property in store, etc. People v. Bradley (N. Y.) 4 Parker Cr. R. 245, 247.

RECEIPT IN FULL.

A receipt in full contains a declaration that a certain sum has been paid in full of all claims of a certain kind or of all demands. Ryan v. Ward, 48 N. Y. 204, 208, 8 Am. Rep. 539. It does not embody any contract, and furnishes only prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated. Serfat v. Smith, 61 Hun, 36, 45, 15 N. Y. Supp. 330.

Adding the words "in full" to the receipt does not make it conclusive. Bard v. Wood, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 74, 75.

RECEIPTS.

See "Gross Receipts"; "Net Receipts."

The term "receipts," in Code, § 1825, relating to the compensation of executors and administrators, and speaking of the receipts and disbursements of the estate, means pecuniary assets, and does not embrace assets which are not money or currency. Wright's Adm'rs v. Wilkerson, 41 Ala. 267, 272.

Receipts and disbursements, within the rule that executors are to receive compensation based upon receipts and disbursements, means receipts and disbursements having an actual, and not merely constructive, existence. Hill v. Nelson (N. Y.) 1 Dem. Sur. 357, 361.

RECEIVE

See "Accept and Receive"; "Actually Receive."

To receive means to get by a transfer as to receive a gift, to receive a letter, or to receive money, and involves an actual receipt. Hallenbeck v. Getz, 28 Atl. 519, 520, 63 Conn. 385.

Ky. St. § 1740, providing for a commission to the master commissioner or receiver for receiving and paying out money, contemplates an actual receiving and paying out, and does not entitle a receiver or commissioner to a commission on bonds which are made payable to him, but payment of which he does not actually receive. Wathen v. England, 44 S. W. 92, 93, 102 Ky. 537.

As accept.

"Received," as used in an acceptance by a board of supervisors of the plans of an architect, on condition that a bid by a reliable party was received on the basis of such plan, is not synonymous with the word "accepted," and was not intended to include the acceptance of a bid. Hall v. Los Angeles County, 16 Pac. 313, 315, 74 Cal. 502.

"Receives or agrees to receive a bribe," as used in Pen. Code, § 72, providing that any officer who receives or agrees to receive a bribe shall be guilty of a felony, is equivalent to the phrase "shall accept a gift or promise with the agreement or understanding that his vote or action shall be influenced thereby," as used in the consolidation act, providing that every officer enumerated therein who shall accept a gift or promise with the agreement or understanding that his vote or action shall be influenced thereby shall be guilty of felony. People v. Jaehne, 8 N. E. 374, 378, 103 N. Y. 182.

In a statute forbidding any person to buy or receive from any slave any article or commodity without the consent of the owner of such slave, the word "receive" was inserted to obviate the difficulty in proving in many cases an actual sale. It is much more comprehensive than the word "sale." Its meaning in this connection is to take, as a thing offered; to accept. Shuttleworth v. State, 35 Ala. 415, 417.

As acquire.

In construing a statute providing that an action of account may be maintained by one tenant in common against another for receiving more than comes to his just share or proportion, the court said: "What, then, is the meaning of the words in our statute, 'for receiving more than comes to his just share or proportion'? What did the Legislature intend by those words? Did they only intend to make a tenant in common accountable to his co-tenants for receiving from a stranger, on account of rents and profits of the property, more than the just share or proportion of such tenant, or did they intend to make him accountable for receiving more than his just share or proportion of the rents and profits, whether paid by a stranger or derived from his own occupation and enjoyment of the property? I think they intended the latter. The former construction may be a reasonable one in England, where the ordinary mode of deriving profit from real estate is by renting it out, but not in this state, where real estate is commonly occupied and used by the owner. With all deference to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, I think the construction they put upon the word 'receiving' is too technical for our country, and, if it be a just one in England, it is because of circumstances existing there which do not exist here. I think the word 'receiving' in the statute literally means a receiving of profits, as well by use and occupation as by renting out the property." Early v. Friend (Va.) 16 Grat. 21, 47, 78 Am. Dec. 649; West v. Weyer, 18 N. E. 537, 538, 46 Ohio St. 66, 15 Am. St. Rep. 552.

As approve.

Where it is ordered by a board of supervisors that an assessment roll be received, the word "received" may be construed to mean approved, if it be apparent from the entire order that such was the sense in which it was used. Mills v. Scott, 62 Miss. 525, 529.

An order of a board of supervisors that a tax roll "be received, and the clerk will certify copies thereof to a debtor as the law directs," sufficiently indicates an approval of the roll by the board, since the context shows that the word "receive" does not indicate merely that the board has accepted the custody of the roll, but that the board adopts it as corrected by them as a completed, approved roll. Grayson v. Richardson, 3 South. 579, 580, 65 Miss. 222.

Within Act 1878, § 29, declaring that, when an assessment shall be made, the board of supervisors shall receive and examine the same, "receive" means nothing more than that they should determine whether the assessor appointed by them had performed the duties devolved on him; and it is a matter with which the taxpayer has no individual interest, and the failure of the board to meet for that purpose, or the fact that the meeting was not lawfully held, gives him no more right to attack the assessment than he would have had, had it been legally filed by the assessor, and the board had failed to hold its term as required by the statute. Wolfe v. Murphy, 90 Miss. 1, 15.

Authority to sue implied.

A corporation created by a special act of the Legislature, and "capable of receiving, holding, and managing" a certain donation "as a corporation for that purpose only," is thereby impliedly vested with authority, not only to receive and hold such donation, but to sue for and collect the money. Proprietors of White Schoolhouse v. Post, 31 Conn. 240, 257.

As bought.

"Received," as used in an instrument stating that the party who signed the same "had received" certain trees, grape roots, etc., specifying the number and kind of each and the total value, means and is of the same effect as the word "bought," and is a sufficient memorandum of the sale within the statute of frauds. Schultz v. Coon, 8 N. W. 285, 286, 51 Wis. 416, 37 Am. Rep. 839.

Consent implied.

Receiving necessarily implies consenting to receive, and an indictment charging that the defendant, a public officer, "did receive and consent to receive remuneration for the performance of his duties," is sufficient, within Code N. C. § 991, making it a felony for a public officer to receive or consent to receive remuneration for the performance of his duties. State v. Wynne, 24 S. E. 216, 217, 118 N. C. 1206 (citing State v. Van Doran, 109 N. C. 864, 14 S. E. 32).

Delivery not implied.

Rev. St. 1889, § 2725, requiring telegraph companies to receive messages and to transmit the same promptly, does not render such companies liable for negligent failure to deliver the message to a person in another state, but only for failure to receive and transmit it. Connell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 18 S. W. 883, 108 Mo. 459.

As have.

"Receive," as used in Code Proc. Wash. § 519, providing that the purchaser of lands sold under execution shall be entitled to receive from the tenant of the land the rents or the value of the use or occupation thereof during the period of redemption, will be held to mean the same as "have"; in other words, the parties shall be entitled to have the rents and profits. Knipe v. Austin, 43 Pac. 25, 26, 13 Wash. 189.

"Receiving," as used in a bequest "in trust for the benefit of L. during her life, receiving her annual interest and income therefrom, the said share to be securely invested as soon as declared; and after her death to be equally divided between her children," means "taking" or "having." Baker v. Keiser, 23 Atl. 735, 736, 75 Md. 332.

As receive from another.

"Received," as used in Rev. St. § 3407 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2246], providing that a place "where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or for sale," shall be regarded as a bank, means that stocks and bonds or bills or notes of others are received for discount or sale, and does not mean those belonging to the banker himself, since one cannot be said to receive his own notes. Selden v. Equitable Trust Co., 94 U. S. 419, 422, 24 L. Ed. 249.

As receivable in evidence.

"Received," as used in Gen. St. 1866, c. 73, § 8, providing that, where all the original parties to a joint or joint and several contract on the same side are dead, the other parties cannot testify to the contract in their favor, unless such transaction was had and performed on behalf of such deceased parties, by an agent whose testimony is received, etc., does not mean received in fact, but received in law, or, in other words, receivable under the law of evidence. Bigelow v. Ames, 18 Minn. 527, 529 (Gil. 471, 473).

As received and paid out.

Act March 21, 1867 (Revision, p. 1084, § 84), gives the township collector three-fourths of 1 per cent. on all schools funds received and paid out by him for school purposes during the year, to be paid out by the township committee from the funds of the township. Held, that the three-fourths of 1 per cent. are allowable on the funds received by the collector for school purposes, and again also on the funds paid out by him for such purposes, for the reason that the words "funds received and paid out" would, on the opposite construction, be the same as if the word "received" had been omitted, inasmuch as the collector would not pay out funds not received. Demarest v. Inhabitants of New Barbadoes Tp., 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 604, 606.

As vesting share of estate.

"Receiving," as used in a will providing that, in case any of testator's children should die before receiving their share, leaving issue, such issue should take the share the parent would have taken, if living, should be construed in the sense of vesting in right, rather than in the sense of being had in actual possession. Cook v. McDowell, 30 Atl. 24, 52 N. J. Eq. 351.

In the common understanding, as well as in the contemplation of the law, the devisee of an estate in fee-simple absolute received that estate at the moment when she became entitled to receive it. Thompson v. Marshall, 46 Atl. 525, 527, 73 Conn. 89 (citing Johnes v. Beers, 57 Conn. 296, 18 Atl. 100, 14 Am. St. Rep. 101; Harrison v. Moore, 64 Conn. 348, 30 Atl. 55; Morris v. Bolles, 65 Conn. 46, 31 Atl. 538; Chase v. Benedict, 72 Conn. 322, 44 Atl. 507).

As transfer of possession.

In Swafford v. Spratt, 67 S. W. 701, 702, 93 Mo. App. 631, the court construes the provision of Rev. St. 1899, § 3419, that parol contracts for sale of goods, etc., shall be void, unless the buyer actually receives some part of the goods, and holds that, to constitute the receipt required by the statute, there must be shown a transfer of the possession of the goods by and from the seller to the buyer, either actually by manual delivery, symbolically by some substituted delivery, or constructively by a change in the nature of the seller's subsequent holding.

The words "receive the same" in the statute of frauds, requiring the sale of goods to be evidenced by writing unless the buyer accepts part of the goods and actually receives the same, does not always require an actual delivery of the goods, but a virtual or constructive delivery may be sufficient; but the circumstances in such cases must be so strong and unequivocal as to leave no doubt of the intention of the parties. An agreement with a vendor about the storage of goods, and the delivery by him of the export entry to the agent of the vendee, was held not to be sufficiently certain to amount to a constructive delivery. Bailey v. Ogden, 3 Johns. 399, 414, 3 Am. Dec. 509.

"Receive," in reference to the sale of goods, means receiving the possession of them. Ford v. Friedman, 20 S. E. 930, 932, 40 W. Va. 177.

"Receive," as used in Code 1876, § 4369, making it a misdemeanor to "buy, sell, receive, barter, or dispose of any cotton, corn, wheat, oats, peas, or potatoes after the hour of sunset and before the hour of sunrise of the next succeeding day," means a change of possession, when one parts with the control of a product and another takes and accepts it. Reese v. State, 73 Ala. 18, 20.

Will.

"Received," as used in the Civil Code, requiring a nuncupative testament by public act to be received by a notary public, etc., does not mean that the notary must in the presence of the requisite number of witnesses complete the entire testament, including the signing by testator, notary, and witnesses, but merely the dictation of the will in the presence of the witnesses; and the reading of the same to the testator and the witnesses in the presence of each other. Succession of Saux, 16 South. 364, 365, 46 La. Ann. 1423.

RECEIVE, HEAR, AND DETERMINE.

The words "receive, hear, and determine," in Act March 3, 1803, c. 93, § 2, authorizing appeals from the District Courts of the United States to the Circuit Court, and requiring the Circuit Court to receive, hear, and determine such appeals, does not authorize a retrial by jury of a cause which has been tried by jury in the District Court. United States v. Womson (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 745, 746.

RECEIVED.

Plaintiff wrote to defendant as follows: "We are doing business with B. & Co., and require a guaranty, and they refer us to you." Defendant replied: "I hereby engage to guaranty the sum of £200 for iron received for B. & Co." Held, that "for iron received" meant for goods already supplied, or for goods that might thereafter be supplied; that it was a continuing guaranty, involving a liability in respect of both past and future supplies. Colbourn v. Dawson, 10 C. B. 765, 774.

"Received," as used in a special verdict, reciting that, "about the time the defendant received" a certain amount of money on the order, the plaintiff demanded an accounting, denotes a past occurrence, and refers to what took place before the demand was made. Woodard v. Davis, 26 N. E. 687, 127 Ind. 172.

RECEIVED INTO RECORD.

"Received into record," indorsed on process by the town clerk when it was returned to him, did not constitute the process a record. The object of a record is not only to give the instrument perpetuity, but publicity, and it is now well understood that that is to be done by transcribing the paper into a book kept for that purpose. Town of Pawlet v. Town of Sandgate, 17 Vt. 619, 621.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

See "Receiver of Stolen Property."

In order to render one guilty of receiving stolen goods, he must know at the minute of receiving it that it has been stolen. State v. Caveness, 78 N. C. 484, 491.

To constitute the offense of receiving stolen goods, it must appear that the person so charged knew at the time of receiving them that they had been stolen, and they must have been received feloniously, or with the intent to secrete them from the owner, or in some other way to defraud him of them. Jester v. Lipman, 67 Pac. 102, 103, 40 Or. 406; State v. Sweeten, 75 Mo. App. 127, 134.

The term "receiving stolen property" is, for brevity of expression, often used to denote the crime that goes by that name; but it is not always so used, nor, when used, does it necessarily express this intent. According to the proper use of the terms, the phrase "receiving stolen property" would mean simply what it says. Used in a verdict finding accused guilty of "receiving stolen property," the expression denotes the receiving of the property under circumstances that render the receiving culpable, and will be equally appropriate, whether the culpability intended was criminal, or illegal without being criminal, or merely immoral; and the expression, as so used, is insufficient to constitute a verdict of conviction for knowingly receiving stolen property, because not containing a finding that it was done knowingly. People v. Tilley, 67 Pac. 42, 43, 135 Cal. 61.

RECEIVER.

See "Auxiliary Receiver"; "General Receiver"; "Statutory Receiver"; "Temporary Receiver."

A receiver is one who receiveth the money of another to render an account. Baker v. Biddle (U. S.) 2 Fed. Cas. 439, 453 (citing Co. Litt. 172a).

The term "receiver" means one who receives, and implies a transfer of possession of the thing received. Keeney v. Home Ins. Co. of Columbus (N. Y.) 3 Thomp. & C. 478, 480.

A receiver is an officer of the court, holding property under its orders and for the benefit of parties entitled to it. Mauran v. Crown Carpet Lining Co., 50 Atl. 387, 388, 23 R. I. 344; Castleman v. Templeman, 40 Atl. 275, 278, 87 Md. 546, 41 L. R. A. 367, 67 Am. St. Rep. 363; Merritt v. Merritt (N. Y.) 16 Wend. 405, 421.

A receiver is an arm of the court, by which it administers the trust for the benefit of the creditors. American Trust & Savings Bank v. McGettigan, 52 N. E. 793, 795, 152 Ind. 582, 71 Am. St. Rep. 345. He is an officer of the law. Standard Oil Co. v. Hawkins (U. S.) 74 Fed. 395, 396, 20 C. C. A. 468, 33 L. R. A. 739.

A receiver is an officer of the court, appointed to settle and wind up the affairs of an insolvent concern. Davis v. Industrial Mfg. Co., 19 S. E. 371, 114 N. C. 321, 23 L. R. A. 322; Marshall v. Wendell, 45 App. Div. 120, 122, 61 N. Y. Supp. 13.

A receiver is an indifferent person, standing between the parties to a case, appointed by the court to receive and preserve the property or funds in litigation pendente lite, when it does not seem reasonable to the court that either party shall hold it. A receiver is not the agent of either party. He is the right hand of the court. Hay v. McDaniel, 60 N. E. 729, 730, 26 Ind. App. 683;

Hale v. Haddon (U. S.) 95 Fed. 747, 773, 37 C. C. A. 240; Danbe v. Philadelphia & R. Coal & Iron Co. (U. S.) 77 Fed. 713, 716, 23 C. C. A. 420; Shainwald v. Lewis (U. S.) 8 Fed. 878, 879 (citing High, Rec. 1); Baltimore Building & Loan Ass'n v. Alderson (U. S.) 99 Fed. 489, 494, 39 C. C. A. 609; Gaither v. Stockbridge, 9 Atl. 632, 633, 67 Md. 222; Flynn v. Furth, 64 Pac. 904, 905, 25 Wash. 105; Kreling v. Kreling, 50 Pac. 549, 550, 118 Cal. 421; Rumsey v. People's Ry. Co., 55 S. W. 615, 625, 154 Mo. 215. The appointment is not the ultimate end and object of the suit, but is merely a provisional remedy or auxiliary proceeding. State ex rel. Merriam v. Ross, 25 S. W. 947, 951, 122 Mo. 435, 23 L. R. A. 534. And neither party is responsible for his malfeasance or misfeasance. Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Rust (U. S.) 17 Fed. 275, 282; Dow v. Memphis & L. R. Co. (U. S.) 20 Fed. 260, 269. The necessary implication from this is that a suit between parties is necessary to the appointment of a receiver, and that he whose property is to be taken from him and placed in the power of a receiver must be a party to the pending suit. Baker v. Backus' Adm'r, 32 Ill. 79, 96; Wilkinson v. Lehman-Durr Co., 34 South. 216, 136 Ala. 463; McLean v. Lafayette Bank (U. S.) 16 Fed. Cas. 262, 263; Ex parte Williams, 17 S. C. 396, 403.

A receiver is generally regarded as an officer of the court. The property or money which comes into his hands is regarded as in the custody of the court. State v. Hubbard, 51 Pac. 290, 292, 58 Kan. 797, 39 L. R. A. 860; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Oregon Pac. R. Co., 48 Pac. 706, 31 Or. 237, 38 L. R. A. 424, 65 Am. St. Rep. 822; Rothschild v. Hasbrouck (U. S.) 65 Fed. 283, 285.

A receiver is a person appointed by a court or judicial officer to take charge of property during the pendency of a civil action, suit, or proceeding, or upon a judgment, decree, or order therein, and to manage and dispose of it as the court or officer may direct. Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 1080; Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. 1897, § 5455; Martin v. Martin, 12 Pac. 234, 235, 14 Or. 165; Oleson v. Bank of Tacoma, 45 Pac. 734, 735, 15 Wash. 148; Denny v. Cole, 61 Pac. 38, 39, 22 Wash. 372, 79 Am. St. Rep. 940.

A receiver is merely the creature of the court, and he has no powers save such as are conferred on him in the course and practice of the court. A receiver has very little discretion. Blair v. Core, 20 W. Va. 265, 268.

A receiver is an officer or creature of the court appointing him. His acts are those of the court, whose jurisdiction may be aided, but in no wise enlarged or extended, by his appointment. His power is only coextensive with that of the court which gives him his character. Gray v. Covert, 58 N. E. 731, 732, 25 Ind. App. 561, 81 Am. St. Rep. 117; Kirwan Mfg. Co. v. Truxton (Del.) 44 Atl. 427, 429, 2 Pennewill, 48; Stockbridge v. Beckwith, 33 Atl. 620, 6 Del. Ch. 72.

The office and duty of a receiver is to hold and preserve the property in controversy during the time that it may remain in the custody of the court. A receiver should in a large sense be indifferent as between the various interests involved. He should have no such personal interest as would interfere with an unbiased and impartial exercise of his duties as receiver. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co. (U. S.) 61 Fed. 546, 549.

A receiver is a person appointed by the court, as an officer of the court, whose function it is to hold possession and control of property which is the subject-matter of litigation, and to dispose of the same or deliver it to such person or persons as may be directed by the court. Wiswall v. Kunz, 50 N. E. 184, 185, 173 Ill. 110.

A receiver is merely a ministerial officer of the court. The title to the property does not change, and, if he is required to take property into his custody, such custody is that of the court. Harrison v. J. J. Warren Co., 66 N. E. 589, 590, 183 Mass. 123 (citing Ellis v. Boston, H. & E. R. Co., 107 Mass. 1).

A receiver, in England, is described as a person, indifferent between the parties, appointed by the court to receive rents, issues, or profits of lands, or thing in question in a court of chancery, pending the suit, when it does not seem reasonable to the court that either party should do it. Wyatt, Prac. Reg. 108. He is considered as an officer of the court. Newl. Ch. Prac. 206. It is no part of the official duty of the clerk and master of a chancery court in this state to act as receiver. Waters v. Carroll, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 102, 107.

A receiver is a mere servant or agent of the court to do its bidding, and he cannot be heard to question by appeal the regularity or propriety of the orders of the court in the action, unless the court first authorizes him to do so. McKinnon v. Wolfenden, 78 Wis. 237, 239, 47 N. W. 436, 437.

A receiver is an officer of the court, invested with the custody of the property that comes to his hands for the benefit of the party who may ultimately appear to be entitled to it. Lansing v. Manton (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 1129.

A receiver is an officer of the court from which he holds his appointment. He is selected by the court in the exercise of its sound judicial discretion, regard being had to the nature of the services required in each case, the competency of the person to be appointed, and the responsibilities he must assume. A receiver is entitled to reasonable compensation, which is a matter exclusively for the determination of the court. Lichtenstein v. Dial, 68 Miss. 54, 58, 8 South. 272.

A receiver is a ministerial officer of the court appointing him. His possession is not adverse to either party, but is for the benefit of all the parties to a suit according to their respective rights; and it is his duty to prevent the destruction of the corporate assets. Chicago & S. E. R. Co. v. Kenney, 68 N. E. 20, 29 Ind. App. 506.

A receiver is an officer of the court, and his possession of property is the possession of the court. A receiver cannot commence any action for the recovery of property without an order of the court. Battle v. Davis, 66 N. C. 252, 255.

A receiver is appointed upon principles of justice for the benefit of all concerned. He is virtually a representative of the court, and of all parties interested in the litigation wherein he is appointed. He is required to take possession of property as directed, because it is deemed more for the interests of justice that he should do so than that the property should be in the possession of either of the parties to the litigation. Money or property in his hands is in custodia legis. He has only such power and authority as are given him by the court, and must not exceed the prescribed limits. Fallon v. Egberts Woolen Mill Co., 64 N. Y. Supp. 466, 468, 31 Misc. Rep. 523.

The office of receiver had its origin in equity practice, and to that practice we must look to ascertain the rights and duties of receivers, when not prescribed by statute. The order appointing a receiver does not affect the title to property. He is but an officer of the court, and subject to its orders. He holds the property merely as a custodian, and cannot sue to recover any of it in possession of a third party who claims to be the owner, or on any chose in action without an order of the court authorizing such suit, and then only in the name of the legal owners. State ex rel. Fichtenkamm v. Gambs, 68 Mo. 289, 297; Wilder v. City of New Orleans (U. S.) 87 Fed. 843, 848, 31 C. C. A. 249.

The very name of receiver implies a person deriving his authority from the court of chancery; for a receiver is one of the well-known agents of that tribunal, with his powers, immunities, and responsibilities entirely defined. He is answerable to the court for each of his acts, and is completely under its supervision and control. Delaware Bay & C. M. R. Co. v. Markley, 16 Atl. 436, 437, 45 N. J. Eq. (18 Stew.) 139.

A receiver is an officer or agent of the court, essential to its own efficiency for the protection of things in its charge, to keep them under its control until the expenses and allowances for execution are paid or secured to be paid. Makeel v. Hotchkiss, 60 N. E. 524, 526, 190 Ill. 311, 83 Am. St. Rep. 131.

A receiver is the hand of the court, of which he is an officer. His appointment determines no rights, does not affect the title of the property in any way, and his holding is the holding of the court. A party on whose application a receiver is appointed has, therefore, no greater interest in the proceedings of such receivership than he would have had if the receiver had been appointed on the application of any one of the other litigants in the action. Jackson v. King, 58 Pac. 1013, 9 Kan. App. 160.

The receiver is the officer of the court, appointed by it, to convert the property for the benefit of the persons ultimately entitled; and, for the purposes of paying out in the suit, the money in the receiver's hands must be treated as money in court. Boice v. Conover, 35 Atl. 402, 407, 54 N. J. Eq. 531.

A receiver is a person, standing indifferent between the parties, appointed by the court to receive and preserve the property or funds in litigation pending suit. He is an officer of the court, appointed for temporary purposes, and has no powers except those conferred on him by the order by which he is appointed, and such as are derived from the established practices of courts of equity. Property in his possession is in custodia legis; his possession being that of the court which appointed him. Nevitt v. Woodburn, 60 N. E. 500, 503, 190 Ill. 283; Stockbridge v. Beckwith, 33 Atl. 620, 6 Del. Ch. 72; Wilder v. New Orleans (U. S.) 87 Fed. 843, 848, 31 C. C. A. 249; Gaither v. Stockbridge, 9 Atl. 632, 633, 67 Md. 222.

A receiver is an officer of the court, authorized to take possession of property or money under orders of the court, and represents the court and must act under its authority, and no suit can be prosecuted against a receiver in any other forum without leave of the court under whose order he is acting. A receiver is not appointed for the benefit of either of the parties, but of all concerned, and all money or property in his hands is in custodia legis. Kennedy v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. (U. S.) 3 Fed. 97, 103.

A receiver derives his authority from the act of the court appointing him, and not from an act of the parties at whose suggestion he is appointed; and the utmost effect of his appointment is to put the property from that time into his custody as an officer of the court, for the benefit of the party ultimately proved to be entitled, but not to change the title or even the right of possession in the property. Union Bank of Chicago v. Kansas City Bank, 136 U. S. 223, 10 Sup. Ct. 1013, 34 L. Ed. 341. By the appointment of a receiver title to the property is not disturbed, and where a receiver takes possession of a party's property as that of another, the remedy is by intervention on petition in the federal court. Southern Granite Co. v. Wadsworth, 22 South. 157, 158, 115 Ala. 570.

A receiver is an officer of the court, appointed for the benefit of all parties who may establish rights in the property; the funds in his hands being in custodia legis for all who can make out title to it. Though the bond of a receiver is conditioned on his paying certain named creditors, the funds in his possession are in the custody of the law for the benefit of all who had title to it, and he will be required to account for any surplus after paying the named creditors. Ross v. Williams, 58 Tenn. (11 Helsk.) 410, 412.

The office of receiver is "purely ministerial and temporary in its nature." 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 419. The receiver appointed is the officer and representative of the court, subject to its orders, accountable in such manner and to such persons as the court may direct; and, having in his character of receiver no personal interest but that arising out of his responsibility for the correct and faithful discharge of his duties, it is of no consequence to him how, when, or to whom the court may dispose of the funds in his hands, provided the order or decree of the court furnishes to him a sufficient protection. Beverley v. Brooke (Va.) 4 Grat. 208. "He is an indifferent person between the parties, appointed by the court to receive the rents, issues, or profits of land or other things in question in the court pending the suit. * * * His appointment is provisional only. It is the court itself which has the care of the property in dispute. The receiver is but the creature of such court. * * * Courts of equity have the same power to remove as to appoint. The decision of a court removing a receiver, being a matter of sound discretion, is not ordinarily reviewable in an appellate court." The purpose of their temporary appointment having been answered, and the necessity for the continuation of their offices as receivers in the cause no longer existing, in the judgment of the court who appointed them, they become functus officio. Their mission ended, they cease to exist. "When necessity for the office ceases to exist, the office itself must terminate, and the receiver be discharged; and when a court of equity has temporarily taken possession of property by the hands of its receiver, until the proper person can be determined who is entitled to take it, the courts will not continue such possession after the necessity ceases." Bayly v. Gaines (Va.) 2 S. E. 739, 741, 742 (quoting Edw. Rec. 2, 3; Kerr, Rec. 2; High, Rec. 824, 825, 832).

A receiver has been often termed the arm or hand of the court, by which it seizes property in controversy and preserves it for the benefit of whosoever shall become entitled thereto. The primary object is the preservation of the property, and every person undertaking the duties of a receivership must be assumed to appreciate the main and controlling purpose to be subserved in his selection. The property, though temporarily in the keeping of the court, is sheltered by the same rights of ownership as before seized. It does not sit as a bandit dividing booty, as was remarked by the Court of Appeals of New York, in Attorney General v. North America Life Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 57. State Cent. Sav. Bank v. Fanning Ball-Bearing Chain Co., 92 N. W. 712, 713, 118 Iowa, 698.

As agent, see "Agent."

As legal or personal representative.

See "Legal Representative"; "Personal Representative."

As officer, see "Officer."

As owner or proprietor.

See "Owner"; "Proprietor."

As representative of creditors.

A receiver is the embodiment of the creditors. He stands as agent for them, and when he challenges the validity of a mortgage given by the debtor he does so in the character of a creditor, having in virtue of his receivership debts fastened upon the mortgaged property. Wimpfheimer v. Perrine (N. J.) 50 Atl. 356, 357.

A receiver of a corporation is to be regarded as the representative, not only of the corporation having power of asserting its rights, taking its title and subject to its liabilities, but occupies a still broader position; for he represents, not only the corporation, but its creditors also, and under his duties as the representative of the latter class he is invested with powers and may do acts that could not be done by a mere representative of the corporation. Peabody v. New England Waterworks Co., 56 N. E. 957, 958, 184 Ill. 625, 75 Am. St. Rep. 195.

A receiver of an insolvent corporation is a representative both of the creditors of the corporation and of the shareholders. He is uniformly regarded as an officer of the court, exercising his function in the interest of neither plaintiff nor defendant, but for the common benefit of the parties in interest. Patrick v. Kells, 2 Pac. 116, 121, 30 Kan. 680.

As representative of property.

A receiver is merely the legal representative of the property placed in his hands as such. In determining his liability the court will only determine the liability of the property. Nor is it material whether the liability existed before or has accrued since his appointment. A pre-existing debt against the owner of the property is as much a liability against the receiver as is a debt contracted by him for the benefit of the property. Nor does it make any difference in what court the question of liability arises. Peoples v. Yoakum, 25 S. W. 1001, 1002, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 85.

As trustee.

See "Trustee."

As trustee of an express trust, see "Express Trust."

Assignee.

The word "receiver," as used in Act March 8, 1897, p. 284, § 10, authorizing receivers of insolvent foreign building and loan associations to bring all suits necessary to wind up their affairs, applies to and authorizes assignees of such corporations to exercise the same powers. Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. Tharp, 56 N. E. 265, 266, 24 Ind. App. 82.

Pledgee.

Under Ky. St. § 2487, giving to employes and materialmen a lien upon the property or effects of any owner or operator of any rolling mill, foundry, or other manufacturing establishment, when such property or effects shall be assigned for the benefit of creditors or come into the hands of a receiver of a court, one to whom lumber was pledged to secure advances made under an agreement that he might sell the lumber and account for the proceeds was not a receiver of court. Bogard v. Tyler's Adm'r (Ky.) 55 S. W. 709, 710.

Receiver by contract.

A receiver provided for in a mortgage or trust deed is not a technical receiver to be appointed by a court. Rice v. St. Paul & P. R. Co., 24 Minn. 464, 478.

Receiver in bankruptcy.

"Receiver appointed by the court," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 791, entitling to a preference on the calendar an action by a receiver appointed by the court or trustees in bankruptcy, does not include a receiver in bankruptcy, and therefore an action by him is not entitled to a place on the preferred calendar. Hough v. Canfield, 66 N. Y. Supp. 961, 962, 54 App. Div. 510.

Receiver of railroad.

A receiver of a railroad is appointed, not only for the preservation of the property in his hands, but to operate the railroad for the benefit of the public. The operation of the road is not only required in the discharge of the duty owing to the public, but is necessary for the preservation of the property itself, and the receiver may fulfill the contracts of the corporation so far as they serve these purposes, but may not pay its debts or fulfill its contracts, which are burdensome or tend to diminish the value of the property as incumbrances upon the property. He has no power, by the adoption of a contract by which the company agreed to retain in its employ one injured in its service in settlement of a claim for damages for the injury, to bind himself or the property for the payment of damages for a breach of the contract on the discharge of the employé; the contract being merely an unsecured obligation of the company, which he has no authority to make a preferred claim. Whightsel v. Felton (U. S.) 95 Fed. 923, 925.

RECEIVER PENDENTE LITE.

A receiver pendente lite is a person appointed to take charge of the fund or property to which the receivership extends while the case remains undecided. The title to the property is not changed by the appointment, but only the right of possession. The title remains in those in whom it was vested when the appointment was made. Keeney v. Home Ins. Co., 71 N. Y. 396, 401, 27 Am. Rep. 60. The object of the appointment is to secure the property pending the litigation, so that it may be appropriated in accordance with the rights of the parties as they may be determined by the judgment of the action. Heffron v. Gage, 36 N. E. 569, 572, 149 Ill. 182; Stokes v. Hoffman House, 60 N. E. 667, 669, 167 N. Y. 554, 53 L. R. A. 870 (citing United States Trust Co. v. New York, W. S. & B. R. Co., 101 N. Y. 483, 5 N. E. 816; Decker v. Gardner, 124 N. Y. 334, 26 N. E. 814, 11 L. R. A. 490).

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEY.

The term "receiver of public money," in Gen. St. c. 257, § 7, providing for the punishment of any public officer, being a receiver of public money, may include a selectman. State v. Boody, 53 N. H. 610, 611.

RECEIVER OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

A receiver of stolen property is defined to be one who receives into his possession or under his control, with felonious intent, any stolen goods or chattels, with knowledge that they have been stolen. Watts v. People, 68 N. E. 563, 565, 204 Ill. 233.

RECEIVER OF TAXES.

The words "receiver of taxes and county treasurer," in Rev. Code, p. 80, relating to the office and powers of the receiver of taxes and county treasurer, do not describe two disinct officers, but constitute the proper legal title of the person occupying one office. State v. Lynn (Del.) 51 Atl. 878, 884, 3 Pennell, 316.

RECEIVER'S SALE.

As judicial sale, see "Judicial Sale."

RECENT.

In reference to the presumption arising from recent possession of stolen goods after a larceny has been committed, "recent" is a relative term, and a time which might be construed recent under one state of facts would not be so under another and different state of facts. Jenkins v. State, 21 N. W. 232, 238, 62 Wis. 49.

"Recent," as used in connection with a presumption arising from the possession of stolen goods, is a term not capable of exact or precise definition, and varies within a certain range with the conditions of each particular case, and is a question of fact usually for the jury. White v. State, 72 Ala. 195, 200.

Possession of property alleged to have been stolen three months after the theft will not be deemed a recent possession. Rex v. Adams, 3 Car. & P. 600.

RECENTLY.

"Recently," is a relative term, and, as used in an application for a continuance, stating that an absent witness had only recently removed to another county, conveys no definite meaning. Crawford v. Lozano (Tex.) 48 S. W. 538.

RECESS.

Adjournment distinguished, see "Adjourn—Adjournment."

"Recesses," as used in Or. Code, § 74, providing that adjournments from day to day or from time to time "are to be construed as recesses in the sessions, and shall not prevent the court from sitting at any time," mean the times in which the court is not actually engaged in business. In re Gannon, 11 Pac. 240, 242, 69 Cal. 541.

The word "recess," when applied to a legislative body, means a temporary dismissal, and not an adjournment sine die, and means only the intermission between sittings of the same body at its regular or adjourned session, and not to the interval between the final adjournment of one body and the convening of another at the next regular session. Tipton v. Parker, 74 S. W. 298, 71 Ark. 193.

RECITE.

Reciting a statute, in pleadings, "is quoting or stating its contents." Hart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 6 W. Va. 386, 348.

The names of the parties to an execution must be given in a sheriff's deed for property sold on execution; 1 Wag. St. p. 612, declaring that the officer selling any real estate shall make to the purchaser a deed "reciting the names of the parties to the execution." Wilhite v. Wilhite, 53 Mo. 71, 73.

As requiring copy.

"Recite," as used in Comp. Laws, p. 199, § 450, requiring that a sheriff's deed "recite the execution, or the substance thereof, and the names of the parties, and the amounts and date of term of rendition of the judgment," does not mean to copy or to repeat verbatim, but only to state the substance of the execution. Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 282, 290.

Hurd's Rev. St. p. 270, art. 9, § 22, requiring a petition by a city for assessment of the stock of a street improvement to recite the ordinance for the proposed improvements, is complied with by alleging that on a certain day the city council passed an ordinance, a certified copy of which was thereto annexed; the word "recite" not meaning that it was necessary that a copy of the ordinance set out in such petition should have attached a certificate of the clerk that such ordinance was passed. Gage v. City of Chicago, 44 N. E. 729, 730, 162 Ill. 313.

RECITAL.

See "Particular Recital."

A recital is the setting down or report of something done before. Shep. Touch. c. 5, "Exposition of Deeds," p. 76, § 3. In Bath & Mountague's Case, Oh. Cas. pt. 3, p. 101, it is said: "The reciting part of a deed is not at all a necessary part, either in law or equity. It may be made use of to explain a doubt of the intention and meaning of the parties, but it hath no effect or operation." Clark v. Post, 113 N. Y. 17, 25, 20 N. E. 573, 575.

In deed.

A recital in a deed is a notice to a purchaser of the fact recited. Jennings v. Bloomfield, 49 Atl. 135, 136, 199 Pa. 638.

A recital in a deed does not necessarily imply a covenant, and whether it is so or not depends in such case upon what is to be collected as the intention of the parties from the whole instrument. A recital is but introductory, and will not be drawn down into the agreement when it appears from the other portions of the contract that such was not the intention of the parties. Monks v. Provident Inst. for Sav. in Jersey City, 44 Atl. 968, 969, 64 N. J. Law, 88.

In estoppel.

The term "recital," as used in the law of estoppel, applies to all material statements of fact contained in the instrument. A particular recital states some fact definitely. Particular and definite recitals are conclusive evidence of the material facts stated. Kellogg v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. Supp. 172, 175, 38 Misc. Rep. 82.

RECIPROCAL DEMAND.

Code, § 95, providing that, in an action brought to recover a balance due on a mutual and current account, where there have been "reciprocal demands" between the parties, the cause of action shall be deemed to have accrued from the time of the last item proved in the account on either side, means no more than is meant by the phrase "mutual accounts." It is used in the Code simply to settle definitely that there must be an account of mutual dealings, not an account of items only on one side, or an account of items on one side on which there had been simple payments within six years. It may be admitted that, to constitute a mutual account of reciprocal demands, the defendant, when sued, must have an account against the plaintiff which he can interpose as a set-off to the extent thereof. It is not needful, however, that each party should have an independent cause of action against the other. The cause of action on such an account is really in law for the balance due, and that party is only debtor against whom the balance is found. Green v. Disbrow, 79 N. Y. 1, 7, 35 Am. Rep. 496; Millet v. Bradbury, 41 Pac. 865, 866, 100 Cal. 170.

RECIPROCAL WILL.

The term "reciprocal will" is used to designate wills made by two or more persons, in which they make reciprocal testamentary provisions in favor of each other, whether they unite in one will or each executes a separate one. Their validity does not seem to be doubted after the death of the respective testators; but the extent of the power of revocation in the survivor after the death of one or more of the testators is a question still in controversy and upon which different conclusions have been reached. In re Cawley's Estate, 20 Atl. 567, 568, 136 Pa. 628, 10 L. R. A. 93.

RECKLESS — RECKLESSLY—RECKLESSNESS.

See "Careless."

"Recklessness" is synonymous with "heedlessness" and "indifference," as, for example, an engineer who drives his locomotive across the streets of a large city, with indifference as to whether a party may be injured or not, is acting recklessly. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bodemer, 29 N. E. 692, 697, 139 Ill. 596, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218.

The word "reckless," as applied to the case of a person injuring another, is somewhat indefinite in its meaning. It may apply to a case in which the defendant sees the danger of the plaintiff in time to prevent his injury and takes no steps to prevent it. McDonald v. International & G. N. Ry. Co., 22 S. W. 939, 945, 86 Tex. 1, 40 Am. St. Rep. 803.

"Recklessness," in a moral sense, means a certain state of consciousness with reference to the consequences of one's acts. No matter whether defined as indifference to what those consequences may be, or as a failure to consider their nature or probability as fully as the party might and ought to have done, it is understood to depend on the actual condition of the individual's mind with regard to consequences, as distinguished from mere knowledge of present or past facts or circumstances from which some one, or everybody else, might be led to anticipate or apprehend them if the supposed act were done. Commonwealth v. Pierce, 138 Mass. 165, 175, 52 Am. Rep. 264.

As intentional.

The word "reckless" has a wide range of meaning. In its milder sense it may imply mere inattention to duty, thoughtlessness, indifference, carelessness, or negligence; or it may import a heedless disregard of obvious consequences. (Webst. Dict.) The word "reckless" does not necessarily import that the act to which it refers is done intentionally or purposely. In charging that an act was done recklessly, no more is necessarily implied than such mere negligence, thoughtlessness, or inadvertence as could not be regarded as the equivalent of intentional wrong. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Crocker, 11 South. 262, 269, 95 Ala. 412.

"Reckless" is not equivalent to "intentional." Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Farmer, 12 South. 86, 88, 97 Ala. 141; Johnson v. State, 9 South. 539, 540, 92 Ala. 82; Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154, 156; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt (U. S.) 64 Fed. 823, 825, 12 O. C. A. 618.

Negligence distinguished.

"Recklessness" is an indifference whether wrong is done or not; an indifference to the rights of others. In popular use "recklessness" is a stronger term than mere or ordinary negligence. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Whipple, 18 Pac. 730, 735, 39 Kan. 531.

The use of the word "reckless," in connection with averments of facts to which it refers and explains, may imply more than mere heedlessness or negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Anchors, 22 South. 279, 281, 114 Ala. 492, 62 Am. St. Rep. 116.

"Reckless carelessness," as used in connection with an action for negligence, means reckless indifference, not mere negligence or inadvertence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 26 South. 35, 41, 121 Ala. 489.

The word "recklessly," when used conjunctively with "wantonly," means something more than "negligently," and assignments of demurrer on the idea that the word "recklessly," used conjunctively with "wantonly," in a complaint for personal injuries, means "negligently," are without merit. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Robinson, 28 South. 28, 30, 125 Ala. 483.

As negligence.

Reckless means nothing more than negligent. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt (U. S.) 64 Fed. 823, 825, 12 O. C. A. 618.

The word "reckless," when applied to negligence, per se has no legal significance which imports other than simple negligence or a want of due care. Stringer v. Alabama Mineral R. Co., 13 South. 75, 80, 99 Ala. 397; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hall, 17 South. 176, 179, 105 Ala. 599.

The use of the word "reckless," in connection with averments of facts to which it refers and explains, may imply more than mere heedlessness or negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Anchors, 22 South. 279, 281, 114 Ala. 492, 62 Am. St. Rep. 116.

"Reckless," as used in a complaint in an action against a railroad company for the reckless killing of live stock, should be construed to mean no more than a want of that degree of care which the law required of the railroad's employes in the operation of the train which collided with the cattle. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barker, 11 South. 453, 454, 96 Ala. 435.

"Reckless conduct," as used in an instruction in an action for personal injuries that plaintiff must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the conductor or brakeman of the train injuring plaintiff were guilty of reckless conduct, means more than mere negligence, and hence is not erroneous, as authorizing a recovery for mere negligence in removing a trespasser. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mitchell, 43 Pac. 244, 246, 56 Kan. 324.

"Recklessly," as used in a complaint in an action for personal injuries, alleging that the act causing the injuries was recklessly done, means no more than negligently. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Sampson, 20 South. 566, 569, 112 Ala. 425.

Recklessly is a word having a wide range of meaning. In its milder sense, it may imply mere inattention to duty, thoughtlessness, indifference, carelessness, or negligence; or it imports a heedless disregard of obvious consequences. A charge that a certain act was recklessly and negligently done charges no more than simple negligence, so that, in an action for personal injuries, where recklessness is charged in general terms, a plea of contributory negligence is not regarded as presenting no defense, unless it appears from other averments that the recklessness charged amounted to more than mere negligence. Southern Ry. Co. v. Bush, 26 South. 168, 170, 122 Ala. 470.

"Recklessness" is sometimes used as a synonym for "carelessness" or "negligence," as where the court in a damage suit instructed that, if plaintiff was injured through defendant's negligence, defendant was liable, unless plaintiff's conduct in the premises amounted to an obvious act of recklessness. Held that, as other portions of the instruction showed that the word "recklessness" was used as a synonym for "carelessness," the word "recklessness," as used, was not error. Eddy v. Powell (U. S.) 49 Fed. 814, 817, 1 C. C. A. 448.

The words "reckless" and "careless" do not impute willfulness or intention. They mean nothing more than simple negligence, and hence it is held that where a complaint in an action for injuries averred that the injuries occurred through the reckless, careless, and negligent acts of defendant in striking plaintiff with a pistol, which was discharged, and there was no allegation that the shooting was intentional, instructions authorizing a recovery on proof showing a willful and intentional shooting were erroneous. Greathouse v. Croan (Ind. T.) 76 S. W. 273-275.

Where a complaint charged that defendant recklessly and negligently ran his cars over a street intersection, the word "recklessly," as qualifying the act of defendant, meant negligence, and no more. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Sampson, 20 South. 566, 569, 112 Ala. 425.

As wantonness.

"Reckless" imports mere carelessness, heedlessness, or unmindfulness, and not wantonness or intention. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Farmer, 12 South. 86, 88, 97 Ala. 141.

"Recklessly" signifies with a wanton disregard of all consequences, and hence of the violation of all rights. Times Pub. Co. v. Carlisle (U. S.) 94 Fed. 762, 773, 36 C. C. A. 475 (citing Cent. Dict.).

As willfulness.

"Reckless," as used in a complaint alleging that a deceased was killed by reason of defendant's "reckless" negligence, does not amount to a charge that the killing was willful or intentional. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt (U. S.) 64 Fed. 823, 825, 12 C. C. A. 618.

The word "reckless," as used in characterizing the degree or kind of negligence, does not imply the same thing as willful or intentional, but means something less than willfulness and nothing more than negligence. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt (U. S.) 64 Fed. 823, 825, 12 C. C. A. 618.

"In Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154, we drew a distinction between the words 'willful' and 'reckless,' and held that recklessness did not necessarily imply willfulness. A grossly careless act may be characterized as reckless, and serious consequences may result from it, yet such consequences would not necessarily be willfully brought about. We simply asserted that the word 'reckless' is not the synonym of the statutory word 'willful,' and therefore, in a prosecution under Code 1886, § 1433, making it criminal to willfully interrupt religious meetings, etc., it is error to instruct that a conviction may be had if the disturbance was willfully or recklessly made." Johnson v. State, 9 South. 539, 540, 92 Ala. 82.

"Recklessly," when used conjunctively with "wantonly," always means more than "negligently." The two words, used together, never import less than such conscious disregard of and indifference to the probable consequences of the act to which they refer as is the legal equivalent of willful misconduct and intentional wrong. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Robinson, 28 South. 28, 30, 125 Ala. 483.

Recklessness does not necessarily imply willfulness. A grossly careless act may be characterized as reckless, and serious consequences may result therefrom, and yet such consequences would not necessarily be willfully brought about. Dull v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 52 N. E. 1013, 1015, 21 Ind. App. 571.

The word "reckless" means heedless, careless, rash, or indifferent to consequences. One may be heedless, rash, or indifferent to results, without contemplating or intending those consequences. As a general rule there is a wide difference between intentional acts and those results which are the consequence of carelessness, and therefore it is erroneous, in an action under a statute making it criminal for any person to willfully disturb an assemblage of people, etc., to charge that defendant may be convicted if he disturbed such assemblage, either willfully or recklessly. Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154, 156.

Recklessness sometimes includes carelessness, but it is much more than carelessness, for it implies willfulness, and, when applied to characterize an act done to another person, is wantonness. To be reckless is to be utterly regardless of consequences. Recklessness, instead of being the want of ordinary care, is more nearly the want of any care. An instruction informing the jury that, unless plaintiff acted recklessly or heedlessly in walking on the defective sidewalk—that is, not with care and prudence that would be exercised by an ordinarily prudent person—then the jury could not find a verdict on ground of plaintiff's recklessness, was erroneous. Plummer v. Kansas City, 48 Mo. App. 482, 484.

RECLUSION.

Reclusion means incarceration under a sentence to undergo an infamous punishment, including civil degradation. Jurgens v. Ittmann, 16 South. 952, 955, 47 La. Ann. 367.

The words "reclusion" and "seclusion" have quite different meaning. The former signifies an involuntary, the latter a voluntary, confinement. "Reclusion" is a legal word, a technical expression, to which a legal signification or meaning attaches. Legislation, jurisprudence, and commentators accord in expounding it as being a temporary, afflictive, and infamous punishment, consisting in being confined in a hard labor institution, and carrying civil degradation. Phelps v. Reinach, 88 La. Ann. 547, 551 (citing 2 Rep. Jour. du Palais, p. 83, verbo "Reclusion").

RECOGNIZANCE.

See "Defective Recognizances."

A "recognizance" is an obligation of record. United States v. Insley (U. S.) 49 Fed. 776, 778; Erwin v. United States (U. S.) 37 Fed. 470, 489, 2 L. R. A. 229; McMicken v. Commonwealth, 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 213, 218; Respublica v. Le Caze (Pa.) 1 Yeates, 55, 68.

An obligation of record, entered into before a court or officer duly authorized for that purpose, with condition to do some act required by law, is a recognizance. Pace v. State, 25 Miss. (3 Cushm.) 54; State v. Walker, 56 N. H. 176, 178; State v. Dowd, 43 N. H. 454, 455; Gay v. State, 7 Kan. 394, 402; Commonwealth v. Emery (Pa.) 2 Bin. 431, 435; Irwin v. State, 6 N. W. 370, 10 Neb. 325; Banta v. People, 53 Ill. 434, 436; Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 270, 271; Fahey v. People, 46 Pac. 836, 838, 8 Colo. App. 553; Comfort v. Kittle, 46 N. W. 988, 989, 81 Iowa, 179. Its object is to secure the presence of defendant to perform or suffer the judgment of the court. Crawford v. Vinton, 62 N. W. 988, 989, 102 Mich. 83; Warner v. Howard, 121 Mass. 82, 84; Vierling v. State, 33 Ind. 218, 219; State v. Grant, 10 Minn. 39, 48

(Gil. 22, 30); Wesley v. Scharpe, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 600, 604.

"A recognizance is an obligation of record, founded upon an acknowledgment of an existing indebtedness by the person to be bound." State v. Wetherwax, 12 Kan. 463, 465.

A recognizance is an undertaking entered into before a court of record, in session, by the defendant in a criminal action and his sureties, by which they bind themselves, respectively, in a sum fixed by the court, that the defendant will appear for trial before such court upon the accusation preferred against him. The undertaking of the parties in such case is not signed, but is made a matter of record in the court where the same is entered into. Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1895, art. 304.

A recognizance is an obligation of record, and, when forfeiture is declared and entered by the court, it becomes an ordinary judgment. Schultze v. State, 43 Md. 295, 306.

A recognizance in a criminal case is a part of the proceedings in the exercise of a criminal jurisdiction, and is a matter of record. State v. Murmann, 28 S. W. 2, 3, 124 Mo. 502.

A recognizance is an undertaking, entered into before a court of record, in session, by the defendant to a criminal action and his sureties, by which they bind themselves, respectively, in a sum fixed by the court, that the defendant will appear for trial before such court upon the accusation preferred against him. Wright v. State, 3 S. W. 346, 22 Tex. App. 670.

A recognizance is an acknowledgment of a debt of record. It has many of the attributes of a judgment. It binds the lands of the cognizor, and an execution may be issued upon it as on a judgment. People v. Van Eps (N. Y.) 4 Wend. 387, 390.

The taking of a recognizance consists in making and attesting a memorandum of the acknowledgment of a debt due the state and of the conditions on which it is to be defeated. State v. Houston, 74 N. C. 549, 550.

A recognizance does not create a new debt, like a bond, but is an acknowledgment of a precedent debt. 2 Bl. Comm. 341. At common law recognizances were taken by the court or magistrate, stating to the bail the obligation entered into and its condition, to which they assent. Gay v. State, 7 Kan. 394, 402.

A recognizance is the voluntary act of the obligors, and when given in a criminal case assumes the existence of a valid commitment. State v. Birchim, 9 Nev. 95, 100.

A recognizance is an obligation of record, and, when entered into to secure a stay of execution, it is a new and distinct agreement to pay on failure of the former debtor. Jones v. Bomberger, 97 Pa. 432, 436.

A recognizance is a statutory obligation, and its requisites are prescribed by the statute. In order to constitute it a legal obligation, it must be made in conformity with the law authorizing it to be entered into, at least in a substantial manner. A recognizance which fails to state which of the obligors is the principal and which are sureties, as required by Code Cr. Proc. art. 287, subd. 1, is insufficient. Smith v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 9, 10, 29 S. W. 158.

Recognizances are of different descriptions, and they are entered into for different purposes. They are by our law entered into before courts of record, and constitute a part of their proceedings to be recorded, and before justices of the same courts, acting ministerially by virtue of authority conferred upon them by statute for that purpose. They are entered into before justices of the peace, when there are proceedings between parties pending before them; and when there are no such proceedings, in criminal cases a recognizance may be entered into before a justice of the peace, conditioned to keep the peace, or to appear before some court to answer to such matters as may be alleged against him, or to testify as a witness, or to enter and prosecute an appeal. They may also in such cases be entered into before courts of record, conditioned to appear before the same court from day to day, or at a day fixed by an adjournment of the same term, or at the next term. If the recognizances last named are not matters of record in the courts in which they are taken, they cannot become matters of record in any court. In civil proceedings, recognizances are entered into before justices of the peace, when they constitute a part of the proceedings before them, conditioned to enter and prosecute an appeal made to the district court, and, when no such proceedings are before them, conditioned to enter and prosecute an appeal made from the district court to this court. Rev. St. c. 97, § 14, as amended by Acts 1841, c. 171. They may be entered into before the district court, conditioned to enter and prosecute an appeal made to this court. Longley v. Vose, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 179, 186, 187.

A recognizance is a substitute for the custody of the principal. A recognizance is an acknowledgment of a debt, and, when filed in a court of record, is a matter of record. Gildersleeve v. People, 9 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 18, 22.

A recognizance is not a judgment, but a contract of record, and when sanctioned, in its creation, by both magistrate and court having competent jurisdiction, it cannot be impeached. State v. Daily, 14 Ohio, 91, 97.

A recognizance is incident and attendant on a suit or prosecution taken to secure some duty previously existing. The duty must have existed by law, and, if the recognizance requires more than the law required, it is void. State Treasurer v. Seaver, 7 Vt. 480, 485.

A recognizance, taken by an examining magistrate and signed by all the obligors, is sufficient, and will bind all, whether their names are entered in the body of the bond or not, provided it complies with the law in other respects. Holmes v. State, 22 N. W. 232, 234, 17 Neb. 73.

In Town of New Haven v. Rogers, 82 Conn. 221, a recognizance is defined to be an obligation of record. In this it is not intended to assert that it is a record in the highest sense, as when we say of a record that it imports absolute verity. It is not the record of a judgment, not being the result or conclusion of a judicial proceeding. Gregory v. Sherman, 44 Conn. 466, 471.

The manner of taking a recognizance is that the magistrate repeats to the recognizors the obligation into which they are to enter and the condition of it, at large, and asks them if they are content. He makes a short memorandum, which it is not necessary that they should sign, although a custom has lately taken place for the recognizors to sign their names. From this short memorandum the magistrate may afterwards draw up the recognizance in full form and certify it to the court. This is the most regular and proper proceeding, but the general and almost universal practice is to certify the original, or a copy of the short memorandum. It is sufficient if these entries contain substance capable of being worked into form; and a memorandum which contained the sum in which the recognizors were bound, the nature of the condition, the title of the action, and the crime with which defendant was charged, was sufficient. Commonwealth v. Emery (Pa.) 2 Bin. 481, 484, 435.

In almost all cases of recognizance in criminal prosecutions, the most important matter has been the securing of the appearance of the party to answer at the term of the higher court which has jurisdiction of the offense complained of. But it is equally true that the recognizance to keep the peace has also been long known. State v. Walker, 56 N. H. 176, 178.

To make a good recognizance or obligation the form prescribed must be pursued. Therefore they may not be acknowledged before any other person besides the person appointed by the statute, and the substantial forms in the statute are to be observed. This is apparent from the significance of the words; it being an obligation of record entered into before a court or officer duly authorized for that purpose. Hence, where a statute requires that a recognizance of special bail may be taken before any justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit court, circuit court commissioner, or clerk of any court of record, a recognizance taken before a notary public is a mere nullity. Clink v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 25 N. W. 175, 176, 58 Mich. 242.

Acknowledgment and enrollment.

Although enrollment is necessary to the validity of a recognizance, yet it binds the lands at common law from the time of the caption; for it is the acknowledgment that gives a recognizance its force as a record, and the enrollment is for the safe custody and the notifying of it to others. State v. Dowd, 48 N. H. 454, 455.

A recognizance is defined in Pasch. Dig. art. 2727, as "an undertaking entered into before the supreme or district court by the defendant to a criminal action and his sureties, by which they bind themselves respectively in a sum fixed by the court that the defendant will appear for trial before the proper court upon the accusation preferred against him." An instrument in the form prescribed for a recognizance, but which, instead of being taken in open court and made matter of record, was signed by the obligors, approved by the judge, and filed by the clerk, is not a recognizance. Jones v. State, 1 Tex. App. 485, 486.

A recognizance, which Bouvier defines as "an obligation of record entered into before a court or officer duly authorized for that purpose, with a condition to do some act required by law, which is therein specified," to be valid and binding, must be taken before a court or officer duly authorized, and if taken before one justice of the peace, where the statute requires two, it is void. People v. Cook, 68 Ill. App. 202, 203, 204.

As bond.

"Recognizance" is synonymous with "bond." Cuddleback v. Parks (Iowa) 2 G. Greene, 148, 150.

A recognizance is a bond, in the strict sense of the word, and therefore a corporation authorized by statute to become a surety on bonds may become a surety on a recognizance. Lovejoy v. Isbell, 40 Atl. 531, 532, 70 Conn. 557.

A recognizance issued on an application for an injunction is an obligation of record, acknowledged before some court or person duly authorized to take such acknowledgment, conditioned to do some particular act, and such recognizance is a bond. Miller v. Cross, 48 Atl. 213, 214, 73 Conn. 538.

Wherever the word "bail" is used with reference to the security given by the defendant in a criminal proceeding; it is intended to apply as well to recognizances as to bail bonds. Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1896, art. 307.

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 821, providing that the authority signing a writ of error shall before its issue take good and sufficient bond, with surety, that the plaintiff in error shall prosecute his suit to effect, the certificate of the giving of the security is not defective because denominating such security a "recognizance," instead of a "bond"; it being held that a recognizance is a bond within the meaning of the statute. Vincent v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 55 Atl. 177, 178, 75 Conn. 650.

Bond distinguished.

The only material respect in which a recognizance differs from a bond is that an ordinary bond is the creation of an original debt or an obligation de novo, while a recognizance is the acknowledgment of a former debt of record. Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 270, 271; Irwin v. State, 6 N. W. 370, 10 Neb. 325.

A recognizance differs from a bond in this: that while the latter, which is attested by the signature and seal of the obligor, creates a fresh or new obligation, the former is an acknowledgment or record of an already existing debt. But the principal difference lies in the fact that a recognizance is a matter of record in the nature of a conditional judgment, and is proceeded upon by scire facias or summons. Fahey v. People, 46 Pac. 836, 838, 8 Colo. App. 553; State v. Crippen, 1 Ohio St. 399, 401; People v. Barrett, 67 N. E. 23, 27, 202 Ill. 287, 63 L. R. A. 82, 95 Am. St. Rep. 230.

A recognizance is more than an ordinary bond. It can be treated and enforced as a judgment, and its name, "recognizance," that is to say, acknowledgment, shows the importance of the acknowledgment before a proper officer. Heyward v. United States (U. S.) 87 Fed. 764, 765.

There is a difference between a recognizance and a bond. Webster says: "A recognizance differs from a bond, being witnessed by the record only, and not by the party's seal." He defines a bond to be, in law, a writing under seal, by which a person binds himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators. It is questionable whether authority to require a recognizance confers power to require a bond. Comfort v. Kittle, 46 N. W. 988, 989, 81 Iowa, 179.

The principal difference between a bail bond and a recognizance lies in the fact that a recognizance is a matter of record in the nature of a conditional judgment, and is proceeded upon by scire facias, while a bond is but an evidence of debt, for the recovery of which an action must be brought. A bail bond is taken out of court in vacation, and a recognizance is taken in open court, in which the cognizors confessed judgment, to be levied on their property in case the principal makes default in his appearance. Cole v. Warner, 23 S. W. 110, 111, 93 Tenn. (9 Pickle) 155.

There are two methods of taking bail, by recognizance and by bond. In some respects a recognizance is very similar to a bond. It is defined to be an obligation of record, which a man enters into before some court of record, or magistrate duly authorized, binding himself under penalty to do some particular act. A bond, or, as it is commonly called, a bail bond, is also an obligation, but under seal, signed by the party giving the same, with one or more sureties, under a penalty conditioned to do some particular act. The chief distinction between the two methods of bailing it that the former is an acknowledgment on record of a debt already due, while the latter is a creation of a new debt not of record. A law providing for a bail bond in criminal cases is different from a law providing for a recognizance in such cases, but is neither repugnant to nor inconsistent with it, but is merely cumulative. Swan v. United States, 9 Pac. 931, 935, 936, 3 Wyo. 151.

As a conditional judgment.

A recognizance is a debt of record, and is of the nature of a conditional judgment, which the recorded default makes absolute, subject only to such matters of legal avoidance as may be shown by plea, or such matters of relief as may induce the court to remit or mitigate the forfeiture. State v. Warren, 17 Tex. 283, 288.

At common law it was essential to the validity of a recognizance that it be entered into before the court or officer authorized to take the same. It was not signed, but was simply spread upon the record; and the parties sought to be charged thereby were informed as to its terms and conditions, to which they orally assented, and the record was in like manner made of that fact. This constituted it an obligation of record, and it amounted in reality to a conditional judgment. Kansas City v. Fahgah, 46 Pac. 1009, 1010, 4 Kan. App. 796.

A debt of record in the nature of a conditional judgment, with the recorded default, renders it an absolute judgment, subject only to such matters of legal avoidance as may be shown by plea, or such matters of relief as may induce the court to remit or mitigate the forfeiture. United States v. Winstead (U. S.) 12 Fed. 50, 51.

A recognizance is a matter of record. It is in the nature of a judgment, and the process upon it, whether scire facias or summons, is for the purpose of carrying it into execution, and is rather judicial than original. It is no further to be reckoned an original suit than that the defendant has a right to plead to it. It is founded in a recognizance, and must be considered as flowing from it and partaking of its nature, and when final judgment shall be given the whole is to be taken as one record. Under Act Cong. Sept. 24, 1789, § 12, providing that if a suit be commenced in any state court against an alien, etc., and the matter in dispute exceed the sum or value of $500, exclusive of costs, on a petition of defendant and a tender of bail to appear in the Circuit Court, etc., it shall be the duty of the state court to accept the surety and proceed no further in the case, etc., an action on a recognizance for good behavior is not removable to a Circuit Court on the ground that the defendant is an alien, as the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court is confined to actions of a civil nature against aliens, and does not extend to those of a criminal nature. The recognizance was taken to prevent criminal action against the defendant for violation of the peace, order, and tranquility of society, and it is evidently of a criminal nature. Respublica v. Cobbet, 8 U. S. (3 Dall.) 467, 475, 1 L. Ed. 683.

As contract or obligation.

See "Contract"; "Obligation."

As a debt.

See "Debt."

Judgment nisi distinguished.

A recognizance duly entered into is a debt of record, and the object of a scire facias is to notify the cognizor to show cause why the cognizee should not have execution. It is in the nature of a conditional judgment, and a recorded default makes it absolute, subject only to such matters of legal avoidance as may be shown by plea, or such matters of relief as may induce the court to remit or mitigate the forfeiture. On the other hand, a judgment nisi is one that is to be valid unless something else should be done within a given time to defeat it. When a witness is duly summoned to appear at court, and fails to do so, a judgment nisi may be entered for the penalty imposed by law for such failure, and upon being served with a scire facias he may show cause at a future day why the judgment nisi should not be made absolute. Therefore the entry of a judgment nisi upon a forfeited recognizance is irregular. United States v. Winstead (U. S.) 12 Fed. 50, 51.

As existing till judgment.

The recognizance for a prisoner's appearance is an inseparable part of the proceedings against him, and is a means in the hands of the court to bring him in. It cannot cease to be a part of the case until there is a final judgment in the county court. Before that time the judgment of forfeiture may be stricken off by the production of the accused by the surety, or the court may cancel the bonds if the circumstances of the case should require such action. State v. Dwyer, 39 Atl. 629, 630, 70 Vt. 96.

Memorandum for costs.

"Recognizance," as used in Rev. St. § 2590, providing that no attorney practicing in the state shall be taken as bail or security on an "undertaking, bond or recognizance," does not include a memorandum on a justice's docket, required by Rev. St. §§ 3782, 3783, to be signed by sureties for costs in an action. Stark v. Small, 39 N. W. 359, 72 Wis. 215.

As process or record.

See "Process"; "Record."

RECOGNIZE.

The word "recognize," according to the best lexicographers, signifies to admit; to acknowledge something existing before. Leak v. Bear, 80 N. C. 271, 273.

RECOGNITION OF BELLIGERENCY.

Recognition of belligerency is an accordance by a foreign government of belligerent rights to another mass or body of people engaged in civil war, by which such people are granted the rights of civilized warfare and assume the burdens thereof. The recognition of belligerency may be express, as by proclamation; or implied, by acts of war, such as blockade; or tacit, by acquiescence in the exercise of belligerent rights. A refusal to acquiesce in the decree of a foreign state closing its own ports to commerce by a municipal decree, such ports being in possession of armed rebels, unless such decree were also supported by an effective blockade, is a recognition by implication of a state of war and of mutual belligerent rights sufficient to prevent subsequent condemnation of a rebel vessel as a prize. United States v. The Ambrose Light (U. S.) 25 Fed. 408, 412.

RECOGNIZING.

The act of recognizing, in order to give to a party an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in a civil action, is performed by assenting to the words of the magistrate to the effect that the sureties acknowledge themselves to be indebted to the other party in a specified sum, to be paid if the party appealing fails to enter and prosecute his appeal. A brief minute of the transaction is entered on the record, in order that a more full memorandum may be prepared when it is wanted. This memorandum is not itself the recognizance, although it is not infrequently so called. Martin v. Campbell, 120 Mass. 128, 128.

RECOLLECT.

An affirmation in an answer that the defendant does not recollect having done an act means that he does not remember having done it, and is not tantamount to a direct and unequivocal denial, nor to a declaration that he does not believe he did it. Talbot v. Sebree's Heirs, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 56.

RECOLLECTION.

Discovery distinguished, see "Discovery."

RECOMMENCE.

"Recommend," as used in an agreement to surrender a note without payment if a person should within a certain time recommence the baking or selling of bread at a certain place, in the best lexicography as well as in common conversation, is considered as synonymous with the expression "begin anew"; and, preserving the order of the ideas specified, the word is of the same signification as the term "again begin." Lines v. Flagg, 4 Conn. 581, 587.

RECOMMEND.

"Recommended," as used in a city charter providing that the board of docks, after receiving notice of an application for land under water by a riparian owner, shall determine whether the granting of the same will conflict with the rights of the city, or be otherwise injurious to the public interest of the city, and report its conclusions to the commissioners of the land office, who shall insert such terms and conditions in the grant "recommended" by the board of docks as will protect the public interests of the city in respect to navigation and commerce, does not require absolutely that such terms and conditions be inserted in the grant. Webster says: "To recommend is to commend to the favorable notice of another; to commit to another's care, confidence, or acceptance with favorable representations; to put in a favorable light before any one; to bestow commendation on." People v. Woodruff, 60 N. H. 28, 30, 166 N. Y. 453.

"Recommend," as used in a verdict declaring that the jury find defendant guilty and recommend his sentence to imprisonment for 20 years, etc., should be construed as a sufficient declaration of the exercise of discretion by the jury, in fixing the period of imprisonment, to authorize judgment on the verdict. Lewis v. State, 51 Ala. 1, 4.

In will.

"Recommend," as used in a will, where testator makes an absolute gift of property, recommending it to be used in a certain way, is sufficient to raise a trust, where the subject and object of the trust are sufficiently certain. Major v. Herndon, 78 Ky. 123, 129; Malim v. Keighley, 2 Ves. Jr. 333, 335.

"Recommend," as used in a will giving property to testator's nephew and reciting that I "recommend my nephew to leave the property, after his own death and the death of his wife, to his son and his children or descendants, and in default of such to Harvard College," should be construed only as advice, and not as obligatory. In re Whitcomb's Estate, 24 Pac. 1028, 86 Cal. 265. See, also, Eberhardt v. Perolin, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 592, 23 Atl. 501.

RECOMMENDATION.

See "Letter of Recommendation."

"Recommendation," as used in Act March 6, 1877, as amended by Act March 5, 1879, prohibiting the sale of vinous or alcoholic liquors, except for medical, chemical, or sacramental purposes, on a prescription or recommendation of a graduated physician, or a regular practitioner of medicine, who has taken the oath prescribed, is substantially the same as prescription. Thompson v. State, 37 Ark. 408, 410.

RECOMMIT.

The words "recommit" and "imprison," as used in Rev. St. c. 158, § 32, providing that any person recommitting or imprisoning any person who shall have been discharged on habeas corpus shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, refer to courts and magistrates, and imply some judicial or ministerial act on their part, and do not extend to proceedings between parents for the custody of an infant child. Beyer v. Vanderkuhlen, 4 N. W. 354, 355, 48 Wis. 320.

RECONCILE.

Harmonize distinguished, see "Harmonize."

RECONSIDER.

"Reconsider," as used in 2 Gen. St. p. 2143, § 107, providing that, upon the return by the mayor of a vetoed ordinance with his objections, the aldermen shall at their regular meeting order the objection entered on the journal, after which they shall proceed to reconsider the same, means the taking up of the matter and discussing it. The word "reconsider" is not given the artificial meaning which it may have acquired in strict parliamentary proceedings, but only the ordinary meaning, which is to think or consider the matter over again, for the purpose of passing upon the matter on such second consideration. Oakley v. Atlantic City, 44 Atl. 651, 652, 63 N. J. Law, 127; Lake v. Ocean City, 41 Atl. 427, 428, 62 N. J. Law, 160.

As a repeal.

A resolution adopted by the city council that a certain ordinance theretofore enacted "be reconsidered" does not amount to a repeal of such ordinance. Ashton v. City of Rochester, 14 N. Y. Supp. 855, 858, 60 Hun, 372.

RECONSIDERATION.

Reconsideration, in parliamentary law, is defined to be taking up for renewed consideration that which has been passed or acted on previously. People v. Delaware County Sup'rs, 63 N. Y. Supp. 317, 319, 48 App. Div. 428.

RECONSTRUCT—RECONSTRUCTION.

"Reconstruct" means to construct again; to rebuild; to form again or renew. Contas v. City of Bradford, 55 Atl. 989, 990, 206 Pa. 291; Farraher v. Keokuk, 111 Iowa, 310, 313, 82 N. W. 773.

To reconstruct means to construct again, or to rebuild; and where an ordinance granting to a street railway the right to use the streets on condition that it should "reconstruct the said streets with the same kind of material used by the borough on the remaining portions of the streets," the company complied with the ordinance by reconstructing the street, which was then macadamized, with the same material used on the remaining portion, and was not liable to part of the expense of a pavement with Belgian blocks, subsequently made by the borough. Norristown v. Norristown Pass. Ry. Co., 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 98, 100.

A building is properly said to be reconstructed when it is rebuilt or restored to its original condition after having been wholly or partially demolished. Vincent v. Frelich, 23 South. 373, 375, 50 La. Ann. 378, 69 Am. St. Rep. 436.

Reconstruction is the act of constructing again, and it has such meaning in the rule that a purchaser may repair, but not reconstruct or reproduce, a patented device or machine. Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson (U. S.) 112 Fed. 146, 150, 50 C. C. A. 159, 55 L. R. A. 692.

7 Wds. & P.—11

"Reconstruction" is but a form of construction, a construction again of what had first been constructed; and hence a statute authorizing aid for the construction of railroads will be construed to provide also for aid in the reconstruction of railroads. Bell v. Maish, 36 N. E. 358, 359, 137 Ind. 226.

As construct on new site.

"Reconstruct," as used in a contract to remove a school building from where it stood and to reconstruct and rebuild it on a new site, so that it should be in suitable and proper condition for school purposes, means to rebuild, and rebuild means to build up again, to build or construct after having been demolished. Cent. Dict. The meaning of the term is not restricted to the erection of a new building on the site of an old one, so that, notwithstanding the schoolhouse was blown down by a storm, it remained possible to reconstruct and rebuild it on the new school site, and thus perform the contract, not only substantially, but strictly and exactly. Board of Education of Bath Tp. v. Townsend, 59 N. E. 228, 224, 63 Ohio St. 514, 52 L. R. A. 868.

Repair distinguished.

"Reconstruct" is not equivalent to "repair." Contas v. City of Bradford, 55 Atl. 989, 990, 206 Pa. 291.

To reconstruct is to construct or build again; so that under an obligation to repair one cannot be compelled to reconstruct. Western Paving & Supply Co. v. Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 26 N. E. 188, 191, 128 Ind. 525, 10 L. R. A. 770, 25 Am. St. Rep. 462 (citing State ex rel. Kansas City v. Corrigan Consol. St. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 263, 55 Am. Rep. 361); Farraher v. City of Keokuk, 82 N. W. 773, 774, 111 Iowa, 310.

While the grounds for a distinction between reconstruction and repair of a patented article would probably differ in a case relating to an article embodying an inventive conception and in a case relating to the same article after the expiration of the patent, when it has become a mere article of manufacture, this would not alter the conclusion that one who buys burned-out electric lamps and filaments, and repairs them, inserting new filaments, reconstructs, and not merely repairs, such lamps. General Electric Co. v. Re-New Lamp Co. (U. S.) 121 Fed. 164, 165.

Where a pavement was taken up, the grade changed, and new sand was used, and part of the bricks used in relaying were new ones, there was a reconstruction, and not a repair, of the pavement, within Ky. St. § 2835, providing that the cost of reconstruction of sidewalks shall be apportioned to the front foot of the adjoining property. Webster defines "repair," as follows: "To restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, as to repair a house, a wall, or a ship." He defines "reconstruction" as follows: "To construct again; to rebuild." In the use of "reconstruction," the Legislature meant to rebuild, to construct again. The mere fact that some of the old material was used does not deprive the work of its proper designation. If a brick house was entirely torn down, and no brick was used in its rebuilding except those that had formerly been in the walls, we should say that it was reconstructed or rebuilt. Levi v. Coyne (Ky.) 57 S. W. 790, 791.

RECONVENTION.

A plea in reconvention is in effect a suit against the plaintiff, and the county court has no jurisdiction over a claim so pleaded, when in excess of the amount over which that court has jurisdiction. Gimbel v. Gomprecht, 35 S. W. 470, 89 Tex. 497; Howard Iron Works v. Buffalo Elevating Co., 81 N. Y. Supp. 452, 459, 81 App. Div. 386.

A plea in reconvention is treated as a suit by the defendant against the plaintiff upon the cause of action set up in the answer. Jefferson Lumber Co. v. Williams, 5 S. W. 672, 678, 68 Tex. 659.

"Reconvention," as the term is used in practice in Texas, means a cross-demand which is more extensive in its nature than set-off or recoupment. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Malin, 10 Sup. Ct. 166, 167, 132 U. S. 531, 33 L. Ed. 450.

In order to sustain a plea in reconvention, the damages must arise out of the same transaction which affords the ground of suit. Hansen v. Yturria (Tex.) 48 S. W. 797.

A reconventional demand is one that a defendant in a suit is permitted by a courtesy of the law to ingraft on the main action, though it is requisite, when the parties reside within the same jurisdiction, that the demand in reconvention should be necessarily connected with and incidental to the principal demand. Suberville v. Adams, 18 South. 652, 653, 47 La. Ann. 68.

RECORD.

See "Actual Record"; "Bilateral Record"; "Books of Record"; "Court of Record"; "Court Not of Record"; "Debt of Record"; "Duly Recorded"; "Final Record"; "Judicial Record"; "Matter of Record"; "Mortgagee of Record"; "Obligation of Record"; "Of Record"; "Public Record"; "Tax Record"; "Title of Record."

At common law a record signifies a roll of parchment on which the proceedings and transactions of the court are entered or drawn up by its officers, and which is then deposited in its treasury "in perpetuum rei memoriam." Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 422, 94 Am. Dec. 742 (citing 3 Steph. Comm. 583; 3 Bl. Comm. 24). But in the United States paper has universally supplanted parchment as the material for the record. Nugent v. Powell (Wyo.) 33 Pac. 23, 25.

In the language of Lord Coke, "records" are memorials or remembrances in rolls or parchments of the proceedings and acts of a court of justice, which hath power to hold plea according to the course of the common law, and are of such incontrollable credit and verity that they admit no averment, plea, or proof to the contrary. O'Connell v. Hotchkiss, 44 Conn. 51, 53; Planters' & Mechanics' Bank v. Chipley, Ga. Dec. 50, 51, pt. 1; Davidson v. Murphy, 13 Conn. 213, 217; Evans v. Tatem (Pa.) 9 Serg. & R. 252, 261, 11 Am. Dec. 717; Field v. Gibbs (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 15, 16. The principle on which the law regards records as of such absolute verity that they cannot be contradicted is obvious. They are memorials of the end of strife, when a dispute has been settled by the judgment of the court. If it were otherwise it would be difficult to see where litigation would end. Davies v. Pettit, 11 Ark. 349, 355.

At common law a record signified a roll of parchment on which the proceedings and transactions of a court were entered or drawn up by its officers, and which was then deposited in its treasury "in perpetuum rei memoriam." Such rolls were termed the "records of the court," and were of such high and supereminent authority that their truth could not be called in question. St. Croix Lumber Co. v. Pennington, 11 N. W. 497, 498, 2 Dak. 467; Planters' & Mechanics' Bank of Columbus v. Chipley, Ga. Dec. 50, 51, pt. 1; Murrah v. State, 51 Miss. 652, 656; Bellas v. McCarty (Pa.) 10 Watts, 13, 24; Adair's Adm'r v. Roger's Adm'r (Ohio) Wright, 423, 429.

A record is substantially a written history of the proceedings from the beginning to the end of the case. A matter of record can be made so merely by inserting it in the record. The best definition of the common-law record in a criminal case under the American practice is found in McKinney v. People, 7 Ill. (2 Gilm.) 552, where it is said that in a criminal case, after the caption, stating the time and place of holding the court, the record should consist of the indictment, properly indorsed, as found by the grand jury, the arraignment of the accused, his plea, the impaneling of the jury, verdict and judgment of the court. United States v. Taylor, 18 Sup. Ct. 479, 480, 147 U. S. 695, 37 L. Ed. 335.

Records are intended to serve as evidence of something written, said, or done, and are not kept to gratify the curious or suspicious. Owens v. Woolridge, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 237, 240.

The term "records," as used in a provision of the Code providing for the admission in evidence of transcribed copies of records of any of the counties of the state, shall be construed to mean any records of county, common-law, circuit, criminal, or chancery court, the register's books, the surveyor's and entry taker's books, and all other public records required by law to be kept in the several courts of this state. Shannon's Code Tenn. 1896, § 3793.

A record is a memorial of a court of justice, which the law deems authentic above all contradiction. Austin v. Rodman, 8 N. O. 71, 75.

The word "record" shall, in the chapter relating to the public records, mean any written or printed book, paper, map, or plan. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 441, c. 35, § 5.

A record is constituted of the pleadings, the acts of the parties in court, and the acts and doings of the jury and court thereon. If advantage is sought of any extrinsic matter which occurs at the trial of an action, or in the course of proceeding, it must be put into the record as a fact or be stated in an exception, and not left to be collected by the court on appeal from the evidence. State v. Godwin, 27 N. C. 401, 403, 44 Am. Dec. 42.

A record states the matters of fact which occur in court. Only that court in which they occur can know what they are. If the clerk makes a slip in drawing it up defectively, or does it falsely, as by inserting a different sum, that the court, the whole record being still with them, may have it properly enrolled by reference to the first note of it, is a proposition which is proved by the stating of it. State v. Cherry, 13 N. O. 550, 554.

Records are the memorials or proceedings of the Legislature and of the king's courts of justice. Lusher v. Scites, 4 W. Va. 11, 15 (citing Phillips on Evidence, col. 1, p. 316).

A record is said to be a history of the most material proceedings in a cause, containing the pleadings, continuances, and whatever further proceedings have been had. Superintendents of Poor of Tompkins County v. Smith (N. Y.) 11 Wend. 181, 182 (citing 3 Bl. Comm. 317).

The record proper ordinarily embraces the original writ, the pleadings, and the entry of verdict and judgment. Bell v. Eddy, 51 S. W. 959, 960, 2 Ind. T. 812 (citing Thomp. Trials).

The "record of a judgment," at common law, was known as the "judgment roll," and this included as well the pleadings, process, etc., as "signing the judgment." Steph. Pl. 24 et seq. Under our practice, while the pleadings, process, etc., are not, as at common law, required to be copied on a parchment roll, or on the record book in which final judgment is entered, they are required to be filed in the office of the clerk; and when a copy of the record of a judgment is required for the purpose of bringing the case by appeal or writ of error into this court, or bring suit upon it in another state, or as evidence in an issue of nul tiel record, or to establish a former adjudication of the same subject-matter between the same parties, and, indeed, in all cases where it is essential to have a complete record of the judgment, the pleadings and process are an indispensable part of it, and the general rule is that, where the copy of the record of a judgment is required, it must be of the whole record, so that the court may determine the legal effect of the whole of it, which may be quite different from that of a part. Vall v. Iglehart, 69 Ill. 332, 334.

A record, in judicial proceedings, is a precise history of the suit from its commencement to its termination, including the conclusion of law thereon, drawn up by the proper officer for the purpose of perpetuating the exact state of facts. State v. Anders, 68 Pac. 668, 64 Kan. 742; Davidson v. Murphy, 13 Conn. 213, 217; Smith v. Jewell, 42 Atl. 657, 659, 71 Conn. 473.

The record of a suit embraces the successive judicial steps which have been taken and are necessary to show jurisdiction and regularity of procedure—the process, writ, or summons, with proof of service; the pleadings, minutes of trial, verdict, and judgment; and also ancillary and interlocutory proceedings, entering into and supporting the action. Wilkinson v. Delaware, L. & W. Ry. Co. (U. S.) 23 Fed. 562, 564 (citing 2 Abb. Law Dict. 388).

The record of a court contains only those things which are essential to a valid proceeding, such as the nature of the issue, the presence of a judge, and, in respect to a jury, that it was of the proper number of proper men, properly qualified and returned by the proper officer. Clifford v. Hudson County Court of Oyer and Terminer, 39 Atl. 909, 61 N. J. Law, 493.

A record is an entire thing. It is composed generally of an orderly and methodical history of what has transpired in a cause in the court whose acts it is designed to perpetuate. It is an engrossment, rather than a copy, of those documents which properly constitute a record, eschewing all foreign and superfluous matter. Kirby v. Cannon, 9 Ind. 371, 374.

tial to give to it a character which the term implies, and it is in such a sense that the word is used in Rev. St. c. 98, § 52, providing that the records of any court of any state shall be admissible in evidence in all cases when duly authenticated. Ordway v. Conroe, 4 Wis. 45, 50.

A record is the history of the cause from its commencement, or issuing of the writ, until final judgment is rendered. Prac. Act, § 101, defines a record as follows: "That the clerk of each court shall in vacation make a complete record of the writ, recognizance of bail, pleadings, orders and judgments or decrees in each cause finally determined at the preceding term." Indorsement of security for costs made after suit brought, no order of court requiring such indorsement appearing in the minutes of the proceedings, is not a part of the record. Noble v. Shearer, 6 Ohio (7 Ham.) 426, 427, pt. 1.

A record is something which is proved by its mere production and inspection, whether of the original or of a copy, and nothing can be construed to be a part of it which does not appear on the face of it to be such, without the aid of oral evidence, explanatory of clerical errors which may have crept into such judicial proceedings, whether errors of omission or errors of commission. This principle applies with peculiar force to bills of exceptions, around the execution of which the law has seen fit to place so many exacting safeguards. Pearce v. Clements, 73 Ala. 256, 258.

A record has been defined to be "a memorial or remembrance in rolls of parchment of the proceedings and acts of a court of justice which has power to hold plea, according to the course of the common law, of real and mixed actions," etc. Co. Litt. 260a. In course of time rolls of parchment fell into disuse, and the usage sprang up of keeping the memorial or remembrance of the proceedings in a book, which was finally designated as the "minute book." In it the clerk of the court keeps a brief account of the proceedings of the court, but such account is never verified or attested by the signature of the judge. It is not, however, the only form of preserving a memorial or remembrance of the proceedings and acts of a court, nor is it the most satisfactory and trustworthy, because it rests entirely on the intelligence and fidelity of the clerk. An order bearing the signature or the initials of the presiding judge must necessarily be at all times more trustworthy. In re Christern, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. (11 Jones & S.) 523, 531.

A record is a memorial or history of judicial proceedings in a case commencing with the writ or complaint and terminating with the judgment. A record, therefore, must be precise and clear, containing proof within itself of every important fact on which the judgment rests, and it cannot exist partly in writing and partly in parol. Its allegations and facts are not the subject of contradiction. Sayles v. Briggs, 45 Mass. (4 Metc.) 421, 423.

Books of corporation.

Under Gen. St. c. 86, § 78 (Rev. Laws, § 3269), giving a stockholder an action against the clerk or recording officer of a corporation for willfully neglecting or refusing to exhibit certain records to such stockholder, the stock ledger and transfer books of a corporation, kept in the usual manner, are such records; for they contain a record of the name of each owner of the capital stock, and the number and description of the shares of such owner, in accordance with the provisions of Gen. St. c. 86, § 9, requiring every corporation to make and keep a record of its corporate doings, etc.—Lewis v. Brainerd, 53 Vt. 510, 515.

Bond.

In Kentucky a bond is not a record. Commonwealth v. Rodes, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 595, 599.

Clerk's certificate.

A certificate of a clerk of court upon a recognizance, showing it to have been filed before the suit was commenced thereon, is a sufficient record. The recognizance itself, being put upon the files of the court, was a record, within the meaning of the law, though not extended on the book of records, and shows upon its face the cause, the caption, and the jurisdiction of the justice; and where the appellant had neglected to furnish copies of the papers necessary to make up an extended record, the clerk's docket, showing an entry of the amount of the debt and costs recovered, may be admitted as a record of the judgment, although the time has elapsed within which the papers can be filed, to authorize the clerk to extend and complete the record, as of the term when judgment was recovered. Leathers v. Cooley, 49 Me. 337, 342.

Deposition.

"Record," as used in Judiciary Act 1875, § 3 (18 Stat. 471), providing that the party applying for the removal of a cause from a state to a federal court must give a bond conditioned that he will enter in the Circuit Court on the first day of its next session a copy of the record in such suit, and in section 7, providing that further time is given in a certain contingency for so filing the copy of record, must be construed as including the process, pleadings, etc., and depositions on file in the cause at the time of filing the petition and bond for removal. Though, technically speaking, a deposition may not be a part of the record, even in a suit in equity, it is a part of the cause, upon which its direct determination may depend, and for this purpose ought to be considered a part of the record. What has been duly or regularly done in the cause up to the time of removal is a part of it, and ought not to be separated from it on removal for trial in the Circuit Court. At common law the term "record" does not include depositions or other evidence used in the trial of a case, unless they are made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions. Miller v. Tobin (U. S.) 18 Fed. 609, 611.

Docket entries.

Where docket entries stand in the place of any other court record, and are recorded by the court, which treats them as the record, they constitute a record within the meaning of the naturalization laws, requiring the proceedings to be recorded by the clerk of the court. In re Coleman (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 49, 57.

The docket is deemed to be a record of a case until a more extended one is made, and the same rules of imported verity apply to the docket entries as to the completed record; and when the record in the case has not been fully extended the docket entries may be read to the jury in support of the allegation of a former conviction. State v. Simpson, 39 Atl. 286, 91 Me. 77.

An execution docket is a part of the record. The discharge of a debt by levy and sale appears on that docket, and, if money is paid on execution and without a sale, that appears generally, if not always, on the execution docket, and on that docket the plaintiff or his attorney writes the satisfaction. Appeal of Fricker (Pa.) 1 Watts, 393, 395.

Entry of judgment under power.

The record of the entry of a judgment by the prothonotary under a power contained in the instrument is a record of the court, and has all the qualities of a judgment on a verdict. It imports absolute verity. Kostenbader v. Kuebler, 48 Atl. 972, 199 Pa. 246, 85 Am. St. Rep. 783.

Exceptions.

A record proper, by law, is a petition and summons and all subsequent pleadings, including the verdict and judgment. Exceptions are strictly no part of the record, unless made so by being incorporated in a bill of exceptions. Bateson v. Clark, 37 Mo. 31, 34.

A bill of exceptions, prepared, authenticated, and filed in accordance with Cr. Prac. Act, §§ 433-438, becomes and constitutes a portion of the record of the action in criminal cases. People v. Trim, 37 Cal. 274, 275. See, also, Glaser v. Hackett, 20 South. 820, 821, 38 Fla. 84; State v. Clifford, 16 N. W. 25, 27, 58 Wis. 113.

"The record proper ordinarily embraces the original writ, the pleadings, and the entry of verdict and judgment. If error is established on the face of the record proper, it may be corrected in a court of error, unless there are statutes changing the common-law rule, without the necessity of a bill of exceptions. Whenever it is desired to present for review in an appellate court a ruling of the trial court which does not appear upon the face of the record proper, an exception must be taken to the ruling at the time when it was made, and a bill of exceptions must be drawn up, embodying a statement of the ruling, and showing that an exception thereto was reserved at the time when the ruling was made." Severs v. Northern Trust Co., 35 S. W. 232, 233, 1 Ind. T. 1 (quoting 2 Thomp. Trials, § 2771); Bell v. Eddy, 51 S. W. 959, 960, 2 Ind. T. 312.

Execution and recognizance.

An execution, when returned, is a record; and a recognizance, indorsed on the execution and returned, is a record also. Ingram v. Allen, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 166, 167.

Fraudulent record.

Where a town clerk copies a deed delivered to him to be recorded in a book which has ceased to be a book for recording for a number of years, and does not insert the names in the alphabet, for the purpose of concealment and fraud, such deed is not recorded, within the meaning of the recording act, and is therefore no notice to subsequent purchasers or attaching creditors. Sawyer v. Adams, 8 Vt. 172, 175, 30 Am. Dec. 459.

Index.

Under Gen. St. c. 132, § 2, requiring a mortgage of chattels to be recorded when possession of the property is not delivered to the mortgagee, and section 12, providing that such mortgage shall not be valid against any person except the mortgagor, etc., unless so recorded, and section 17, requiring the town clerk to keep a book of records for personal mortgages, and to keep an alphabetical index of the mortgagors and mortgagees, which records and index shall be open to public inspection, the index constitutes no part of the record essential to the title, and the record of a chattel mortgage is not invalidated by the failure of the town clerk to index it. Chase v. Bennett, 58 N. H. 428, 429; Id., 59 N. H. 394.

Judge's private memorandum.

"Record," as used in Rev. St. p. 208, c. 22, § 69, providing that every person who shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit any record, shall be deemed guilty of forgery, means a written memorial made by a public officer authorized by law to perform that function, and intended to serve as evidence of something written, said, or done; and hence a probate judge's memorandum book, not required by law to be kept, but which was merely a convenient book of reference in which entries were made generally by the probate judge, who was acting as trustee for the occupants of lots, containing memoranda purporting to give the names of certain persons who had made applications for lots, the dates such applications were made, whether a deed for the lot or lots applied for had been executed, and in some cases where adverse filings had been made on the same lots, and various other minutes, which could only be made intelligible by oral testimony, is not a record within the meaning of the statute. Downing v. Brown, 3 Colo. 571, 590.

Judgment.

The provision of the federal Constitution that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the "records and judicial proceedings of every other state," should not be construed to embrace every judgment in fact. On the other hand, the words may rationally be satisfied by limitation to such judgments only as are duly rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction against those who appear and defend, or who were legally notified to appear; and hence a judgment obtained in another state against a person who had no legal notice to appear, and who did not in fact appear, is of no validity and impeachable. Aldrich v. Kinney, 4 Conn. 380, 386, 10 Am. Dec. 151.

Justice's docket.

The docket of a justice is not technically a record, and, though great latitude has been applied in some cases in explaining it, it is not liable as a whole to be contradicted by parol evidence. Niles v. Totman (N. Y.) 3 Barb. 594, 597.

The word "record," as used in Mills' Ann. St. § 2794, requiring justices of the peace to keep a record of their proceedings, is used in the sense of "docket," and therefore the statute does not constitute a court of a justice of the peace a court of record, importing absolute verity to the entries in the docket, but such record may be impeached by parol. Hamill v. Ferrier, 45 Pac. 522, 523, 8 Colo. App. 286.

Justices' judgments.

Justices' judgments are not records, and do not prove themselves. They resemble records in that their merits are not examinable in an original suit, but they must be established, nevertheless, by parol evidence. Hamilton v. Wright, 11 N. C. 283, 286.

Land office books.

The words "enrollment, registry, or record," in a statute making it criminal to deface any registry or record, are not confined to records of courts of justice. Every registry or enrollment directed by law and preserved for the use of the public is embraced by this act of assembly. It extends without doubt to the public books in the land office. Ream v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 3 Serg. & R. 207-209.

Marriage license.

In Kentucky a marriage license or bond is not a record. Commonwealth v. Rhodes, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 595, 599.

Mittimus.

Under R. L. § 828, requiring justices of the peace to keep a record of their judicial proceedings, proceedings down to and including the final judgment are included. The section does not, however, include a mittimus. State v. Malloy, 54 Vt. 96, 99.

Orders and rules.

A record is an entire thing. It is composed generally of an orderly and methodical history of what has transpired in the cause in the court whose acts it is intended to perpetuate. In Wall v. State, 23 Ind. 150, it was held to be an immemorial usage of the state to depend upon the statement of the clerk for many things in a transcript, such as the identity of papers, the chronological order of proceedings, and like matters which give the transcript approved form as a connected history of the cause from its inception until the end. Entry by the clerk of orders or rules of the court are legitimate parts of the record. Crystal Ice Co. v. Morris (Ind.) 61 N. E. 968, 969.

As papers in former suit.

Where by an agreed statement of facts the record of another suit is made a part thereof, the word "record" means the papers in the original action. Glidden v. Whipple, 49 Atl. 997, 999, 23 R. I. 304.

Papers on appeal to Circuit Court of Appeals.

The document required by C. C. A. Rule 14 (31 C. C. A. civ. 90 Fed. civ.), on appeal thereto, consisting of a true copy of the record in the trial court, bill of exceptions, assignments, and all proceedings in the cause, including the opinion of the court below, all under the hand and seal of the clerk, called by said rule, in case of writ of error, a "return" thereto, is a record, within Rev. St. § 828, allowing to the clerk for "making any record, certificate, return, or report, for each folio, 15 cents." Preparation thereof is not a mere copying of a paper, fee for which is 10 cents per folio. McIlwaine v. Ellington (U. S.) 99 Fed. 138.

Plat book.

A plat book, compiled by a county auditor, is not a copy of "records or entries or papers belonging to any public office," within the meaning of Code Iowa, § 3702, providing that such copies, when certified, shall be evidence of equal credibility with the original records, etc. Heinrichs v. Terrell, 21 N. W. 171, 173, 65 Iowa, 25.

As both pleas and docket.

It is said that the writ, new pleas, and executions are the record, and it is also said that the docket is the record. Both assertions are partially true. They are both together the whole record. Pleas are not found, except on the docket, in most cases; the judgment is found only on the docket; satisfaction is generally only found there; and every rule in the progress of the cause is found on some of the dockets. Appeal of Fricker (Pa.) 1 Watts, 393, 395.

Preliminary proofs of naturalization.

The preliminary proofs in naturalization proceedings, having thereon the initials of the presiding judge, on being filed in the clerk's office with the oath of allegiance, constitute a record or roll of the judgment admitting to citizenship. In re Christern, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. (11 Jones & S.) 523, 531.

Private act.

The word "records" in the federal Constitution, declaring that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state," includes a private act or statute; and, if proof of it is necessary, it is proven to the court, and must be as records. The only difference is that in the state in which they are passed public acts require no proof, for they are presumed to be within the knowledge of the court, while private acts are to be proven, but they are to be proven as records and authenticated under the seal of the state in which they are passed. Bennington Iron Co. v. Rutherford, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 467, 478.

Proofs of will.

Under Laws 1850, p. 143, providing that the exemplification of any record for any last will and testament proved before the surrogate of any county in a state, etc., shall be received in evidence, etc., the record included the proofs as well as the will, and unless the exemplification in like manner extended to both the will was inadmissible. Hill v. Crockford, 24 N. Y. 128, 129.

Recorded mortgage.

Under the statute of the state of New York entitled "Of the proof and recording of conveyances, and the cancellation of mortgages" (1 Rev. St. N. Y. c. 3, p. 756), which expressly classes mortgages on real estate as "conveyances of real estate," and includes them within that term, and which provides, also, that, when duly acknowledged and proved, they may be read in evidence without any further proof thereof, when duly recorded, in accordance with the statutes of that state, in the office of the clerk or register of the county wherein the lands lie, or a transcript thereof, duly certified, may be read in evidence with like force and effect as the original, the record of a mortgage on real estate is a record, within the scope and meaning of the term "records," as used in article 4, § 1, of the Constitution of the United States; and it can be exemplified under Act Cong. March 27, 1804, and read and used in evidence in the courts of this state with the same faith and credit, and with such force and effect, as is given the record by the statute of the state of New York. Chase v. Caryl, 31 Atl. 1024, 1030, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 545.

Reporter's notes.

In California it is held that the record on appeal does not include the reporter's notes. Hanna v. De Garmo, 73 Pac. 830, 831, 140 Cal. 172.

Satisfaction of judgment.

"A record is a memorial of what has been done; authentic written evidence, considered as either public or private, but usually public." And. Law Dict. p. 860. "A writing by which some act, or event, or a number of acts or events, is recorded." Webst. Int. Dict. p. 1200. The word "record," in Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2016, making it an offense to alter any court record, includes an indorsement of payment and satisfaction on the record of a judgment by one authorized to make it. State v. Henning, 63 N. E. 207, 208, 158 Ind. 196.

A satisfaction piece is not a record, and until entered on the roll it does not partake of the nature of a record; nor does the statutory provision on the subject, directing the mode of its acknowledgment, give it that character or effect. Lownds v. Remsen (N. Y.) 7 Wend. 35, 40.

Testimony.

The word "record," as used in the judicial act of 1875, relating to the removal of actions from state to federal courts, includes the testimony taken and on file in a cause at the time of filing a petition and bond for its removal from a state court. Miller v. Tobin (U. S.) 18 Fed. 609, 611.

Trade-mark record.

The legal record of a trade-mark in another state is a record in the office of the Secretary of State, as required by Pol. Code, § 8197. Whittier v. Dietz, 4 Pac. 986, 66 Cal. 78.

Unauthorized record.

A record of a court has a fixed judicial meaning, and certain requisites are essential to give it the character which the term implies. The fixed characteristics of a record are that it must be of and concerning a proceeding in court or within the official powers of an officer, and it must be made under such conditions that the officer was authorized by law to act and to do the thing done, whereby it can alone become a record within the meaning of the law; and the transcribing of a deed upon the records of his office by a clerk of the county court was not an official act, and it did not constitute a record, because it was transcribed on a book in which the records should be kept by an officer alone authorized to make such entry, for the reason that the act was neither permitted nor required by law. Heintz v. Thayer, 50 S. W. 929, 930, 92 Tex. 658.

RECORD (Verb).

"To record" means to recite, to repeat, to transcribe. Montgomery Beer Bottling Works v. Gaston, 126 Ala. 425, 446, 28 South. 497, 51 L. R. A. 396, 85 Am. St. Rep. 42.

The requirement of the statute as to the recording of liens on personal property sold conditionally is satisfied by the mere lodgment of the memorandum in the town clerk's office. Fairbanks v. Davis, 50 Vt. 251.

"Record," as used in Comp. St. c. 23, § 9, providing for the acceptance and record of the report of commissioners appointed to set off dower in the probate court, "is used in the sense of 'confirm,' that is, if the assignment of dower by the commissioners is satisfactory to the judge, then he should accept and record the same." Serry v. Curry, 42 N. W. 97, 100, 26 Neb. 353.

Rev. St. c. 132, § 2, provides for chattel mortgages, and requires that "possession must be delivered to and retained by the mortgagee, or the mortgage must be recorded in the office of the clerk of the town in which the mortgagor resides." A chattel mortgage was delivered to a town clerk, with directions not to record it until further notice. The mortgage was not, in fact, recorded. It could not be deemed as recorded until such notice was given, notwithstanding the fact that the clerk, on receiving it, entered on the instrument the day and hour of its reception. Town v. Griffith, 17 N. H. 165, 169.

A paper is recorded within a statute providing that it should be lodged with the clerk and be recorded when lodged in the office, whether ever in fact recorded or not. Beverley v. Ellis (Va.) 1 Rand. 102. The court said that the lodgment with the clerk was all that the law demanded, and that the words "recorded according to the direction of the act" imposed no further duty. Horsley v. Garth (Va.) 2 Grat. 471, 473, 44 Am.

Dec. 393, holds that it is enough to leave the paper with the clerk. It seems to be the general current of authority that, when the document is lodged in the proper office, the recordation exists—is done. Troy Wagon Co. v. Hutton, 44 S. E. 135, 53 W. Va. 154.

Though the statute does not expressly require that the doings of the selectmen in laying out a road shall be recorded, yet the language of the statute strongly implies that their doings must be recorded, and the court has no doubt that their acts should be recorded; yet, when the doings of the selectmen are returned to the town clerk and put on file, they are well enough recorded within the meaning of the statute. Hardy v. Houston, 2 N. H. 309, 310.

As register.

The word "recorded," as used in St. 1888, c. 393, invalidating a mortgage of real estate recorded more than four months after its date, as against an assignee in insolvency relates to the record made in the registry of deeds, where a mortgage of real estate, in order to be effectual, is required by law to be recorded. Harriman v. Woburn Electric Light Co., 39 N. E. 1004, 1005, 163 Mass. 85.

The word "record," as used in Pub. St. c. 126, § 18, giving a right of action against the grantor in a deed to an assignee of the grantee for breach of covenant against incumbrances, where the incumbrance appears of record, is to be construed as meaning the record in the registry of deeds, as it is the proper place for recording deeds or instruments conveying land or any other interest therein, and is the place where any person examining a title would look for such records. The term does not include records of a court or of a city or town, and therefore does not apply to a record of court showing a lien for unpaid taxes. Carter v. Peak, 138 Mass. 439, 441.

As transcribe.

To record an abstract in a judgment record means to transcribe it upon the book required to be kept for that purpose, and when the abstract is transcribed the act of recording is complete. Vidor v. Rawlins, 54 S. W. 1026, 1027, 93 Tex. 259.

The word "recorded," in ordinary usage, signifies copied or transcribed in some permanent book. It is in this sense that the word "recorded" is used in Civ. Code, § 1213, declaring that every conveyance of real property, acknowledged or proved and certified and recorded, from the time it is filed with the recorder for record, is constructive notice of the contents thereof to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees. Cady v. Purser, 63 Pac. 844, 846, 131 Cal. 552, 82 Am. St. Rep. 391.

RECORD OF SPANISH GOVERNMENT.

As used in Rev. Code 1845, p. 469, § 13, prescribing that a copy of any "record of the French or Spanish governments" deposited in the office of the recorder of any county, being duly certified by him, shall be received in evidence with like effect as the original, should be construed to include instruments of conveyance executed in the presence of a Spanish lieutenant governor and deposited among the archives of the Spanish government. Charleville v. Chouteau, 18 Mo. 492, 590.

RECORD TITLE.

The words "record title," as used in St. 1893, c. 340, providing that, whenever the record title of real property is clouded, those interested therein may petition to compel the supposed claimant to bring action to try his claim, do not extend to deeds in which the grantor purports to convey the land of others, when no authority to make the conveyance appears of record in the registry of deeds or elsewhere. A deed executed by an attorney, if the power of attorney is not recorded, conveys no record title. The grantee in an administrator's deed, which purports to be given under an order of the probate court, the record of that court failing to show any authority in the administrator to make the conveyance, has no record title. Arnold v. Reed, 88 N. E. 1132, 162 Mass. 438.

A record title (St. 1893, c. 340, § 1) is given to a grantee in a conveyance by deed of quitclaim of real estate or land acquired by adverse possession, so as to entitle him to maintain proceedings to quiet title, as Pub. St. c. 120, § 2, provides that such a deed shall be sufficient to convey all the estate which could lawfully be conveyed by deed of bargain and sale. Ex parte Connelley, 46 N. E. 618, 619, 168 Mass. 201.

RECORDER OF DEEDS.

A recorder of deeds is defined in Mech-em, Pub. Off. § 733, to be "a ministerial officer whose duties are owing chiefly to those particular individuals who have occasion to employ him and to whom he usually looks for his compensation." Luther v. Banks, 36 S. E. 826, 828, 111 Ga. 374.

RECORDARI.

"A recordari is a substitute for an appeal from a judgment of a court not of record, where the appeal has been lost by fraud or accident." Critchler v. McCadden, 64 N. C. 262, 263.

RECOUNT.

The word "recount," in Laws 1896, c. 909, § 84, requiring a recount of votes in case the total number shown by the tally sheet to have been canvassed does not conform to the poll books and ballot clerk's return, means a recount of the ballots which were canvassed and recorded on the tally sheet, on the theory that the mistake is due to the fact that the tally sheet has not set forth in its various columns all the ballots subject to canvass. The recount does not seem to refer to the reckoning made by the inspectors when they first open the ballot boxes, because the law does not deem that reckoning a count until it agrees or is made to agree with the poll books and the very ballot clerk's return which is declared by the statute to establish a mistake in a count. "I think the term 'recount' does not require that in the first instance there should be a recanvass, in the sense that the votes actually distributed to the various columns of the tally sheet by the canvass already made should be redistributed therein. For the sum that presents the mistake is that which is designed and required to account for all ballots." The statute does not require a recounting of the ballots purporting to have been canvassed and recorded on the tally sheets. In re Stiles, 75 N. Y. Supp. 278, 281, 69 App. Div. 589.

RECOUPMENT.

Recoupment is a right of defendant to have a deduction from the amount of plaintiff's damages for the reason that the plaintiff has not complied with the cross-obligations or independent covenants arising under the same contract. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3756.

"If the defendant is made liable for the conversion or the price of a chattel which he has himself repaired or essentially enhanced the value of, at his own expense, under the belief that the title was in himself, he is not to be made liable for that portion of the value which he has himself contributed. This is called 'recoupment.'" Barber v. Chapin, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 413.

Recoupment is not always a subsisting claim. If the disseisor erects permanent improvements, he may, when called upon to respond in damages, recoup what he has so expended. Kneedler v. Sternberg (N. Y.) 10 How. Prac. 67, 72 (citing Coulter's Case, 5 Coke, 131).

Recoupment implies that the plaintiff's claim was to be allowed, and that another cause of action was to be satisfied out of it. Xenia Branch Bank v. Lee, 15 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Bosw.) 694, 707.

As growing out of contract in suit.

Recoupment is defined as the right of the defendant in the same action to claim damages from the person either because he has not complied with some obligation of the contract on which he sues or because he has violated some duty which the law imposes on him in the making or performance of the contract. Lawton v. Ricketts, 16 South. 59, 60, 104 Ala. 430; Dillon Beebe's Son v. Eakle, 27 S. E. 214, 217, 43 W. Va. 502; Phillips v. Sun Dyeing, Bleaching & Calendering Co., 10 R. I. 458, 460; Scatchard v. Memphis Towing, Barge & Derrick Co., 52 S. W. 153, 154, 102 Tenn. 282.

In speaking of matters to be shown in defense, the term "recoupment" is often used as synonymous with "reduction." The term is of French origin, and signifies "cutting again" or "cutting back," and as a defense means the cutting back on the plaintiff's claim by defendant. Like "reduction," it is of necessity limited to the amount of the plaintiff's claim. It is properly applicable to a case where the same contract imposes mutual duties and obligations on the two parties, and one seeks a remedy for the breach of duty by the second, and the second meets the demand by a claim for a breach of duty by the first. It is sometimes difficult to discriminate set-off from reduction or recoupment. The former bears so close analogy to both of the latter, and is so often mingled with them by the facts of a case as to render it difficult to determine in which form the opposing demand should be brought against the plaintiff's claim. Davenport v. Hubbard, 46 Vt. 200, 207, 14 Am. Rep. 620.

Recoupment springs out of the contract or transaction between the parties. A plea which sets up a breach of a contract, in support of a claim of set-off or recoupment, must be as distinct and unambiguous as if suing directly for a breach of a contract. Anslay v. Bank of Piedmont, 21 South. 59, 62, 113 Ala. 467, 59 Am. St. Rep. 122.

Recoupment or reduction of a demand is said to arise where there is an action on a contract, and there has been a breach of the contract, or some divisible part of it or obligation connected with it. C. Aultman & Co. v. Torrey, 57 N. W. 211, 55 Minn. 492 (citing And. Law Dict.).

Recoupment is favored in law to prevent circuity of action and multiplicity of suits, and arises where one party to a contract is permitted to set up as a defense any damage he may have received by reason of the failure of the other party to comply with his contract in all matters involved in the contract. Penn Steel Casting & Machine Co. v. Wilmington Malleable Iron Co. (Del.) 41 Atl. 236, 239, 1 Pennewill, 337.

In recoupment both the cause of action in the plaintiff and the right to recoup in the defendant grow out of the same subject-matter, and are correlative. Dietrich v. Ely (U. S.) 63 Fed. 413, 11 C. C. A. 266.

Recoupment signifies reduction, and originally a defendant could only secure a reduction of the amount of recovery by recoupment. It has been steadily held that recoupment is only proper in cases where the defendant's claim grows out of the same contract or transaction as that on which the plaintiff's cause of action is founded. Jewett Car Co. v. Kirkpatrick Const. Co. (U. S.) 107 Fed. 622, 625.

As counterclaim.

See, also, "Counterclaim."

The word "recoup," as used in the case of Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Durant Land Imp. Co., 144 N. Y. 34, 89 N. E. 7, holding that "the tenant in a suit for rent can recoup any damages for a breach of the covenants to repair, and the landlord, if sued by the tenant for a breach of the covenants on his part, could counterclaim the rent reserved by the lease," was employed in the sense of "counterclaim." Ely v. Spiero, 51 N. Y. Supp. 124, 126, 28 App. Div. 485.

Recovery exceeding plaintiff's demand.

A defense by way of recoupment denies the validity of the plaintiff's cause of action to so large an amount as he claims. It is not an independent cross-claim, like a separate and distinct debt, or item of account due from the plaintiff, but is confined to matters arising out of, or connected with, the transaction or contract which forms the basis of plaintiff's action. It goes only in abatement or reduction of plaintiff's claim, and can be used as a substitute only to the extent of plaintiff's demand. No judgment can be obtained by the defendant for any balance in his favor. McHardy v. Wadsworth, 8 Mich. 349. The doctrine of recoupment is but a liberal and beneficial improvement on the old doctrine of failure of consideration. It looks through the whole contract, treating it as an entirety, and treating the things done and stipulated to be done on one side as the consideration for the things done or stipulated to be done on the other. Grisham v. Bodman, 20 South. 514, 515, 111 Ala. 194 (citing Lufburrow v. Henderson, 30 Ga. 482).

Recoupment implies that the plaintiff had a cause of action. The doctrine of recoupment was generally confined to damages for nonperformance of the same contract sued on. Since the Code of 1852, however, it seems that, if defendant's demand is sufficient, a defendant may not only defeat the plaintiff's claim by recoupment, but recover a balance, notwithstanding the former rule to the effect that, in cases of recoupment, a defendant could only use his claim to defeat that of the plaintiff. Boston Silk & Woollen Mills v. Eull (N. Y.) 37 How. Prac. 299, 301.

Analogous to failure of consideration.

Recoupment at common law was a claim for reduction of the amount due to the party. It was defined in Practice Act, § 129, in these words: "In actions on contracts, whether under seal or not, defendant may set up as a defense in abatement of the damages to be recovered by plaintiff a defect in or partial failure of the consideration of the contract sued on. The defendant may also recoup all damages which he may have sustained by reason of any cause of action arising out of contracts or transactions set forth in plaintiff's declaration as the foundation of plaintiff's demand or connected with the subject of the action." The doctrine of recoupment had been adopted in courts of equity long before it was introduced by statute into the practice of courts of law. In substance and effect it may be likened to the reduction of the amount recoverable on a contract because of failure of consideration. Norton v. Sinkhorn, 50 Atl. 506, 508, 63 N. J. Eq. 313.

In Barbour's Law of Set-Off it is laid down that "there is a species of defense, somewhat analogous to set-off in character, which a defendant in some cases is allowed to make, and which is called 'recoupment.' This is where the defense is not presented as a matter of set-off arising on an independent contract, but for the purpose of reducing the plaintiff's damages, for the reason that he himself has not complied with the cross-obligations arising under the same contract." Recoupment in its origin was a mere right to deduct from the amount of the plaintiff's recovery, on the ground that his damages were not really as high as alleged. Grand Lodge of Masons v. Knox, 20 Mo. 433, 437.

Recoupment is a reduction of the plaintiff's claim by a counterclaim in favor of defendant, where the claim and counterclaim both grow out of the same contract or transaction. It is a proper defense where through the plaintiff's fault the defendant has failed to receive the full benefit of the contract on which plaintiff is suing him, or where defendant is entitled to damages from plaintiff for fraudulent representations made during the negotiations of the contract in regard to its subject-matter. Phillips v. Sun Dyeing, Bleaching & Calendering Co., 10 R. I. 458, 460.

Recoupment is, as the word implies, the cutting out or reduction of a part of a creditor's demand, and is based upon some failure of the creditor to comply with the terms of the contract out of which the debt sued upon arises. See "Recoup," And. Law Dict. It goes directly to the amount due the plaintiff. The defendant, asserting such right, does not admit his indebtedness to plaintiff and seek to set off against it an indebtedness due from plaintiff to himself. He insists that plaintiff has in some material respect failed to perform his part of the contract on which the suit is based, and that by reason of such failure he has never become indebted to plaintiff to the full amount of the agreed price. His counter demand goes directly to the amount due the plaintiff, and, while perhaps not strictly a defense, it has often been spoken of as such, or, at least, as a partial defense. Medart Patent Pulley Co. v. Dubuque Turbine & Roller Mill Co., 96 N. W. 770, 771, 121 Iowa, 244.

Recoupment was the right which the defendant had in the early period of the common law of showing that the plaintiff had not sustained damages to the extent alleged, and thus to reduce or altogether defeat the plaintiff's recovery. It was of very limited application, and could only be resorted to when the defendant insisted upon a deduction from the plaintiff's demand arising from payment in part or in whole, or former recovery, or some analogous fact. "Recoupe," or "recoupment," in its original sense, was a mere right of deduction from the amount of the plaintiff's recovery, on the ground that his damages were not nearly as high as alleged. Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281, 286 (citing Sedg. Dam. [2d Ed.] c. 17, p. 431).

As an incomplete defense.

The word "recoupment" comes from the French "recouper"—to cut again; or to cut out, to keep back—and hence it is not proper to recoup under a plea in bar. The Wells-ville v. Geissie, 3 Ohio St. 333, 341.

Recoupment is a matter which is never pleaded in bar. It is in the nature of a cross-action. The right of the plaintiff to sue is admitted; but the defendant says he has been injured by the breach of another branch of the same contract on which the action is founded, and claims to stop, cut off, or keep back so much of the plaintiff's damages as will satisfy the damages which have been sustained by the defendant. If such a matter could be pleaded in bar of the action, it would be necessary to aver that the defendant's damages exceeded, or were at the least equal to, those due to the plaintiff; for otherwise the plea would not answer the whole action, and would be bad for that reason. But it is not a case for pleading in bar under any circumstances. Nichols v. Dusenbury, 2 N. Y. 283, 286.

"Recoupment cannot be exercised under a plea the office of which is to set up a complete bar; and hence, in an action of assumpsit based on a written contract, the defense to which is that the same was procured by fraud, going to the whole action, the doctrine of recoupment is not applicable." Dillon Beebe's Son v. Bakle, 27 S. E. 214, 217, 43 W. Va. 502.

Recoupment is applicable only to claims in favor of a defendant, arising in his favor out of the very contract or transaction in respect to which he is sued, and when plaintiff counts upon a contract which defendants deny altogether the doctrine of recoupment is not applicable. Morehouse v. Baker, 48 Mich. 335, 339, 12 N. W. 170.

Equivalent to new action.

A plea in recoupment is in the nature of a new suit begun by defendant against the plaintiff, and a joinder in issue on such a plea, along with the general issue to the complaint, places on the defendant the burden of proving all the material allegations of the plea. Moore v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 23 South. 798, 801, 118 Ala. 563.

"Recoupment" is, in substance and effect, a cross-action, and, unless the party attempted to be subjected to it could be compelled to respond to damages by an independent action against him, he cannot be reached by recoupment. Widrig v. Taggart, 51 Mich. 103, 104, 16 N. W. 251.

As a partial defense.

"The meaning of recoupment is a reduction of damages claimed. In all the adjudicated cases in England and in this state in which recoupment has been allowed, it has been described as a partial defense, and for this reason it has been deemed necessary for the party claiming to recoup to give notice of that fact, not as a substitute for a plea, but for the purpose of preventing surprise to the opposite party. McCullough v. Cox (N. Y.) 6 Barb. 383, 391.

Set-off distinguished.

See, also, "Set-Off."

By Code, §§ 2909, 2910, recoupment and set-off are distinguished; recoupment being made to apply where both parties rely on the same contract, and set-off where they urge different contracts. Fontaine v. Baxley, 17 S. E. 1015, 1018, 90 Ga. 416.

Set-off differs from recoupment in that it is more properly applicable to demands independent in their nature and origin, while recoupment implies a cutting down of a demand by deductions arising out of the same transaction. St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Gay, 35 Pac. 876, 877, 101 Cal. 286.

Recoupment differs from set-off in several important particulars: First, it is confined to matters arising out of the same transaction; second, it has no regard to whether the claim be liquidated or unliquidated; third, if the defendant's claim exceeds the plaintiff's, he cannot in that action recover the balance due to him. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 833, 838, 31 Am. Rep. 775.

Recoupment is contradistinguished from set-off in these three essential particulars: (1) In being confined to matters arising out of and connected with the transaction or contract on which the suit is brought; (2) in having no regard to whether such matter is recorded or unrecorded; (3) that the judgment is not the subject of statutory regulations, but is controlled by the rules of the common law. Myers v. Estell, 47 Miss. 4, 23.

Actions in tort.

Recoupment is a species of common-law set-off for damages due the defendant growing out of the same transaction, and is allowed in Maryland in actions both ex contractu and ex delicto, in order to avoid circuity and multiplicity of actions. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Haines, 28 Atl. 393, 394, 78 Md. 454, 23 L. R. A. 652.

Recoupment is a species of common-law set-off for damages due defendant growing out of transaction sued on. It has been allowed in Maryland in actions both ex contractu and ex delicto. Matter of defense or recoupment is raised under the general issue by way of defense. Lee v. Rutledge, 51 Md. 311, 318.

Unliquidated demand.

While recoupment "originally merely implied a deduction from the plaintiff's demand arising from payment in whole or in part, or from recovery, or some analogous fact, it is now understood to embrace counterclaims of the defendant, and to be, in short, a kind of regular and unliquidated set-off, which has crept in, notwithstanding the rigorous terms of the statute." "Recoup," it is said, "is synonymous with 'defalc' or 'discount.' It is now uniformly applied when a man brings an action for a breach of contract between himself and the defendant, and the latter can show that some stipulation in the same agreement is made by the plaintiff which he has violated. The defendant may, if he choose, instead of suing in his turn, recoup his damages arising from the breach committed by the plaintiff, whether liquidated or not." Hatchett v. Gibson, 13 Ala. 587, 594 (quoting Sedg. Dam. 461; Ives v. Van Eppes [N. Y.] 22 Wend. 155, 156).

Recoupment arises out of matters connected with the transaction or contract on which plaintiff's cause of action is founded, and it matters not whether it be liquidated or unliquidated. It is not dependent on any statutory regulation, but is controlled by the principles of the common law. Raymond v. State, 54 Miss 562, 563, 28 Am. Rep. 382.

"Recoup" is synonymous with "defalc" or "discount." It is keeping back something which is due, because there is an equitable reason to withhold it, and is now uniformly applied where a man brings an action for breach of contract between him and the defendant, and the latter can show that some stipulation in the same contract was made by the plaintiff which he has violated. The defendant may, if he choose, instead of suing in his turn, recoup his damages arising from the breach committed by the plaintiff, whether they be liquidated or not. The law will cut off so much of the plaintiff's claim as the cross-damages may come to. Ives v. Van Eppes (N. Y.) 22 Wend. 155. The force of the remedy by recoupment is spent in the discount or abatement of the plaintiff's claim, either partially or wholly, as the case may be. Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281, 290.

RECOURSE.

See "With Recourse"; "Without Recourse."

Where a note provided, "if recourse is had to the collaterals, any excess of collaterals shall be applicable to any other note against the maker hereof," the word "recourse" signified a going back to or resort to them for the purpose of obtaining payment of the note, and hence the mere giving of a notice of intention to sell the collaterals did not amount to recourse thereto. Winkler v. Magdeburg, 76 N. W. 332, 334, 100 Wis. 421.

The word "recourse," in an act of sale excluding recourse as well as warranty, "carries but one idea, and that is that there shall be no reversion or coming back upon the seller in consequence of anything which might happen to the buyer because of his purchase of the property. No recourse means no access to; no return; no coming back upon; no assumption of any liability whatsoever; no looking to the party using the term for any reimbursement in case of loss or damage or failure of consideration in that which was the cause, the motive, the object, of the undertaking or contract." Lyons v. Fitzpatrick, 27 South. 110, 111, 52 La. Ann. 697.

RECOVER—RECOVERY.

See "Action for the Recovery of Real Estate"; "Common Recovery"; "Final Recovery"; "Net Recovery."

To recover, in law, is to recover anything or the value thereof by judgment, as if a man sue for any land or other thing, movable or immovable, and have a verdict or judgment for same. Norton v. Winter, 1 Or. 47, 48 (citing 5 Jac. Law Dict. p. 401).

To recover means to obtain by course of law; to succeed in a trial. Gawtry v. Adams, 10 Mo. App. 29; Hoover v. Clark's Adm'rs, 7 N. C. 169, 171.

Webster's International Dictionary defines "recover" as "to get or obtain again; to get renewed possession of; to win back; to regain." Kinney's Law Dictionary says: "Recover means to obtain by course of law; to obtain by means of an action; to succeed in an action." Anderson's Law Dictionary in substance defines "recover" as meaning to obtain by course of law. Leslie v. York, 68 S. W. 751, 112 Ky. 712.

Recovery is the obtaining of a thing by the judgment of court as the result of an action brought for the purpose. Keiny v. Ingraham (N. Y.) 63 Barb. 250 (citing Burrill, Law Dict.).

"Recovery," as used in the Political Code, relating to fines, forfeitures, etc., and providing that they shall be paid out of the treasury for the use of the county where the person against whom the recovery is had resides, is employed in its ordinary sense, and means a recovery had by process and course of law. People v. Reis, 18 Pac. 309, 313, 76 Cal. 269.

Recovery of real property means nothing more than to obtain by judicial proceedings, and the term is so used in Comp. Laws, p. 67, § 263, providing that, in actions for the recovery of real property, the issues of fact arising therein shall be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived. Friend v. Oggshaw, 3 Wyo. 59, 60, 31 Pac. 1047, 1048.

"Recovered" as used in Act Cong. 1779, c. 22, § 91, relating to the recovery of bounties for infringements of the revenue laws by the collector within whose district the seizure shall be made, etc., "Provided, nevertheless, that in all cases where such penalties, fines, and forfeitures shall be recovered in pursuance of information given to such collector by any person other than the naval officers or surveyor of the district, the one half of such moiety will be given to such informer and the other half to the officers of the revenue laws," means recovered by operation of law; that is, by a judicial decree in favor of the party suing for it. Lapham v. Almy, 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 301, 305.

The word "recover," as used in Code, c. 106, § 6, relating to attachment bonds, and declaring that such bonds shall provide "to pay any claimant of any property seized or sold under or by virtue of said attachment all damages which he may recover in consequence of such seizure or sale," does not show that actual recovery in an independent suit must precede suit on the bond, but the claimant may in the first instance recover damages in an action on the bond. Totten v. Henry, 33 S. E. 119, 120, 46 W. Va. 232.

As acquire actual possession.

A client contracted with an attorney that he would pay the attorney for the prosecution of an action a fee of $50 and a percentage of the damages which he might recover. Held, that the word "recover" means the actual possession of anything or its value by judgment of a legal tribunal, and the client was not liable for a percentage of the judgment obtained, but only for a percentage of the damages received. Fisher v. Mylius, 26 S. E. 309, 310, 42 W. Va. 638.

A client who agreed to pay his attorney an amount equal to one-half of what they might recover was liable only for an amount equal to one-half of what he actually obtained by the judgment, and not one-half of the amount of the judgment, inasmuch as the word "recover" implies the actual obtaining of the thing sought. Leslie v. York, 66 S. W. 751, 112 Ky. 712.

As affirmative finding.

Under Code, § 8234, providing that where the complaint sets forth separately two or more causes of action, on which issues of fact are joined, if the plaintiff recovers on one or more of the issues, and the defendant on the other or others, each party is entitled to costs against the adverse party, etc., a defendant in an action wherein two causes of action are set up, the plaintiff being nonsuited as to one, and a general report in his favor as to the other for a sum of money being rendered by the referee, on which a judgment is entered, and there being no affirmative finding, verdict, or judgment in favor of defendant, he is entitled to costs as having recovered on one of the issues. Before the plaintiff is entitled to costs, there must, of course, be a recovery in his favor, and this means an affirmative finding, verdict, or judgment. The word, as used in the section, has the same meaning, whether applied to a plaintiff or defendant. Reilly v. Lee, 53 N. Y. Supp. 336, 838, 83 App. Div. 201.

The term "recover" has a well-defined meaning in the law, and this meaning had been adjudicated prior to the adoption of Ky. St. § 3314, providing that a city attorney shall be paid his salary and 10 per cent. on sums recovered by him for the city. For merely defending suits brought by banks against the city, it cannot be said that the city attorney recovered anything for the city, and that he is entitled to a percentage of the amount of taxes in controversy in the case, which he did not in any legal sense recover. Atchison v. City of Owensboro (Ky.) 71 S. W. 864, 865.

Collection equivalent.

See "Collect—Collection."

As decision on issue of fact.

A recovery, within Code Civ. Proc. § 3234, providing that in certain specified actions, if the plaintiff recovers on one or more of the issues and the defendant on the other or others, each party is entitled to costs, is a decision on an issue of fact; and defendant is not entitled to costs where there is a nonsuit as to two or three causes of action stated in a complaint, and a verdict for plaintiff as to the other cause of action. Burns v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 17 N. Y. Supp. 415, 416, 63 Hun, 19.

As final judgment.

The word "recovery," as used in Rev. St. c. 32, § 30, providing that, in a suit by one town against another for the support of a pauper, a recovery shall bar the town against which it was had from disputing the settlement of the same pauper with the prevailing town in any future action brought for his support, means the obtaining of a final judgment in such suit. Inhabitants of Oxford v. Inhabitants of Paris, 33 Me. 179, 181.

As recovery of damages not costs.

The word "recover," as used in the statute declaring that if plaintiff shall not recover above the sum of $50, besides costs, he shall not recover any costs, means the damages assessed by the jury, exclusive of the costs which they may arbitrarily find. Van Horne v. Petrie (N. Y.) 2 Caines, 214.

The word "recovery," as used in the statute regulating costs and fees, is the recovery for damages, and does not include interest on the verdict for damages. Troy City Bank v. Grant (N. Y.) 1 How. Prac. 135, 136.

Previous possession not implied.

In the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that actions for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or for the possession thereof, may be maintained by and against executors and administrators in all cases in which the same might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates, the word "recovery" does not imply that the plaintiff had at some previous time owned or been in the possession of the property. So it is usual to speak of an action for the recovery of money under a contract when, as a matter of course, the plaintiff was never in possession of the money. Monterey County v. Cushing, 23 Pac. 700, 702, 83 Cal. 507.

As recovery of fine.

To recover is to obtain by course of law, within the meaning of Code, § 304, subd. 4, providing that plaintiff shall recover costs under certain circumstances. It matters not that a portion of the recovery is in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture. Keiny v. Ingraham (N. Y.) 66 Barb. 250.

"Recovered," as used in providing for interest on judgments recovered, implies that the judgment referred to is one attained by way of compensation and in return for an injury or debt, and hence will not include a judgment for a fine. People v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 62 Pac. 104, 105, 129 Cal. 545, 79 Am. St. Rep. 137.

RECOVERY OF MONEY.

See "Action for Recovery of Money."

Rev. St. c. 110, § 74, provides that when appeals from judgments, orders, or decrees for the "recovery of money" are dismissed by the Supreme or Appellate Court for want of prosecution, or for failing to file authenticated copies of records, as required by law, the court shall enter judgment against the appellant for not less than 5 nor more than 10 per cent. damages on the amount recovered in the inferior court, for the collection of which the appellant shall be entitled to execution as on other judgments. Held, that a decree of foreclosure prosecuted by a defendant who is not personally liable for the debt is not a decree for the "recovery of money." Hamburger Co. v. Glover, 42 N. E. 46, 47, 157 Ill. 521.

RECOVERY OF REAL ESTATE.

See "Action for the Recovery of Real Estate."

RECOVERABLE.

Anything is recoverable when it is susceptible of being regained, gotten back. Peterson v. Nash Bros. (U. S.) 112 Fed. 311, 314, 50 C. C. A. 260, 55 L. R. A. 344 (citing McKey v. Lee [U. S.] 105 Fed. 923, 45 C. C. A. 127).

The plain, ordinary, and natural meaning of the word "recoverable" is that which is able to be, or is capable of being, recovered; "obtainable from a debtor or possessor, as by legal process." It means that which can be recovered as a matter of legal right. In re Oliver (U. S.) 109 Fed. 784, 788.

RECREATION.

"Recreation" is defined by Webster to be: (1) Refreshment of strength and spirits after toil; amusement; diversion. (2) Relief from toil or pain; amusement in sorrow or distress. Traveling on Sunday to make a social visit is not within the statute prohibiting any "recreation" on that day. Corey v. Bath, 35 N. H. 530, 538.

"Recreation," as used in Gen. St. § 1569, prohibiting engaging in any "recreation" on Sunday, should not be construed to include taking a ride for pleasure in a street car, though the term "recreation" might be used in a sense which would include taking such a ride. Horton v. Norwalk Tramway Co., 33 Atl. 914, 915, 66 Conn. 272.

RECRIMINATION.

Recrimination is a showing by the defendant of any cause of divorce against the plaintiff in bar of the plaintiff's cause of divorce. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 2750; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 80; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 170; Civ. Code Idaho 1901, § 2031; De Haley v. Haley, 16 Pac. 248, 249, 74 Cal. 489, 5 Am. St. Rep. 460.

Recrimination is defined to be "a counter charge by the defendant of a cause of divorce against the complainant." Many authorities lay down the rule that, when each party has a cause of divorce, neither can obtain relief. The authorities differ as to whether, when the complainant alleges one cause as a ground of divorce, the defendant can set up another. Some authorities hold that any cause for divorce is generally a good defense against any other, even though they be cause for different kinds of divorce. But other authorities hold that the offense set up in defense must be of the same statutory kind as the offense charged in the bill. In the case at bar both parties were guilty of a like offense—cruelty—and the defense of recrimination was therefore sufficient. Dubenstein v. Dubenstein, 49 N. E. 316, 319, 171 Ill. 133.

The general doctrine of the law, that recrimination is a defense to a suit for divorce, has always been recognized and upheld by the courts, and, as has often been said, rests upon the soundest reason and the clearest principles of morality and justice. This doctrine is not, however, to be understood to mean that the defendant can defeat the plaintiff's right to a divorce by merely showing that plaintiff has been guilty of conduct which, if defendant's conduct had been faultless, would have entitled the defendant to a divorce. The misconduct of the plaintiff, in order to defeat the right to the divorce, while it need not be of equal degree with that of the defendant, must be of the same general character, and such as is reasonably calculated to have provoked the misconduct of the defendant. Bohan v. Bohan (Tex.) 56 S. W. 959, 960.

RECRUITING EXPENSES.

"Recruiting expenses," as used in a statute ratifying, confirming, and making valid the acts and doings of cities and towns in paying or agreeing to pay bounties and recruiting expenses for soldiers furnished by them, should be construed to mean only the costs and charges which had accrued in procuring or enlisting troops for future service, and could have no reference to expenditures for or on account of those who had previously enlisted and were already in the army. Fowler v. Selectmen of Danvers, 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 80, 84.

RECTIFICATION.

"It was ruled in United States v. Tenbroek, 15 U. S. (2 Wheat.) 248, 4 L. Ed. 231, that rectified spirits were not dutiable as a product of distillation, because rectification, though strictly a process of secondary distillation, by which alcohol is produced in its highest state of concentration, is not distillation in the sense to which Congress had regard." Schuykill Nav. Co. v. Moore (Pa.) 2 Whart. 476, 491.

RECTIFIER.

"Rectifier," as used in Internal Revenue Law July 13, 1866, means not merely a person who runs spirits through charcoal, but any one who rectifies or purifies spirits in any manner whatever, or who makes any mixture of spirits with anything else and sells it under any name. Quantity of Distilled Spirits (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 107, 108.

A rectifier is one who changes liquors by adding to them, or compounding them, or rectifying them; and yet the courts have held that the mere addition of water to spirits would not make a person a rectifier, and the mixing of certain spirits of the same character, if they were under a certain age, would not be rectification. United States v. Thirty-Two Barrels of Distilled Spirits (U. S.) 5 Fed. 188, 190 (citing 10 Int. Rev. Rec. 121; Bump's Int. Rev. Law 217; Int. Rev. Manual 1879, p. 182).

RECTIFY.

"Rectifying," means correcting; amending; refining by distillation; a sublimation; adjusting. Rectifying is not a process of manufacture. Commonwealth v. Giltinan, 64 Pa. (14 P. F. Smith) 100, 105; State v. American Sugar Refining Co., 25 South. 447, 465, 51 La. Ann. 562.

RECTOR.

In a case relating to the existence of a parish in the Episcopal Church, it was held that the suppression of a deposition by a bishop that a rector, as the word is understood by the canons of the church, is a duly ordained clergyman of the church, in priest's orders, who has been elected to the rectorship by the vestry of the parish, agreeably to the canons of the church, and in whose call or invitation or notification of election there is no limitation of time specified when the engagement or contract for such is to cease, was erroneous, on the ground that it was incompetent to prove by the bishop of the church the meaning of the word "rector," as understood by the canons of the church. Bird v. St. Mark's Church of Waterloo, 17 N. W. 747, 748, 62 Iowa, 567.

RECTORY.

The word "rectory," in a conveyance of the rectory, will in many instances convey land. Gibson v. Brockway, 8 N. H. 465, 470, 31 Am. Dec. 200.

A rectory or parsonage, as known in the Church of England, "consists of a glebe, tithes, and obligations established for the maintenance of a parson or rector, to have the cure of souls within the parish." Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 13 U. S. (9 Cranch) 292, 326, 3 L. Ed. 735 (quoting Com. Dig. "Ecclesiastical Persons," C. 6).

RECURRENT INSANITY.

"Recurrent insanity" is insanity which returns from time to time, and there is no presumption that such fitful and exceptional attacks of insanity are continuous. Leache v. State, 3 S. W. 539, 545, 22 Tex. App. 279, 58 Am. Rep. 638.

RED TAPE.

"Red tape" is order carried to fastidious excess; system run out to trivial extremes. Webster v. Thompson, 55 Ga. 431, 434.

REDEEM.

The word "redeem" means to purchase back. Maxwell v. Foster, 45 S. E. 927, 932, 67 S. C. 371.

"To redeem is to purchase back; to regain, as mortgaged property, by paying what is due; to receive back by paying the obligation." Miller v. Ratterman, 24 N. E. 496, 499, 47 Ohio St. 141.

The word "redeem" is thus defined by Webster: "To purchase back; to regain possession by payment of a stipulated price; to repurchase." According to the strict rules of the common law, unless the mortgagor or his heirs, by payment of the mortgage and interest at the time and place appointed, strictly complied with the conditions upon the fulfillment of which it was stipulated that he should re-enter upon his estate, it became the property of the mortgagee, even though it greatly exceeded in value the amount of the loan. Courts of equity, however, from an early period have held that the mortgagor, if he apply within reasonable time and offer to pay the amount due and costs, might redeem the forfeited estate. This right to redeem, as it could be enforced only in a court of equity, was called the equity of redemption. In Howard v. Harris, 1 Vern. 190, decided in 1683, it was held that no agreement in a mortgage could make it irredeemable, and that the right of redemption attached to every mortgage. Swearingen v. Roberts, 11 N. W. 325, 326, 12 Neb. 333.

The word "redeeming," in Gen. St. 1878, c. 81, § 15, relating to redemption sales on foreclosure, and providing that after the peried for redemption has expired, no one redeeming, the court may grant a final decree, etc., refers to a redemption which annuls the sale. Bovey De Laittre Lumber Co. v. Tucker, 50 N. W. 1038, 1040, 48 Minn. 223.

Debt implied.

"Redeem," as used in an indorsement on a note which was given for a loan, the loan being secured by an absolute deed of real property, the indorsement being in the following form: "You can redeem it in a reasonable time by paying me my money and 10 per cent."—implies the existence of a debt and negatives the idea of an absolute sale. Workman v. Greening, 4 N. E. 385, 387, 115 Ill. 477.

Where a mortgagor in default executes to his mortgagee an instrument in the form of a warranty deed of the land, in consideration of the amount due on the mortgage, with a clause reciting that the deed is given in satisfaction of the mortgage, and that the grantor shall have the right to redeem or repurchase the premises at any time within one year by paying a specified sum, together with interest and all costs and taxes paid by the grantee, the grantor to have possession for the year, the instrument will be treated as a deed; it appearing that it was given to save the expenses and delay of foreclosure, and the word "redeem" not being sufficient to continue the debt in force. Swarm v. Boggs, 40 Pac. 941, 12 Wash. 246.

As repurchase.

The word "redeem," as used in statutory provisions authorizing a party to redeem, means "repurchase." Robinson v. Cropsey (N. Y.) 2 Edw. Ch. 138, 146.

The word "redeem" means repurchase. The words are synonyms, and the first has come into use with lawyers to describe the right of a mortgagor of lands by reason of the old practice, which prevailed in England, of making absolute conveyances of land by way of mortgage, with a covenant to reconvey upon the payment of the debt; an actual real conveyance being made. The form of conveyance by way of mortgage, now and for many years past in use in this country, dispenses with the necessity of a reconveyance; but the phrase "equity of redemption" is still used to describe the mortgagor's right. Pace v. Bartles, 20 Atl. 352, 359, 47 N. J. Eq. (2 Dick.) 170.

REDEEMABLE.

A stipulation in bonds that the principal sum should be redeemable in good and lawful money at the place and day therein designated must be deemed equivalent to an agreement that they shall be payable on that day. United States v. North Carolina, 10 Sup. Ct. 920, 924, 136 U. S. 211, 34 L. Ed. 336.

7 Wds. & P.—12

REDEEMED IF DESIRED.

"Redeemed, if desired," as used in a bond providing that it will be "redeemed, if desired," a certain time after date, should be construed as giving the holder an option for its payment at that time. Allentown School Dist. v. Derr's Adm'r, 9 Atl. 55, 57, 115 Pa. 489.

REDEMPTION.

See "Equity of Redemption"; "Right of Redemption."

Where stock of a corporation has been pledged for the "redemption of certificates of debt," and the certificates bound the testator for the payment of the sum therein specified and the interest thereon, the stock is bound for the payment of the interest itself, and a foreclosure may therefore be decreed on default of payment of any installment of interest. Swasey v. North Carolina R. Co. (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 518, 520.

"Redemption" is regarded as a buying back by the mortgagor of the legal estate after it has passed to the mortgagee. In Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1220, it is said: "No such redemption, however, is possible, unless the mortgage debt is due and payable, nor unless the mortgage is wholly redeemed by payment of the entire amount of the mortgage debt." In Collins v. Riggs, 81 U. S. (14 Wall.) 491, 20 L. Ed. 723, Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, says: "To redeem property which has been sold under a mortgage for less than the mortgage debt, it is not sufficient to tender the amount of the sale. The whole mortgage debt must be paid or tendered into court. The party offering to redeem proceeds upon the hypothesis that, as to him, the mortgage has never been foreclosed and is still in existence. Therefore he can only lift it by paying it. The money will be subject to distribution between the mortgagee and the purchaser in equitable proportions, so as to reimburse the latter his purchase money and pay the former the balance of his debt." Evans v. Kahr, 57 Pac. 950, 951, 60 Kan. 719 (citing Ping. Chat. Mortg. § 2184; Jones, Mortg. §§ 1072-1075; Hosford v. Johnson, 74 Ind. 479; Martin v. Fridley, 23 Minn. 13; Bradley v. Snyder, 14 Ill. [4 Peck] 263-266, 58 Am. Dec. 564; Vroom v. Dittmas [N. Y.] 4 Paige, 526; Johnson v. Harmon, 19 Iowa, 56).

"Redemption," as used in Const. art. 9, § 10, providing that no scrip or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness shall be issued, except for the redemption of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness previously issued, or for such debts as are expressly authorized in this Constitution, "means not merely that a new bond may be issued in exchange or as a substitute for an old one, but also that a new bond may be issued for the purpose of obtaining the money necessary to pay or redeem the old bond." Robertson v. Tillman, 17 S. E. 678, 679, 39 S. C. 298.

A law of redemption is a statute which confers upon the party where land is sold for debt by execution, etc., the right to redeem or repurchase the land within a limited time after the sale. Reynolds v. Baker, 46 Tenn. (6 Cold.) 221, 228.

The terms "redemption" and "equity of redemption," which belonged to a system of law that gave the legal estate, defeasibly before default and absolutely afterward, to the mortgagee, while that system prevailed, were descriptive of the mortgagor's right to go into equity, on the condition of paying his debt, to redeem a forfeited estate and demand a reconveyance. These descriptive words yet survive and are in use, although the ideas they once represented have long since become obsolete. Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343, 365, 78 Am. Dec. 145.

"Redemption," as used in a bill of lading by an express company undertaking to forward to a certain place for redemption a package of currency, should be construed to amount to an agreement to present the currency for redemption and return the funds to the sender if redeemed, or to return to him the notes with the evidence of the refusal to pay in the event of nonpayment. To deliver to a bank its own notes, and not requiring an equivalent, would be the reverse of a redemption. The essential idea of redemption of currency is that the party issuing it is a debtor, and is called on to pay his debt by redeeming the notes presented. Reed v. United States Exp. Co., 48 N. Y. 462, 469, 8 Am. Rep. 561.

As payment.

There seems to be a wide difference between the payment of a tax by the owner of the land and the redemption of the land by him after it has been sold for nonpayment of the taxes assessed upon it. There is really no tax to be paid when land is thus redeemed. That has been canceled by the sale. The redemption is the payment to the holder of the certificate of an incumbrance which he thereby has upon the land, and does not seem to be the payment of a tax in any correct sense of that term. Under Laws 1844, p. 22, § 12, an action for the recovery of lands forfeited for taxes was required to be commenced within three years from the recording of the tax deed, except in cases where the taxes should actually have been paid. Held, that the exception did not include a case where the land was redeemed before the recording of the deed. Lindsay v. Fay, 28 Wis. 177, 182.

Where corporate stock was pledged for the redemption of a certificate of debt, and the certificate bound the state for the payment of the sum therein mentioned, with interest thereon, the word "redemption" was equivalent to the word "payment." Swasey v. North Carolina R. Co. (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 518, 520.

REDEMPTIONER.

By Code Civ. Proc. § 701, two classes of persons are given the right to redeem from judicial sales made subject to redemption: First, the judgment debtor or his successor in interest; and, second, creditors having subsequent liens by judgment or mortgage—the latter class being termed "redemptioners." A grantee by deed from the judgment debtor after foreclosure sale is a successor in interest, and not a redemptioner, and is entitled to all the rights of redemption given by the statute to his grantor, to be exercised in the same manner. Phillips v. Hagart, 45 Pac. 843, 844, 113 Cal. 552, 54 Am. St. Rep. 369.

Comp. Laws 1887, § 5151, authorizing a judgment debtor or redemptioner to redeem property sold on execution within one year after the sale, expressly limits the term "redemptioner" to a mortgagee or subsequent creditor having a lien subsequent to that on which the property was sold. Stocker v. Puckett (S. D.) 96 N. W. 91.

REDELIVER.

A covenant by a lessee to "redeliver or restore the property in the same condition or plight, usual wear and tear excepted," does not bind the covenantor to rebuild in case of casual destruction by fire, or impose the burden of the loss upon him. Levy v. Dyess (Miss.) 3 Cent. Law J. 221, 222.

REDELIVERY.

The redelivery of a grant of real property, or the cancellation of the grant, does not operate to retransfer the title. Johnson v. Burnside, 52 N. W. 1057, 3 S. D. 230.

REDELIVERY BOND.

A distinction is to be observed between the effect of a bail bond and a redelivery bond in attachment; the former being given as security for the payment of such judgment as may be recovered in the action, while the latter is an engagement to redeliver the attached property or pay the value thereof to the sheriff, to whom an execution upon a judgment obtained by the plaintiff in the action may be issued, and authorizes the sheriff to yield the actual possession of the attached property to the defendant or other person claiming it, but does not withdraw the property from the operation of the lien thereon. A redelivery bond differs from a bail bond, in that it does not discharge the lien of the attachment, since the very object of the bond is to insure the safe-keeping and faithful return of the property to the officer, if its return should be required. Drake v. Sworts, 33 Pac. 563, 564, 24 Or. 198.

REDHIBITION.

Redhibition is the avoidance of a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold, which renders it absolutely useless, or its use so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed that the buyer would not have purchased it, had he known of the vice. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 2520.

REDISCOUNTED NOTES.

Rediscounted notes are said to be notes held by a bank, which it indorses and procures another bank to discount; so that testimony that another bank had rediscounted implied that the notes had been indorsed. Dorsey v. United States (U. S.) 101 Fed. 746, 749, 41 C. C. A. 652.

REDOUND.

"Redound" signifies to conduce; to contribute; to result. "Redound" is not equivalent to "require," within a statute providing that, upon a petition by a guardian for the sale of the real estate of the infant ward, the commissioners appointed must report whether the interest of the infant requires a sale to be made. A report that the sale would redound to the interest of the infant does not confer jurisdiction to make the sale. Mattingly's Heirs v. Read (Ky.) 8 Metc. 524, 526, 79 Am. Dec. 565.

REDUCE.

"Reduced," as used in a codicil to a will, declaring that the shares of certain residuary legatees mentioned in the will should be reduced in certain specified amounts each, means that the legacies should be lessened, diminished, or lowered by the amounts specified. It does not mean that there should be taken from the respective shares the amounts named; that is, that there should be excepted out of the residuary legacies the aggregate sum of the respective reductions. While such might be said to be one, and perhaps the ordinary, meaning of the word "reduced," it is not the only one in common and ordinary use. Worcester's definitions include: "(2) To bring to a former state; to restore. (3) To bring into any state, but generally one of diminution, subordination, or order." Webster's: "(2) To bring to a state or condition specified, usually inferior or weaker, sometimes indifferent. (3) To bring to inferior state with respect to rank, size, quality, value, or the like; to diminish; to lower; to degrade or impair." Hayward v. Loper, 35 N. E. 225, 226, 147 Ill. 41.

In insurance.

The word "reduce" is a word which may have a purely technical or local use, different from the common use, and when used in a letter by the managers of a fire insurance company, instructing their local agents to reduce the amount insured by a policy issued by them, parol evidence may be given to show its use in insurance circles. There are but few words in our language that have so many technical meanings as the word "reduce." In the medical profession instructions to reduce a fracture would mean one thing; in the military world, to reduce a fort, quite another; to the mathematician, to reduce a problem, another; to the chemist, to reduce a substance, still another; and so on. But in each case it would be competent to show by parol evidence, if any exigency required it, just what the words "to reduce" meant in the connection in which they were used, and that they clearly implied to any one in the business or trade in which the instructions were given just what means should be used and steps taken to accomplish the purpose intended. Halsey v. Adams, 43 Atl. 708, 709, 63 N. J. Law, 330.

REDUCE TO POSSESSION.

To "reduce to possession" is to change a right existing as an actionable claim into actual custody and enjoyment. And. Law Dict. 792.

A right to reduce to possession imports ex vi termini a right to the completeness and operative force of which something else is still indispensable. A right of immediate possession and a right to reduce to possession are obviously not identical propositions. Where goods of one in the possession of another are taken on attachment, the right of the owner to the possession of the goods as against that other is such a right to reduce to possession, under Code, § 1690, providing that replevin will not lie where at the time of seizure plaintiff had no right to reduce the property into his possession, as will sustain replevin against the sheriff. Klee v. Grant (N. Y.) 23 N. Y. Supp. 855.

REDUCED REGIMENT.

A regiment broken up and consolidated is spoken of as "reduced." Williams v. United States, 11 Sup. Ct. 43, 48, 137 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 590.

REDUCTION.

See "Horizontal Reduction."

REDUNDANT—REDUNDANCY.

"Redundant," as used in Code, § 160, providing that, if irrelevant or redundant matter be inserted in a pleading, it may be stricken out on motion of any person aggrieved thereby, means what is usually understood as impertinent. According to Webster "redundant" means superfluous, more than is necessary, superabundant. Prolixity may become redundancy. Carpenter v. West (N. Y.) 5 How. Prac. 53, 55.

"Redundant matter," as used in Code, § 150, providing that irrelevant or redundant matter in pleading may be stricken out, does not authorize an entire answer, or an entire defense in an answer, to be stricken out as irrelevant or redundant; but the terms mean merely matter impertinently or unnecessarily stated in stating the cause of action in the complaint or a defense in the answer. Fasnacht v. Stehn, 5 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 338, 343.

In pleading, "redundancy" is the introduction of matters foreign to or not necessary to the cause of action or defense stated. It is a needless repetition of immaterial averments or conclusions of law, and may be struck out on motion without any prejudice to the defendants. Carpenter v. Reynolds, 17 N. W. 300, 301, 58 Wis. 666.

A needless repetition of immaterial averments is redundancy, although the facts averred, so far from being irrelevant, may constitute the whole cause of action. Matter which is irrelevant is also redundant, but the converse is by no means true. Bowman v. Sheldon, 7 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Sandf.) 657, 660.

RE-EMPLOYMENT.

A person while in the employ of a railroad company as a spare brakeman was injured, and on recovery entered into a written contract whereby, in consideration of his employment for such time as his services and conduct should be satisfactory, he released all claims for damages. It was held that the term "re-employment" means the same service in which he was formerly employed, that of spare brakeman, liable to be laid off when no brakeman was needed and to be re-employed when one was. Sax v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 89 N. W. 368, 369, 129 Mich. 502.

RE-ENLISTED.

"Re-enlisted," as used in an agreed statement of facts in an action to recover a bounty for services in the army of the United States, which states that the "plaintiff re-enlisted while in Virginia," means that the plaintiff was a person who had been mustered and received into the military service of the United States. Barker v. Inhabitants of Chesterfield, 102 Mass. 127, 130.

RE-ENLISTED VETERAN.

A warning was given "to see if the town will pay bounties to veterans who have re-enlisted in the field." A vote authorized payment of the bounty "to each re-enlisted veteran who has re-enlisted for," etc. Held, that the words "re-enlisted veteran," in the vote, mean "re-enlisted veteran in the field," and hence one who was discharged before his re-enlistment was not entitled to a bounty. The meaning is the same as though the words "re-enlisted in the field" had been in the vote, as they were in the warning. The term "in the field" has just as clear and well-defined a meaning, when used in reference to army service in a state of war, as any other plain and well-understood expression. "Soldiers in the field," or "veterans in the field," or "army in the field," all mean persons in the military service for the purpose of carrying on the pending war; and a person who had been several months out of the army, though he may in common parlance perhaps be called a veteran, on account of the service he had given before his discharge, could not with propriety be said to be a veteran in the field. Sargent v. Town of Ludlow, 42 Vt. 726, 729.

RE-ENTER.

A lease reserved to the lessors the right upon default "into and upon said premises to re-enter," and the same to have again as in their first and former estate, and the lessee covenanted to pay any deficiency arising on the reletting of the premises after such re-entry by the lessors as his agents. Held to mean only a re-entry in the technical sense, as known to the common law, by ejectment, and not to include a removal of the lessee by statutory summary proceedings. Michaels v. Fishel, 62 N. E. 425, 428, 169 N. Y. 381. The word "re-enter" at common law invests the landlord with the right to maintain ejectment, and this rule has not been changed by statute. McMahon v. Howe, 82 N. Y. Supp. 984, 985, 40 Misc. Rep. 546.

RE-ENTRY.

"Re-entry," as used in a lease reserving the right of re-entry upon default, the lessee to pay any deficiency arising on the reletting of the premises after such re-entry by the lessors as his agents, means a re-entry in the technical sense, as known to the common law, by ejectment, and does not include a removal of the lessee by statutory summary proceedings. Re-entry is the resumption of possession pursuant to a right reserved when the former possession was parted with. It was a remedy given by the feudal law for nonpayment of rent, but so ancient that its origin has never been traced. It can be exercised only when the right is expressly reserved in the lease; for without such reservation the remedy of the lessor under the lease, independent of the statute, is confined to an action on the covenant. The method of exercising the right is by an action of ejectment to recover possession of the demised premises. In common law the right to re-enter, except when entry can be made without force, is simply the right to maintain ejectment. Re-entry was coeval with the common law in origin, and it has come down to modern times with its meaning unchanged. Narrow and technical to begin with, it has so continued throughout its history, and is narrow and technical to this day, although the extreme nicety of procedure in exercising the right has been somewhat softened by statute. Michaels v. Fishel, 62 N. E. 425, 427, 169 N. Y. 381.

The right of re-entry referred to in Civ. Code, § 791, providing that, "when the right of re-entry is given a lessor in a lease, such re-entry must be made at any time after the right has accrued, on three days' notice," is the right given to the landlord on some default of the tenant during the term, and not the right which he has when the lease is for a fixed term, which has expired. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 70 Pac. 1073, 1074, 138 Cal. 76.

The provisions of Act May 13, 1846, § 8, abolishing distress for rent, and providing for 15 days' notice to the tenant to make a re-entry, did not apply where the right of re-entry arose on the breach of any other covenant than that for the payment of rent. Garner v. Hannah, 13 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 262, 272.

RE-ESTABLISHED.

The word "re-established," in a statute providing that a certain ferry was re-established in the name of plaintiff, was construed to be sufficient to vest the ferry in the plaintiff. Stark v. McGowen (S. C.) 1 Nott & McC. 387, 392.

RE-ESTABLISHMENT.

The re-establishment of a grade already established does not necessarily mean the alteration or changing of such grade. Seaman v. Borough of Washington (Pa.) 83 Atl. 756, 757.

RE-EXCHANGE.

Re-exchange is the expense incurred by a bill of exchange being dishonored in a foreign country, in which it was payable, and returned to the country in which it was made or indorsed and there taken up, the amount of which depends on the course of the exchange between the two countries through which the bill has been negotiated. Bangor Bank v. Hook, 5 Me. (5 Greenl.) 174, 175.

REFER.

Under Rev. St. 1889, § 4219, providing that, if the accused does not testify, it shall not be construed to affect the innocence or guilt of the accused, nor be referred to by any attorney in the case, the words "referred to" are held to mean "alluded to." "Refer" is a synonym of "allude," and these words are used interchangeably. State v. Moxley, 102 Mo. 374, 393, 14 S. W. 969.

The word "referred," when used with reference to an action entered as referred, imports a reference in the common form, with power of the referees to decide, in case of necessity, by a majority, and to proceed on hearing one party, if the other, duly notified, fails to be present. Billington v. Sprague, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 34, 45.

REFEREE.

As court, see "Court."

A referee for the trial and decision of actions is an officer exercising judicial power under public authority. In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238, 243.

"Referee," as used in the bankruptcy act, shall mean the referee who has jurisdiction of the case or to whom the case has been referred, or any one acting in his stead. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3419.

A referee, under the statutes, is an officer of the court for a specific purpose; that is, "to take testimony," "to ascertain a fact," or, it may be, to hear and determine any or all of the issues of fact in an action, and to report a finding upon which judgment may be entered by the court. Betts v. Letcher, 46 N. W. 193, 1 S. D. 182.

A referee is a person appointed by the court or a judicial officer, with power (1) to try an issue of law or of fact in a civil action, suit, or proceeding, and report thereon; (2) to ascertain any other fact in a civil action, suit, or proceeding, when necessary for the information of the court, and report the fact, or to take and report the evidence in a suit in equity; (3) to execute an order, judgment, or decree, or to exercise any other power or perform any other duty expressly authorized by the Code. Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 987.

Master in chancery.

Rev. St. § 824 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 632], allows a docket fee of $20 to be taxed

"on a trial before a jury in civil or criminal causes, or before referees, or on the final hearing in equity or in admiralty." "In my judgment, the word 'referee,' as used in this statute, has reference to a class of officers who are appointed in pursuance of the statutes of the various states to hear and determine all the objections that arise on the final hearing of a cause. It does not have reference to or include masters in chancery, whether they hold their place by the general appointment or by a special appointment." Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. (U. S.) 82 Fed. 684, 685.

REFEREE IN BANKRUPTCY.

A referee in bankruptcy is not only a judicial officer charged with the performance of the duties prescribed in the statute, but he is also required to give bond to insure the observance of his official oath. This is an unusual requirement of a quasi judicial officer, and the findings of fact of a referee in bankruptcy on petition for discharge, where a rule of court requires him to hold the meeting to consider it, will not be disturbed, except for clearly shown error. In re Covington (U. S.) 110 Fed. 143.

REFEREE IN CASE OF NEED.

The drawer of a bill and any indorser may insert thereon the name of a person to whom the holder may resort in case of need; that is to say, in case the bill is dishonored by nonacceptance or nonpayment. Such person is called the "referee in case of need." Neg. Inst. Law N. D. § 131; Rev. Codes N. D. § 1044.

REFERENCE.

Arbitration distinguished, see "Arbitration."

The appointment of a referee is denominated a "reference." Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 988.

At common law a reference was the sending of any matter by the court of chancery to a master, or by a law court to a prothonotary, to examine it. Indiana Cent. Ry. Co. v. Bradley, 7 Ind. 49, 55.

A submission to a reference is the voluntary act of the parties, and the rule of reference, when made, determines the extent of the powers of the referee. Every enlargement of the rule is, in effect, a new reference, and requires the same assent of the parties as is required to make the submission in the first instance. The mere statement in the referee's report of the enlargement of the rule of reference is not sufficient evidence that it was regularly enlarged, but a record or certificate from the justice to that effect is required. Lazell v. Houghton, 32 Vt. 579, 583.

REFERENCES.

Act N. Y. April 1, 1848, § 3, providing that it should not be lawful for the state reporter of the judicial decisions to secure or obtain any copyright for such reports, notes, or references, but the same may be published by any person, cannot be construed to include the abstracts of the pleadings and statements of fact which form the basis of the decisions reported. The table of contents, entitled "Cases Reported," which consists of the titles of suits comprised in the book, with reference to the several particular pages where the cases are to be severally found, might be embraced in the term "references." Little v. Gould (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 604, 608.

"References," as used in Laws N. Y. 1850, c. 245, § 479, providing that the copyright of any "notes or references" made by the state reporter to any of the reports of the judicial decisions of the Court of Appeals should be vested in the Secretary of the State, should be construed as embracing the headnotes and marginal notes of the reporter, together with the arguments of counsel and the cases cited therein. Little v. Gould (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 612, 618.

REFINED COAL OR EARTH OIL.

"Refined coal or earth oil," in a fire policy prohibiting the keeping of kerosene or other refined coal or earth oil, includes gasoline, though it is not specifically designated. Kings County Fire Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 11 Ill. App. (11 Bradw.) 590, 598.

"Refined coal or earth oils," as used in a fire policy containing a condition that it shall be void if "refined coal or earth oils" are kept for sale, etc., will be construed to include kerosene. Bennett v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 273, 275, 37 Am. Rep. 501.

The term "refined coal or earth oils" naturally includes naphtha, benzine, benzole, and kerosene, as such oils do not differ in nature, but only in degree of inflammability; but in a policy of insurance against fire prohibiting the keeping of benzine, benzole, naphtha, or refined coal or earth oils upon the premises, the term does not include kerosene, by reason of the specific enumeration of the oils of the same nature as kerosene and the omission to specifically enumerate the latter oil. Morse v. Buffalo Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 30 Wis. 534, 537, 11 Am. Rep. 587.

REFINED SUGAR.

"Refined sugar," as used in the revenue act, placing a duty of two cents per pound on all sugar refined in the United States, applies exclusively to such as have assumed at some time the form of white refined loaf or lump sugar, and does not include bastard sugars, which are a species of sugar of a very inferior quality, of less value than the raw material, the residuum or refuse of clayed sugars, left in the process of refining after taking away the loaf and lump sugar which results from that process. In the sense of having been clarified and freed from their feculence, sugars which have undergone the full process of refining after they have arrived at the point of granulation are popularly to be deemed refined sugars, whether they have been clayed or not, but such is not the popular meaning of the term. Barlow v. United States, 32 U. S. (7 Pet.) 404, 410, 8 L. Ed. 728.

"Refined," as used in Act Cong. July 24, 1873, imposing a duty on all sugar refined within the United States after a certain date, refers to a particular process in preparing the sugar for sale, which is terminated before the sugar is put into the molds. The act of refining is completed when the sugar is fit to be granulated. United States v. Pennington (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 493.

"Refined sugar," as used in the act of Congress relating to a drawback on the exportation of refined sugars, means the sugars known in the market as "loaf" and "lump." Whether they remain in the lump, or are crushed, every product of raw sugar that has gone through the process of refining, and which can again be converted into sugar, cannot, in a commercial sense and within the meaning of the law, be considered as refined, though in a certain sense they may be so considered. United States v. Eighty-Five Hogsheads of Sugar (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 991, 993.

REFINEMENT.

A refinement is understood to be the verbiage which is frequently found in indictments in setting forth what is not essential to the constitution of the offense, and therefore not required to be proved on the trial. State v. Gallimon, 24 N. C. 372, 377.

An objection that an indictment for assault with intent to commit rape did not set out the constituents of the offense of rape, made after verdict, is a "refinement," within Code, § 1183, providing that judgments on indictments shall not be stayed by reason of any informality or refinement, if in the bill or proceeding sufficient matter appears to enable the court to proceed to judgment. State v. Peak, 41 S. E. 887, 888, 130 N. C. 711.

REFLECT.

The word "reflect" is defined by Webster, inter alia, as follows: "(5) To bring reproach; to reflect on; to cast censure or reproach." A writing reflecting upon an individual, therefore, is libelous. Cooper v. Greeley (N. Y.) 1 Denio, 347, 359.

REFLECTION.

See "After Reflection."

REFORM.

The power of the court to reform a contract means the power to reduce it to the terms agreed on by the parties. Sullivan v. Haskin, 41 Atl. 437, 438, 70 Vt. 487.

REFORMATION.

Where a party has been found to be incapable of conducting his own affairs by reason of habitual drunkenness, the court will not discharge his committee and restore the property to him unless a permanent reformation appear; and the word "reformation," used in this connection, means nothing less than a total abstinence from all alcoholic liquors for at least one year. It must also be a voluntary abandonment of the use of intoxicants, and not an abandonment which is the result of constraint or of the want of means to procure liquor; and hence, where, on an application by an habitual drunkard to be restored to the possession of his property, it does not appear that the relinquishment of intoxicants has been voluntary, and there is some evidence of intoxication within a year, the application will be denied. In re Hoag (N. Y.) 7 Paige, 312, 313.

Of instruments.

"Reformation" is appropriate when an agreement has been made or a transaction has been entered into or determined on as intended by all the parties interested, but in reducing which to writing a mistake has been made, either through common mistake or a mistake of one in fraud of the other, so that the written instrument fails to express the real agreement. De Voin v. De Voin, 44 N. W. 839, 841, 76 Wis. 66; Gaffney Mercantile Co. v. Hopkins, 52 Pac. 561, 562, 21 Mont. 13.

The reformation of a deed or mortgage is an equitable remedy, granted for the purpose only of effecting a remedy, and will not be granted to destroy an equity. Ocean Beach Ass'n v. Trenton Trust & Safe Deposit Co. (N. J.) 48 Atl. 559, 561.

REFORMATORY.

"Reformatory" includes all institutions and places in which efforts are made either to cultivate the intellect, instruct the conscience, or improve the conduct, or places in which persons voluntarily assemble, re-celve instruction, and submit to discipline, or are detained therein for either of these purposes by force; and a bequest for the building of a "boys' reformatory" is void for uncertainty. Hughes v. Daly, 49 Conn. 34, 35.

A reformatory institution is in a certain sense a penal institution, being a substitute for a jail or penitentiary; its scheme being to not only punish, but at the same time to discipline and reform, the youth of both sexes who have committed small offenses or are likely to become outcasts in society. McAndrews v. Hamilton County, 58 S. W. 483, 484, 105 Tenn. 399.

REFRACTORY METAL.

Refractory earth or metal is one that requires extraordinary heat to fuse it. Jenkins v. Johnson (U. S.) 13 Fed. Cas. 525, 527.

REFRESHMENT SALOON.

"Refreshment saloon," as used in an ordinance requiring refreshment saloons or restaurants to procure licenses, etc., means a room or rooms fitted up for purposes similar to those of a restaurant, whether or not spirituous liquors are kept, and is synonymous with "eating house," and does not include a shop which is used for the manufacture and sale of tobacco, snuff, and cigars. State v. Hogan, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 268, 272.

REFRIGERATOR CAR.

A refrigerator car is built for the purpose of carrying freight, and the only material difference between it and an ordinary freight car is that the former is provided with appliances for preserving ice, in order to preserve the contents, while the latter is not. Railroad Commissioners' Order No. 2 requires every railroad company operating within the state to receive every loaded car tendered to it by a connecting carrier for transportation. Held, that the fact that a car tendered was a refrigerator car not suitable or usually used for the transportation of the kind of freight loaded therein was no defense to an action for refusal to receive the car. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lone Star Salt Co., 63 S. W. 1025, 1027, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 531.

REFUGE.

The phrase "taken refuge in the state of Texas," in an extradition warrant, stating that the persons whose arrest and surrender is hereby ordered stand charged with a certain crime in the demanding state and that they have taken refuge in the state of Texas, is equivalent to a statement that they are fugitives from justice. Ex parte Stanley, 8 S. W. 645, 647, 25 Tex. App. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 440.

REFUND.

"Refund," as used in Pub. Laws 1887, c. 33, providing that, where the municipal officers of a city or town in which a deceased person, who had served in the army, navy, or marine corps of the United States during the Rebellion lived, have paid the expense of his burial, the state shall refund the amount so paid by the town, implies a payment to the town of money previously paid by the town. Rackliff v. Inhabitants of Greenbush, 44 Atl. 375, 376, 93 Me. 99.

The word "refund" in strictness means to pour back, but in a will bequeathing dividends of bank stock to testator's sister, and providing that, if at any time during her life the whole or any part of said stock shall be paid off and refunded, then the amount so paid off and refunded shall be paid to the sister, the word was used as a synonym for "paid," which is also one of its definitions. Maynard v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank (Pa.) 1 Brewst. 483, 484.

Where dividends received by a stockholder of a corporation impair or reduce the capital stock of such corporation, the capital stock is "refunded," within Comp. Laws 1897, § 7057, providing that, if the capital stock of a corporation is withdrawn or refunded to the stockholders before payment of all corporate debts for which the stock is liable, the stockholder shall be liable to corporate creditors to the amount so refunded to them. The capital stock may be refunded to the stockholders as well by distribution by way of dividends declared in the ordinary way as by basing them upon formal actions to reduce the capital stock. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Eddy, 89 N. W. 952, 130 Mich. 266.

In a declaration of trust, declaring that the trustee holds a sum in trust, and that he will refund it, the word "refund," when disposal of the fund itself is meant, is used in the sense of "restore." Gutch v. Fosdick, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 353, 356, 22 Atl. 590, 591, 27 Am. St. Rep. 473.

REFUSE.

Standard lexicographers use "refuse" as synonymous with "waste." Thus Worcester: "Refuse: (a) Left as worthless when the rest is taken; worthless; waste"—and one of the meanings given by him of "waste" is "refuse." "Refuse wood or timber of any sort," as used in Acts 1868, c. 448, providing that no person shall cast or throw into the Penobscot river any slabs, boards, or lathe edgings, bark, grindings of edges, wood, lumber, refuse wood, or timber of any sort, includes sawdust and shingle shavings. State v. Howard, 72 Me. 459, 463.

"Refuse matter," as used in an ordinance empowering the board of health of the city to contract for the removal of such refuse matter as accumulates in the preparation of food for the table, embraces nothing which has not been refused or rejected as unsuitable for table use. It may be thus rejected because it has little or no value for human food, or because it is decayed or unwholesome. It must in its nature be perishable, and can include little which is not liable to become decomposed or offensive if left where it falls. The term "refuse matter" can only extend to matter which is in fact noisome, or which has been refused or rejected by the owner as worthless. State v. Orr, 35 Atl. 770, 771, 68 Conn. 101, 34 L. R. A. 279.

REFUSE—REFUSAL

See, also, "Neglect and Refuse."

"Refuses or neglects," as used in Gen. St. 1866, c. 11, § 27, providing that when a person refuses or neglects to make a statement of his personal property, or to subscribe on oath to the statement, to a tax assessor, the latter may examine any other person whom he may suppose has knowledge, etc., embraces all cases of refusal, neglect, or omission, fraudulent, willful, intentional, or otherwise, by any person, to make a true statement of all the personal property exempt, as well as unexempt, which by the provisions of the chapter such person is required to list for taxation, either as owner or holder, guardian, parent, husband, trustee, executor, etc. Thompson v. Tinkcom, 15 Minn. 295, 299 (Gil. 226, 230).

Where a grantee of the mortgagor called on the mortgagee and asked the amount of his claim on the mortgaged estate, and was answered that he owned the whole, that he had bought it and paid for it, and, on such grantee showing his deed and again asking the amount of the claim, he was referred to the records, and on being asked what sort of money would answer the mortgagee replied, "Nothing but specie," and that, if money was tendered, he would do as he thought proper about taking it, and that his papers were at another town, and he could not ascertain what was due on the mortgage, there was a sufficient demand and refusal to entitle such grantee to maintain an action to redeem the land from such mortgage. Willard v. Fiske, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 540, 544.

Demand, offer, or notice implied.

The word "refuse" signifies to deny a request, demand, invitation, or command, and hence proof of a refusal to pay necessarily involves the proof of a previous demand, and so, where a declaration averred that payment had been refused, a previous demand was presupposed. Shaler v. Van Wormer, 33 Mo. 386, 388.

"Refusal," as used in Pol. Code, § 996, providing that an office becomes vacant on the refusal or neglect of one who is elected or appointed thereto to file his official oath or bond within the time prescribed, means to decline the acceptance of something offered, or to fail to comply with some requirement. The person could not refuse the appointment of an office until he received information of his appointment. The power to refuse a thing must necessarily be based upon a knowledge of the existence of the thing. People v. Perkins, 26 Pac. 245, 246, 85 Cal. 509.

A deed providing that the estate granted shall be void if the grantee shall "neglect or refuse" to support a certain fence, implies some previous demand, notice, or request to replace the fence if the same has been removed or destroyed, and that the grantee either refused in terms to do the act required, or had failed to replace it after a reasonable time allowed for that act. Merrifield v. Cobleigh, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 178, 185.

When used in reference to the payment of money, the word "refusal" means a failure to pay the money when demanded, while "neglect" means a failure to pay money which the party is bound to pay without demand. Kimball v. Rowland, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 224, 225.

"Refusing," in its ordinary meaning, carries the idea of an application to the person refusing, and the word "neglecting," coupled with the word "refusing" by the conjunction "or," in a petition stating that a husband had "neglected or refused" to file a schedule of exempt property, weakens the meaning of the latter word, and deprives it of such meaning. Davis v. Lumpkin, 32 S. E. 626, 628, 106 Ga. 582.

"The word 'refuse,' as defined by the Century Dictionary, means to deny, as a request, demand, or invitation; to decline to accept; to reject, as to refuse an offer." Thus a complaint, alleging that defendant refused to accept goods which he had contracted to purchase, authorized the admission of evidence that plaintiff offered to manufacture and deliver such goods, and that such offer or offers were declined by defendant. Bowen v. Young, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 1029, 37 Misc. Rep. 547.

The ordinary signification of the word "refuse" is to deny a request or demand; and where a complaint alleged a contract by which a father agreed to convey a certain piece of land to his daughter, full performance on her part, and that the father failed, neglected, and refused to make the conveyance, and after his death his heirs had refused to convey to her, the allegations were held sufficient in an action for specific performance, without alleging a further demand. Burns v. Fox, 14 N. E. 541, 542, 113 Ind. 205.

The word "refuse," in Act Cong. June 28, 1898, § 6, providing that, if the chief of a tribe refuse or fail to bring suit for land, then any member of the tribe may bring suit, clearly implies a demand, for without it there can be no refusal; thus making a demand necessary for the commencement of an action by a member of the tribe. Brought v. Cherokee Nation (Ind. T.) 69 S. W. 937, 940.

The words "refused when due," in an acceptance of a foreign bill of exchange, on its presentation for honor, on condition that it is regularly protested and refused when due, import that there must be a distinct act of refusal, and, unless there be a request, there cannot be a refusal. Mitchell v. Baring, 10 Barn. & C. 4, 10.

In a will devising a copyhold to testator's daughter-in-law for life, remainder in fee to her son A., on an express condition that A. should convey certain property severally to his sisters, but, in case he should object or refuse to make such conveyances, then the devise to him was void, the words "object or refuse" did not necessarily express a positive act; but the testator assumed that the grandson would convey if he did not object, and the words did not imply or make necessary a request by the sisters for the conveyance. Taylor v. Crisp, 8 Adol. & El. 779.

As failure.

Const. art. 14, providing that any officer who "refuses" to take the oath therein prescribed shall forfeit his office, will not be construed to mean that a failure to take such oath within a prescribed time is a refusal; and where a party has taken a statutory oath, instead of a constitutional oath, it will not be held a refusal, since "refuse" means to deny, as a request, demand, invitation, or command, or to decline to do or grant. Duffy v. Edson, 84 N. W. 204, 268, 60 Neb. 812.

A refusal to pay a tax is one thing, and a failure to pay is another. The former may be the result of willfulness, or a denial of the legality of the tax. The latter may be the result of sickness and poverty and utter inability to pay. Inhabitants of Cape Elizabeth v. Boyd, 29 Atl. 1062, 86 Me. 317.

Gen. Laws, c. 229, § 10, providing that any party who gives notice of the taking of a deposition, and who "neglects and refuses" to take the same, shall be liable to the adverse party for 25 cents per mile for actual travel of himself and his attorney to attend the same, includes a case of innocent omission through no fault of the party giving the notice, and no distinction is made between that and a case of willful neglect. Robertson v. Northern R. R., 63 N. H. 544, 549, 3 Atl. 621.

"Refusing to comply" ordinarily means the same as "failing to comply." Smith v. Hance, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 244, 251.

"Refusing to comply," as used in a will providing that, on a legatee refusing to comply with the condition that he change his name, which must be done by petition to the Legislature, and take an oath prescribed in the will, the property should go to the next male heir on the same terms, does not have the same operation in law as his failing to comply, although they may, in general, have such operation. Where the condition to be performed depends on the will of the devisee, his failure to perform it is equivalent to a refusal; but where the condition does not depend on his will, but on the will of those over whom he can have no control, there is a manifest distinction between refusing and failing to comply with it. Taylor v. Mason, 22 U. S. (9 Wheat.) 325, 344, 6 L. Ed. 101.

The omission of the selectmen of the town to make a written report to the town of their alteration of a town way on a written petition for an alteration is such a refusal to alter it as gives jurisdiction of the matter to the county commissioners, under a statute providing that, on the refusal or neglect of the selectmen to make an alteration upon petition, an appeal will lie from their decision to the county commissioners. Inhabitants of New Marlborough v. Berkshire County Com'rs, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 423, 433.

A Georgia statute provides that, if any party plaintiff should fail or refuse to make discovery relative to allegations of usury set up in the plea, the defendant might make affidavit in writing which could be used on trial. Under this statute it was held in Persons v. Hight, 4 Ga. 474, 497, that the words "fail" and "refuse" meant substantially the same thing; both contemplating a failure to come up to the requirements of the statute.

As neglect.

"Refuse the payment of," as used in a condition in a mortgage authorizing certain proceedings if the mortgagee shall refuse the payment of any of its notes, means something more than a mere neglect to pay by the day. Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 404, 514.

As option.

In the ordinary acceptation of the term, a "refusal" is an understanding that nothing will be done with the subject to which it relates until the person to whom the refusal is given shall give some positive answer in regard to it. Hosford v. Carter (N. Y.) 10 Abb. Prac. 452, 454.

A lease, providing that, after the termination of the term, the lessee should have the "refusal of the premises" for three years longer, meant that he should have an option for renting the premises for three years longer at the same terms. Tracy v. Albany Exch. Co., 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 472, 474, 57 Am. Dec. 538.

"Refusal to purchase," as used in an agreement giving a party the "right, option, and refusal to purchase" land within a certain time, gives to the party having such option no interest, either legal or equitable, in the land. Ex parte Birch, 8 Ill. (3 Gilman) 134, 138, 143.

Of instruction.

The refusal of the court to pass on instructions submitted was a refusal, within the meaning of Rev. St. 677, § 47, requiring that the instruction shall be in writing, and shall be given or refused. Karriger v. Greb, 42 Mo. 44.

REGALIA.

"Regalia" is sometimes used in the Spanish law as indicating the right "which a sovereign has over anything in which a subject has a right or property or 'propiedad.'" Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, 566.

REGARD.

See "In Regard to."

A direction by the court to referees that, in deciding the matter submitted to them for decision, "regard should be had to the law," is construed as directory, and leaves the judgment of the referees conclusive as to the law. Walker v. Simpson, 13 Atl. 590, 592, 80 Me. 143.

"Regard," as used in a will naming five executors and trustees, and providing that, whenever their number should be reduced to two, the judge of probate of the district should appoint a third, and in so doing should regard the wishes of the existing trustees, if taken in its natural import, is equivalent to "be governed." Appeal of Allen, 38 Atl. 701, 703, 69 Conn. 702.

REGION.

A strictly correct definition of the word "region" is neighborhood, vicinity, district, quarter, or ward. Under a statute authorizing application for process against railroad companies by two reputable citizens, resident in the region traversed by the line of the railroad, for process against it on the ground that it had issued stock contrary to law, it is held that a contention that the word "region" indicates that the statute was not intended to apply to street railway companies was without foundation, and that the term properly applied to the territory traversed by a street railway company. Cheetham v. Attorney General (Pa.) 88 Wkly. Notes Cas. 124, 126.

REGISTER.

"To register" is to enter in a register; to record formally and distinctly; to enroll; to enter in a list. Reck v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 7 N. Y. Supp. 492, 54 Hun, 637.

Under the old law, when the actual record of a deed was necessary to give it priority, actual record was necessary for its admission in evidence without further proof. Until actual record it was not, then, a "registered deed." Now, however, when a deed has full effect from the moment it is filed for record, it becomes from that moment "a registered deed," within the meaning given to that term by the court. Durrence v. Northern Nat. Bank, 43 S. E. 728, 727, 117 Ga. 385.

As copyright.

The word "registered," on a label which has been registered in the Patent Office under Act Cong. 1874, is not synonymous with the word "copyright," so as to impart to an alleged infringer of the copyright constructive notice of the fact that the label is copyrighted. The label should contain the word "copyright," the name of the person owning the copyright, and the date of completion thereof. Higgins v. Keuffel (U. S.) 30 Fed. 627, 628.

Enrollment of vessel distinguished.

"Register," as used in Act Dec. 31, 1788, and Act July 18, 1793, authorizing foreign vessels wrecked and repaired in the United States to be registered or enrolled, applies to vessels engaged in the foreign trade. Vessels engaged in the foreign trade are "registered," and those engaged in the coasting and home trade are "enrolled," and the words "register" and "enrollment" are used to distinguish the certificates granted to those two classes of vessels. The Mohawk, 70 U. S. (3 Wall.) 566, 571, 18 L. Ed. 67.

REGISTER (Noun).

A register is an official record. Reck v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 7 N. Y. Supp. 492, 54 Hun, 637.

The register of a clerk of a court is, as its name imports, "a book in which the clerk is to enter the titles of actions, with brief notes under them, from time to time, of all papers filed and proceedings had therein." Code Civ. Proc. § 1052; Wolters v. Rossi, 126 Cal. 644, 649, 59 Pac. 143, 144.

REGISTER IN BANKRUPTCY.

As court, see "Court."

Rev. St. § 5003, providing that the evidence or examination in any one of the proceedings authorized in its title may be taken before a register in bankruptcy, means any register in bankruptcy, and is not limited to the register before whom the proceedings are pending or to a register of the district. In re Comstock (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 238.

REGISTERED BOND.

"A registered bond is one which is a simple certificate of indebtedness in favor of a particular individual, payable at a date named, with interest at days named. The name of the payee is entered on the books of the corporation debtor, municipal or private, as the registered owner, or, if it be a government bond, on the register of the government. On the days when, by the terms of the bond or certificate of indebtedness, the interest falls due, it is paid directly to the registered creditor without presentation of the bond, usually by check drawn to his order and sent by mail, or, if he so demands, by cash in hand; but by long-settled course of practice the payment is made by check to the order of the creditor. These bonds or certificates of indebtedness are not negotiable, and can be transferred only by an entry on the books of the debtor corporation, with a proper indorsement on the bond itself, or by the issue of a new certificate. The peculiarity of this class of securities lies in the fact that it is not necessary to produce them to the debtor at each time that the interest is due, and the danger of loss by robbery or fire is entirely removed." Benwell v. City of New York, 36 Atl. 668, 669, 55 N. J. Eq. 260.

REGISTERED PROVISIONALLY.

The words "registered provisionally," following the word "corporation," are not equivalent to a notice that it is not incorporated; but the great majority of a community, hearing the word "corporation," would not understand that the additional words gave it any other than the ordinary meaning. Regina v. Whitmarsh, 14 Q. B. 803, 804.

REGISTERED TONNAGE.

The "registered tonnage" of a ship is the cubical contents of the ship expressed in tons, or the amount of weight which she will carry as entered on some official record. Reck v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 7 N. Y. Supp. 492, 54 Hun, 637.

The term "registered tonnage" refers to a vessel's carrying capacity as stated in the ship's papers. Reck v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 29 N. E. 187, 189, 130 N. Y. 160.

REGISTRAR.

In statutes relative to elections the term "registrars" shall mean the board of registrars of voters of a city or town or the board of election commissioners of the city of Boston, when applicable. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 105, c. 11, § 1.

REGISTRATION.

"Registration," as used in a statute providing that no transfer of certificates of stock shall be valid as against bona fide creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice, except from the time such transfer shall have been registered or made upon the book or books of such company, is used in the sense of entering in the book a statement or memorandum of facts to serve as memorial or evidence. The purpose of the statute is obviously to give notice of the title to creditors and purchasers, so as to prevent fraudulent transfers, and to protect the corporation itself in determining the questions of membership, the right to vote, the payment of dividends, and other incidents of ownership. A written memorandum in proper form would as well answer the purposes thus intended as a formal record. Fisher v. Jones, 3 South. 13, 16, 82 Ala. 117.

Registration is the act of making a list, catalogue, schedule, or register. The word "registration" is an ordinary one. It is used in a generic sense, not technical, and, when applied to voters, unless there is a system of registration described by act of Congress providing for the appointment of supervisors of congressional elections, and applied by such act as the only registration of voters under the law, it is any list, register, or schedule containing all the names, the being on which lists, registers, or schedules constitutes a prerequisite to voting; and the Delaware assessment lists, made primarily by the assessors of the different hundreds and completed by the levy courts of the different counties, are such lists, though they contain not only a list of voters, but all other persons beside. In re Supervisors of Election (U. S.) 1 Fed. 1, 5.

Acts 1806, c. 49, § 3, provides that any deed, the execution of which is established by acknowledgment, shall take effect only from the date of such acknowledgment "for the purpose of admission to registration." The latter clause was necessary to explain the manner in which the acknowledgment should be made to give effect to the deed; and where an acknowledgment was not formally done, so as to authorize registration, both the deed and the registration are ineffectual to communicate any legal estate to the grantee. Robertson v. Sullivan, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 91, 93.

Registration is the method of proof prescribed for ascertaining the electors who are qualified to cast votes, and the registers are the lists of such electors. People v. Bell, 119 N. Y. 175, 181, 23 N. E. 533, 535.

REGISTRY.

Registry of a deed merely serves to give notice to third parties. In law it is notice. Stafford v. Morse, 54 Atl. 397, 398, 97 Me. 222.

The term "registry of deeds," as used in the chapter relating to the collection of taxes, shall mean the registry of deeds for the county or district in which the land taxed lies. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 229, c. 13, § 1.

The "registry of a deed" is the only statutory method of giving notice of the change of property by means of the conveyance, and it is also the only statutory mode of giving effect and operation to it as to any person or persons, except against the grantor and his heirs. Hewes v. Wiswell, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 94, 97.

The word "registry" has the same meaning both in Spanish and English law, both systems deriving it from the Latin "liber rerum gestarum," which the Roman lawyers contracted into "registrum." To register a thing is to write it in a book, and it is said by high authority on Spanish law (Gamboa) that this is especially required in the case of a mining title, to preserve it from the danger of simulation, defacement, fraud, and loss, to which separate papers would be exposed. United States v. Castillero, 67 U. S. (2 Black) 17, 109, 17 L. Ed. 360.

The registry of a deed is intended to contain all the essential parts of a full and complete notice of every fact necessary to be known, instead of merely putting the party on the scent, and requiring him to run all around the world after the grantor and the grantee, seeking information as to the true nature of the transaction. Hence it is held that, though an absolute deed and defeasance made at the same time constitute a mortgage, if the deed alone, and not the defeasance, be recorded, it is to be considered as an unrecorded mortgage. Friedley v. Hamilton (Pa.) 17 Serg. & R. 70, 71, 17 Am. Dec. 638.

The registry of a deed adds nothing to its effectiveness as a conveyance. All that it accomplishes is to impart notice. Shirk v. Thomas, 22 N. E. 976, 977, 121 Ind. 147, 16 Am. St. Rep. 381.

The words "enrollment," "registry," or "record," in a statute making it criminal to deface any registry or record, are not confined to records of courts of justice. Every registry or enrollment directed by law and preserved for the use of the public is embraced by this act of assembly. It extends without doubt to the public books in the land office. Ream v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 8 Serg. & R. 207, 209.

REGRATING.

"Regrating" was the common-law offense of buying corn or other dead victual in any market, and selling it again in the same market, or within four miles of the place. Forsyth Mfg. Co. v. Castlen, 37 S. E. 485, 487, 112 Ga. 199, 81 Am. St. Rep. 23.

REGULAR.

Webster defines "regular" to mean conformable to a rule; methodical; periodical. Zulich v. Bowman, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 83, 87.

"Regular" is derived from "regula," meaning "rule," and its first and legitimate signification, according to Webster, is "conformable to a rule; agreeable to an established rule, law, or principle, to a prescribed mode, or according to established, customary forms." Myers v. Rashback (N. Y.) 4 How. Prac. 83, 85.

As used in a deed and a vote of a town to sell lands that all buildings shall be "regular and uniform," this phrase cannot be construed to bind the land for all time to an arbitrary building line. Hamlen v. Keith, 50 N. E. 462, 463, 171 Miss. 77.

REGULAR ASSISTANT.

A "regular assistant" in a postoffice, when used with reference to an office requiring an assistant employed only during a few hours of each day, may well be said to be a person who has taken the oath of office, and who assists in receiving, opening, and distributing mail from time to time. United States v. Brent (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 1225, 1227.

REGULAR BALLOT.

"Regular ballot," as used in Act March 21, 1874, § 2, providing that, whenever any ballot with a certain designated heading shall contain printed thereon in place of another any name not found on the regular ballot having such heading, such name shall be regarded by the judges of election as having been placed there for the purpose of fraud, means a piece of paper to be voted by an elector which contains the name of the party and of the candidates chosen by those who voluntarily organize themselves into a body or party, for the purpose of promoting their interests by electing to office persons who will carry out their views, and the words were used in view of the usage of parties in thus preparing and printing their ballots. Roller v. Truesdale, 26 Ohio St. 596, 592.

REGULAR BUSINESS.

It can hardly be successfully urged that one who acts as a president of a mill and lumber company, a corporation regularly engaged in buying and selling millwork, is not carrying on a regular business or engaged in a regular employment, within a statute providing that any person residing in one county, but carrying on a regular business in another, may be sued in either county. Cromwell v. Willis, 53 Atl. 1116, 1117, 96 Md. 260.

REGULAR CHANNEL.

"Regular channel," as used in a warranty by the assured in a towage policy, reciting that the steam tug, with her tow, should not go out of the "usual and regular channel," cannot be interpreted as a warranty that the tug should never through any fault or error of navigation get out of the proper depth of water. What is meant by the clause is that, in going from place to place, the vessel should go by way of the "usual and regular channel," and should not intentionally take any unusual channel, or any route out of the usual course, but should pursue the ordinary and accustomed route. Egbert v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (U. S.) 71 Fed. 739, 742.

REGULAR CLERK.

The phrase, "regular clerk," as used in Acts 1873, c. 335, § 23, providing that the heads of all departments shall have power to appoint and remove all clerks and employés in their respective departments, but no regular clerk shall be removed until he has been informed of the cause of the removal, and has been allowed an opportunity of making an explanation, does not include the superintendent of telegraph in the fire department. People v. Board of Fire Com'rs (N. Y.) 23 Hun, 317, 319; People v. Board of Fire Com'rs of City of New York, 86 N. Y. 149, 151.

REGULAR COURSE OF BUSINESS.

A note is said to be transferred in the regular course of business when it is used in such a way that a business man of ordinary intelligence and capacity would receive it, when offered for the purpose in which it is transferred, as money, and would give credit therefor without any suspicion of the integrity thereof. Roberts v. Hall, 37 Conn. 205, 215, 9 Am. Rep. 308.

REGULAR DEALER.

Any person in the retail lumber trade, owning and operating a lumber yard in which a general assortment of stock in kind and quality commensurate with the demands of the community where located is kept for sale, is a "regular dealer," within the meaning of the constitution of a retail lumber dealers' association, declaring that any regular dealer in the lumber trade may become a member of the association. Jackson v. Staufeld, 36 N. E. 345, 350, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588.

REGULAR DEPOT.

"Regular station or depot," within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty on a railroad company for refusal to receive and forward freight when tendered at a regular station or depot, does not include a place on a railroad line where its conductors have frequently stopped trains to receive and let off freight and passengers, but where there has never been any station agent or agent's office, or books kept, tickets sold, or bills of lading given. Kellogg v. Suffolk & C. R. Co., 5 S. E. 379, 380, 100 N. C. 158.

The term "regular depot or stopping place," within the meaning of the statutes requiring locomotive engineers or other persons who have the control of railroad locomotives or trains to blow the whistle or ring the bell at least one-quarter of a mile before reaching any public crossing, or any regular depot or stopping place on such road, does not include a place where it is not the habit of the company to stop its trains, except for the purpose of putting on or putting off any passenger who so desires. Cook v. Central R. & Banking Co. of Georgia, 67 Ala. 533-542.

REGULAR DOCUMENT.

"Regular document," as used in Rev. St. N. Y. § 4226, providing that the preceding section shall not operate on unregistered vessels owned by citizens of the United States and carrying boat lease, and "sea letter or regular document issued from a custom house" of the United States, includes a certificate issued by the collector of the custom house, stating that the owner is an American citizen. The Miranda (U. S.) 51 Fed. 523, 525, 2 C. C. A. 362.

REGULAR ELECTION.

"Regular," as used in Act Feb. 7, 1889, § 6, providing that at the regular election to be held in the year 1890 the county commissioners of two certain counties should submit the question of location of the county seat to the voters of such counties, is synonymous with the word "general," and as used was intended to mean the general election as provided for by Revised Statutes. Doan v. Logan County Com'rs, 26 Pac. 167, 170, 3 Idaho, 38.

The word "regular" means conformable to an established rule, law, or principle, and the exact literal signification of the phrase "next regular election" is the next election held conformably to established rule or law. State v. Cobb, 2 Kan. 82, 54.

In Acts Adj. Sess. 1863, p. 279, providing that, if any of certain officers in St. Louis county shall hereafter vacate his office, except by the expiration of his term, it shall be the duty of the Governor to appoint until the next "regular election" a suitable person to perform the duties of the office, the phrase quoted meant the next general election. When applied to elections, the terms "regular" and "general" have been used interchangeably and synonymously. The word "regular" is used in reference to the general elections occurring throughout the state. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Conrades, 45 Mo. 45, 47.

"Regular election," as used in Const. art. 3, § 11, providing that, in case of vacancy in any judicial office, it shall be filled by appointment of the Governor until the next regular election that shall occur more than 30 days after such vacancy shall have happened, should be construed to mean the next election held conformably to established rule or law; that is, the next regular election prescribed by law for the election of a particular officer to be elected. Ward v. Clark, 10 Pac. 827, 35 Kan. 315.

In Const. art. 3, § 11, providing that, in case of vacancy in any judicial office, it shall be filled by appointment of the Governor until the next regular election that shall occur more than 30 days after such vacancy shall have happened, the expression "regular election" does not necessarily mean general election, or township election, or any state, county, city, or district election, but simply means the regular election prescribed by law for the election of the particular officer to be elected. The next regular election to be held for any particular office could, of course, be only such an election as could be regularly and legally held for that particular office. It could not be an election held for some other office, or at a time not fixed by law for filling such office, or without law, or merely because an election might be properly held at that time for the accomplishment of some other purpose. Matthews v. Shawnee County Com'rs, 9 Pac. 765, 768, 34 Kan. 606.

"Regular election," as used in Const. art. 4, § 11, providing that, in case of vacancy, the judge of the district court "shall have power to appoint a clerk until a regular election can be held," does not mean general election, but any election by the people which is provided for by law. Banton v. Wilson, 4 Tex. 400, 408.

As used in Const. art. 4, § 31, providing that, in case of a vacancy of certain offices, the Governor may fill such vacancy by appointing a successor, who shall hold until the next regular election, means the next regular election for the office in which a vacancy has occurred. People v. Wilson, 72 N. C. 155, 161.

St. 1863, p. 605, § 14, authorizing the board of education, in case of vacancy in an office for superintendent, to appoint a person to fill the vacancy until the regular election then next following, when the office shall be filled by the election of the people, means the next general election, and not the next election at which superintendents are to be elected. The phrase "regular election" is employed in the sense of general, as contradistinguished from a called or special, election. People v. Babcock, 55 Pac. 1017, 1018, 123 Cal. 307.

REGULAR HOTEL.

The words "regular hotels and eating houses," in Rev. St. § 8092, providing that all places where intoxicating liquors are sold shall be closed on Sunday, but that the term "place," in reference to regular hotels and eating houses, shall be construed to mean a room or part of the room where such liquors are usually exposed to sale, designates the place of the principal and not the subordinate business, which is the carrying on of the hotel or eating house. Lederer v. State (Ohio) 3 O. C. D. 308, 304.

REGULAR INDORSEMENT.

A "regular indorsement" is an indorsement in blank of third persons under the name of the payee, and such indorsements are held to impose only the obligation of second indorsers, and parol evidence is not received to vary that obligation; but in Vermont no distinction has ever been made between regular and irregular indorsements, but they have been held alike prima facie to impose the obligation of maker. National Bank v. Dorset Marble Co., 17 Atl. 42, 43, 61 Vt. 106, 2 L. R. A. 428.

REGULAR INTERVAL.

By the term "regular intervals," as used in an application for a patent, we are to understand intervals that conform to a prescribed rule. Hanifen v. Armitage (U. S.) 117 Fed. 845, 850.

REGULAR MARKET PRICE.

"Regular market price" is the same as "current market price," so that proof that articles were to be furnished at the regular market price does not constitute a variance from an allegation that they were to be furnished at the current market price. Santa Monica Lumber & Mill Co. v. Hege, 51 Pac. 555, 557, 119 Cal. 376.

REGULAR MEETING.

A regular meeting of town trustees is such a meeting as the law requires to be held at a stated time and place. State v. Trustees of Wilkesville Tp., 20 Ohio St. 288, 293.

The term "stated meeting," or "regular meeting," of a board of directors or controllers, whenever they occur in the act relating to the organization of boards of school directors, shall be taken to mean the first meeting thereof for organization after the annual election of directors or controllers, and the monthly or other periodical meetings held thereafter in accordance with the standing regulations of the board; but, if there are no standing regulations, then every meeting held in succession from said first meeting for organization, by adjournment to a time and place certain, and so entered on the minutes of the proper board, shall be to all intents and purposes regarded as a regular meeting. P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1894, p. 766, § 52; Act April 11, 1862, § 3 (P. L. 471).

REGULAR MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL.

Rev. St. c. 71, declares that "all regular ministers of the gospel" of any denomination having the cure of souls shall be authorized to solemnize the rites of matrimony according to the rites and ceremonies of their respective churches. Held, that the term "regular minister of the gospel," as used in such act, imports that the person shall be something more than a minister or preacher, and that he had, according to the constitution of his church, the right to celebrate matrimony, and to some extent at least the power to administer the Christian sacraments as acknowledged and held by his church. State v. Bray, 35 N. C. 289, 290.

REGULAR PANEL.

The words "regular panel," as used in the statute providing that, when a jury for the trial of a cause cannot be made up from the regular panel, the judge may deliver to the proper officer a list of jurors sufficient to complete the panel, means the panel drawn from the wheel, whether drawn for the particular case, or to serve for the term, or some stated time. Barr v. City of Kansas, 25 S. W. 562, 563, 121 Mo. 22.

The expression "regular panel," in reference to juries, means the number of persons who are to constitute the regular attendance of the court during the term as regular jurors—that is, as the standing jury; and as used in Ky. St. §§ 2243, 2246, providing that 30 names shall be drawn, from which list of 30 names the regular panel of the petit jury shall be selected in the order in which their names appear, the regular panel consists of 24 persons, and not of 30 persons mentioned. Stone v. Saunders, 51 S. W. 788, 106 Ky. 904.

REGULAR PASSENGER TRAIN.

"Regular passenger train," as used in Railroad Act July 1, 1879, § 25 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1889, p. 1060), providing that every railroad corporation shall cause its "regular passenger trains" to stop a sufficient length of time at its stations at county seats to accommodate passengers, includes all trains engaged in carrying passengers, running regularly every day upon an advertised time-card of the company, equipped as all other passenger trains are. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. People, 51 N. E. 842, 844, 175 Ill. 359.

A train designated as a "fast mail train," and used mainly for carrying the mail, but which also has coaches for the use of passengers, which runs daily on schedule time, and is advertised by time-tables and travelers' guides as a passenger train, is a regular passenger train, within Rev. St. Ill. 1891, c. 114, § 88, requiring all regular passenger trains to stop a sufficient length of time at the railroad stations or county seats to receive and let off passengers with safety. Illinois Cent. Ry. Co. v. People, 33 N. E. 173, 176, 143 Ill. 434, 19 L. R. A. 119.

Act May 29, 1879, which requires all regular passenger trains to stop at county seat stations a sufficient length of time to receive and let off passengers with safety, should be construed to mean a train engaged in carrying passengers running regularly every day on an advertised time-card of the company, and equipped as are all passenger trains. The term does not merely imply an accommodation train, stopping at all stations, but should be construed to include a through passenger train, equipped and operated as other passenger trains on the road, carrying passengers and baggage, running on an official time-table, which only differs from other passenger trains in that the other stopped at all stations, while this one did not. The act would not include a freight or excursion train, or a special train. Chicago & A. R. R. v. People, 105 Ill. 657, 659.

REGULAR PHYSICIAN.

The term "regular physician" means that the physician to whom the term is applied is a member of the county society and town association. Bradbury v. Bardin, 35 Conn. 577, 581.

REGULAR PLACE OF WORSHIP.

The term "regular place of stated worship," in Act May 14, 1874, exempting from taxation all churches, meeting houses, or other regular places of stated worship, does not include a parsonage situated on the same lot with the church, although occasional religious services are held therein. Wood v. Moore (Pa.) 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 265, 266.

The term "regular places of stated worship," in Act May 14, 1874, exempting all churches, meeting houses, or other regular places of stated worship from taxation, does not include a church in the process of erection. Erie County Com'rs v. Bishop (Pa.) 13 Phila. 509, 510.

REGULAR POLICEMEN.

"Regular" means constant, fixed, and not temporary, and as used in Acts 1898, c. 192, authorizing street commissioners to appoint regular policemen, it means policemen who are to serve, when appointed, until removed for cause. Board of Street Com'rs of Hagerstown v. Williams, 53 Atl. 923, 924, 96 Md. 232.

REGULAR RATES.

The words "regular rates," as used in a contract with a telephone company whereby a subscriber was to pay regular rates for the use of his telephone, prima facie must be construed with reference to rates paid by other parties at the same time, in the same place, and for the same service. Martinsburg Deposit Bank v. Central Pennsylvania Telephone & Supply Co., 24 Atl. 754, 756, 150 Pa. 36.

REGULAR REAL ESTATE BUSINESS.

"Regular real estate business," as used in a partnership agreement to do a regular real estate, insurance, and mortgage loan business, means business of real estate brokers, and not that of operating or speculating in real estate. Davis v. Darling, 30 N. Y. Supp. 321, 322, 80 Hun, 299.

REGULAR SESSION.

A session of county commissioners, held by adjournment from a regular session, is a "regular session," within Rev. St. c. 18, § 1. Town of Waterville v. Kennebec County Com'rs, 59 Me. 80, 89.

Under Rev. St. c. 25, § 1, providing that certain petitions should be presented to the county commissioners "at one of their regular sessions," an application is properly made if presented at an adjournment of a regular session, as a petition presented during a regular session at any period of the session is presented at a regular session. Harkness v. Waldo County Com'rs, 26 Me. (13 Shep.) 353, 356.

REGULAR STATION.

The term "regular station," as used in Rev. St. c. 114, § 94, providing that, if any passenger on any railroad car shall refuse to pay his fare, the conductor may cause him to be removed from the train at any regular station, means the place on the railroad where passenger trains usually stop for the purpose of having passengers get on and off such trains. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Latimer, 21 N. E. 7, 9, 128 Ill. 163.

The Code, which prescribes a fine for the refusal of a railroad to receive goods for transportation at any regular station, thereby denotes a place where the railroad transacts regular and orderly business, with suitable buildings and appliances, and with agents to give bills of lading and receipts to shippers tendering or receiving freight at all appropriate times. The fact that a place is set down in the circulars and orders of the railroad as a station, and that a mail train stops there regularly, is not sufficient to make it a regular station. Land v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 10 S. E. 80, 81, 104 N. C. 43.

"Regular station or depot," within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty on a railroad company for refusal to receive and forward freight when tendered at a regular station or depot, does not include a place on a railroad line where its conductors have frequently stopped trains to receive and let off freight and passengers, but where there has never been any station agent, or agent's office, or books kept, tickets sold, or bills of lading given. Kellogg v. Suffolk & C. R. Co., 5 S. E. 379, 380, 100 N. C. 158.

The term "regular station," as used in the chapter relating to the maintenance of railroad stations, shall be construed to mean such as are now maintained by the several railroads in this state, and such as may be required by other provisions of the chapter. V. S. 1894, 3889.

REGULAR SURVEY.

A survey of a ship, made at the call of the captain thereof by the master and wardens of the port of Orleans, together with a skillful carpenter, certified under their hands how the vessel surveyed appeared to them, and entered in a book kept for that purpose in their office, is a "regular survey," within a policy of marine insurance, providing that it was declared and understood that, if the vessel named therein after a regular survey should be condemned, the insurers should not be bound to pay the sum thereby insured, etc. Janney v. Columbian Ins. Co., 23 U. S. (10 Wheat.) 411, 417, 6 L. Ed. 354.

"Regular survey," as used in a policy of marine insurance, that, if the vessel should be declared unseaworthy upon a regular survey, the insurer should not be bound on such policy, must in every instance be such as is known to the laws and customs of the port in which the vessel happens to be. An exemplification of a condemnation of a vessel in a foreign court of vice admiralty, reciting the certificate of surveyors that the vessel was unworthy of being repaired and insufficient and unfit ever to go to sea again, is a regular survey within the meaning of such policy. Dorr v. Pacific Ins. Co., 20 U. S. (7 Wheat.) 581, 612, 5 L. Ed. 528.

REGULAR TERM.

See "Next Regular Term."

A regular term of court is "a term begun at the time appointed by law, and continued at the discretion of the court to such time as it may appoint, consistent with the law." Wightman v. Karsner, 20 Ala. 446, 451.

Where a term of court was in one sense a "regular term," and so denominated by the statute, but still limited by the statute to the transaction of business relating solely to taxation, it was in no sense a regular term of the court for the transaction of business generally. Matkin v. Marengo County, 34 South. 171, 174, 137 Ala. 155.

REGULAR TURNS.

The expression "regular turns of loading," with reference to coal, means in turn at the spout, as directed by act of Parliament; but evidence is not admissible to show that such is the custom in loading coke. Leide-man v. Schultz, 5 J. Scott, 38, 50.

REGULARLY.

Webster defines "regularly" to mean a uniform order at certain intervals or periods, as by day and night. Zulich v. Bowman, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 83, 87.

"Regularly" means constituted, appointed, or conducted in a proper manner, or conformable to law or custom; so that the use of the term in a stipulation that a certain person had been regularly licensed is equivalent to "lawfully licensed," as used in the statute. In re Liquor Certificate No. 14,111, 51 N. Y. Supp. 281, 284, 23 Misc. Rep. 446.

The word "regularly" is defined as meaning in a regular manner; in a way or method accordant to rule or established mode; in uniform order; methodically; in due order. Such is its signification in an ordinance requiring a railroad company to operate the road regularly, etc. City of Belleville v. Citizens' Horse Ry. Co., 38 N. E. 584, 587, 152 Ill. 171, 26 L. R. A. 681.

REGULARLY EMPLOYED.

"Regularly employed," as used in St. 1873, c. 284, § 1, exempting a vessel regularly employed in the coasting trade from compulsory pilotage, did not necessarily mean continuously so employed, but would include the case of a vessel actually and legally so employed at the time the services of a pilot are tendered, though the word "employed" is more commonly used as signifying continuous occupation, and the use of the word "regularly" strengthens this construction. Wilson v. Gray, 127 Mass. 98, 99.

"Regularly employed," as used in Pub. St. c. 70, § 32, exempting "vessels regularly employed in the coasting trade" from compulsory pilotage, includes "a vessel regularly documented and sailing under a coasting license, and engaged in transporting coal from the depot of the charterer in one port to his depot in another port, for sale at the latter port in the regular course of business." Chase v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 135 Mass. 847, 849.

REGULARLY CALLED FOR TRIAL.

"Regularly called for trial" means calling a case for the purpose of entering on the actual trial thereof in accordance with previous orders regularly made. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Horney, 5 Kan. 340, 346.

REGULARLY GIVEN IN FOR TAXES.

A statute requiring property to be "regularly given in for taxes" means given in according to the law applicable to the giving in of such taxes. Macon & A. R. Co. v. Little, 45 Ga. 370, 383.

REGULARLY ISSUED.

A warranty of county bonds in a sale thereof by a private citizen, that they were "genuine and regularly issued," does not merely mean that they are not forgeries, and were not issued without consideration, and that they were ordered by the proper officers, but means that they are not subject to any defense founded on a want of legal form in the signature or seals. Smeltzer v. White, 92 U. S. 390, 391, 392, 23 L. Ed. 508.

REGULARLY LAID OUT.

Comp. Laws 1879, c. 84, § 41, provides that every railroad company shall construct and keep in repair a good and substantial crossing at each point where the railroad crosses in regularly laid out public highways. Under this statute it is held that the expression "regularly laid out" would embrace only such highways the existence of which could be ascertained from the statutes or public records, and did not include such highways as depended for the proof of their existence upon the parol evidence of the people of the neighborhood, and had not been legalized or laid out by statute, or established by dedication on any public record. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Long, 27 Kan. 684, 694.

REGULATE.

To regulate means to adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws. Higgins v. Mitchell County Com'rs, 51 Pac. 72, 73, 6 Kan. App. 314; State v. McCann, 72 Tenn. 1, 13; Otto Gas Engine Works v. Hare, 67 Pac. 444, 445, 64 Kan. 78.

A power to regulate implies a continued existence of the matter to be regulated. State v. Clarke, 54 Mo. 17, 33, 14 Am. Rep. 471; State v. McCann, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 1, 13.

"Regulation," as used in the title of the ordinance for the regulation of street parades, etc., means the control and government thereof; the word necessarily implying that street parades are lawful, but that certain restrictions may be necessary to preserve the public from harm. Anderson v. City of Wellington, 19 Pac. 719, 723, 40 Kan. 173, 2 L. R. A. 110, 10 Am. St. Rep. 175.

"Regulation," as used in Const. art. 14, § 1, providing that the use of all water not appropriated, etc., is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the state, etc., does not mean confiscation, or a taking without just compensation, so as to include the fixing of unreasonable rates. Spring Valley Waterworks v. City of San Francisco, 22 Pac. 910, 914, 82 Cal. 288, 6 L. R. A. 756, 16 Am. St. Rep. 116.

Regulation is not discrimination, and a contract which so far discriminates that the favored party pays a substantial sum for the privileges conferred cannot be considered to be a "regulation" in any fair sense of that term. Hedding v. Gallagher, 45 Atl. 98, 98, 69 N. H. 650, 76 Am. St. Rep. 204.

"Regulating the internal affairs of towns and counties," as used in the Constitution, providing that the Legislature shall not pass private, local, or special laws regulating the internal affairs of towns and counties, etc., should not be construed as equivalent to "relating to towns and counties," since the words of the constitutional provision were not intended to forbid all special legislation on these subjects, but only such as regulated internal affairs, leaving the power undisturbed as to the residue. Pell v. City of Newark, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 71, 75, 29 Am. Rep. 266.

As abolish.

A law which extinguishes a municipal corporation by repealing its charter is not a law regulating the internal affairs of such corporation. It produces no dissimilarity in city governments, and does not conflict with the provision of the state Constitution which prohibits the passage of any private, local, or special law regulating the internal affairs of town and counties. Worthley v. Steen, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 542, 543.

Const. art. 6, § 3, providing, except as herein otherwise provided, the Legislature shall have the same power to "alter and regulate" the jurisdiction and proceedings in law and equity that they have heretofore exercised, implies that the old jurisdiction shall in some degree continue in an altered or regulated form, and does not authorize the Legislature to entirely deprive a court of a part of its original jurisdiction. People v. Coughtry, 12 N. Y. Supp. 259, 58 Hun, 245.

In construing a statute authorizing a city to regulate sidewalks within its limits, the court said: "Its object was to place within the control of the city the whole subject, and under it, if it was not deemed necessary that any sidewalk should be constructed, it was not obliged to accept one, and impose the burden upon the city. While the word 'regulate,' as applied to sidewalks, more often implies the existence of the thing to be regulated, the use of the streets of a city implies the power to prohibit the use of them under certain circumstances." It was held that the city, under this power, could not only refuse to construct, but could remove sidewalks already constructed. Attorney General v. City of Boston, 7 N. E. 722, 724, 142 Mass. 204.

As control.

"Regulate," as used in Act Feb. 15, 1877, entitled "An act to regulate fees," etc., means and includes the power to control. State v. Ream, 21 N. W. 398, 399, 16 Neb. 681.

"Regulate," as used in General Incorporation Law, art. 5, § 1, cl. 9, conferring power on the city council to regulate the use of streets, includes control, and hence it authorizes a city to control such streets. Chicago Dock & Canal Co. v. Garrity, 3 N. E. 448, 450, 115 Ill. 155.

As equalize.

"Regulate and equalize salaries," as used in Act 1879, entitled "An act to regulate and equalize the salaries of certain public officers," is to be construed to mean to regulate such salaries so as to equalize them. "To regulate, with the end of rendering equal, may be taken as its fair meaning, without any great strain on a literal construction of the words." State v. McCann, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 1, 13.

As establish.

The term "regulate" ordinarily implies, not so much the establishment of a new thing, as the arrangement in proper order of such as already exist. United States v. Harris (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 185, 193.

As fix.

"Regulate" means to adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws—and is so used in Laws Kan. 1895, c. 140, entitled "An act regulating fees and salaries of county officers"; and hence the act is constitutional, in that it expresses its meaning as fixing salaries in its title. Higgins v. Mitchell County Com'rs, 51 Pac. 72, 73, 6 Kan. App. 314.

"Regulate fees and salaries," as used in the title of Act April 9, 1880, entitled "An act to regulate the fees and salaries of certain public officers, were used in their ordinary, popular sense, and were intended to describe the law, the purpose of which was to control, adjust, and limit the sums the officers named were thereafter to receive for their services as officials. Commonwealth v. Bailey, 81 Ky. 395, 398.

The word "regulate," as used in Const. art. 11, § 5, declaring that the Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of supervisors, sheriffs, and county clerks, and it shall regulate the compensation of all such officers in proportion to duties, means to fix or adjust the compensation of all county officers in proportion to their duties. Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 29 Pac. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161.

As govern.

One of the synonyms of the word "regulate" is "govern." An act entitled "An act to regulate the recording of title notes or evidences of conditional sales," may be read "An act to govern the recording of title notes," etc. Otto Gas Engine Works v. Hare, 67 Pac. 444, 445, 64 Kan. 78.

"Regulate" is defined to mean "govern by or subject to certain rules or restrictions," and it is held that authority in a city charter to regulate bill-posting includes the right to prescribe the means by which it shall be conducted. City of Rochester v. West, 29 App. Div. 125, 130, 51 N. Y. Supp. 482.

"Regulate" means to subject to governing principles; to rule; to govern. Act 1883, reading: "In making loans and disbursing interest collected, the trustee and auditor of state shall be governed by the law now in force regulating the manner of making loans of the University Fund"—means that such officer, when loaning that fund, will be controlled by the law governing the manner of making such loans. Fisher v. Brower, 64 N. E. 614, 618, 159 Ind. 139.

As grant exclusive franchise.

"Regulate ferries," as used in Act May 4, 1852, which provides that the board of trustees of the city of Oakland shall have power to regulate ferries, meant that the trustees should have power to impose regulations on ferries, but did not mean that they had a right to grant an exclusive ferry privilege. Minturn v. Larue, 64 U. S. (23 How.) 485, 436, 16 L. Ed. 574.

As grant exemptions.

"Regulate," as used in Act 1875, entitled "An act to authorize the incorporation of rural cemetery associations and regulate cemeteries," is broad enough to cover a grant of exemption from taxes and assessments. It is too limited a meaning of the word "regulate" which conceives it to be applicable only to the imposition of restrictions. The word is of far broader meaning, and includes all direction by rule of the subject-matter. As applied to property devoted to cemetery purposes, it would naturally include, not only the making of rules for its management by those having it in charge, but also the making of rules governing the conduct of others in respect thereto, and of the public in respect to public burdens thereon. City of Newark v. Mt. Pleasant Cemetery Co., 33 Atl. 396, 397, 58 N. J. Law (23 Vroom) 168.

As license.

Where a penal statute prohibits disorderly houses in the state, and another statute confers on a certain city power to suppress and restrain such houses, and authorizes the city council to restrain and punish the inmates, and to prevent and punish the keeping of such houses, and authorizes the adoption of summary measures for the removal or suppression, or the regulation and inspection, of all such establishments, the words "suppress, restrain, and regulate" should not be construed as giving power to license such houses. Ex parte Garza, 13 S. W. 779, 28 Tex. App. 381, 19 Am. St. Rep. 845.

"Regulate," as used in a village charter, authorizing the same to regulate by its by-laws victualing shops, confers the power to license, as well as to prescribe the manner of their use. Village of St. Johnsbury v. Thompson, 9 Atl. 571, 573, 59 Vt. 300, 59 Am. Rep. 731.

"Regulate," as used in Act Ark. March 9, 1875, giving to municipal corporations organized under the act power to regulate hotels and other houses for public entertainment, includes power to license as a means of regulating. Town of Russellville v. White, 41 Ark. 485, 486.

"Regulate," as used in the Portland city charter, providing that the city council has power and authority to control and regulate slaughterhouses, washhouses, and public laundries, etc., includes the power to license such houses. The Laundry License Case (U. S.) 22 Fed. 701, 703.

"Regulate," as used in Sess. Acts 1870, pp. 463, 464, giving the city council of St. Louis power by ordinance to regulate or suppress bawdy or disorderly houses, etc., should be construed to prescribe the rule by which they are to be governed. The word as used in the statute gives the city power to control such places, including the power to license them. State v. Clarke, 54 Mo. 17, 33, 14 Am. Rep. 471.

The power to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquor does not give power to license. City of Keokuk v. Dressell, 47 Iowa, 597, 599 (citing City of Burlington v. Bumgardner, 42 Iowa, 673).

Where a city council is given authority to regulate and restrain beer rooms and drinking shops, the words "regulate and restrain" should be construed to confer the power to require, as a proper measure of regulation and restraint, a bond to be given by an applicant for a license. In re Schneider, 8 Pac. 289, 290, 294, 11 Or. 288.

Power to regulate does not require the exercise of the same power as the power to license, and does not give the latter power. Thus a power to regulate and tax taverns and houses does not give the right to license such houses. City of Burlington v. Bumgardner, 42 Iowa, 673, 674.

Under Gen. Laws, § 62, cl. 81, empowering a municipality "to direct the location and regulate the management and construction of packing houses, renderies, bone factories," etc., the power to require a license is one of the means of regulating the exercise or pursuit of this business. There are, no doubt, a great variety of other means that might be adopted to accomplish the purpose; but these municipalities are not restricted as to the means they shall employ to regulate the business. In the various illustrations of the meaning of the word "regulate," we find, among others, "to direct," "to rule," "to govern," "to conduct." As the language is used in reference to the power of a city or village government, we must suppose that it was intended to mean that such bodies might rule or govern this character of business.—Chicago Packing & Provision Co. v. City of Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 225, 30 Am. Rep. 545.

A municipal power to license, regulate, and restrain the sale of intoxicating liquors authorizes a prohibition of the bartering or giving away of liquors without license. Vinson v. Town of Monticello, 19 N. E. 734, 735, 118 Ind. 103; Miller v. Ammon, 12 Sup. Ct. 884, 885, 145 U. S. 421, 36 L. Ed. 759.

Act April 24, 1862, § 4, amendatory of an act incorporating the city of Oakland, providing that the city council shall have power to "make regulations" for licensing, taxing, and regulating all such vehicles, business, and employments as the public good may require, carries with it and includes the power to pass an ordinance requiring a license to be taken out. Ex parte Mount, 6 Pac. 78, 79, 66 Cal. 448.

As refuse license.

"Regulate," as used in 1 Comp. Laws 1888, § 1753, subd. 40, providing that a city council shall have power to license, regulate, and tax the sale of intoxicating liquors, means to control, restrict, and direct, and includes the power to refuse a license to a petitioner in the discretion of the common council. Perry v. City Council, 25 Pac. 739, 740, 7 Utah, 143, 11 L. R. A. 446.

"Regulate" is defined by Webster to mean "to direct by rule or restriction." An act to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquor authorizes the board in its discretion to refuse to grant a license. People v. Board of Excise of the City of Brooklyn, 16 N. Y. Supp. 798, 799.

As prescribe rules.

"Regulate," as used in Const. art. 4, § 25, declaring that the Legislature shall not pass any special or local law regulating county and township business, or in a case where a general law is applicable, means to prescribe a rule for acting, to direct a mode in which a transaction shall be conducted; the word being derived from the Latin word "rego," signifying to guide or direct, through the noun "regula," a rule. Hence an act directing a board of supervisors of a city and county to pay a certain claim is invalid. Conlin v. Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco, 46 Pac. 279, 281, 114 Cal. 404, 33 L. R. A. 752.

A right to regulate the running of cars means, according to the ordinary acceptance of the term "regulate," to prescribe rules or laws by which the running of cars within a city is to be governed, and the power may, without any strained construction, well apply to the means or force by which the cars are propelled. A right to "regulate the running" seems ex vi termini to imply the authority to regulate the power by which they are driven. In re Wright (N. Y.) 63 How. Prac. 345, 347 (citing Buffalo & N. F. R. Co. v. City of Buffalo [N. Y.] 5 Hill, 209).

As prohibit.

The words "regulate" and "prohibit" have different and distinct meanings, whether understood in their ordinary and common signification, or as defined by the court in construing statutes. To regulate the sale of liquor implies that the business may be engaged in or carried on subject to established rules or methods. Miller v. Jones, 80 Ala. 89, 96; Bronson v. Oberlin, 41 Ohio St. 476, 483, 52 Am. Rep. 90.

"Regulate," as used in a statute giving to a city the right to regulate bowling alleys, does not authorize forbidding the maintenance of such alleys within the fire limits of a city of about 2,000 inhabitants, or within 100 yards of any residence or business house, where the only location possible under an ordinance so forbidding is about 600 yards from the business portion of the town, and remote from any thoroughfare or public place, since such restriction is a virtual prohibition. The power to regulate does not properly include the power to suppress or prohibit, for the very essence of regulation is the existence of something to be regulated. The power to regulate includes the power to restrain, so long as the restraint imposed is reasonable. The restraint must not so confine the exercise of any occupation as to amount to a prohibition. The power to regulate a trade, business, or occupation in any given town or city is to be determined by the environments and conditions of such town or city, and what would apply to one town or city might not apply to another. Ex parte Patterson, 58 S. W. 1011, 1013, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 256, 51 L. R. A. 654.

Act S. O. Dec. 24, 1892, providing that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors should be prohibited within the state, except as provided by certain regulations contained therein, should be construed to mean prohibition, since the regulation of the traffic is the prohibition of it, except in accordance with certain rules. Cantini v. Tillman (U. S.) 54 Fed. 969, 970.

Regulation means a rule or order prescribed for management or government, and under a power to provide for the erection, management, and regulation of slaughter-houses a city has power to prohibit their operation. City of St. Louis v. Howard, 24 S. W. 770, 771, 119 Mo. 41, 41 Am. St. Rep. 630.

The word "regulate," as used in the title of Pub. Acts 1897, No. 151, entitled "An act to regulate the catching of fish in the waters of the state by the use of pound or trap nets and other apparatus," is sufficiently broad to cover a provision in the act prohibiting the taking of fish during certain portions of the year; the object of the law being the preservation of the industry of fishing and a valuable food product, so that any provision tending to these ends is within the term "regulate." Osborn v. Charlevolx Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 655, 658, 72 N. W. 982.

The power to regulate a useful trade does not authorize its prohibition or the creation of a monopoly, and where a camp meeting association was empowered to authorize persons to engage in certain pursuits in the park, and establish regulations therefor, it did not give the corporation the right to restrain or prohibit such pursuits. Thousand

Island Park Ass'n v. Tucker, 65 N. E. 975, 976, 173 N. Y. 203, 60 L. R. A. 786.

The statutes which provide for the incorporation of cities, and declare that the common council of a city shall have power "to regulate ferries" across streams passing through and bordering upon the corporate limits of such city, designate the kind of boats to be used, the time and place of landing, and the rates of ferriage, do not give to the city council power to prohibit ferries from running without a license obtained from the city council. The words are not used as a synonym of, but rather as the correlative of, the words "to prohibit," "to prevent," "to restrain," "to establish," "to construct," or "to direct the location of." Duckwall v. City of New Albany, 25 Ind. 283, 285.

An ordinance entitled "An ordinance to regulate and control the driving of cattle through the streets of Jersey City," meant "to establish rules and limits," but did not import that the driving of cattle should be prohibited. McConvill v. Jersey City, 39 N. J. Law (10 Vroom) 38, 44.

"Regulate," as used in a title of a Michigan act to regulate the sale of liquors, etc., should not be construed as synonymous with "prohibit," and hence an amendatory section, which prohibits the sale thereof within certain specified limits, was not embraced in the title. People v. Gadway, 28 N. W. 101, 103, 61 Mich. 285, 1 Am. St. Rep. 578.

"Regulate," as used in Rev. St. § 696, providing that a city or town council shall have power to regulate and restrain all places where spirituous liquor is sold at retail, does not include the power to prohibit. Mernaugh v. City of Orlando, 27 South. 34, 35, 41 Fla. 483.

"Regulate" and "prohibit" are not synonymous terms, but have different and distinct meanings. To regulate a business implies that the business may be engaged in or carried on subject to established rules or methods, while to prohibit is to prevent the business being engaged in or carried on entirely or partially. The two are incongruous, and a title to an act which expresses a purpose to regulate the sale of liquor will not authorize an absolute prohibition. In re Hauck, 38 N. W. 269, 275, 70 Mich. 396.

"Regulate," as used in Act Mo. March 30, 1871, authorizing a city to regulate or suppress bawdyhouses, is not synonymous with the word "prohibit," as used in a former statute prohibiting their existence; and hence the latter act is repealed by the passage of the former. State v. De Bar, 58 Mo. 395, 397.

A statutory authority to a city to "regulate all places where intoxicating liquors are sold" to be used on the premises does not confer the power to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors. Sweet v. City of Wabash, 41 Ind. 7, 11.

The term "regulate," in a clause of the Constitution authorizing the Legislature to regulate the wearing of arms, does not authorize the passage of a law prohibiting the wearing of arms. The power to regulate does not fairly mean the power to prohibit. On the contrary, to regulate necessarily involves the existence of the thing or act to be regulated. Andrews v. State, 50 Tenn. (3 Helsk.) 165, 180, 8 Am. Rep. 8.

"Regulate," as used in Laws 1870, c. 77, authorizing the common council of the city of Albany to enact ordinances "to regulate the erection, use, and continuance of slaughterhouses," implies a power of restriction and restraint, and applies not only to the form or material to be used in the erection of a slaughterhouse, but also has reference to the locality where the same may be erected, and may be construed to permit a total prohibition in particular areas or localities. Cronin v. People, 82 N. Y. 818, 321, 37 Am. Rep. 564.

"Regulate," as used in the grant of power to a city to regulate the sale of liquors, etc., implies the power to restrain such sales to certain hours of the day or to certain days of the week. Corporation of Town of Minden v. Silverstein, 36 La. Ann. 912, 913.

A city charter granting the power to "regulate and to manage markets" impliedly authorizes the city council to adopt an ordinance prohibiting the sale of particular commodities at stores, stalls, and places outside market houses established for such purposes; the power to regulate not authorizing prohibition in a general sense, but being limited to confining the business referred to to certain hours of the day, to certain localities or buildings in the city, and to the manner of its prosecution within those hours, localities, and buildings. Ex parte Byrd, 4 South. 397, 398, 84 Ala. 17, 5 Am. St. Rep. 328.

Within the meaning of the Constitution requiring that the subject of every act of the Legislature shall be stated in the title, the title "To regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors," etc., sufficiently expresses the subject of an act prohibiting the sale of such liquors to minors and to persons in the habit of getting intoxicated; such matters being properly included within the subject of regulating the sale. Williams v. State, 48 Ind. 306, 308.

A power given to villages to license, regulate, and prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors has been held to authorize the licensing of the sale of liquor in one part of such a village and the prohibition of such sales in other parts. People v. Cregler, 28 N. E. 812, 815, 138 Ill. 401.

"Regulation," as used in Laws 1871, c. 290, § 6, providing that a city shall have power to pass an ordinance for the regulation and government of public parks, squares, and places in the city, etc., includes an ordinance or resolution that no bicycle or tricycle should be allowed in the parks. In re Wright (N. Y.) 29 Hun, 357, 358.

As provide for.

"Regulate," as used in the Declaration of Rights, declaring that the Legislature may regulate the trial and punishment of inferior grades of larceny, should be construed to mean "provide" or "provide for." Ex parte Bell, 19 Fla. 608, 614.

As punish.

"To regulate" means to adjust by a rule or regulation, and any attempts to fix rules for the manufacture, transportation, use, and sale of explosives, that do not also prescribe a punishment for the violation of such rules and regulations, would necessarily be imperfect. Therefore Act June 16, 1887, entitled "An act to regulate the manufacture, transportation, use, and sale of explosives, and to punish an improper use of the same," which provides for licensing the manufacture of explosive compounds, prohibits the storing of such explosives within a certain distance of inhabited dwellings, and punishes fraudulent acts to procure the transportation of explosives in public conveyances, and makes it felony punishable by imprisonment to manufacture or procure such explosives with the intent to use the same for unlawful destruction of life or property, is not in conflict with Const. art. 4, § 13, providing that no act shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. Hronek v. People, 134 Ill. 139, 144, 24 N. E. 861, 8 L. R. A. 837, 23 Am. St. Rep. 652.

"Regulate the police," as used in a city charter giving power to regulate the police of the city, includes the power to pass an ordinance to punish vagrants. City of St. Louis v. Bentz, 11 Mo. 61, 62.

As regulate location.

A municipal power to regulate certain industries, including livery stables, may be construed to authorize the city to determine the places where such stables shall be located, as well as the manner in which the business of keeping them shall be carried on. State ex rel. Russell v. Beattie, 16 Mo. App. 131, 134.

As restrain.

To regulate is to govern, and restraint is the essence of all government. Hence to regulate is to restrain; so that, when the Legislature undertook to regulate the business of railway corporations as common carriers, it necessarily meant to circumscribe their privileges, or to compel the exercise of such business within certain limits. Dillon v. Erie R. Co., 43 N. Y. Supp. 320, 323, 19 Misc. Rep. 116.

"Regulate," as used in a city charter authorizing the city to license and regulate bill-posters, bill distributors, and sign advertising, means to govern by or subject to certain rules or restrictions. It implies a power of restriction and restraint, not only as to the manner of conducting a specified business, but also as to the erection in or upon which the business is to be conducted. City of Rochester v. West, 58 N. E. 673, 674, 164 N. Y. 510, 53 L. R. A. 548, 79 Am. St. Rep. 659 (citing Cronin v. People, 82 N. Y. 318, 321, 37 Am. Rep. 564).

As tax.

"Regulate," as used in a corporate charter authorizing a city to regulate and license a business or trade, confers no power to impose a tax upon such business or trade. Muhlenbrinck v. Long Branch Com'rs, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 364, 36 Am. Dec. 518.

"Regulate public instruction," as used in the title of Acts 1872, p. 456, entitled "An act to regulate public instruction" in the county of R., is broad enough to include the power to tax, and hence such power may be given in the body of the act. Smith v. Bohler, 72 Ga. 546, 553.

A statutory power to municipal corporations to license and regulate sales by transient merchants does not give the municipalities power to tax such occupation. "The municipality, under the power given it to license, had the power to impose such a charge as would cover, not only the necessary expenses of issuing it, but also the additional labor of officers and other expenses imposed by the public, but nothing beyond this. As said in City of Burlington v. Putnam Ins. Co., 31 Iowa, 103, 'licenses are a part of the police regulations of the city, and should be charged for as such, and only to such extent as may reasonably compensate the city for issuing and enforcing the license, and for the care exercised by the city under its police authority over any particular person licensed.' * * * The amount of the license fee or charge is to be considered in determining whether the exaction is not really one of revenue or prohibition, instead of one of regulation under the police power." Thus the power does not warrant a municipality in imposing a license fee of $250 per month or $25 per day, if the license is issued for a shorter period, as it amounts to a prohibitory tax. City of Ottumwa v. Zekind, 64 N. W. 646, 647, 95 Iowa, 622, 29 L. R. A. 734, 58 Am. St. Rep. 447.

County business.

The phrase "regulating county business," as used in Const. art. 4, § 20, prohibiting the enactment of special and local laws regulating county business, does not render void a statute prescribing the manner in which the payment of the indebtedness of a particular county shall be conducted. Youngs v. Hall, 9 Nev. 212, 217.

The relocation of a county seat is not within Const. art. 4, § 22, prohibiting special laws regulating county and township business. Mode v. Beasley, 42 N. E. 727, 730, 143 Ind. 306.

Foreign stock companies.

"Regulate," as used in a statute entitled "An act to regulate foreign stock corporations," clearly means the regulation in respect of their exercise of corporate franchises and powers, and includes the power to provide certain requirements, which must be complied with before such corporations may do business within the state. Toledo Commercial Co. v. Glen Mfg. Co., 45 N. E. 197, 199, 55 Ohio St. 217.

Markets.

The authority given by a city charter "to establish and regulate markets" authorizes the creation of the market and its subsequent regulation, and refers by the words "to establish" to the act of originating, and the words "to regulate" comprise all that can be required to be done after the market is created. Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356, 361.

Practice of medicine.

To regulate is to adjust by rule, to subject to governing principles, or to restrict within certain rules and limitations; so that within the power to regulate the practice of medicine would fall the power to determine who might practice, and determine what shall be regarded as legitimate practice. People v. Blue Mountain Joe, 21 N. E. 923, 925, 129 Ill. 370.

Prices of gas.

"Regulation," as used in an act of a state Legislature giving a taxing district the right of regulation of the prices of gas furnished by gas companies within such district, implies that an investigation shall be made, that an opportunity to present the facts shall be furnished, that when the facts are established they shall by the regulating power be given due consideration, and that such action as shall be taken in view of these facts thus ascertained shall be just and reasonable, and such as will enable the company to maintain its existence, to preserve the property invested from destruction, and to receive on the capital invested a dividend corresponding in amount to the ruling rates of interest. New Memphis Gas & Light Co. v. City of Memphis (U. S.) 72 Fed. 952, 955.

Rate of interest.

"Regulating the rate of interest on money," as used in Const. Ill. art. 4, § 22, which forbids the General Assembly to pass any local or special law "regulating the rate of interest on money," does not include fixing of the rate of interest on an installment of a special assessment, where the same is made payable at stated periods in the future. Hence a law which fixed a rate of interest on installments of special assessments is not prohibited by this clause of the Constitution. McChesney v. People, 89 Ill. 216, 218.

Streets.

"Regulate," as used in a grant of power from a municipality to a certain committee to "regulate the streets, lanes, and squares," etc., should be construed to include the power to widen, alter, and extend the streets, lanes, and squares, so as to provide for the public convenience and the mutual connection of the whole. United States v. Harris (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 185, 193.

A city charter, conferring the power to "repair and regulate" streets of the city upon the commissioners of highways, should be construed to mean that they had the power to change the grade of a street after it had once been established. Waddell v. City of New York (N. Y.) 8 Barb. 95, 97.

The St. Louis city charter, empowering the mayor and assembly to establish, open, vacate, and improve all streets, and "to regulate their use," authorizes the city to grant a telegraph company the right to use exclusively a portion of the street on condition of contributing toward the expense of opening and improving the street; the term being one of broad import. City of St. Louis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 990, 992, 149 U. S. 465, 37 L. Ed. 810.

The power to regulate the use of streets is very comprehensive. The word "regulate" is one of very broad import. Under the power thus delegated it cannot be questioned that municipal authorities can permit the use of the surface of the street for the erection of telegraph and telephone poles and the laying of railroad tracks, and the space above the surface for stringing electric wires, and may also permit the laying of water and gas pipes and sewers beneath the street. McWethy v. Aurora Electric Light & Power Co., 67 N. E. 9, 11, 202 Ill. 218 (citing State ex rel. St. Louis Underground Surface Co. v. Murphy, 134 Mo. 548, 31 S. W. 784, 34 S. W. 51, 35 S. W. 1132, 34 L. R. A. 369, 56 Am. St. Rep. 515).

Use of water.

"Regulate the use," as used in Gen. St. §§ 1738, 1739, enacted to regulate the use of water for irrigation, should not be confined to forbidding of injustice in distribution, the prevention of waste, or the apportionment in times of scarcity, but should be construed as broad enough to include the frustration of unfair exactions and the continuance of reasonable rates. Golden Canal Co. v. Bright, 6 Pac. 142, 144, 8 Colo. 144.

Value of money.

The power to coin money, and to regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin, has no reference to, and by no possibility can have any reference to, the rate of interest to be charged for money loaned. The power thus conferred upon Congress is the power to coin money and regulate the value of the money so coined. It has been said that the power to coin money would doubtless include that of regulating its value, had the latter power not been expressly inserted. The power of regulating the value of money is a mere repetition of the words granting the power to coin money. 2 Story, Const. (4th Ed.) § 1117. By the power conferred Congress may establish the value of domestic and of foreign coin. The object of the power thus conferred is to save the country from the embarrassments of a perpetually fluctuating and variable currency. The power to coin money is one of the ordinary prerogatives of sovereignty, and is almost universally exercised in order to preserve a proper circulation of good coin of a known value in the home market. 2 Story, Const. (4th Ed.) § 1118. The power to coin money and regulate the value thereof is the power to coin money and affix to it a public stamp and value. Beach v. Peabody, 58 N. E. 679, 680, 188 Ill. 75.

REGULATE COMMERCE.

See, also, "Commerce"; "Interstate Commerce."

"Regulate," as used in the clause of the federal Constitution giving Congress the power to regulate commerce, means the power to regulate commerce which, prior to the formation of the Constitution, existed in the several states. Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 227, 6 L. Ed. 23.

"Regulation of commerce" in its constitutional meaning includes every obstacle or burden laid upon transportation by legislative authority. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 470, 24 L. Ed. 527.

Many acts of a state may affect commerce, without amounting to a regulation of it in a constitutional sense of the term; and it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between that which merely affects or influences, and that which regulates or furnishes a rule of conduct. While a state may pass sanitary laws, and laws for the protection of life, liberty, health, or property within its borers, and while for the purpose of self-protection it may establish quarantine and reasonable inspection laws, it may not interfere with transportation into or through the state beyond what is absolutely necessary for its self-protection. It may not, under cover of exerting its police power, substantially burden either foreign or interstate commerce. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 470, 24 L. Ed. 527. Code, § 1967, imposing a penalty on railroad companies for the detention of freight more than five days after delivery for shipment without the consent of the shipper, as regards freight to be shipped to another state, does not conflict with Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, delegating the power to regulate interstate commerce to the federal government, since its enforcement would expedite, and not obstruct, interstate traffic. Bagg v. Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co., 109 N. C. 289, 14 S. E. 79, 81, 14 L. R. A. 596, 28 Am. St. Rep. 569.

"Regulate," as used in the clause of the federal Constitution giving Congress power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, between the states, and with Indian tribes, includes navigation. "The power to regulate commerce comprehends the control for that purpose and to the extent necessary of all navigable waters of the United States which are accessible from a state other than those in which they lie. For this purpose they are the public property of the nation, and subject to all the requisite legislation by Congress. This necessarily includes the power to keep them open and free from any obstruction to their navigation interposed by the states or otherwise, to remove such obstructions when they exist, and to provide by such sanctions as they may deem proper against the recurrence of the evil and for the punishment of the offense." Gilman v. Philadelphia, 70 U. S. (3 Wall.) 713, 724, 18 L. Ed. 96; South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 9, 10, 23 L. Ed. 782.

Pub. St. c. 139, prohibiting the discrimination by common carriers in the transportation of goods, etc., is not a regulation of commerce within the meaning of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, since it opposes no obstruction and causes no delay to commerce. It simply prohibits discriminations being made in favor of one and against another having occasion to use the facilities afforded for the transportation of goods by common carriers under like circumstances, and though a statute of this sort may doubtless be properly said to affect commerce, it is not everything that affects commerce that amounts to a regulation of it by the Constitution. Providence Coal Co. v. Providence & W. R. Co., 4 Atl. 394, 397, 15 R. I. 303.

"Commerce," as used in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, declaring that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes, means that whenever the subjects over which a power to regulate commerce is asserted are in their nature national, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, they may justly be said to be of such a nature as to require exclusive legislation by Congress; and hence any regulation by a state which operates to cause delay and to impose expense, or to interpose an obstacle to the free transportation of commerce among the states, is a regulation of commerce within the meaning of the Constitution. City of Council Bluffs v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 45 Iowa, 338, 359, 24 Am. Rep. 773.

As fixing or limiting transportation charges.

The words "regulate commerce" are properly used to characterize the fixing or limiting of charges for transportation of merchandise from one place to another. Kaiser v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (U. S.) 18 Fed. 151, 153.

As to prescribe rules.

"The 'power to regulate commerce,' which was given to Congress by the federal Constitution, was defined by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, as the power to regulate, that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed." Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (U. S.) 37 Fed. 567, 634, 2 L. R. A. 289; Cuban S. S. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 66 Fed. 63, 67; Wilkerson v. Rahrer, 11 Sup. Ct. 865, 867, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. Ed. 572; City of Baltimore v. Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Co., 17 Sup. Ct. 696, 701, 166 U. S. 673, 41 L. Ed. 1160 (citing Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. Ed. 158).

The term "regulate commerce," as it is used in the clause of the federal Constitution authorizing Congress to regulate commerce, means to prescribe rules by which it shall be governed, that is, the conditions upon which it shall be conducted; to determine how far it shall be free and untrammelled, how far it shall be burdened by duties and imposts, and how far it shall be prohibited. Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 279, 23 L. Ed. 347; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 8 Sup. Ct. 1062, 115 U. S. 611, 29 L. Ed. 502; Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs (U. S.) 18 Fed. 10, 11.

"The power vested in Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes is a power to prescribe the rule by which that commerce is to be governed, and is a power complete in itself, acknowledging no limitations other than those prescribed in the Constitution. It is coextensive with the subject on which it acts, and cannot be stopped at the external boundary of a state, but must enter its interior and must be capable of authorizing the disposition of those articles which it introduces, so that they may become mingled with the common mass of property within the territory entered." Lelsey v. Hardin, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 683, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. Ed. 128; United States v. Holliday, 70 U. S. (3 Wall.) 409, 417, 18 L. Ed. 354; Smith v. Turner, 48 U. S. (7 How.) 283, 395, 12 L. Ed. 702; Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 420, 446, 6 L. Ed. 678; Hill v. City of St. Louis, 60 S. W. 116, 119, 159 Mo. 159.

It was said in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, in reference to the power of Congress to regulate commerce, that as the words "to regulate" imply in their nature a full power over the thing to be regulated, this excludes necessarily the action of all others that would perform the same operation on the same thing. That regulation is designed for the entire result, applying to those parts which remain as they were as well as to those which are altered. It produces a uniform whole, and is as much disturbed and deranged by changing what the regulating power designed to leave untouched as that on which it has operated. State v. North, 27 Mo. 464-472.

Taxation.

The word "regulate," as used in the Constitution, authorizing Congress to regulate interstate commerce, means to adjust by rule. Therefore the tax imposed under Act 1864, imposing a tax on every 2,000 pounds of freight carried within the commonwealth, is merely a charge on the corporation for freight carried over the road, is a tax on the business measured by the number of tons carried, and does not conflict with the federal Constitution; the purpose of the act not being to regulate transportation, but to raise money for the support of the government. Commonwealth v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 62 Pa. (13 P. F. Smith) 286, 296 (citing Webst. Dict.).

A state statute, levying a tax on the gross receipts of railroads for the carriage of freights and passengers into, out of, or through the state, is a "regulation of interstate commerce," and void. Fargo v. Stevens, 7 Sup. Ct. 857, 863, 121 U. S. 230, 30 L. Ed. 888.

A city ordinance providing for a license to be paid by peddlers is to be regarded as a tax upon the goods they sell, and any discrimination against persons not residents of the state and against goods not manufactured in the state is a "regulation of commerce," not within the power of a state to enforce. City of Marshalltown v. Blum, 12 N. W. 266, 58 Iowa, 184, 43 Am. Rep. 116.

That a tax imposed by a state may constitute a "regulation of commerce" was decided in the case of Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678, and has frequently been decided in subsequent cases. Thus a railroad company, whose only business within the state is discharging freight and passengers brought over its line from without the state, receiving freight and passengers to be sent out over its line, and maintaining terminal facilities, such as wharves and piers and buildings in connection therewith, and the employment of agents, clerks, and laborers, is not subject to a tax on its corporate franchise and business. People v. Wemple, 33 N. E. 720, 721, 138 N. Y. 1, 19 L. R. A. 694.

The imposition of a general tax on goods from another state, arriving in the taxing state at their place of destination, is not a regulation of commerce. Brown v. Houston, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 1093, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. Ed. 257.

A statute of a state imposing a tax upon the gross receipts of a railroad company is not a regulation, within the provision of the federal Constitution, providing that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, and that the gross receipts are made up in part of freights received for transportation of merchandise from the state into another state or into the state from another. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 82 U. S. (15 Wall.) 284, 293, 21 L. Ed. 146.

Warehouses and warehousemen.

A regulation of interstate commerce, contrary to the provisions of the federal Constitution, does not include everything that affects interstate commerce, and does not include an act by a state to regulate public warehouses and the warehousing and inspection of grain. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 135, 24 L. Ed. 77.

Wharfage dues.

Wharfage dues are not taxes, or duty of tonnage, or regulations of commerce, or obnoxious to the Constitution of the United States, but are lawful charges for conveniences furnished to commerce. Sweeney v. Otis, 37 La. Ann. 520, 521.

REGULATION.

See "Municipal Regulations"; "Police Regulations"; "Reasonable Regulation"; "Rules and Regulations"; "Usual Rules and Regulations."

Distinguished from by-law, see "By-Law."

A regulation is a rule or order prescribed by a superior for the management of some business or for the government of a company or society. Curry v. Marvin, 2 Fla. 411, 415 (citing Webst. Dict.); In re Leasing of State Lands, 32 Pac. 986, 988, 18 Colo. 359.

The word "regulations," in Const. art. 8, §§ 2, 3, conferring appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, refers to the establishment of the procedure by means of which the power may be set in motion and in obedience to which it may be exercised. Finlen v. Heinze, 69 Pac. 829, 832, 27 Mont. 107.

Within the term "regulation," when used in reference to railroads, are embraced two ideas: One is mere control of the operation of the roads, prescribing the rules for the management thereof; matters which affect the convenience of the public in their use. Regulation in this sense may be considered as purely public in its character, and in no manner trespassing upon the rights of the owners of the railroads. But within the scope of the word "regulation" as commonly used is embraced the idea of fixing the compensation which the owners of the railroad property shall receive for the use thereof; and, when regulation in this sense is attempted, it necessarily affects the property interests of the railroad owners. Ames v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 64 Fed. 165, 178.

The terms "ordinances, rules, regulations, and by-laws," as used in a city charter empowering the council to make "ordinances, rules, regulations, and by-laws" for certain purposes, are all equivalent to each other. So that whatever rule, regulation, or by-law affects the subject mentioned must be passed with the formalities required for an ordinance proper. Hunt v. City of Lambertville, 45 N. J. Law (16 Vroom) 279, 282; Taylor v. Lambertville, 10 Atl. 809, 811, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 107.

"Regulation," as used in Rev. St. § 3333, providing that every by-law, ordinance, or regulation of a municipal council must be published in a certain manner, etc., includes an order establishing the grade of a street. Meyer v. Fromm, 9 N. E. 84, 85, 108 Ind. 208.

Under National Banking Act 1864, § 5, providing that the articles of association of a national bank may contain any provisions not inconsistent with the provisions of this act which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business, a by-law providing that the bank shall have a lien on its stock as against indebted stockholders will be considered as a regulation of the business of the bank. Bullard v. National Eagle Bank, 85 U. S. (18 Wall.) 589, 596, 21 L. Ed. 923.

Instruction distinguished.

Distillery surveyors are held not within Rev. St. § 1765, providing that no officer of the public service, whose salary is fixed by law or regulation, shall receive any additional pay, etc., although the salaries of such surveyors are fixed by instructions issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; the difference between a "regulation" and an "instruction" being that the former affects a class or classes of officers, and the latter is a direction to govern the conduct of the particular officer to whom it is addressed. Landram v. United States (U. S.) 16 Ct. Cl. 74, 86.

As law.

"Regulations in a legal sense mean law." A divorce is neither a rule nor a regulation. Hence a territory organized under the authority given Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territories does not have power to grant a legislative divorce. In re Higbee, 5 Pac. 693, 694, 4 Utah, 19.

As partial restriction.

The definition of the word "regulation," in an ordinance relating to restaurants and saloons, is that it is a partial restriction, which does not wholly prohibit. Richards v. City of Bayonne, 39 Atl. 708, 709, 61 N. J. Law, 496.

As rule of action.

A "regulation of an executive department" is a rule made by the head of the department for its action under an act of Congress conferring power to do so, and does not include a mere order of the President or of a Secretary. Harvey v. United States (U. S.) 8 Ct. Cl. 38, 41.

The term "regulations" implies a rule for a general course of action, but does not apply to a case in which specific instructions are to be given applicable to that case alone. Christopher v. City of New York (N. Y.) 13 Barb. 567, 573.

"Regulations," as used in Comp. Laws 1876, p. 31, authorizing writs of error and appeals to be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner "and under the same regulations as from the Circuit Courts of the United States," means the rules by which the actions of Circuit Courts of the United States are limited and controlled in granting appeals, and the action of the Supreme Court of Utah is limited and controlled by the rules which govern those courts. Bullion Beck & Champion Min. Co. v. Eureka Hill Min. Co., 12 Pac. 660, 661, 5 Utah, 182.

As rule of law.

"Regulations," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 189, providing that writs of error shall in all cases be allowed from the final decisions of the District Courts "under such regulations as may be prescribed by law," is to be construed to mean "the rules of law by which this right is to be exercised." Donovan v. Territory, 2 Pac. 532, 533, 3 Wyo. 91.

REHEARING.

As used in the Probate Code, a rehearing is a re-examination of the facts involved in a decree or order upon grounds set forth in a motion or petition to open and vacate or modify the same, or some part thereof. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 6249.

The term "rehearing," technically speaking, was appropriate only to the proceeding in chancery by which a certain class of errors in a decree or decretal order could, before enrollment, be corrected. It had no application to orders made upon mere motion. Those could not be reached by a rehearing, but were varied or discharged by the court on application by motion. Belmont v. Erie R. Co. (N. Y.) 52 Barb. 637, 651.

After a decision by the Master of the Rolls or Vice Chancellor, if the case be heard by the Lord Chancellor, it is called a "rehearing," in England. Such a rehearing, without any inquiry beyond a request by the party feeling aggrieved and a certificate of counsel that the reasons for it were sufficient, might not be questionable, where a party has a right to have his case considered by other officers. But another class of cases, such as are here denominated "rehearings," are a second hearing before the same judge or court, on the application of a party supposing himself injured by the decision made after the first hearing. A rehearing of a case in equity is not granted by the federal Circuit Court on the mere certificate of counsel as to the sufficiency of the reasons for it. Emerson v. Davies (U. S.) 8 Fed. Cas. 626.

A "rehearing," strictly speaking, is simply a new hearing and a new consideration of the case by the court in which the suit was originally heard, and upon the pleadings and depositions already in the case. An order denying a rehearing is not appealable, since the case could be reheard upon the merits upon an appeal from the original decree. But an order denying an application to open a decree and for leave to answer and present the merits of the defense, on the ground that the solicitor who appeared for the defendant was not authorized to appear for him and that the case was heard upon a stipulation admitting the allegations of the bill, given by the solicitor and without the defendant's knowledge or consent, is not, strictly speaking, an order denying an application for a rehearing, and is appealable. Read v. Patterson, 14 Atl. 490, 494, 44 N. J. Eq. (17 Stew.) 211, 6 Am. St. Rep. 877.

As new trial.

Where the language of a notice of appeal is that the appeal will be taken from an order denying plaintiff's motion for rehearing, the word "rehearing" is used in the sense of a new trial. Kimple v. Conway, 10 Pac. 189, 190, 69 Cal. 71.

REIMBURSE.

As used in Act April 5, 1893, appropriating money for the relief of B. county, and declaring that the act was passed to reimburse said county for expenses incurred, etc., the term "reimburse" should be construed to have been used in its ordinary meaning, which is defined by Webster to be "to replace in a treasury or purse as an equivalent for what has been taken, lost, or expended; to refund; to pay back; to restore, as to reimburse the expenses of a war." In construing statutes, words should be given their ordinary meaning; and, so interpreting the language of this appropriation, it is clear that the state was only required to refund or pay according to the expenses incurred by the county. State v. Moore, 59 N. W. 755, 759, 40 Neb. 854, 25 L. R. A. 774.

To reimburse is to pay back, and the primary meaning of the word is to be imputed to it, where the meaning is not controlled by contract stipulations. Philadelphia Trust, Safe Deposit & Ins. Co. v. Audenreid, 83 Pa. 257, 264.

Payment of interest included.

The primary meaning of the word "reimburse" is to pay back; to make return or restoration of an equivalent for something paid, expended, or lost; to indemnify; to make whole. And hence, where the trustees of an insolvent bank advanced a certain percentage of its debts to the receiver and received certain real estate, under an agreement that they were eventually to sell it and reimburse themselves for the sums advanced, etc., the term "reimburse" will be construed to include interest on the advancement. Woerz v. Schumacher, 56 N. H. 72, 73, 161 N. Y. 530.

REIMBURSEMENT.

"Reimbursement," as used in an agreement by which certain persons were to receive a certain sum each as reimbursement for money paid by them, respectively, into a firm business, implies that it had not been withdrawn. Fuller v. Atwood, 13 R. I. 316.

REINSTATE.

A statute providing that if, within two years after the tax sale, the proprietor or his legal representative repay the purchaser the moneys paid for the taxes, together with interest, he shall be reinstated in his original right, did not intend to restrict the word

"reinstated" to its literal meaning; else the legal representative could in no case be benefited by the act under the redemption. The literal meaning of the word "reinstated" would confine the redemption to him in whom the title was at the time of the tax sale, although the redemption were paid by his vendee. But the clear meaning of the act is that the legal representative was to have the same right and title after redemption as if no tax sale had been made, and the word "reinstated" must be construed consistently with this meaning. O'Neale v. Caldwell (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 695, 697.

As used in a statute providing that the commissioners of the sinking fund "shall have power in their discretion to remove any warden, and, if the General Assembly fail or refuse to concur in said removal within 20 days after the fact of removal is conveyed to it, then it shall be the duty of said commissioners to reinstate the said warden," the word "removal" means to move away from a position occupied, or to displace, as to remove a building; and "reinstated" means to restore to a state from which one has been removed. South v. Sinking Fund Com'rs, 5 S. W. 567, 569, 86 Ky. 186.

REINSTATEMENT.

In reference to the right of an insured person to be reinstated after the policy has been fulfilled by a breach, "fulfilled" implies placing the insured in the same condition that he occupied and sustained toward the insurer next before the forfeiture was incurred, and does not imply reinsurance, or the making of a new contract or policy of insurance. Lovick v. Provident Life Ass'n, 14 S. E. 506, 507, 110 N. C. 93.

REINSURANCE.

Miller says that "reinsurance" is a hedging contract, by which the underwriter withdraws himself from all risk. Herckenreth v. American Mut. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 3 Barb. Ch. 63, 70.

Reinsurance is a contract whereby one party, called the "reinsurer," in consideration of a premium paid to him, agrees to indemnify the other against the risk assumed by the latter by a policy in favor of a third party. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co. v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 38 Ohio St. 11, 16, 43 Am. Rep. 413 (citing Phillips, Ins. § 374).

The terms "unearned premiums," "reinsurance reserved," "liability reserved," "net value of policies," or "premium reserved," as used in the article of the Code relating to the department of insurance, severally intend the liability of an insurance company upon its insurance contracts, other than accrued claims, computed by rules of valuation established by section 2583. Civ. Code Ala. 1896, § 2575.

A contract of reinsurance is one by which an insurer procures a third person to insure him against loss or liability by reason of such original insurance. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 2646; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 3530; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4533; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1879. Civ. Code, § 2648, declares that a reinsurance is presumed to be a contract of indemnity against liability, and not merely against damage. A reinsurer is not liable to the insurer for a loss which, unknown to either party, occurs before the reinsurance was effected, where the parties contracted with reference to a custom that reinsurance took effect from the time when it was granted. Union Ins. Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co., 40 Pac. 431, 107 Cal. 327, 28 L. R. A. 692, 48 Am. St. Rep. 140.

"Reinsurance is a contract of indemnity to the reinsured, and binds the reinsurer to pay to the reinsured the whole loss sustained in respect to the object insured, to the extent for which he is reinsurer." Home v. Mutual Safety Ins. Co., 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 137, 151; London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. (Pa.) 15 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 384.

Reinsurance is insurance by the first insurer of the whole or some part of his interest in the risk created by his contract of insurance; or, as it is otherwise defined, it is the contract that one insurer makes with another to protect the first from a risk he has already assumed. Iowa Life Ins. Co. v. Eastern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 45 Atl. 762, 765, 64 N. J. Law, 840 (citing Port. Ins. p. 259; May, Ins. § 9).

"Reinsurance" is indemnity to the insurer for the loss up to the amount, whether for the whole or part of the risk stipulated, and for which the premium is paid. It is a contract, as put by the books, by which the original insurer procures another to insure him against loss by reason of the original insurance. Chaloron v. Insurance Co. of North America, 21 South. 207, 270, 48 La. Ann. 1582, 36 L. R. A. 742.

By a contract of reinsurance, in whatever language expressed, the obligation of the reinsurer is to indemnify the insurer against the liability for the loss by fire of the property insured. They stand in a relation to each other much like that of principal and surety. The only material difference is that the reinsurer is not, in law, directly liable to the insured. As between the two, he is the principal obligor. Hunt v. New Hampshire Fire Underwriters' Ass'n, 38 Atl. 145, 147, 68 N. H. 305.

"Reinsurance is a mere contract of indemnity in which an insurer reinsures a risk in another company," and is solely for the benefit of the latter, and not the policy holder. Barnes v. Hekla Fire Ins. Co., 57 N. W. 314, 56 Minn. 38, 45 Am. St. Rep. 438.

According to Arnould reinsurance is a contract by which, in consideration of a certain premium, the original insurer throws on another the risk for which he has made himself responsible to the original assured, to whom, however, he alone remains liable on the original insurance. According to Marshall the reinsurance may be on the risk or part of it. Philadelphia Ins. Co. v. Washington Ins. Co., 23 Pa. (2 Harris) 250, 253.

Reinsurance is properly applied to an insurance effected by one underwriter with another, the latter wholly or partially indemnifying the former against the risks which he has assumed; that is to say, after an insurance has been effected, the insurer may have the subject of insurance reinsured to him by some other. Appeal of Goodrich, 2 Atl. 209, 211, 109 Pa. 523, 529.

A contract of reinsurance is peculiar in its character, and differs from the ordinary policy of insurance. It creates no privity between the reinsurer and the party originally insured. It is simply an agreement to indemnify the assured, partially or altogether, against a risk assumed by the latter in a policy issued to a third party. In such a case the assured is not the owner of the property at risk, and no relation to it except as insurer under the original policy. But in that relation the party issuing the original policy has an insurable interest, which will support a contract intended to indemnify him against the hazard he has assumed. Royal Ins. Co. v. Vanderbilt Ins. Co., 52 S. W. 168, 169, 102 Tenn. 264.

A contract of "reinsurance" is one by which an insurer procures a third person to insure him against loss or liability by reason of such original insurance. Civ. Code, § 2646. A contract between insurance companies, by which one assumed and undertook the care, control, and management of the business and risks of the other, is broader than a contract of reinsurance. Whitney v. American Ins. Co., 59 Pac. 897, 899, 127 Cal. 464.

When the insurer for some reason finds it convenient that another shall bear, either in whole or in part, the liability to the insured which he has assumed, and agrees with another insurer to assume the whole or a part of his liability as regards the insured, it is termed a contract of reinsurance. 1 Bld. Ins. § 378. While a contract of reinsurance implies the same subject-matter of insurance as the original policy, and runs against perils of the same kind, it need not be for the identical hazard insured against in the first policy, but may be for a less, though not for a greater, risk. Reinsurance, like any other contract, depends upon the intention of the parties, to be gathered from the words used, taking into account, when the meaning is doubtful, the surrounding circumstances. Custom or usage is presumed to enter into the intention, when it is found as a fact, not only that it existed, but was uniform, reasonable, and well settled, and either known to the parties when the contract was made, or so generally known as to raise a presumption that they had it in mind at the time. London Assur. Corp. v. Thompson, 62 N. E. 1066, 1067, 170 N. Y. 94.

REINSURANCE RESERVE.

In the chapter relating to insurance, "unearned premiums," "reinsurance reserve," "net value of policies," or "premium reserve" severally intend the liability of an insurance company upon its insurance contracts, other than accrued claims, computed by the established rules of valuation. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 1120, c. 118, § 1.

A reinsurance reserve is a fund which must be equal in amount at all times to the aggregate policy liabilities at their then present value. It is created to secure those liabilities, and is from that circumstance impressed in a certain sense with an equity in favor of the holders of policies. New Haven Trust Co. v. Gaffney, 47 Atl. 760, 761, 73 Conn. 480.

REINSURE.

The word "reinsure" has a definite meaning, and has the same meaning in its ordinary and popular sense. It is equally effective with the word "insure," and the word "insure" may be used in a policy of reinsurance with the same force and validity. Home v. Mutual Safety Ins. Co., 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 137, 151.

REISSUED PATENT.

A reissued patent merely secures those rights of an inventor more definitely in some particular wherein the original patent was defective. Ingersoll v. Holt (U. S.) 104 Fed. 682, 683.

A patent is prima facie evidence that the patentee was the first and original inventor of the improvements described in the specifications, and a reissued patent, granted under authority of the act of 1836, is prima facie evidence that the machine described in the specifications thereof is substantially the same as the machine intended to be patented by the original drawing. Sloat v. Spring (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 330, 334.

REJECT.

The word "reject," as used in Act March 26, 1846, authorizing commissioners in pro ceedings to determine the amount of compensation for land taken for a highway to reject four jurors, or any less number, for interest or other cause, means "challenge." Zimmerly v. Road Com'rs, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 134.

To "reject," as defined by Webster, means to throw away; to discard; to refuse to receive; to refuse to grant, as to reject a prayer or request. Under Gen. St. c. 118, tit. "Wills," § 27, giving a circuit court jurisdiction of appeals from every judgment of the county court admitting a will to record or rejecting it, a will is rejected when the court to whom the application is made refuses to probate the writing. Preston v. Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co., 94 Ky. 295, 302, 22 S. W. 318.

A claim for breach of contract with the board of public works of the District of Columbia, marked "disallowed" by the board of audit, is "rejected," within the meaning of Act June 16, 1880, § 8, providing that no claim shall be presented to or considered by the court of claims under the provisions of the act which was rejected by the board of audit. Brown v. District of Columbia, 8 Sup. Ct. 1314, 1318, 127 U. S. 579, 32 L. Ed. 262.

RELATE.

Involve as synonymous, see "Involve."

RELATED.

The phrase "related to," whether used in a statute, will, or contract, has by a perfectly uniform force of decision been held to include only relations by blood, and not connections by marriage, not even a husband or a wife. Supreme Council Order of Chosen Friends v. Bennett, 19 Atl. 785, 787, 47 N. J. Eq. (2 Dick.) 39.

A judge who is connected by marriage with the prosecutor in a suit is not related to her, within the meaning of Rev. Code, § 635, making a judge related to the parties incompetent to try the case. Newman v. State, 49 Ala. 9, 13.

Affinity.

The words "related to," in a provision permitting persons related to a member of a benefit society to be named as beneficiaries, include relatives by affinity as well as by blood. Bennett v. Van Riper, 22 Atl. 1055, 1056, 47 N. J. Eq. (2 Dick.) 563, 14 L. R. A. 342, 344, 24 Am. St. Rep. 416.

RELATED BY AFFINITY.

See "Affinity."

RELATED BY CONSANGUINITY.

See "Consanguinity."

RELATION TO HER SEPARATE PROPERTY.

The laws of 1860 and 1862, providing that the wife may sue and be sued in all matters "having relation to her sole and separate property," the same as if she were sole, should be construed to include an action against a married woman for fraud in a contract for the sale of her real estate, made by her husband as her agent. "She is responsible for the fraud, and has had the avails of it. The action is clearly for matters having relation to her sole and separate property. The circumstance that the fraud was committed by her husband, acting as her agent, does not impair liability. She had a right to employ her husband as agent, and, while acting as such in relation to her separate property, her liability for his acts is precisely the same as it would be for the liability of any other agent." Baum v. Mullen, 47 N. Y. 577, 579.

RELATION—RELATIVE.

See "Blood Relations"; "Confidential Relation"; "Family Relation"; "Fiduciary Relation."

Acknowledged relation of parent and child, see "Acknowledge—Acknowledgment."

See "Possession by Relation of Law."

The word "relative," in its most general sense, is very indefinite. Commonwealth v. Metz, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 541, 543.

"Relationship" is an affinity or consanguinity within the fourth degree, reckoning according to the civil, and not according to the canon, law. Churchill v. Churchill, 12 Vt. 661, 666.

The word "relations," in its widest extent, embraces persons of every degree of consanguinity. When not restricted in its meaning by other words, it extends to all persons who are descended from the same common ancestors. It is synonymous with "kindred," and is expressed also by the word "family" in its largest sense. Huling v. Fenner, 9 R. I. 410, 412 (citing Jarm. Wills, 33; Williams, Ex'rs, 343; Cruwys v. Coeman, 9 Ves. 319).

"Relatives," as used in Code 1873, § 1433, providing that relatives of a patient in an insane asylum should be bound for their support, means only those persons from whom the county may collect such claims; that is, persons legally bound for the support of an insane person. The term does not include the father of an adult child. Monroe County v. Teller, 2 N. W. 533, 534, 51 Iowa, 670.

The word "relation," as used in Pen. Code, art. 597, subd. 4, stating, as one of the causes which will reduce a homicide to manslaughter, insulting words or conduct of the person killed toward a female relation of the party guilty of the homicide, includes any female under the protection of such party at the time of the killing. Clanton v. State, 20 Tex. App. 615, 631.

In accurate language "relationship" does not imply an interest. But the degree of relationship mentioned in Rev. St. c. 1, § 3, rule 22, providing that, when a person is required to be disinterested or indifferent in acting on any question in which other parties are interested, any relationship in either of said parties, either by consanguinity or affinity, within the sixth degree according to the rules of the civil law, or within the degree of second cousins, shall be construed to disqualify such persons from acting on such question, is regarded as an interest. In the levy of an execution on land, the officer's return that the appraisers were disinterested is therefore in legal effect an affirmation that they were not within the sixth degree of relationship to either of the parties. McKeen v. Gammon, 33 Me. 187, 190.

As relation by affinity.

A bequest to "relations" does not include those by marriage. Maitland v. Adair, 8 Ves. Jr. 231, 232.

The word "relative," as used in Rev. St. c. 74, § 10, providing that where a relative of the testator dies before the testator, leaving lineal descendants, they take such estate as would have been taken by such deceased relative, if he survived, means one connected with the testator by blood—a blood relation—and does not include one connected with the testator by marriage only. Elliott v. Fessenden, 22 Atl. 115, 117, 83 Me. 197, 18 L. R. A. 87, 38; Keniston v. Adams, 14 Atl. 203, 80 Me. 290.

"Relative" applies ordinarily in a will to consanguinity, and not to those connected by marriage. "Relation" is a very general word, and takes in any kind of connection; but the most common use of it is to express some sort of kindred, either by blood or affinity, though properly by blood. Where a person gives among his relatives, those by affinity are not included. In Harvey v. Harvey, 5 Beav. 134, it was decided that the widow of a deceased brother did not come within a devise for the benefit of relations. Ennis v. Pentz (N. Y.) 3 Bradf. Sur. 382, 385.

Where a will devises certain property to the testator's relatives, the term "relatives" will be construed to include only legal heirs and persons related by consanguinity, excluding relatives by affinity; and hence a sister-in-law is entitled to no share of such property. Stoff v. McGinn, 52 N. E. 1048, 1050, 173 Ill. 46.

A "relation by marriage" is one who, because of the marriage bond, would be entitled to take under the statute of distribution; and it is held that the former husband of a woman's deceased cousin is not in any legal sense a relation by marriage, to enable him to apply for a commission de lunatico inquirendo, under an act authorizing relatives to take such steps. Commonwealth v. Metz, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 541, 543.

There is no doubt that a brother-in-law comes within the recognized and well-settled meaning of the word "relative." Marcus v. Leake (Neb.) 94 N. W. 100, 101.

A brother-in-law is not a "relation," within the meaning of Pub. St. c. 127, § 23, providing that, where a devise is made to a child or other relation, his issue shall take his share in case he dies before testator, provided no different disposition is required by the will. Horton v. Earle, 88 N. E. 1135, 162 Mass. 448 (citing Kimball v. Story, 109 Mass. 382).

As relation by blood.

The word "relation," as used in Rev. St. c. 97, § 29, providing that when a legacy shall be made to any child or other relation of the testator, and the legatee shall die before the testator, leaving issue who shall survive the testator, such issue shall take the estate so given, etc., includes only relations by consanguinity. Cleaver v. Cleaver, 39 Wis. 96, 99, 20 Am. Rep. 30.

The term "relation," as used in St. 1850, p. 179, providing that a devise to a relation shall not lapse by the death of the devisee during the testator's lifetime, if the devisee leaves lineal descendants, includes only relations by blood, and not by affinity. The word in its widest popular sense might possibly include relations by affinity, as well as by blood; but courts have been frequently called on to consider it in the interpretation of wills, and it has been uniformly held to include in its legal sense only relations by consanguinity. In re Pfuelb's Estate, 48 Cal. 643, 644 (citing 2 Kent, Comm. 537, note 2; Jarm. Wills, 45; 2 Redf. Wills. 425; Storer v. Wheatley's Ex'rs, 1 Pa. [1 Barr] 506).

As used in a will, the words "my relations" mean exactly the same as the words "my own relations," and include relations by blood only. Worseley v. Johnson, 3 Atk. 761.

The relatives intended in a will, directing the executor thereof to distribute certain articles among relatives mentioned, as might be deemed discreet, etc., in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, means relatives by blood, and not by affinity. Blossom v. Sidway (N. Y.) 5 Redf. Sur. 389, 390.

The word "relative," as used in Rev. St. 1879, § 3971, providing that when any estate shall be devised to any child, grandchild, or other relative of the testator, and such devisee shall die before the testator, leaving lineal descendants, such descendants shall take the estate, real or personal, as such devisee would have done in case he had survived the testator, applies only to relatives by consanguinity; for the use of the words "child" and "grandchild" in the section excludes the idea that only one connected by marriage is included in the words "other relative." Brammell v. Adams, 47 S. W. 931, 935, 146 Mo. 70.

The term "relatives" applies ordinarily to persons in the line of consanguinity and not to those connected by marriage, and a will devising property to the testator's "two nearest family relatives" means nearest in degree, counting from the specified stock. Ennis v. Pentz (N. Y.) 3 Bradf. Sur. 382, 385.

Children.

"Relatives," as used in a will devising property to testator's wife, to have as her own and exclusive property, and to the exclusion of all and every person or persons, be the same relatives or not, forever, might be very naturally understood as not embracing one's children. Hargadine v. Pulte, 27 Mo. 423, 424.

Husband or wife.

The word "relation" is a very general and comprehensive term, and may include any and every relation that arises in social life. Literally it takes in every kind of connection, and would have so wide a range as to be liable to objection as indefinite and vague. The term is defined by lexicographers as signifying a person connected by consanguinity or affinity. "The most common use of the term is to express some kind of kindred, either of blood or affinity, though properly," says Lord Hardwicke, "by blood." A wife is not a relation within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 92, § 28, providing that when a devise is made to a child or other relation of the testator, and the devisee dies before the testator, leaving issue who survive the testator, such issue shall take the estate so devised. Esty v. Clark, 101 Mass. 36, 38, 3 Am. Rep. 320; Kimball v. Story, 108 Mass. 382.

"Relations," in dictionaries, means "consanguinities" and "affinities"; but by the statute relating to descents it means kindred by blood only. Strictly, the wife is no relation to the husband. Worseley v. Johnson, 3 Atk. 761, 762.

The bequest of a certain residue to a daughter, and, at her death before age, to the testator's nearest relations, does not include the testator's widow. Storer v. Wheatley's Ex'rs, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 506.

The word "relations," whether used in a statute, will, or contract, has by a perfectly uniform course of decision been held to include only relations by blood, and not connections by marriage, not even a husband or a wife. Supreme Council Order of Chosen Friends v. Bennett, 19 Atl. 785, 787, 47 N. J. Eq. (2 Dick) 39.

"Relatives," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, providing that the administration of estates of persons dying intestate must be granted to the relatives of the deceased, is employed in its generic sense, and so as to expressly include the husband and wife in the same category with the other relatives enumerated. In re Davis' Estate, 39 Pac. 756, 757, 106 Cal. 453.

The word "relatives" is more comprehensive than the term "next of kin." It includes the widow, who, though not next of kin, is a relative by force of the marriage relation. "Relatives" and "next of kin" are not convertible terms, though the latter expression is occasionally used in a way to favor the idea that the terms mean the same thing. Public Adm'r v. Peters (N. Y.) 1 Bradf. Sur. 100.

"Relative," as used in Acts 1885, c. 34, § 1, providing that the estate of an illegitimate person who dies intestate, leaving no relatives entitled by existing laws to his estate, shall go to such persons as would have been his heirs on his mother's side, had he been legitimate, should be construed in its ordinary sense, so as to include the surviving husband or wife, and not in the technical sense of blood relationship only. There can be no doubt that the word "relative," when employed in a stricter technical sense, signifies a relationship by blood only; but as ordinarily used it includes relationship by affinity as well as by consanguinity. Lewis v. Mynatt, 58 S. W. 857, 858, 105 Tenn. 508.

Illegitimates.

"Relatives," as used in St. 1888, c. 429, limiting the beneficiary of a member of a beneficial association to the husband, wife, children, or relatives of, or persons dependent on, such member, is of broader scope than the word "children," but manifestly cannot be held to include an illegitimate child. Lavigne v. Ligue des Patriotes, 59 N. E. 674, 675, 54 L. R. A. 814, 86 Am. St. Rep. 460 (citing Esty v. Clark, 101 Mass. 36, 3 Am. Rep. 320; Kimball v. Story, 108 Mass. 382; Elliot v. Fesenden, 83 Me. 197, 22 Atl. 115, 13 L. R. A. 37).

Nephews and nieces.

In its broadest sense, "relatives" means all the persons connected with another by blood or affinity, however remote the connection. There is, however, a limit beyond which these ties are not sufficiently strong to influence a person in making a disposition of his property. The word "relatives" has been used in wills to designate the next of kin according to the statute of distribution. As used in a will providing that the residue of testator's estate should be sold, and the proceeds invested, and the interest applied for a certain period for the relief of the most destitute of testator's relatives, not to extend beyond the children of his brothers and sisters and their families, is not used in the sense of "next of kin," but in a more limited sense, and means relatives not more remotely connected with the testator than nephews and nieces, including the children of the most destitute of the persons particularly named. Snow v. Durgin, 47 Atl. 89, 90, 70 N. H. 121.

As next of kin.

"Relations," in a will of a person's estate, signifies next of kin. Commonwealth v. Metz, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 541, 543.

"Relations," as used in a will bequeathing personalty, signifies next of kin, and the qualification of a bequest to "poor relations" makes no difference. It is a term inapplicable to real estate; but, when a testator has no different intentions as to his real and personal estate, the word, in order to effectuate his intention, must apply to the next of kin in both cases. McNeillledge v. Barclay (Pa.) 11 Serg. & R. 103, 105.

"Relations," as used in a devise to such of testator's relations as his wife should think most deserving and approve of, was a legal description, and operated as a trust in the wife, with power of naming and apportioning, and her nonperformance did not make the devise void, but it would then be divided among such of the "relations" of the testator as are his next of kin at the wife's death. Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469, 470; Grant v. Lyman, 4 Russ. 292, 297.

A legacy to each of the decedent's "relations by blood or marriage" was confined to relations by the statute of distributions and to those who married persons entitled under it. Devisme v. Mellish, 5 Ves. Jr. 529.

The word "relatives," when used in a will or statute, includes those persons who are next of kin under the statute of distribution, unless from the nature of the bequest, or from the testator having authorized a power of selection, a different construction is allowed. Bac. Ben. Soc. § 260. In Craik v. Lamb, 1 Colly. 489, 495, Vice Chancellor Shadwell says: "In Johnson's Dictionary, in Richardson's Dictionary, and in Bailey's edition of Facciolati, the word 'relation' is treated as extending to affinity; and the expressions 'a relation by marriage' and 'a relation in the law,' as denoting connections by affinity, are popularly, whether correct or incorrect, of occasional, if not of frequent, use." In our more modern dictionaries we find that "relation" or "relative" is defined as a person connected by blood or affinity. Bennett v. Van Riper, 22 Atl. 1055, 1050, 47 N. J. Eq. (2 Dick.) 563, 14 L. R. A. 342, 24 Am. St. Rep. 416.

Where the word "relations" is used in a will, the court has no other rule to go by than the statute of distributions; otherwise, the devise would be void from the uncertainty and generality of the term. Crossly v. Clare, Amb. 397.

The word "relations," as used in the practice act, relating to the appointment of a guardian, that an application for such appointment was to be referred to a referee to report what relations the infant had, means those who would, if he died intestate, be entitled to a distributive share of the infant's estate. Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 249, 257 (citing Hoff. Mast. 131; Wright v. Atkyns, 1 Turn. & R. 143; 4 Kent, Comm. 537, note "A").

In the construction of wills the word "relatives" includes those who are entitled as next of kin under the statute of distribution. Keniston v. Adams, 14 Atl. 203, 204, 80 Me. 290; Smith v. Campbell, 19 Ves. 400, 402.

"Relations," as used in a will bequeathing property to the testator's relations, means next of kin. Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Mer. 689, 690.

Where a bequest is to relations, the next of kin according to the statute of distribution are entitled to the bequest, unless, from the nature of the bequest or the testator's having placed a power of selection, a different construction is allowed. Drew v. Wakefield, 54 Me. 291, 293.

The word "relations," as used in wills relating to personalty only, embraces only persons within the statute of distribution. Gallagher v. Crooks, 30 N. E. 746, 747, 132 N. Y. 338 (citing Varrell v. Wendell, 20 N. E. 431; 2 Jarm. Wills [Bigelow's Ed.] 120; 2 Redf. Wills [3d Ed.] 85; 4 Kent, Comm. [13th Ed.] 537, note "a"); Anon., 1 P. Wms. 327; Edge v. Salisbury, Amb. 70.

A legacy to testator's wife and after her decease to the testator's "relations," who shall then be alive, is confined to relations within the statute of distributions. Greene v. Howard, 1 Brown Ch. 28, 33; Widmore v. Woodroffe, Amb. 638, 640.

"Relations," as contained in wills devising or bequeathing property to the testator's relations, means persons entitled to take under the statute of distribution, and is a term that safely describes a class of persons. Wright v. Atkyns, 1 Turn. & R. 143, 161.

The word "relations," when used in a will without any specification of what relations are meant, denotes only such as are within the statute of distributions. Varrell v. Wendell, 20 N. H. 431, 435.

Stepchildren.

A stepson of the testator is not a relation of his, within the provisions of Gen. St. c. 92, § 28, which saves from lapsing any devise or bequest to a child or other relation of a testator who dies before the testator's death. Kimball v. Story, 108 Mass. 382, 385.

"Relatives," as used in statutes providing that a beneficial association may provide in its by-laws for the payment to each member of a fixed sum for the purpose of assisting the widow, orphans, or other relatives of deceased members, should be considered, in its strict sense, as relatives by consanguinity, and not by affinity, and hence does not include stepchildren of the member. Tepper v. Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, 45 Atl. 111, 116, 59 N. J. Eq. 321; Id., 47 Atl. 460, 461, 61 N. J. Eq. 638, 88 Am. St. Rep. 449.

"Relatives," as used in Acts 21st Gen. Assem. c. 65, § 7, providing that no corporation or association organized under this act shall issue any certificate of membership or policy to any person unless the beneficiary under such certificate shall be the husband, wife, relative, or legal representative of such insured member, means relatives by affinity, as well as those by consanguinity, and a son is a relative of his stepfather after his own mother's death. Simcoke v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Iowa, 51 N. W. 8, 9, 84 Iowa, 383, 15 L. R. A. 114.

RELATION (In Contract).

It is said that relation is a fiction of law, resorted to for the promotion of justice and for promoting the lawful intention of parties, by giving effect to acts or instruments which without it would be invalid. 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 726. It has its most frequent application to sheriff's sales, where the deed is not made for some time after the sale, but, when it is made, relates back to the sale, and, in so far as the defendant in the execution and his privies and strangers purchasing with notice are concerned, vests the title in the purchaser from that time. Ozark Land & Lumber Co. v. Franks, 57 S. W. 540, 544, 156 Mo. 673.

RELATIONSHIP.

See "Blood Relationship."

"Relationship" is described by lexicographers as kindred, affinity, or other alliance. Esty v. Clark, 101 Mass. 38, 38, 3 Am. Rep. 320.

"Relationship," as used in the by-laws of a beneficial association, providing that the applicant for membership shall enter upon his application the relationship or dependence of the members of his family or those depending upon him to whom he desires the benefit paid, refers to the connection between him and the member or members of his family upon whom the benefit is to be conferred. Tepper v. Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, 45 Atl. 111, 115, 59 N. J. Eq. 321.

RELATIONSHIP BY MARRIAGE.

The by-laws of a beneficial association, providing that, when no relationship by marriage or consanguinity is shown in the direction for the payment of the benefit, proof of dependency must be furnished, refer to the wife, who, if she survived the member, would become a widow. Tepper v. Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, 45 Atl. 111, 115, 59 N. J. Eq. 321.

RELATIVE CONFESSION.

"Relative confession is where the accused confesseth and appealeth others thereof, thereby to become an approver." 2 Hale, P. C. c. 29. The law of approver, however, is now obsolete. But the principle is today illustrated when the public prosecutor offers to put an accused on the stand under an implied promise of pardon, and then, if the accused acts dishonestly, procures his conviction upon the testimony so obtained. Commonwealth v. Knapp, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 477; Moore's Case, 2 Lewin, Cr. Cas. 37; State v. Willis, 41 Atl. 820, 824, 71 Conn. 293.

RELATIVE PROPORTION.

The term "relative proportion," in a statute providing that county commissioners shall determine and fix the relative proportion of expenses for maintaining a bridge to be borne by the county and any of the cities and towns lying contiguous to the bridge, as in their judgment may be just and equitable, "does not imply a mathematical ratio, or a comparison by mathematical ratio; but such proportion is to be fixed with reference to all the circumstances of benefit to the respective municipalities affected, and to the population, extent, and ability to bear the burden." The proportion may be fixed by assigning to each town a specific part of the bridge to keep in repair. Commonwealth v. City of Newburyport, 103 Mass. 129, 134.

RELATOR.

As plaintiff, see "Plaintiff."

RELEASE.

See "Full Release"; "Personal Release"; "Plea of Release"; "Real Release"; "Remise, Release, and Quitclaim."

A release is the giving up or abandoning of a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists or the right is to be enforced or exercised. Smith v. Cantrel (Tex.) 50 S. W. 1081, 1085.

A release is a setting free, a deliverance, a liberation, a relinquishment, a discharge, and is a word whose operative effect is from the present on, and without retroactive intent. Parker v. United States (U. S.) 22 Ct. Cl. 100, 104.

A release is the act of writing by which some claim or interest is surrendered to another person. It is a species of contract, and, like any other contract, it must have a consideration to support it. Jaqua v. Shewalter, 37 N. E. 1072, 1074, 10 Ind. App. 234.

A release is a remission of some right or claim by which the releasor remits the same, and estops himself from again setting up his claim, and should always contain a plain and distinct remission of the claim to which it relates. Power v. Lester (N. Y.) 17 How. Prac. 413, 416.

"A 'release' has been defined to be the act or writing by which some claim or interest is surrendered to another; the giving up or abandoning of a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists or the right is to be exercised or enforced. No set form of words is necessary to constitute a release, but such words should be used as would express the intention, and such intention would be recognized in law and equity." Winter v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co., 61 S. W. 606, 610, 160 Mo. 159.

A release "is the giving or discharging of the right of action which a man hath or may have, or claim against another man of that which is his. It is the conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath unto a thing to another that hath the possession thereof or some estate therein. Lands, tenements, and hereditaments themselves may be given and transferred by way of release, and all rights and titles to land may be given, barred, and discharged by release, and so also may rights and titles to goods and chattels." Shep. Touch. 320, 321, quoted and approved in Field v. Columbet (U. S.) 9 Fed. Cas. 12, 13.

A release by its own operation extinguishes a pre-existing right, and cannot be controlled or explained by parol. A release, therefore, should be held to include all demands embraced by its terms, whether particularly contemplated or not. Sherburne v. Goodwin, 44 N. H. 271, 277.

By the common law a release can operate only on a vested, and not on a contingent, right. A release of a possibility is void. Crawford v. Lockwood (N. Y.) 9 How. Prac. 547, 548.

A release at common law of any interest was made to the person who had the possession thereof or some interest therein. It is defined as "the conveyance of a man's right which he hath unto a thing to another that hath the possession thereof, or some estate therein," and it was contrary to the nature of a release to give possession. One tenant in common could not release to his companion, because they had distinct freeholds. When a man had the right and possession in him, he was compelled to convey by feoffment. He could give a release only when out of possession, and it could then only be made to the one in possession. Baker v. Woodward, 6 Pac. 173, 178, 12 Or. 3 (quoting Shep. Touch.).

The term "release," in the law of landlord and tenant, is used to designate the descending of the greater estate upon the less. Gluck v. City of Baltimore, 32 Atl. 515, 516, 81 Md. 315, 48 Am. St. Rep. 515.

According to Pothier there are two kinds of release—one called a real release, and the other a personal discharge. A real release is where the creditor declares that he considers the debt as acquitted. It is equivalent to a payment, and renders the thing no longer due, and consequently it liberates all the debtors of it, as there can be no debtors without something due. A personal release merely discharges the debtor from his obligation and extinguishes the debt indirectly, where the debtor to whom it is granted was a sole principal, because there can be no debt without a debtor. But, if there are two or more debtors in solido, a discharge of one of them does not extinguish the debt. It only liberates the person to whom it is given. The debt is extinguished, however, as to the part of the person to whom the discharge was given, and the other only remains obliged for the remainder. Booth v. Kinsey (Va.) 8 Grat. 560, 568 (citing Pothier, p. 111, c. 3, art. 2, §§ 1, 11).

A paper purporting to be a receipt by a seaman to the master of his vessel for 25 cents for "assault and battery, in full for all dues and demands," with a witness' name to it, and on which are two wafer seals, cannot, in the absence of proof that either of the seals is that of the person giving the receipt, operate as a "release," in the technical sense of that word as known to the common law. Michell v. Pratt (U. S.) 17 Fed. Cas. 516, 517.

As a conveyance.

A release is a secondary or derivative sort of conveyance, and defined to be a conveyance of one's right in lands to another who has some former estate in possession. State v. Engle, 21 N. J. Law (1 Zab.) 347, 368.

The word "release" is technical, and will pass any interest in the land which the releasor may have. Bond v. Root (N. Y.) 18 Johns. 60, 68, 79.

In construing an instrument, stating: "We approve of the course of C., and release said C. from further liability"—the courts say that the word "release" quite frequently imports a conveyance, but never when used in connection with the word "from," and affirmed with reference to the releasee. Colton v. Field, 22 N. E. 545, 546, 131 Ill. 398.

A deed of release may operate as a grant, if necessary to carry out the intention of the parties, or may be treated as a confirmation of title. Smith v. Cantrel (Tex.) 50 S. W. 1081, 1085.

A release was a form of transfer used at common law only where some right to real estate existed in one person, the actual possession of which was in another. A devise which took effect in 1810 was to three sons and four daughters of real estate in equal shares, with a proviso that, if either should die without lawful issue, his or her share should be divided among the survivors. The future contingent interest of the devisees while all were living was not a mere naked possibility, but passed by release from some of them to the others. Miller v. Emans, 19 N. Y. 384, 387.

Covenant not to sue.

A covenant not to sue is not such a release as will discharge a co-trespasser. Tompkins v. Clay St. R. Co., 4 Pac. 1165, 1169, 66 Cal. 163.

Extinction distinguished.

A release is a discharge of a debt by act of the party, in distinction from an extinguishment, which is a discharge by operation of law. Baker v. Baker, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 13, 20, 75 Am. Dec. 243.

As constituting a legacy.

The expression, "I release A. his bond," as used in a will, did not constitute a release, but was a legacy, and, having lapsed, the bond remained in force. Maitland v. Adair, 3 Ves. 231, 232.

Statute of limitations.

A statute of limitations, fixing the time within which an action must be brought to recover taxes due, is not a "release" of such taxes within constitutional prohibition against releasing any liability or obligation in favor of the state; the statute merely limiting the right of action, while leaving the debt still in force. Custer County Com'rs v. Story, 69 Pac. 56, 58, 26 Mont. 517.

Mortgage.

Rev. St. c. 71, § 93, providing that no release or waiver of a homestead exemption shall be valid, unless in writing, subscribed by the householder and his wife, refers to release or waiver as to an execution or other process of the court, and does not include a mortgage. Olson v. Nelson, 3 Minn. 53, 59 (Gil. 22, 25).

Parol agreement.

The word "release," as used in Comp. Laws, § 3491, providing that an obligation is extinguished by a release therefrom given to the debtor by the creditor upon a new consideration, implies the giving up or abandoning of a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists or the right is to be exercised or enforced. Whatever may have been the rule at common law, under the statutes of South Dakota a parol agreement to release a debtor is enforceable. If founded upon a new consideration. National Bank of Commerce v. Guthrie, 78 N. W. 995, 996, 11 S. D. 517.

Receipt distinguished.

A "release" extinguishes a pre-existing right, while a "receipt" is mere evidence of a fact. Equitable Securities Co. v. Talbert, 22 South. 762, 767, 49 La. Ann. 1393.

Satisfaction distinguished.

The word "release," when applied to the release of a cause of action for tort, differs from the word "satisfaction," in that the former may be given, although no part of the damage has been paid, and a technical release to one joint tort-feasor does not release other joint tort-feasors, while a satisfaction, by whomsoever made, if accepted as such, is a bar to future proceedings on the same cause of action. Miller v. Beck, 79 N. W. 344, 346, 108 Iowa, 575.

Seal.

The word "release," when not interpreted by the context, has a technical meaning which presupposes a seal; but it is also an apt word to express the general idea of discharge or deliverance. So it is held that a requirement in an assignment for the benefit of creditors that they execute releases was intended to secure the absolute discharge of the debtor as to creditors coming in under the assignment, and hence any instrument which is sufficient for that purpose was a compliance with the requirement, though it was not a technical release under seal. Burgiss v. Westmoreland, 17 S. E. 56, 57, 38 S. C. 425.

A release may be under seal, or may not; but, if it has a seal, the same imports consideration. Winter v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co., 73 Mo. App. 173, 187.

An instrument under seal, in which the obligor agrees and binds himself to dismiss a suit which is pending and to pay the costs, though it also contains a deed for the land in controversy between the parties and a covenant to surrender a bond for title to the land, is nevertheless a release of the cause of action pending. Stinson v. Moody, 48 N. C. 53, 56.

As termination of interest.

The word "release," as used in a proposition that a person offered as a witness in a cause who has an interest in the result may be rendered competent by releasing his interest, cannot have its legal and technical meaning; for in a strict legal sense it means a surrender or giving up an estate for years, for life, in remainder, or in reversion to the tenant in fee of the remainder or reversion in the first case, and to the tenant of the particular estate in the second. The release of a witness cannot generally have this effect. The intent to divest a witness of all interest in the event of the suit, which intent is accomplished, satisfies the rule. Cates v. Wacter's Heirs (S. C.) 2 Hill, 442.

The word "release," within Act May 23, 1887, § 6, providing that an incompetent witness may become fully competent for either party by a release in good faith of his interest in the matter at issue, requires that witness' interest in the subject shall be effectually terminated, and should be made to the party against whom the claim is asserted, or for his benefit. Darragh v. Stevenson, 89 Atl. 37, 38, 183 Pa. 397.

As waiver or relinquishment.

While the word "release" is sometimes used in conveyancing to transfer a title, its general meaning is to surrender a right or to discharge a liability; and, when it is used in connection with the word "claims," it never has any other meaning than that of waiver, surrender, or relinquishment. No right of action can pass by a release of all causes of action. Trustees of Amherst College v. Ritch, 45 N. E. 876, 892, 151 N. Y. 282, 37 L. R. A. 305.

RELEASE AND ASSIGN.

"Release and assign," as used in a conveyance of lands, by which one did thereby release and assign unto a certain person, his heirs, etc., all said lands and claim to lands to which the grantor became entitled to as a soldier in the service of the United States, should be construed as raising a trust or use for the benefit of the bargainee, which by the statute of uses was transferred in possession; for the words amount to a personal contract of sale or bargain, thereby instantly raising a trust on which the statute operates, for no precise technical words are required to raise a use. Jackson v. Fish (N. Y.) 10 Johns. 456, 457.

RELEASE DEED.

"In law a release or deed of release is a conveyance of a man's right in the lands or tenements to another who has some estate in possession." This, however, is a strictly technical definition, but by long-established practice it makes no difference whether the releasee has an existing estate in possession or not. A quitclaim or release deed is one of the regular modes of conveying property known to law, and it is almost the only mode in practice where a party sells property and does not wish to warrant the title. The release will convey to him under any circumstances the interest the releasor has in the property. Under these principles a quitclaim deed of "all right, title, interest, claim, and demand whatsoever, which I [the releasor] have or ought to have in or to" a certain tract of land, was sufficient to pass a right of entry upon the land for the breach of conditions contained in a prior deed by the grantor; and this, although the quitclaim deed contained a statement that the premises had been theretofore mortgaged to the grantor. Hoyt v. Ketcham, 5 Atl. 608, 608, 54 Conn. 60 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

RELEASE, REMISE, AND QUITCLAIM.

As used in a deed, the words "release, remise, and forever quitclaim" are not words of release only, but are operative words of conveyance, though the grantor has no prior estate. Thus in Wilson v. Albert, 1 S. W. 209, 89 Mo. 537, the same operative words were used in a deed of quitclaim then under consideration, and it was ruled that the deed contained sufficient operative words of conveyance. The same rule was subsequently announced in Bray v. Conrad, 18 S. W. 957, 101 Mo. 331, and must be regarded as the settled law of this state. McAnaw v. Tiffin, 45 S. W. 656, 657, 143 Mo. 687.

RELEASED.

In a finding that property was released by an officer upon giving a bond, "released" meant "delivered" or "surrendered." Hicks v. Mendenhall, 17 Minn. 475, 483 (Gil. 453, 460).

The word "released," as placed on the face of the bill of lading by the agent of a common carrier, means exemption from the common-law liability as an insurer. Morganton Mfg. Co. v. Ohio R. & C. Ry. Co., 28 S. E. 474, 121 N. C. 514, 61 Am. St. Rep. 679.

RELEASED ON BAIL.

"Released on bail," as used in the criminal practice act relating to defendants who had been "released on bail," implies that the person so released is not in prison after such release, though for some purpose it is true that a person released on bail in a civil proceeding is still in the custody of the law; but he cannot be said to be so in custody in a criminal proceeding. Ex parte Jones, 41 Cal. 209, 210.

RELET.

The word "relet," as used in a lease of a parcel of land containing a clause by which the lessor agreed to pay the lessee the value of all buildings and scales which the lessee should place and leave on the premises at the end of the term, provided the said premises should not be relet to the lessee, means a new letting for a fixed and definite term, such as was the term created by the original lease. Mosely v. Allen, 138 Mass. 81, 83.

RELEVANT.

Any circumstance is relevant which makes more probable the hypothesis set up. Walls v. Walls, 32 Atl. 649, 650, 170 Pa. 48.

The meaning of the word "relevant," as applied to testimony, is that it directly touches upon the issue which the parties have made by their pleadings, so as to assist in getting at the truth of it. Platner v. Platner, 78 N. Y. 90, 95; Porter v. Valentine, 41 N. Y. Supp. 507, 508, 18 Misc. Rep. 213; Moran v. Abbey, 58 Cal. 163, 168.

"By the term 'relevant' we do not mean that the evidence shall be addressed with positive directness to the disputed point, but we mean evidence which according to the common course of events, either taken by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence of the other." Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 430, 438 (quoting Steph. Ev. art. 1).

The word "relevant" means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other that according to the ordinary course of events one, either taken by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders possible the past, present, or future existence or nonexistence of the other. Plumb v. Curtis, 83 Atl. 998, 1000, 66 Conn. 154; Buckwalter v. Arnett (Ky.) 34 S. W. 238, 241. Legal relevancy includes logical relevancy, but has a higher evidentiary force. Cole v. Boardman, 63 N. H. 580, 581, 4 Atl. 572; Lamprey v. Donacour, 58 N. H. 376, 377.

A fact which renders the existence or nonexistence of any fact in issue probable by reason of its general resemblance thereto, and not by reason of its being connected therewith, is deemed not to be relevant to such fact. Stuart v. Kohlberg (Tex.) 53 S. W. 596, 597.

A declaration is relevant, as stated by Steph. Ev. p. 33, art. 27, "when it was made by the declarant in the ordinary course of business, or in the discharge of professional duty, at or near the time when the matter stated occurred, and of his own knowledge. Such declarations are irrelevant, except so far as they relate to the matter which the declarant stated in the ordinary course of his business or duty." McNair v. National Life Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 13 Hun, 144, 146.

RELEVANCY.

See "Legal Relevancy"; "Logical Relevancy."

"Relevancy," as that term is used by writers on the law of evidence, omitting metaphysical distinctions, is that which "conduces to prove a pertinent theory in a case," or one which influences or controls the case. Levy v. Campbell (Tex.) 20 S. W. 196.

Relevancy is that which conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis. Hence it is relevant to put in evidence any circumstances which tend to make the proposition at issue more or less improbable. Whart. Ev. §§ 20, 21. In Trull v. True, 33 Me. 367, it was held that "testimony cannot be excluded as irrelevant which would have a tendency, however remote, to establish the probability or improbability of the fact in issue." State v. O'Neill, 9 Pac. 286. It is held in the cases generally that more liberality may properly be accorded to the admission of evidence affecting the probabilities of a hypothesis, where, if explainable, opportunity is left within the power of the opposing party to submit an explanation of it. State v. Witham, 72 Me. 531, 537; Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 430, 438 (quoting 1 Whart. Ev. § 20); Nickerson v. Gould, 82 Me. 512, 514, 20 Atl. 86; Ward v. Young, 42 Ark. 542, 554.

RELICT.

"Relict," as used in Rev. St. § 4159, providing that, if there are no children or legal representatives, the estate of an intestate shall pass to and be vested in the husband or wife, relict of such intestate, is applied to the survivor of a pair of married people, whether the survivor is the husband or the wife; the relict of the united pair, not the relict of the deceased individual. The relict is the survivor of the union of married people, not simply the survivor of the decedent individually, and the expression "Louisa Heeter, relict of Sebastian Heeter," does not mean simply that Louisa is the relict of Sebastian, but that Louisa is the relict of the former marriage union of Louisa and Sebastian as husband and wife. Spitler v. Heeter, 42 Ohio St. 100, 101.

RELICTIION.

"Reliction" is the term applied to land made by the rescission of the water by which it was previously covered. In order that a shore owner take land by way of accretion or reliction, it must appear that the addition was to his shore, either by the deposit of earth or by receding of the waters from his land, and such addition must be by slow process. Hammond v. Shepard, 57 N. E. 867, 868, 186 Ill. 235, 78 Am. St. Rep. 274.

"Dereliction" or "reliction" is land added to a front tract by the permanent uncovering of the waters, the laying bare of the bottom by the retirement of the waters, as contradistinguished from a filling up of the bottom by deposits, causing the water to recede. "Dereliction," as used in the English law, meant when the sea shrank back below the usual water mark and remained there. In those cases the law is held to be that, if this be by little and little, it should go to the owner of the land adjoining. It is recognized by the Louisiana law as a mode of acquiring property, but the mere temporary subsidence of the waters occasioned by the seasons, coming in the winter and staying to the spring, going in the summer and gone in the autumn, does not constitute dereliction, in the sense of an addition to the contiguous land, susceptible of private rights as riparian rights. Sapp v. Frazier, 26 South. 378, 380, 51 La. Ann. 1718, 72 Am. St. Rep. 493.

RELIEF.

The word "relief," in resolutions by a town making provision for the "aid and relief" of families of volunteer soldiers, implied want, need, or necessity on the part of the applicants, and indicated that provision there made was charitable, and did not tend to give the applicant any vested right as under a contract. Russell v. City of Providence, 7 R. I. 566, 574.

RELIEF FUND.

The "relief fund" of a fraternal order is made up of contributions of the members of the lodges, and is exclusively within the management and control of the supreme lodge, and is of the nature of a classified insurance, to which the appointee of the member is entitled on the death of the member. Lady Lincoln Lodge v. Falst, 28 Atl. 555, 52 N. J. Eq. (7 Dick.) 510.

RELIEVE.

"Relieve," as used in a contract employing teachers, reserving the right to relieve one of the number on certain conditions, is synonymous with the word "remove," and a request to the teacher to resign does not constitute a removal. Kennedy v. School Dist. No. 1, 55 Pac. 567, 568, 20 Wash. 399.

RELIGION.

In all Christian countries the word "religion" is ordinarily understood to mean some system of faith and practice resting on the idea of the existence of one God, the creator and ruler, to whom his creatures owe obedience and love. In re Knight's Estate, 28 Atl. 303, 159 Pa. 500.

Religion is morality, with a sanction drawn from a future state of rewards and punishments. McAlister v. Marshall (Pa.) 6 Bin. 338, 350, 6 Am. Dec. 458.

The word "religion," in its primary sense (from "religare," to rebind—bind back), imports, as applied to moral questions, only a recognition of a conscious duty to obey restraining principles of conduct. In such sense we suppose there is no one who will admit that he is without religion. In re Hinckley's Estate, 58 Cal. 457, 512.

"Religion," as used in Const. art. 1, § 7, reciting that, "religion, morality, and knowledge being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship, and to encourage schools and the means of instruction, should be construed in its generic or unlimited sense. The meaning is that true religion shall be promoted by encouraging schools and means of instruction. The word "knowledge" comprehends in itself all that is comprehended in the other two words "religion" and "morality," and which can be the subject of human instruction. True religion includes true morality. All that is comprehended in the word "religion," or the words "religion and morality," and that can be the subject of human instructions, must be included under the general term "knowledge." Nothing is enjoined, therefore, but the encouragement of means of instruction in general knowledge, the knowledge of truth. The fair interpretation seems to be that true religion and morality are aided and promoted by the increase and diffusion of knowledge, on the theory that Knowledge is the handmaid of Virtue, and that all three, religion, morality, and knowledge, are essential to good government. But there is no direction as to what system of general knowledge, or of religion or morals, shall be taught, nor as to what particular branch of such system or systems shall be introduced into the schools. By this generic word "religion" is not meant the Christian religion or Bible religion, but it means the religion of man, and not the religion of any class of men. Board of Education of City of Cincinnati v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 211, 241, 18 Am. Rep. 233; In re Walker (Ohio) 66 N. E. 144, 147.

Criminal act.

The guaranty of the federal Constitution against the establishment of religion or any interference with the free exercise thereof does not operate to authorize the commission of acts contrary to the criminal law of any country as being sanctioned by the tenets of a religious sect, and therefore the practice of polygamy cannot be justified as being embraced within the religion of the offender. Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 149, 162, 25 L. Ed. 244.

Form of worship distinguished.

"Religion" is a term referring to one's views of his relations to his Creator and to the obligations they impose of reverence for His being and character and of obedience to His will. The term is often confounded with a "cultus" or form of worship of a particular sect, but is to be distinguished from the latter. Davis v. Beason, 10 Sup. Ct. 299, 300, 133 U. S. 333, 33 L. Ed. 637.

RELIGIOUS ASSEMBLY.

A religious assembly means nothing more than an assembly of religious persons, and the term is insufficient in an indictment for disturbing religious worship, as it fails to show whether the persons assembled were in fact engaged in religious worship. State v. Fisher, 25 N. C. 111, 114.

A religious assembly, within the meaning of the law in reference to a disturbance thereof, includes a religious congregation when assembling in their house of worship and about to begin their religious exercises, as well as the assemblage when actually engaged in religious worship. State v. Ramsey, 78 N. C. 448, 453.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS.

A will, wherein testator devised a certain sum in trust for the purchase and distribution of religious books, meant those books which tended to promote religion taught by the Christian dispensation. Simpson v. Welcome, 72 Me. 496, 500, 39 Am. Rep. 349.

RELIGIOUS CONGREGATIONS.

"Religious congregations," within the meaning of Act July 2, 1839, exempting five acres of land, with the improvements thereon, if attached to religious congregations, universities, colleges, academies, and schoolhouses, is shown, by reason of the use of the words "universities, colleges, academies, and schoolhouses," to mean the church buildings, and not the congregations. Cumberland County v. Big Spring Church (Pa.) 17 Leg. Int. 300.

RELIGIOUS CORPORATION.

The term "religious corporation," defined by Laws 1895, c. 723, art. 1, § 2, as a corporation created for religious purposes, in Tax Law, § 4, subd. 7, exempting religious corporations from taxation, includes a Young Men's Christian Association, and the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In re Watson's Estate, 73 N. Y. Supp. 1058, 1060, 38 Misc. Rep. 504; id., 63 N. E. 1109, 171 N. Y. 256.

Laws 1895, c. 723, § 2, defines "religious corporation" as a corporation created for religious purposes. A Young Men's Christian Association is not a religious corporation, within the meaning of Laws 1896, c. 908, § 221, declaring that any property bequeathed to any religious corporation shall be exempt from certain taxation. "The question, it seems to me, is not whether the corporation in question is organized for beneficial purposes, but whether there is included in its work some work of a religious character. It was incorporated by virtue of a special act, in which it was stated that its object was to be primarily the improvement of the moral and spiritual condition of the young men of Brooklyn, by means always appropriate to and in unison with the spirit of the Gospel, and secondarily the improvement of their intellectual, physical, and social condition by the same means. The measure of whether this is a religious corporation can be best determined by a test of whether it could be incorporated under the general religious corporation law of this state. An inspection of the statute plainly shows that, if it was desired to incorporate this corporation to-day, it could not be done under the general statute providing for religious corporations, but would have to come under the statute providing for membership corporations." In re Fay's Estate, 76 N. Y. Supp. 62, 63, 37 Misc. Rep. 532.

A corporation organized to provide, by building, purchase, hiring, or otherwise, floating and other churches for seamen in the city and port of New York, and to provide clergymen to act as missionaries in said churches, is a corporation organized for religious purposes, within a statute providing that bequests to such corporations shall be exempt from the transfer tax. In re Prall's Estate, 79 N. Y. Supp. 971, 972, 78 App. Div. 301.

A religious corporation consists of the persons who have been stated attendants upon divine worship for one year and have contributed to the support of the church according to its usages and customs. Madison Ave. Baptist Church v. Baptist Church in Oliver St. (N. Y.) 1 Abb. Prac. N. S. 214, 222.

A corporation established for purely academic purposes, for education in literature and in the arts and sciences, is in no sense a religious corporation, though it be given into the care and under the management of a religious body. State v. Trustees of Westminster College, 74 S. W. 990, 175 Mo. 52.

RELIGIOUS CREED.

See "Creed."

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATION.

See "Religious Sect."

RELIGIOUS INSTITUTION.

P. L. 1898, p. 106, providing that all gifts, bequests, or devises to any "religious institution" shall not be taxed, cannot be construed to include a school having a theological department, which is an adjunct of the principal departments of the institution, which are academic and collegiate; for, if the theological department is to be regarded as religious, the two others are purely secular, and an institution of such blended secular qualities can in no sense be classed as a religious institution. Alfred University v. Hancock (N. J.) 46 Atl. 178, 180.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

Religious liberty does not include the right to introduce and carry out every scheme or purpose which persons see fit to claim as part of their religious system. No one can stretch his own liberty so as to interfere with that of his neighbors and violate the peace. Franzee's Case, 30 N. W. 72, 75, 63 Mich. 396, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310.

Bill of Rights, art. 5, guarantying to every person religious liberty and freedom, etc., does not mean a license to engage in acts having a tendency to disturb public peace under the form of religious worship, nor does it include the right to disregard those regulations which the Legislature has deemed reasonably necessary for the security of public order; and hence the term "religious liberty" does not include the beating of a drum in the compact part of a town, but such acts may be prohibited without violation of the Bill of Rights. State v. White, 5 Atl. 828, 330, 64 N. H. 48.

RELIGIOUS MEETING.

Camp meeting as, see "Camp Meeting."

RELIGIOUS PRINCIPLES.

Religious principles are those sentiments concerning the relations between God and man which may influence human conduct. The mere fact that in those relations an individual has discovered no divine purpose of punishment for specific acts does not militate against his possession of religious principles. State v. Powers, 17 Atl. 969, 970, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 432.

RELIGIOUS PURPOSES.

As charity, see "Charity."

A statute exempting buildings erected and used for religious purposes from taxation does not exempt a parsonage. Church of Redeemer v. Axtell, 41 N. J. Law (12 Vroom) 117, 118.

The phrase "religious purposes," as used in Act April 18, 1877, providing that when, because of the growth of cities or other causes, any burial ground belonging to or in charge of any religious society has ceased to be used for interments, the courts of quarter sessions, on petition of the trustees of the society, setting forth that the erection or improvement of buildings for religious purposes are hampered, interfered with, and the welfare of such religious society is injured, after four weeks' advertisement, on hearing, may authorize the removal of the remains of the dead from so much of the burial ground as may be needed for buildings for religious purposes only, includes a building for Sunday school rooms and lecture rooms. Craig v. First Presbyterian Church, 88 Pa. 42, 45, 32 Am. Rep. 417.

RELIGIOUS SECT.

"People believing in the same religious doctrines, who are more or less closely associated or organized to advance such doctrines and increase the number of believers therein," constitute a religious sect. State v. District Board of School Dist. No. 8, 44 N. W. 967, 973, 76 Wis. 177, 1 L. R. A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41.

A religious sect is a body or number of persons united in tenets, but constituting a distinct organization or party, by holding sentiments or doctrines different from those of other sects or people. State v. Hallock, 16 Nev. 373, 385.

"Religious sect, order, or denomination," as used in Const. 1865, art. 1, § 13, providing that a "religious sect, order, or denomination" was capable of receiving a devise, etc., is not to be limited in meaning to such religious bodies as are composed of many local congregations linked together by rules of the sect, order, or congregation, so that what property one holds belongs in some sense to the whole, but includes a local congregation uncontrolled by any general ecclesiastical organization. Boyce v. Christian, 69 Mo. 402, 494.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETY.

The term "religious society" has in the English ecclesiastical law and in our law a well-defined meaning, and as commonly used in our law it is synonymous with "parish" or "precinct," and designates an incorporated society created and maintained for the support of public worship. Riffe v. Proctor, 74 S. W. 409, 410, 99 Mo. App. 601.

A statute declaring every denomination of religious societies to be beneficiaries in a certain fund means only such association of persons having a system of religious faith, written or traditional, and does not include a society having no system of public worship or religious services as a sect or denomination, and being organized for the purpose of maintaining a library, and being in fact a library association merely. State v. Trustees of Township 9, 7 Ohio St. 58.

"Religious society," as used in a New York statute providing for the incorporation of religious societies, etc., means an assembly met, or a body of persons who usually meet, in some stated place for the worship of God and religious instruction. Robertson v. Bullions (N. Y.) 9 Barb. 64, 67.

"Religious society," as used in Pen. Code, § 95, providing that every person who shall disturb any religious society shall be fined, is used in its ordinary meaning, and includes all religious societies or congregations met for religious worship, without regard to their being incorporated. An ordinary Sunday school, where the Bible and religious precepts are taught, is a worshiping assembly, within these statutes, and they will also be held to include a meeting of the Salvation Army. State v. Stuth, 89 Pac. 665, 666, 11 Wash. 423.

The term "religious society" may with propriety be applied in a certain sense to a church, as that of religious association, religious union, or the like, yet in the true sense, and as commonly used in our law, it is synonymous with "parish," "precinct," etc., and designates an incorporated society created and maintained for the support and maintenance of public worship. In this, its legal sense, a church is not a religious society. It is a separate body, formed within such parish or religious society, whose rights and usages are well known, and to a great extent defined and established by law. Weld v. May, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 181, 188.

A religious society is a body of persons associated together for the purpose of maintaining religious worship only, omitting the sacraments. Silsby v. Barlow, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 329, 330.

The term "religious society," in a statute exempting from taxation certain property belonging to religious societies, is not to be understood as limited to religious societies organized as incorporated churches, but includes a society whose organization and objects are of a benevolent, charitable, or missionary character, as falling within the general sense of the term "religious," as contra-distinguished from private and sectarian institutions. Hebrew Free School Ass'n v. City of New York (N. Y.) 4 Hun, 446, 449.

As incorporated society.

In Acts 1852, c. 282, § 1, exempting from taxation schoolhouses owned by religious societies, the term "societies" applies only to incorporated societies, and not to any number of persons who come together for some religious purpose. Church of St. Monica v. City of New York, 23 N. E. 294, 295, 119 N. Y. 91, 7 L. R. A. 70.

"Society," as used in Organic Act, § 1, providing that the title to the land now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes of the territory, together with the improvements thereof, be confirmed and established "in the several religious societies to which said missionary stations respectively belong, applies to those incorporated societies, who as persons could send missionaries and could take land as grantees, and does not apply to a bishop or a church at large. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop of Nesqually v. Gibbon, 21 Pac. 315, 317, 1 Wash. St. 592.

RELIGIOUS TEACHER.

"Religious teacher" is synonymous with "minister," as used in the provisions of Const. art. 4, § 39, providing that no law shall be passed forbidding any person from paying tithes or other rates for the support of any minister or teacher of religion, and section 40, providing that no money shall be appropriated for the benefit of any religious sect or society, nor shall property belonging to the society be appropriated for any such purposes. A teacher in the public schools, who reads selections from the Bible to the scholars, will not be held to be a teacher of religion; hence such act is not forbidden by the Constitution. Pfeiffer v. Board of Education of Detroit, 77 N. W. 250, 253, 118 Mich. 560, 42 L. R. A. 536.

RELIGIOUS USES.

Act April 26, 1855, making a bequest for religious uses void, made less than one calendar month before testator's death, should be construed to apply to money given to a league incorporated for the improvement of its members, and for the dissemination of scientific truths by means of music, literature, lectures, and debates, which held meetings on Sundays, was wholly dependent for funds on gifts and contributions, which opposed all isms, Christian and infidel being alike eligible to membership, and before which lectures against Christianity were sometimes had, followed by debates in the same spirit. In re Knight's Estate, 28 Atl. 303, 304, 159 Pa. 500.

"Religious uses," as used in Act 1855, prohibiting devises or legacies for religious uses, unless by will executed at least one month before the death of the testator, includes a bequest to a church to be expended in masses for the repose of his soul. Appeal of Rhymer, 93 Pa. 142, 145, 39 Am. Rep. 736.

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP.

See "Actual Place of Religious Worship"; "House of Religious Worship"; "Society for Religious Worship."

Buildings exclusively used for religious worship, see "Exclusively Used."

In the trial of a person for disturbing a congregation assembled for religious worship, the court defined "religious worship" as where the congregation has assembled for the purpose of performing acts of adoration to the Supreme Being, or to perform religious service in the recognition of God as an object of worship, love, and obedience. Green v. State, 56 S. W. 915, 916, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 416. According to the rites and services of any system of faith entertained with respect to the Deity. Wood v. State, 11 Tex. App. 318, 321.

A Young Men's Christian Association, organized to endeavor to bring young men under moral and religious influences, and holding meetings every Sunday afternoon in a building owned by the association, where a service was had, hymns were sung, and the Scriptures were read and expounded, actually used its building for religious worship, within the meaning of Const. § 170, exempting property so used from taxation. Commonwealth v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n (Ky.) 76 S. W. 522.

A parsonage erected for the convenience and accommodation of the pastor of a church is not exempt, under a statute exempting from taxation every "building erected for religious worship," and the pews and furniture within the same, and the lands whereon such building is situated, upon a lot adjacent to the lot upon which the church stood. Trustees of M. E. Church v. Ellis, 38 Ind. 3.

"Religious worship," as defined by Webster, is the act of paying honors to the Supreme Being, religious reverence and homage, adoration paid to God, or a being viewed as God. A Young Men's Christian Association, organized as a corporation not for pecuniary profit, having for its object the promotion of growth in grace and Christian fellowship among its workers, and aggressive Christian work, especially by and for young men, and to seek out and aid the worthy poor, not being under the control of any one religious denomination, but made up of representatives from a number of such denominations, is not an organization having for its object religious worship. Hamsher v.

Hamsher, 23 N. E. 1123, 1124, 132 Ill. 273, 8 L. R. A. 556.

"Religious worship," as used in Rev. St. § 3223, does not include a parsonage, as a parsonage may be properly used for church purposes, but it cannot be said to be used for religious worship. First Presbyterian Church v. City of New Orleans, 30 La. Ann. 259, 31 Am. Rep. 224.

Whether a temperance camp meeting is a public assembly convened for the purpose of religious worship, within the meaning of Gen. Laws, c. 273, § 9, is a question of fact; the term "religious worship" having no technical meaning in a legal sense. State v. Norris, 59 N. H. 536.

A deed granting an easement as long as a certain building is used as "a place of religious worship" does not authorize the continuance of such easement when the building is used as a public school. City of Philadelphia v. Yeaton (Pa.) 40 Leg. Int. 160.

Pub. Laws, c. 533, exempting from taxation "buildings for religious worship," does not exempt a building used for a free school under the management and control of the Roman Catholic Church, although one room in the building is used as a chapel. St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors of Taxes of Providence, 12 R. I. 19, 21, 34 Am. Rep. 597.

Pub. St. c. 41, § 2, exempts from taxation buildings for free public schools and for religious worship, in so far as they are occupied for religious or educational purposes. Held, that a building for religious purposes is exempt from taxation, though used for educational purposes, so long as the use is merely incidental or occasional, or so long as the use, if habitual, is permissive, and does not interfere with the use for religious purposes. St. Mary's Church v. Tripp, 14 R. I. 307, 308.

"Religious worship," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the erection of any booth, stall, etc., for the purpose of selling, giving away, or otherwise disposing of any kind of articles of traffic or spirituous liquors within three miles of any place of "religious worship" during the time of holding any meeting for religious worship at such place, is not restricted to any denomination, or to any place or mode of religious worship. The open fields, the woods, or a house erected for religious worship are alike within its terms, and, so long as it is religious worship, it makes no difference whether the worshippers are Christians or pagan idolaters. Rogers v. Brown, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 119, 120.

The phrase "religious worship," as used in Code, § 4853, punishing the disturbance of religious worship, does not embrace a gathering for the purpose of a Sunday school celebration and Christmas tree, at which no religious service has been appointed, though speeches are made on the subject of Sunday schools and morality. Layne v. State, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 199, 200.

The basement of a synagogue was used for the janitor's residence, and for baths which were open to all who applied and paid the fee demanded, whether in observance of religious rites or not. The baths in the basement were connected with the religious ceremonies and observances of the congregation, and used as a part of such rites and ceremonies, and contributions voluntarily given by the bathers went to the support of the building. Held, that the premises were not used exclusively for religious purposes, within the meaning of the Revised Statutes, providing that buildings erected and used for public worship shall be exempt from taxation. Congregation Kal Israel Auschi Poland v. City of New York, 1 N. Y. Supp. 35, 37.

RELINQUISH.

"Relinquish," as used in an agreement by which, for a certain consideration, the obligor bound himself to "relinquish" a certain annuity, did not necessarily mean a release of the annuity by deed; but abstaining from demanding and receiving the annuity was a relinquishment. Home v. Booth, 3 Man. & G. 706, 742.

The mere addition of the words "relinquishes her dower" to the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment of a conveyance of her own estate will not avoid the deed as to her. Perkins v. Carter, 20 Mo. 465, 467; Dellatus v. Poston, 19 Mo. 425, 432.

RELOAN.

The word "reloan" describes the act of loaning money a second time, or oftener. Spurgeon v. Smitha, 17 N. E. 105, 106, 114 Ind. 453.

RELUCTANT.

Reluctant means striving against, opposed in desire, unwilling, disinclined, or disinclined to yield; and as used by the trial court in passing on a motion for a new trial, that "the motion for a new trial in the within case is hereby reluctantly" overruled, meant that, as the jury, who were charged with the determination of the facts, settled them by their verdict, the court, while he could not approve the findings, allowed them to stand because the jury had so found. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Harden, 38 S. E. 949, 952, 113 Ga. 453.

RELYING.

The use of the word "relying" in a will in which testator bequeaths certain property to certain beneficiaries, and recites that the bequest is made relying upon the beneficiaries to dispose of the same for the benefit of such charitable and benevolent and educational purposes as they shall judge will most promote the comfort and improve the condition of the poor, is only an utterance of confidence. It is not an imperative expression. It neither commands nor imposes a duty, but at most indicates the faith of the person using it in the honor or honesty or affection of the person addressed. Willets v. Willets (N. Y.) 35 Hun, 401, 405.

REM.

See "In Rem."

REMAIN.

As continue.

"Remain," as used in the compact between Virginia and Kentucky in reference to lands ceded to Kentucky, providing that all private rights and interests of land within the said district, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed state, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in this state, should be construed to mean "continue." Beard v. Smith, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 430, 439.

As continue unchanged.

"Remain" means to continue unchanged, and as used by a testator in requesting that his nephew "remain with and manage for my wife until her death," and that certain slaves "remain with my wife and nephew until the death of my wife," requires them to abide in the place where they were when the will was executed. Harris v. Wright, 24 S. E. 751, 754, 118 N. O. 422.

"Remain" means to continue; to stay; to be left; to be left after another or others have gone. Webst. Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Soule, Synonyms. Where, at the death of a collector of taxes, another person was not then in the office of collector, and was not qualified to collect taxes for such town until a period after the death of such other collector, he was not a remaining collector, within the meaning of Gen. St. 1883, § 4021, providing that, whenever a vacancy shall exist, the remaining collector shall be fully empowered to discharge the duties of such vacant office for the unexpired portion of the term. State v. Fowler, 32 Atl. 162, 164, 66 Conn. 294.

"Remain," as used in an insurance policy providing that the policy should become void "if the dwelling house should become vacant and unoccupied, and so remain," means that to avoid the policy the house must have become vacant and remained so at the time of the fire causing the loss. Laselle

v. Hoboken Fire Ins. Co., 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 468, 469.

Illegal use implied.

A municipal ordinance, making it a misdemeanor for any person to remain upon any sidewalk to the annoyance of any person, will be construed not to prohibit the lawful use by remaining on a sidewalk, though it annoys other persons. "The object of the ordinance, we think, was to prevent the incumbering of sidewalks by the illegal use of them, by the occupation of them by one or more persons, not for the purpose of passage in a reasonable manner, or for taking across them into dwelling houses, stores, or shops fuel or merchandise, with a due regard to the convenience of others, or for other lawful purposes, but occupying it in an unreasonable manner, either as to the mode or duration of time, so that other passengers would be unlawfully delayed or annoyed." State v. Goulding, 44 N. H. 284, 286.

As received or realized.

Where the articles of association of a mutual benefit association provided for the payment of such sum as the by-laws of such society may prescribe, the sum to be raised by voluntary contributions, and said sum so to be paid in no case to exceed the total sum of such dues remaining in the treasury of said society, the word "remaining" must be construed as meaning received or realized from an assessment for the death loss made pursuant to the by-laws. Lake v. Minnesota Masonic Relief Ass'n, 63 N. W. 261, 263, 61 Minn. 96, 52 Am. St. Rep. 538.

Residence implied.

"Remained therein," as used in a rule admitting to the practice of law those who were licensed in another state and who remained therein as practicing attorneys for at least one year, where they have since pursued the study of law for one year within the state, implies a residence in the state where the candidate was admitted during the year that he is required to practice therein. In re Simpson, 60 N. E. 747, 748, 167 N. Y. 403.

Ownership and power of disposal implied.

The words "remaining at my wife's death," as used in a will making disposition of all the personal property remaining at my wife's death, imply power in the wife to use, consume, and dispose of the personal property, and such power implies absolute dominion. Absolute dominion imports absolute ownership, and where it is the intention of the testator that the first taker shall have an unlimited power of disposition over the property devised or bequeathed, whether such intention be expressed or necessarily implied, a limitation over to another is void, because it is inconsistent with and repugnant to the estate given to the first taker, although the will shows that it was the testator's intention, in respect to the subject of the gift, that what may remain of it at the death of the first taker should go to another. Robertson v. Hardy's Adm'r (Va.) 23 S. E. 766, 767.

The word "remaining," as used in a will directing that, after the decease of the testator's wife, all the stock, etc., remaining shall be sold immediately after her death, indicates that the widow is entitled to an absolute interest in the stock, any part of which she had a right in her lifetime to dispose of at her discretion. Appeal of Scholl (Pa.) 2 Atl. 538.

"Remains," as used by a testator in devising to his widow all his estate, both real and personal, during her natural life, for widowhood, "and what then remains to be equally divided among his children," does not imply a power of disposition of the real estate during the life of the widow; the phrase relating only to the personality. Foot v. Sanders, 72 Mo. 616, 621.

A will giving an unlimited power to the testator's wife to sell, dispose of, and convey and use the property, without any restrictions whatever, and providing that a certain person should have one-half of "what remains" at the widow's death, should be construed to mean "what may remain," it being wholly at the widow's option whether there should be any or not, and not construed to denote that there was to be an absolute remainder. State v. Smith, 52 Conn. 557, 564.

A will giving to testator's daughter a share of his home farm and all farming utensils and stock, and providing that, if she die unmarried, her brother should have "what remains" of her share of the property, implies that she had an unlimited power of disposal, which is inconsistent with the existence of a valid limitation over. In re Jackson's Estate, 36 Atl. 156, 158, 179 Pa. 77.

A will providing that the life tenant shall make at her death distribution of "what remains," and also referring to that which is requested to be done as "such disposition of the property that may at her death remain," will be construed to show that the testator contemplated and intended that his widow, the life tenant, might or would expend all or a part of the money derived from a sale of the property under a power given her in the will, and implies that distribution was to be made of only what she had not disposed of and used. Coulson v. Alpaugh, 45 N. E. 216, 227, 163 Ill. 298.

Testator by his will gave his real and personal estate in general terms to his wife, and by a subsequent clause bequeathed to her one-third of all his estate "that may remain at the time of her death for to dispose of as she may see proper." Held, that the quoted phrase includes personal property as well as realty, and gave her absolute property in the personality. Downey v. Borden, 36 N. J. Law (7 Vroom) 460, 469.

"Remains unexpended," as used in the provisions of a will, as follows: "To my daughters L. and M., or either of them, dying leaving no legal issue, the share or shares herein bequeathed to her or them, if not paid over by my executors, and, if paid over, then such part thereof as remains unexpended, I give and bequeath unto my surviving children and their heirs equally between them"—implied absolute ownership on the part of the daughters to whom the shares were first given. Annin's Ex'rs v. Vandoren's Adm'r, 14 N. J. Eq. (1 McCart.) 135, 144.

As indicating residue.

See "What Remains"; "So Much as Remains"; "Whatever Remains."

REMAIN INVIOLEATE.

"Remain inviolate," as used in Const. Tenn. art. 1, § 6, providing that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, means that it shall be preserved as it existed at common law at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Gribble v. Wilson, 49 S. W. 736, 101 Tenn. 612.

REMAINDER.

See "Rest, Residue, and Remainder."

As balance or residue.

"Remainder," as used in a will, giving decedent's wife an estate and providing, "but on her decease the remainder thereof, if any, I give and devise to my children," is equivalent to whatever may be left. Baumgras v. Baumgras, 24 N. Y. Supp. 767, 769, 5 Misc. Rep. 8.

Technically, a remainder is an estate in land limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined, and such an estate vests immediately on the death of the grantor, to be enjoyed in possession after the determination of the particular estate; but, as used in a will giving certain property to a wife for life, with the use of the remainder of testator's estate, such remainder after her death to descend to certain parties, the word is used in the sense of "balance of" or "what may remain." Potts v. Breneman, 37 Atl. 1002, 1007, 182 Pa. 295.

As survivor.

"Remainder," as used in a clause of a will which recited, if W. or T. should die, or either of them, the remainder to enjoy the other's property, meant the survivor. Nelson v. Combs, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 27, 35.

The phrase "remainder of the aforesaid children," in a will directing testator's estate to be divided among his six children, and, if any should die without lawful issue, then their portion to be equally divided among the remainder of the aforesaid children, is not equivalent to the phrase "survivors of my children," but naturally means the rest, the other, of my children. Presley v. Davis (S. C.) 7 Rich. Eq. 105, 108, 62 Am. Dec. 396.

REMAINDER (Estate in).

See "Contingent Remainder"; "Executed Remainder"; "Executory Remainder"; "Vested Remainder."

A remainder is a remnant of an estate in lands or tenements expectant on a particular estate created together with the same at one time. Sayward v. Sayward, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 210, 213, 22 Am. Dec. 191.

A remainder is what is left of an entire estate in lands after a preceding part of the same estate has been disposed of, whose regular termination the remainder must await. Wells v. Houston, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 629, 654, 57 S. W. 584, 598 (citing 2 Minor, Inst. 331).

An estate in remainder is an estate which is not to take effect or be enjoyed till after the termination of a precedent life estate. Micheau v. Crawford, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 90, 96; Todd v. Jackson, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 525, 540.

"Blackstone defines an estate in remainder to be an estate limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. To create an estate in remainder the owner of the fee must first carve out of the fee an estate for life or for years, as a supporting or precedent estate to the estate in remainder." Bunting v. Speck, 21 Pac. 288, 289, 41 Kan. 424, 3 L. R. A. 690.

A remainder is defined by Kent to be a remnant of an estate in land, depending on a particular prior estate created at the same time and by the same instrument, and limited to arise immediately on the termination of that estate, and not an abridgment of it. Bennett v. Garlock (N. Y.) 10 Hun, 328, 337; Achorn v. Jackson, 29 Atl. 989, 990, 86 Me. 215; In re Miller's Will, 70 Tenn. (2 Lea) 54-69. It is a vested remainder where there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands upon the ceasing of the precedent estate, and it is contingent when it is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person or upon a dubious or uncertain event. Wood v. Griffin, 46 N. H. 230, 234.

An estate in remainder is one limited to be enjoyed after another estate is determined, or at a time specified in the future. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3098.

When a future estate is dependent upon a precedent estate, it may be termed a "remainder," and may be created and transferred by that name. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 4372; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 8793; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 2035.

When a future estate, other than a reversion, is dependent upon a precedent estate, it may be called a "remainder," and may be created and transferred by that name. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 769; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 1218; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3333; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 249; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 4034.

A remainder is a present right, although the enjoyment is future. Aiken v. Suttle, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 103, 110.

A future estate, dependent upon a precedent estate, is termed a "remainder." It is either vested or contingent. It is vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate. It is contingent while the person to whom or the event upon which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. Dana v. Murray, 28 N. E. 21, 24, 122 N. Y. 604.

A remainder is the remnant of an estate, limited to rise immediately on the determination of a precedent particular estate, and it always creates a new estate in the remainderman. One of the rules regulating remainders is that they must pass out of the grantor at the time the particular estate is created. Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 20, 24; Kingsley v. Broward, 19 Fla. 722.

By a statute in New York it is provided that, where a future estate is dependent on a preceding estate, it may be termed a "remainder," and may be created and transferred by that name. It is further declared that future estates are either vested or contingent. They are vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate. They are contingent while the person to whom or the event upon which they are limited to take effect remains uncertain. Palmer v. Dunham, 6 N. Y. Supp. 46, 47, 52 Hun, 468.

A remainder over, to vest upon the death of a stranger to the estate, is a valid remainder. The contingency may be postponed for any number of lives, provided they are all in being when the contingent interest is created, and the persons whose lives are taken need have no interest in the estate. Madison v. Larmon, 48 N. E. 556, 558, 170 Ill. 65, 77, 9 Am. St. Rep. 356.

The word "remainder," in the law of real estate, necessarily implies what is left, and, if the entire estate in fee be granted, there can be no remainder. It is an established principle of construction of contingent remainders that an estate cannot by deed be limited to another after a fee already granted. Palmer v. Cook, 42 N. E. 796, 797, 159 Ill. 300, 50 Am. St. Rep. 165.

The word "remainder," in a will bequeathing one-third part of all testator's personal estate and devising one-third of all the income, rents, and use of his real estate to his wife, and giving his son all the residue and remainder of his estate, "is the correct legal language to pass the land after the expiration of a life estate therein. The law has given that technical meaning to it, and it is a settled rule of consideration that a technical meaning shall be given to a technical word in a will, unless there is clear evidence of a contrary intent. In re Frances' Estate, 75 Pa. (25 P. F. Smith) 220, 224.

Where the testator by will gave certain property to his wife for life, "with remainder thereof, on her decease," to others, the word "remainder," while used in a technical sense, was subordinate to a power given to the life tenant to dispose of the property during life, and the remainder was liable to be defeated as to any part of the estate over which the power was exercised. Woodbridge v. Jones, 67 N. E. 878, 879, 183 Mass 549.

A remainder is what is left of an entire estate in lands after a preceding part of the same estate has been disposed of, whose regular termination the remainder must await. 2 Bl. Comm. 164; 2 Minor, Inst. 331. The essential characteristics of the remainder are: (1) There must be a preceding particular estate, whose regular termination the remainder must await. (2) The remainder must be created by the same conveyance and at the same time as a particular estate. (3) The remainder must vest in right during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instante that it be terminated. (4) No remainder can be limited after a fee simple. The necessary features of a remainder arise out of the definition. The definition describes the remainder as the remnant of the whole after a part has been disposed of. It follows, therefore, of course, that there must be that part in order to fulfill the definition. Wells v. Houston, 57 S. W. 584, 596, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 629.

"A remainder," says a distinguished law writer, "is defined by Lord Coke (1 Inst. 143a) to be a remnant of an estate in lands or tenements, expectant on a particular estate, created together with the same at one time. It follows from this definition that, whenever the first fee is limited, there can be no remainder, in the strict sense of the word; for, the whole being first disposed of, no remnant exists to limit over. The true point of distinction between such conditional limitations over as are and such as are not remainders, in the strict sense of the word, lies here: The former are limited to commence where the first estate is, by the very nature and extent of its original limitations, to expire or determine; whereas the latter are limited so as to be independent of the measure or extent originally given to the first estate, and to take effect in possession upon an event which may happen before the regular determination, to which the first estate is liable from the nature of its original limitation, and so as to rescind it." Shadden v. Hembree, 18 Pac. 572, 575, 17 Or. 14 (quoting Fearne, Rem. [4th Am. from 10th London Ed.] 11, 13).

"The term 'remainder' is a relative expression, and implies that some part of the thing is previously disposed of. Vested remainders, or remainders executed, are those whereby a present interest passed to the party, or where the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate is spent. Contingent or executory remainders are those whereby no present interest passes, or where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person or upon a dubious and uncertain event. Hudson v. Wadsworth, 8 Conn. 348, 359.

A remainder is a residue of an estate in lands, dependent on a particular estate, and created together with the same. Co. Litt. 143a. Section 13, tit. 2, pt. 2, c. 1, p. 722, Rev. St., provides "that future estates are either vested or contingent. They are vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands, upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate. They are contingent while the person to whom or the event on which they are limited to take effect remains uncertain." Wadsworth v. Murray, 51 N. Y. Supp. 1038, 1042, 29 App. Div. 191.

"Remainder," as used in a will bequeathing certain property to testator's husband for life, with remainder to her legal heirs, should not be construed in its technical sense. Peet v. Commerce & E. St. Ry. Co., 8 S. W. 203, 204, 70 Tex. 522.

As estate or land.

See "Estate"; "Land"; "Real Property."

Executory devise distinguished.

As distinguished from an executory devise, an estate in remainder is one limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another is determined. No remainder can be limited after the grant of a fee simple, because the tenant in fee has the whole; while the executory devise is such a disposition of lands by will that thereby no estate vests at the devisor's death, but only on some future contingency. Another elementary principle applies in cases where it may be doubtful whether an estate is an executory devise or an estate in remainder, namely, that a gift shall not be deemed an executory devise if it can take effect as a remainder, and that no remainder shall be considered contingent if it may, consistently with intention, be deemed vested. Burleigh v. Clough, 52 N. H. 267, 273, 13 Am. Rep. 23 (citing Livingston v. Robins [N. Y.] 16 Johns. 537; Blanchard v. Blanchard, 83 Mass. [1 Allen] 225, 4 Kent, Comm. 202); Leslie v. Marshall (N. Y.) 31 Barb. 560, 566; Poor v. Considine, 73 U. S. (6 Wall.) 458, 474, 18 L. Ed. 869; Bristol v. Atwater, 50 Conn. 402, 406.

As a fee.

"A remainder has been said to be the residue of the fee after a less estate has been carved out of it; both these interests being but one estate. Jac. Law Dict.; 1 Co. Litt. c. 12, § 215. A fee simple of the land is the largest possible estate. 1 Co. Litt. c. 1, § 11. And, although there may be a remainder or a reversion in fee, it is not the entire property, or, in popular language, the land itself, that is held in fee in such case, but only the reversion or the remainder. A reversion or a remainder is described as such: the quality, value, and sometimes the validity being dependent upon the precedent estate." Therefore a remainder or a reversion is not properly described in the certificate of appraisers in execution, reciting that the debtor holds certain real estate in fee simple. Stinson v. Rouse, 52 Me. 261, 266.

As created by purchase only.

A remainder is supported and preceded by a particular estate, and is created at the same time and by the same instrument. A remainder can only be acquired by purchase, and never by descent. Payne v. Payne, 24 S. W. 781, 782, 119 Mo. 174.

REMAINDERMAN.

As assign, see "Assigns."
As owner, see "Owner."

REMAINING.

"Remaining," as used in a will providing that if the testator's children, for whom the estate was to be expended in support and education, should die without leaving a child or children who could inherit, the "estate remaining" should go to others named, cannot be construed as used in the legal sense of a remainder, but to cover what was left after the special directions were executed. Chase v. Cartright, 14 S. W. 90, 92, 53 Ark. 358, 22 Am. St. Rep. 207.

Acts 1865, c. 37, § 6, provides that, whenever a vacancy shall exist in either the office of city collector or town collector of the taxes of Hartford, the "remaining collector" shall be sufficiently empowered to discharge the duties of said vacancy. B. died May 6, 1894, leaving the office of collector of city taxes for the city of Hartford vacant. At the time of his death, in addition to being a collector of city taxes, he was, by virtue of appointment and his qualification, collector of town taxes for the town of Hartford for the term expiring May 6, 1894. Subsequently F. was appointed by the selectmen of the town to fill the vacancy in the office of collector of town taxes. It was held that F. was not at the death of B. the remaining collector, he not being in office at the time of B.'s death, and by no ordinary use of language can he be said to have been at any time since the remaining collector. State v. Fowler, 66 Conn. 294, 300, 32 Atl. 162.

REMAINING INTEREST.

A deed of conveyance, conveying the grantor's "remaining interest" in the property, which the conveyance purports to convey, operates only to convey the interest of the grantor which he has not previously conveyed. The grantee purchases nothing further, and the grantor assumes to convey nothing more. Eaton v. Trowbridge, 38 Mich. 454, 460.

REMAINING PROPERTY.

A will giving to testator's wife all of testator's property, to have and to hold and dispose of as she may see fit while she remains single, and at her death or marriage the "remaining property" to be equally divided between testator's daughters, cannot be regarded as indicating that the testator intended that his wife should have the right to diminish the corpus of the estate. Russell v. Werntz, 44 Atl. 219, 220, 88 Md. 210.

REMAINING UNPAID.

The words "remaining unpaid" are often used in business transactions as synonymous with "due" or "owing." Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215, 219.

REMAINING UNTRIED.

Act March 11, 1800, abolishing the circuit courts and transferring to the common pleas of the proper county causes "remaining untried," would include a cause on which an error had been made, but on which judgment had not been entered. A cause was not completely tried, within the spirit of the act, until judgment was pronounced. Preston v. Englert (Pa.) 5 Bin. 390, 391.

REMAND.

See "Reversed and Remanded."

To state court as final hearing, see "Final Hearing or Trial."

The words "dismiss" and "remand" are not used interchangeably or indiscriminately in Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 5, 18 Stat. 472 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 511], relating to the disposal of cases in the Circuit Courts. The former has reference only to a suit brought in the Circuit Court, and the latter to one removed there from the state court. In the one case, if it appear that the suit is not cognizable in the Circuit Court, it is dismissed, and in the other it is remanded to the state court. Consequently a motion under the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court in regard to an action brought there from the state court would properly have been an action to remand, rather than to dismiss. Northern Pac. Terminal Co. v. Lowenberg (U. S.) 18 Fed. 839, 341.

REMEDY.

See "Adequate Remedy"; "Concurrent Remedies"; "Cumulative Remedy"; "Domestic Remedy"; "Equitable Remedy"; "Inadequacy of Remedy at Law"; "Judicial Remedy"; "Legal Remedy"; "Provisional Remedy"; "Right or Remedy."

Other remedy, see "Other."

A remedy is a means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury. Missionary Soc. of M. E. Church v. Ely, 47 N. E. 537, 539, 56 Ohio St. 405 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

A "remedy," as understood in legal phraseology, is a mode prescribed by law to enforce a duty or redress a wrong, and not an obligation to guaranty a right or to indemnify against a wrong. United States v. Lyman (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1024, 1031.

A remedy is simply the means by which the obligation or the corresponding action is effectuated. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 426, 64 Pac. 705, 707, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53.

As action or special proceeding.

The word "remedy," as used in the Code, is limited to actions and special proceedings. Linden v. Hepburn, 5 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Sandf.) 668, 671.

"Remedy" means the action or means given by law for the recovery of a right. Gutierrez v. Pino, 1 N. M. 392, 394 (citing Jac. Law Dict.).

Action required.

A bill to enforce a lien for towage by foreclosure of the lien on a raft of lumber in the complainant's possession, where the suit is brought against individual defendants, seeking a decree against them, and, in default of the payment thereof, a sale of the property to satisfy it, is not a proceeding in rem, within the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts, but is a suit in personam to enforce a common-law remedy, which may be brought in a state court by virtue of Rev. St. § 563 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 455], saving the suitor's right of a common-law remedy in all cases where the common law is competent to give it. It was certainly not a common-law action, but a suit in equity; but it will be noticed that the reservation is not of an action at common law, but of a common-law remedy, and a remedy does not necessarily imply an action. "Remedy" is defined by Bouvier as "the means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury." While, as stated by him, remedies for non-fulfillment of contracts are generally by action, they are by no means universally so. Thus a landlord has at common law a remedy by distress for his rent, and a right also given to him for the purpose of exacting compensation for damages resulting from the trespass of cattle. A bailee of property has a remedy for work done upon such property, or for expenses incurred in keeping it, by detention of possession; an innkeeper has a similar remedy upon the goods of his guests to the amount of his charges for their entertainment; and a carrier has a like lien upon the thing carried. There is also a common-law remedy for nuisances by abatement; a right upon the part of a person assaulted to resist the assailant, even to his death; a right of recaption of goods stolen or unlawfully taken; and a public right against disturbers of the peace by compelling them to give sureties for their good behavior. All these remedies are independent of an action. Knapp, Stout & Co. v. McCaffrey, 20 Sup. Ct. 824, 827, 177 U. S. 638, 44 L. Ed. 921.

Application for admission to bar.

Bouvier defines a remedy to be the means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury. This definition would clearly embrace an application by an attorney for admission to the bar, since every applicant has an absolute constitutional right to admission, provided he is a citizen of the required age, character, and ability, and the object of the application is to enforce this right. Hence it is a remedy, within Code, § 1, dividing remedies in courts of justice into actions and special proceedings. In Belknap v. Waters, 11 N. Y. (1 Kern.) 477, it was said: "The Code * * * seems to regard every original application to a court of justice for a judgment or an order as a remedy." In re Cooper, 22 N. Y. 67, 87.

Cause of action distinguished.

See "Cause of Action."

As damages.

The fathers of the common law, in declaring that for every wrong there should be a remedy, meant by "remedy" damages that courts dealing practically with the practical affairs of life in all cases for personal injuries can find to be certain and measurable from the evidence, the source of which is open to both parties and the nature not transcendental. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 60 N. E. 674, 676, 157 Ind. 64, 54 L. R. A. 846.

Mechanic's lien.

Under a holding that causes of action arising outside the state are not entitled to the special remedies provided by statute for such causes of action arising within the state, a mechanic's lien is not a remedy, but a statutory security, to which the term "remedy" has no more application than it would have to a mortgage. Atkins v. Little, 17 Minn. 342, 357 (Gil. 320, 331).

Obligation of contract distinguished.

The distinction between the obligation of contract and the remedy given by the Legislature to enforce that obligation exists in the nature of things. Without impairing the obligation of the contract, the remedy may certainly be modified as the wisdom of the nation shall direct. Wood v. Mallin, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 208, 209.

As part of contract.

See "Contract."

As procedure.

The word "remedy" pertains more properly to those modes of procedure and pleading which lead up to and end in the judgment. Johnson v. Fletcher, 54 Miss. 628, 631, 28 Am. Rep. 388.

The word "remedy," as used in the statement that the law of the forum will govern in matters pertaining to the remedy, means such matters as the character and form of action, the admissibility of evidence, procedure, the mode of redress, limitations, execution of judgments, and the like. Thomas v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 S. W. 501, 502, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 398.

Right distinguished.

The distinction between "remedy" and "substantive right" is incapable of exact definition. The difference is somewhat a question of degree. The Constitution of Kansas contains the general provision that stockholders shall be liable to creditors of a corporation for an additional amount equal to their stock. Gen. St. Kan. par. 1192, provides that each stockholder shall be liable to each creditor whose execution has been returned nulla bona. This statute does not merely provide a remedy for the enforcement of rights created by the Constitution, but creates substantive rights, which may be enforced in other jurisdictions in accordance with the forms of remedy there provided. Dexter v. Edmonds (U. S.) 89 Fed. 467, 468.

As result of action.

The remedy is the particular result to obtain which an action is brought. Wildman v. Wildman, 41 Atl. 1, 2, 70 Conn. 700.

As vested right.

See "Vested Right."

Contempt proceedings.

When instituted for the purpose of punishing for disobedience to an injunction, a contempt proceeding is not remedial in its character, and is not a "remedy," as that word is used in defining a special proceeding, but is purely of a criminal nature; its object being exclusively to vindicate the authority of the court. State v. Davis, 51 N. W. 942, 945, 2 N. D. 461.

REMEDIAL ACT.

See "Remedial Statute."

REMEDIAL ACTION.

"An action is remedial when brought by the party injured, and penal when brought by common informer." O'Keefe v. Weber, 12 Pac. 74, 75, 14 Or. 55.

REMEDIAL CASES.

"Remedial cases," as used in Const. art. 6, § 2, providing that the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction in such "remedial cases as may be prescribed by law," has a limited signification, and cannot extend to all remedies for wrongs, but merely includes those where the remedy is afforded summarily through certain extraordinary rights, such as prohibition, mandamus, certiorari, and quo warranto. State v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., 28 N. W. 245, 246, 35 Minn. 222.

Under Const. art. 6, § 2, providing that the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, an application instituted by a railroad for the appointment of commissioners to appraise land taken for the purpose of the road, is as much a remedial case as any other special proceeding. Warren v. St. Paul & P. R. Co., 18 Minn. 384, 395 (Gil. 345, 357).

REMEDIAL RIGHT.

Where a master wrongfully discharges a servant from his service under a contract for a definite period, a new right accrues in favor of the servant against the master, which right is one to recover damages for the breach of the contract. This right is called by some authors a "remedial or secondary right." Tiffin Glass Co. v. Stoebr, 54 Ohio St. 157, 164, 43 N. E. 279.

REMEDIAL STATUTE.

A remedial statute has for its object either to redress some existing grievance or to introduce some new regulation or proceeding conducive to the public good. The remedy for the breach of a remedial statute is by an action for damages at the suit of the party injured. Baylies v. Curry, 30 Ill. App. 105, 109.

Remedial statutes are made to supply defects or abridge superfluities in the law, and the rule is that they are to be construed liberally for the suppression of the mischief and the advancement of the remedy. The courts follow the reason and spirit of such statutes till they overtake and destroy the mischief which the Legislature intended to suppress. O'Connor v. State (Tex.) 71 S. W. 409, 411.

A remedial statute has for its object the redress of some existing grievance or the introduction of some regulation or proceeding conducive to public good, and is either affirmative or negative as it prescribes or prohibits anything in particular to be done or omitted. The remedy for breach of a remedial statute is an action for damages by the party aggrieved, while the remedy for the breach of a penal statute is an action to recover the penalty. Van Hook v. Whitlock (N. Y.) 2 Edw. Ch. 804, 310.

A remedial act is one made from time to time to supply defects in the existing law, arising from the inevitable imperfection of legislation, mistake, or other cause, and the words of a remedial statute are to be construed largely and beneficially, so as to suppress mischief. Buckmaster v. McElroy, 20 Neb. 537, 504, 31 N. W. 76, 80, 57 Am. St. Rep. 843; Western Travelers' Acc. Ass'n v. Taylor, 87 N. W. 950, 953, 62 Neb. 783.

A statute which gives a remedy for an injury against him by whom it is committed to the person injured, and to him alone, and limits the recovery to the mere amount of the loss sustained, belongs to the class of remedial statutes, and not to that of penal statutes. Boice v. Gibbons, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 324, 330.

A remedial statute is one which is required in consequence of error in human judgments or which is rendered necessary by the various changes which are constantly taking place as the community enlarges and its concerns increase. Gray v. Bennett, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 522, 527.

A statute seeking to supply a public need and to remedy a public evil is a remedial one. Lovejoy v. Isbell, 40 Atl. 531, 533, 70 Conn. 557.

A remedial statute is one designed to cure or discharge or remedy a defect in existing laws, common or statutory, however arising. City of Montpelier v. Senter, 47 Atl. 392, 393, 72 Vt. 112.

Blackstone says remedial statutes are those which are made to supply such defects and abridge such superfluities in the common law as arise either from the general imperfections in human laws, from change of time and circumstances, or from the mistakes and unadvised determination of unlearned judges, or from other causes whatsoever. People v. Hays, 4 Cal. 127, 137.

REMISE, RELEASE, AND QUITCLAIM.

"Remise, release, and quitclaim," in a deed in which the grantor did remise, release, and quitclaim to the grantee, raise a use in favor of the bargainee, which use the statute of uses transfers into possession. Lynch v. Livingston, 6 N. Y. (2 Seld.) 422, 434.

When used in a deed to imply that there is an interest or claim which has been surrendered, the words "remise, release, and quitclaim" are sufficient to pass the estate. In a primary conveyance the words import much more than a mere disclaimer of interest. Perdue v. Loan Ass'n, 79 Ala. 478, 480.

"Remise, release, and forever quitclaim," as used in a deed, are sufficient to transfer all and every part of the tract of land designated, of the title to which the grantor had not previously divested himself by a valid transfer duly recorded. American Mortg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 24 Pac. 515, 519, 19 Or. 334.

The words "remise, release, and forever quitclaim" are not words of release only, but are operative words of conveyance, though the grantor has no prior estate. Thus in Wilson v. Albert, 1 S. W. 209, 89 Mo. 537, the same operative words were used in a deed of quitclaim then under consideration, and it was ruled that the deed contained sufficient operative words of conveyance. The same rule was subsequently announced in Bray v. Conrad, 13 S. W. 957, 101 Mo. 331, and must be regarded as the settled law of this state. McAnaw v. Tiffin, 45 S. W. 656, 657, 143 Mo. 667.

The words "remise, release, and forever quitclaim," or the words "release" and "assign," as used in a deed, are words of bargain and sale, and are sufficient to raise a trust or use for the benefit of the grantees, which by the statute of uses is transferred to the grantee's possession as a fee. There are no precise declarations required to raise a use, for by any words used in and to describe a present contract of sale or bargain, a trust is instantly raised, on which the statute operates. Jackson v. Fish (N. Y.) 10 Johns. 456, 457.

REMISSION.

A remission is an act of justice, and cannot be obtained until the entire innocence of the petitioner be established, not by his testimony taken ex parte, but after full notice to the proper officer of the government and to the collector who made the seizure. A pardon, on the other hand, imports an act of mercy and favor, and generally supposes its object guilty. The Secretary of the Treasury has power, under the act for the mitigation and remission of forfeitures, to remit as well the moiety or share allowed to individuals as the part belonging to the government. United States v. Morris (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1336, 1346.

REMISSNESS.

"Remissness," as used in a contract by a telegraph company exempting it from liability for any delay, error, or remissness, implies a sending or delivering of the message, but in a tardy, negligent, or careless manner, and the company is not liable thereunder for a total failure to send or deliver the message. Baldwin v. United States Telegraph Co. (N. Y.) 54 Barb. 505, 515, 6 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 405, 423.

REMIT.

Where an agent to whom goods were shipped for sale was instructed to remit the proceeds generally, without any direction as to the mode of remitting, he would be discharged from liability if he remitted in the mode usual in such business; and where the usual mode of remitting was by bill, proof of such usage and of the fact that he did so remit would discharge him from liability, although the bill was dishonored. Potter v. Morland, 57 Mass. (3 Cush.) 384, 388.

The power given to the Secretary of the Treasury by Act March 3, 1797, § 1, to "remit" forfeitures for infractions of the revenue laws, may be exercised by him, not only by remitting the whole of a forfeiture, but by remitting any part less than the whole, or on a condition consistent with law. Jungbluth v. Redfield (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 52.

Where a principal wrote to an agent, who had loaned money for him, stating that a certain account was due from a third person, and merely said, "Please remit," the agent was authorized to collect and remit the sum; the authority "to remit" necessarily including the authority to receive. Shane v. Palmer, 23 Pac. 594, 595, 43 Kan. 481.

As pardoned.

"Remitted," as used in an indictment which stated the former conviction of defendant and then alleged that he had been discharged and remitted of such judgment and conviction, meant pardoned. Gibson v. People (N. Y.) 5 Hun, 542, 543.

As send by mail.

The word "remit" means to send back, as to remit a check, so that a deposit of a check in a post office was an acceptance of an offer that, "if you remit your check, we will reinstate you." Colvin v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 21 N. Y. Supp. 734, 735, 66 Hun, 543.

"Remit" means to transmit, forward, or send; and where a party transmitted insurance premium money by mail in compliance with a request to "remit," the remittance is at the risk, as to time, of the company. Hollowell v. Life Ins. Co. of Virginia, 35 S. E. 616, 617, 126 N. C. 398.

As send back for retrial.

"To remit a cause is to send it back to the same court from which it has been removed by appeal or otherwise, for the purpose of retrying the cause when judgment has been reversed, or of issuing execution when it has been affirmed." Irvine v. Marshall, 3 Minn. 72, 76 (Gil. 33, 34).

REMITTER.

A person procuring a foreign bill of exchange is known technically as the "remitter" of it. Boston Steel & Iron Co. v. Steuer, 66 N. E. 646, 648, 183 Mass. 140, 97 Am. Ct. Rep. 426.

REMITTITUR.

A remittitur is in the nature of a discontinuance and is governed by the same rules. Hence it is held that a remittitur entered after the verdict of a jury is rendered in a case in which the matter in dispute exceeds $2,000 does not cut off defendant's right of appeal from a judgment entered against him. Gayden v. Louisville, N., N. O. & T. R. Co., 1 South. 792, 793, 39 La. Ann. 269.

The filing and docketing of a transcript of a judgment of the Supreme Court in any county of the state, for the purpose of issuing an execution, is not a remittitur, under Supreme Court Rule 29. La Crosse & M. S. Packet Co. v. Reynolds, 12 Minn. 213, 215 (Gil. 135, 136).

REMNANTS.

"Remnants and surpluses" is a technical term, meaning the remainder of the proceeds from the sale of ships to satisfy claims for seamen's wages, for bottomry bonds, for salvage services, and for supplies of materialmen, after the satisfaction of such claims. China Mut. Ins. Co. v. Force, 36 N. E. 874, 876, 142 N. Y. 90, 40 Am. St. Rep. 576.

REMONSTRATE.

"Remonstrate" is defined as to present and urge reasons in opposition to an act, measure, or any course of proceeding, so that a notice to be served on a city council, stating that the undersigned remonstrates against the acceptance of a certain contract, is sufficient to constitute an appeal from the acceptance of the contract by the council. Girvin v. Simon, 59 Pac. 945, 946, 127 Cal. 491.

REMONSTRANCE.

A remonstrance or special petition, within the meaning of the liquor license law, is one "for or against a single or particular application." In re Mercer County License Applications, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 43, 45.

REMOTE.

"Remote," as used in Tariff Act 1883, in enumerating wools of the first class as "wools of merino blood near or remote," means within the limit of merino blood requisite to characterize the wool as possessing merino qualities and adding to its value. United States v. Midgley (U. S.) 42 Fed. 668, 669.

All dominion has two causes, proximate and remote. The remote is the title which vests a right to the thing, and gives cause of action against the vendor who has not delivered the thing sold; and the proximate is the obtaining possession by delivery of the thing sold, which, without anything else, being preceded by the title, vests the right in the thing, which is the dominion. The consequence is that the right to the thing gives a personal action, and the right in the thing gives the right of action against any possessor. Coles v. Perry, 7 Tex. 109, 136.

REMOTE CAUSE.

"Remote cause is improbable cause." Armour v. Golkowska, 66 N. E. 1037, 1038, 202 Ill. 144.

It has been found impracticable to prescribe by abstract definition, applicable to all possible states of fact, what is a proximate and what a remote cause. Cleveland

v. City of Bangor, 32 Atl. 892, 896, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326.

The remote cause of an injury is that cause of which some indefinite force merely took advantage to accomplish something not the probable or natural effect thereof. Mallen v. Waldowski, 67 N. E. 409, 410, 203 Ill. 87 (citing Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 11 O. C. A. 253, 63 Fed. 400, 27 L. R. A. 583).

Remote cause "means that which may have happened and yet no injury have occurred, notwithstanding that no injury could have occurred if it had not happened." Troy v. Cape Fear & Y. V. R. Co., 6 S. E. 77, 81, 99 N. C. 298, 6 Am. St. Rep. 521.

"Remote cause," in the law of negligence, does not mean remote in point of time, but merely in connection with the primary cause. To illustrate: A farmer along a line of railroad may open the fence maintained by the company for temporary purposes, and while so left open his cattle may stray on the company's track and receive injury by coming in contact with the company's trains without any fault of the company's servants. The direct cause of such injury would be the collision, and the remote cause in point of time would be the act of the farmer; but the remote cause in point of time becomes the proximate cause in producing the injury. Maryland Steel Co. of Sparrows Point v. Marney, 42 Atl. 60, 65, 88 Md. 482, 42 L. R. A. 842, 71 Am. St. Rep. 441.

A remote cause is one which is inconclusive in reasoning, because from it no certain conclusion can be legitimately drawn. In other words, a remote cause is a cause the connection between which and the effect is uncertain, vague, or indeterminate. Although the existence of the remote cause is necessary for the effect (for, unless there be a remote cause there can be no effect), still the existence of the remote cause does not necessarily imply the existence of the effect. The remote cause being given, the effect may or may not follow. It differs from a proximate cause, which is one in which is involved the idea of necessity. It is one the connection between which and the effect is plain and intelligible. It is one that can be used as a term by which a proposition can be demonstrated; that is, one that can be reasoned from conclusively. A proximate cause being given, the effect must follow. Hoey v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 74 N. Y. Supp. 1113, 1115, 70 App. Div. 60 (citing Selfter v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 169 N. Y. 254, 62 N. E. 349; Laidlaw v. Sage, 52 N. E. 679, 158 N. Y. 73, 44 L. R. A. 216); Marks v. Rochester Ry. Co., 58 N. Y. Supp. 210, 216, 41 App. Div. 66.

REMOTE DAMAGES.

Consequential damages distinguished, see "Consequential Damages."

REMOVABLE.

In St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 36, § 1, providing that, where a wife or children have no other settlement than his own, they shall be removable when he is removable, and not removable when he is not removable, means when he is removable by law. When he is not removable has the same meaning, and could not relieve the accidental circumstances of a man having left the parish, so that his removal was a physical impossibility. Reg. v. Inhabitants of St. Ebbe's, 12 Q. B. 137, 141.

"Removable fastening," as used in an application for a patent consisting of a contrivance for attaching a metallic top to a lantern by a "removable fastening or spring catch," covers "every conceivable device applicable to lanterns and adapted to connect one edge of the lid with the top of the lantern or guard, or to disconnect it." Adams v. Belaire Stamping Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 66, 141 U. S. 539, 35 L. Ed. 849.

REMOVE—REMOVAL.

See "Actually Removing"; "Temporary Removal"; "Vexatious Removal."

The word "remove" means to move away from a position occupied; to displace, as to remove a building. South v. Sinking Fund Com'rs, 5 S. W. 567, 569, 86 Ky. 186 (citing Webst. Dict.).

The word "removed," as employed in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a, subd. 1, 30 Stat. 546 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3422], providing that acts of bankruptcy shall consist in having removed property with intent to hinder creditors, whether taken by itself or viewed in the light of the context, clearly signifies an actual or physical change in the position or locality of the property constituting the subject of the removal. In re Wilmington Hosiery Co. (U. S.) 120 Fed. 180, 182.

A debtor who ships his property to consignees without the state for the purpose of raising funds against which he may draw for the payment of debts, which debts are due to persons other than the consignees, is liable to an attachment against his estate on the ground that he has removed his property without the state. Crow v. Lemon & Gale Co., 11 South. 110, 111, 69 Miss. 799.

The words "ejected, expelled, put out, and removed," relating to trespass, may be satisfied under some circumstances by proof that the house was destroyed in the plaintiff's absence, and by their being prevented from returning to it and re-entering it, because finding it existing no longer as a habitable house, but not so where the pulling down and expelling was contemporaneous. Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 779.

It is practicable to remove a building intact, but that is not the only way. It may be removed, within the common understanding, by taking the material and reconstructing or rebuilding it at another locality. Board of Education of Bath Tp. v. Townsend, 59 N. E. 223, 224, 63 Ohio St. 514, 52 L. R. A. 868.

"Removal of the goods," as used in a bill of lading, providing that a shipowner is not to be liable for any claim, notice of which is not given before the "removal of the goods," does not necessarily or properly mean the removal from the ship, but removal from the place of deposit of the goods upon the dock or wharf when freed from the ship's tackle. The St. Hubert (U. S.) 107 Fed. 727, 734, 46 C. C. A. 603.

As change of residence.

"Removal," as used in act of incorporation for certain trust property, providing that, in case of death or removal of any member or members of such corporation, the surviving or removing members may elect others to fill the vacancy, the removal meant was a change of residence, so as to render it inconvenient for the trustees to act, and did not confer the power of motion on the board. Fuller v. Trustees of Plainfield Academic School, 6 Conn. 532, 545.

The word "removal," as used in St. 1785, c. 75, § 4, providing that, in case of the removal of a constable, the office may be supplied by the choice of another, means the removal from the town, not his removal from office by any act of the town. Inhabitants of Barre v. Inhabitants of Greenwich, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 129, 134.

Same—Permanent absence.

"Removal," as used in a trust deed, providing that the title to the premises shall vest in the successor in trust only in case of the trustee's death, removal from the county, permanent inability, or refusal to act, cannot be construed to include the temporary imprisonment of the trustee in a foreign country. The word "removal" contemplates something more. It signifies a permanent absence, or a change of domicile. Ware v. Schintz, 60 N. E. 67, 69, 190 Ill. 189.

"Removal," as used in a deed of trust, providing for a successor of a trustee in the event of his death, resignation, or removal from the county, contemplates a change of domicile. The absence of a party from his home, for temporary purposes of business or pleasure, is not a removal. Barstow v. Stone, 52 Pac. 48, 51, 10 Colo. App. 396.

The word "removal" means ceasing to be a resident of, as used in Const. art. 3, § 20, providing that all offices created by the Constitution shall become vacant by the death of the incumbent, by removal from the state, etc. Prather v. Hart, 24 N. W. 282, 283, 17 Neb. 598.

To an ordinary mind the term "removal," when applied to the occupant of a dwelling house, does not convey the same, but a widely different, meaning than absence, and according to the common understanding persons leaving their houses on visits, excursions, or other temporary occasions do not remove from or cease to occupy them. Stone v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co., 45 Atl. 235, 236, 69 N. H. 438.

The removal of property, within the meaning of an attachment act authorizing an attachment when the debtor shall be about to remove his property, includes only a permanent removal, when the removal is without any injurious intent or effect in fact; and hence sending a slave across the state line on an errand, expecting his return, is not such a removal of property as that intended by the statute. Nor, for a like reason, if a steamboat employed in transportation between a port in this state and a foreign port is about to pass the local jurisdictional border in that service, can such a purpose of temporary removal subject the boat to attachment, without regard to the animus or the actual effect so far as creditors may be concerned. Montgomery v. Tilley, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 155, 158.

The removal of property which is the ground of attachment does not characterize the shipment of products of an enterprise out of the state in the due course of business, where the removal is not permanent, and the proceeds are brought back within the state. The statute does not mean to designate as cause for attachment every transitory or temporary removal. Clinch River Mineral Co. v. Harrison, 21 S. E. 660, 663, 91 Va. 122.

Same—Death.

"Removal from the state," as used in Gen. St. c. 30, § 73, providing that sureties of a sheriff may be prosecuted for official misconduct, neglect, or default of the sheriff by an action of debt or scire facias, brought directly upon the recognizance without first bringing a suit against the sheriff, whenever service of process cannot be made on a sheriff by reason of his "removal from the state," etc., means "the change of the domicile of the sheriff, while in life, from this to some other state. The departure of one's soul from his body, which takes place at death, is not a removal of such person from the state. The person consists of both soul and body, and the removal of such person means the removal of the soul and body in life, and not the withdrawal of the former from the latter merely." Tute v. James, 46 Vt. 60, 63.

As discharge from office.

The term "removal" means a discharge, the act of removing from office, or putting an end to an employment. Lethbridge v. City of New York, 15 N. Y. Supp. 562, 59 Super. Ct. (27 Jones & S.) 486.

Suspension for a specified term without pay is a removal from office pro tanto, within the spirit and meaning of P. L. 1885, p. 63, prohibiting the removal from office of police officers for any other cause than incapacity, misconduct, etc. Carey v. Board of Police of City of Plainfield, 21 Atl. 492, 493, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 311.

The retirement of a fireman on pension is not a "removal," within the meaning of Laws 1899, c. 370, § 21, prohibiting the removal of honorably discharged soldiers from public position or employment, except for incompetency or misconduct after notice and hearing. People v. Scannell, 65 N. Y. Supp. 832, 833, 53 App. Div. 161.

The "removal" of a priest of the Catholic Church means the relieving of such priest from the charge of a church. This power is exercised according to the bishop's judgment, and may be so exercised without supposition of wrong. The priest is left in the same position as all other priests who are out of employment, and has recourse to the bishop's superior. Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. 213, 232.

As destroy.

Rev. St. § 3293, as amended by Act Cong. May 28, 1880, c. 108, § 4, 21 Stat. 145 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2133], requiring distillers to give a bond conditioned to pay the tax on spirits stored in distillery warehouses before they shall be "removed from the warehouse," and within three years from the date of entry, cannot be construed to include the destruction of such spirits by fire. "Remove" is synonymous with or equivalent to "withdraw." The verb "to remove" bears in common usage two meanings—to cause a thing to change place, or to cause it to cease to exist; and it is used in the first meaning in the statute, rather than in the second, which would include destruction by fire.—United States v. Peace (U. S.) 48 Fed. 714.

As leave.

"Remove from the state," as used in Code Prac. § 214, which requires the creditor to swear that he "verily believes that the defendant is about to remove from the state," in order that bail may be required of such creditor, is synonymous with "leave the state," as used in section 212 of the Code, which authorizes bail to be required when a debtor is about to leave the state. Florange v. Camp, 5 La. 280, 281.

Move synonyms.

Act Feb. 1, 1879, makes it unlawful to "transport or move" cotton in the seed during the nighttime, etc. The indictment under such act used the words "transport or remove." Held, that the words "move" and "remove," as so used, were equivalent in meaning. Davis v. State, 68 Ala. 58, 44 Am. Rep. 128.

As place or put out of reach.

The word "remove," as used in a charge in an action of replevin that, if the jury found the fact to be that there was actually a purpose to remove property beyond the reach of creditors, it would have a bearing upon the motive of the transaction, means the placing or putting of the property out of the reach of the creditors by a pretended transfer.—Nugent v. Goldsmith, 26 N. W. 778, 780, 59 Mich. 593.

Remove and sell.

A chattel mortgage, authorizing the mortgagees, on a breach, to "remove and sell" the property, gives the mortgagees the right to take possession; and hence they may maintain an action for the value of the property, where the same has been unlawfully taken and converted.—Sandager v. Northern Pac. Elevator Co., 48 N. W. 438, 439, 2 N. D. 3.

Remove gate.

"Remove," as used in Gen. St. c. 24, § 7, imposing a penalty on any person who shall "willfully remove any gate" or bar across pent roads, should be construed to include willfully opening and leaving open such gate. The gate, when shut, was a barrier restraining the cattle in the pasture from the crops in the field. When opened and left open by the defendant, it was as effectually removed as such barrier as though it had been taken from the hinges and carried away, or thrown on the ground. French v. Holt, 53 Vt. 364, 367.

Remove incumbrance.

The phrase "incumbrance be removed," as used in a contract providing that a debt for land should not be paid until a certain incumbrance should be removed, means that the incumbrance should be removed in a manner known to the law, by a deed from the mortgagee, if the incumbrance was a mortgage, or by a discharge on the record according to the statute. Hoyt v. Swift, 13 Vt. 129, 131, 37 Am. Dec. 586.

Remove from homestead.

"Remove," as used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 68, § 8, providing that the "owner of a homestead may remove therefrom," and such removal shall not render such homestead liable or subject to forced sale on execution against the owner, means that the owner may remove from the homestead, if with a temporary purpose and with an intention to return. It does not mean that he may permanently remove from a homestead and acquire another, and still retain the former as exempt. This, in effect, would be saying that a man may have two homesteads at the same time. Donaldson v. Lamprey, 11 N. W. 119, 121, 29 Minn. 18.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 68, § 69, providing that the right to a homestead shall cease on the "removal therefrom" of the claimant, means a cessation of actual occupancy and residence on the property as a home or dwelling place, and includes a removal accompanied with an intention to return and resume the occupancy at some future time. Quehl v. Peterson, 49 N. W. 390, 391, 47 Minn. 13.

"Removal therefrom," as used in the homestead exemption laws in reference to the effect of a removal therefrom, means "a cessation of such actual occupancy and residence, though accompanied with an intention to return and resume such occupancy." Quehl v. Peterson, 49 N. W. 390, 391, 47 Minn. 13.

Remove from the land.

2 Gav. & H. St. p. 462, § 14, which declares that any person who shall cut down or remove from any land belonging to another, without license so to do from common authority, any tree, stone, timber, or other valuable article, shall be deemed guilty of a trespass, implies that the article removed should in some sense pertain to the land itself, and hence the statute would not include within its meaning the removal of a wagon, or other manufactured article, or live stock. An allegation, in an indictment under the section above referred to, that certain gravel was removed from the land, would imply a severance therefrom, as gravel is an article pertaining to land and ordinarily forms a part of it. Bates v. State, 31 Ind. 72, 73, 75.

Removal of a cause.

The phrase "removal of a cause," as used in Rev. St. 1899, p. 2207, § 13, providing for the removal of a criminal trial from Kansas City to the city of Independence on affidavit that defendant cannot get a fair trial because of the prejudice in the minds of the people in the city where the suit is pending, means a change of venue, within the statutory prohibition against a second change of venue. State ex rel. Vickery v. Wofford, 24 S. W. 764, 765, 119 Mo. 375.

Change of venue and removal of causes in statutes authorizing the transfer of causes are interchangeable and of the same significance. Change of venue, strictly speaking, means a change of the place of trial to another county; but it is sometimes used to denote the transfer of the cause to another court or judge within the county or district in which it is pending. Thus "removal of a cause," within the meaning of Act April 14, 1834, authorizing either party in a suit brought by or against canal companies and railroad companies to remove the same to the court of another adjacent county, and the phrase "change of venue" in Act March 30, 1875, entitled "An act relating to and authorizing change of venue in civil cases," have the same meaning. Felts v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 45 Atl. 493, 494, 195 Pa. 21.

Removal of the record.

The term "removal of the record" means removal of the cause. Under the old English practice each case was contained in a record by itself, and the very record was sent up for further proceedings to the other court upon certiorari, and there remained nothing in the first court to proceed upon. With us it is not entirely so, since much of the record is kept in dockets, and only copies of them are removed. But this is only a formal difference, since the term "removal of the record" means removal of the cause. Hughes v. Mine Hill & S. H. R. Co., 30 Pa. 517, 519.

Removed for sale.

Cigars and tobacco, removed from a tobacco manufactory to a salesroom in a portion of the same building as the manufactory, having a counter at which goods are sold at retail, are not "sold or removed for sale," within the meaning of that expression as used in 13 Stat. 240, providing that all goods or objects on which taxes are imposed by the provisions of the law which shall be found in the custody of any person for the purpose of being "sold or removed for sale" in fraud of the internal revenue acts shall be forfeited to the United States. Lillenthal v. United States, 97 U. S. 237, 263, 24 L. Ed. 901.

RENDER.

See "Duly Rendered."

Rendered account, see "Account Rendered."

The word "render" sometimes means "bestow or provide; furnish; give in answer to requirement of duty or demand." Dayton v. Ewart, 72 Pac. 420, 422, 28 Mont. 153, 98 Am. St. Rep. 549 (citing Stand. Dict.).

The word "render" means to furnish; to state; to deliver; as to render an account, etc. As used in a clause in a policy providing that, in case of loss, the insured shall render a statement to the company, it cannot be construed to mean shall render the statements to the company at its home office, thus giving the word a different signification from "forward" or "mail," and so as to require an actual delivery of the proofs to the company at its home office within the specified time; but such provision is complied with where proofs are mailed to the company within the stipulated time, though they are not received by it until after such period. Manufacturers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Zeitlinger, 48 N. E. 179, 181, 168 Ill. 286, 61 Am. St. Rep. 105.

"Render," as used in a fire insurance policy providing that the assured should render a statement of loss within 60 days thereafter, means to give, present, state, or deliver. When the insurer does not receive such statement until after the time limited, it is not rendered, though insured mailed it, before the time had expired. Peabody v. Satterlee, 59 N. E. 818, 820, 166 N. Y. 174, 52 L. R. A. 956.

The word "rendered," as used in Rev. St. c. 70, § 2, requiring the account of the assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors to be rendered to the judge of probate within six months, does not require it to be allowed within that time. Thomas v. Clark, 65 Me. 296, 300.

"Rendered," as used in an instrument in writing agreeing to pay a certain person a sum of money on the sale of a mine for services rendered in the sale of such mine, without any qualifying words, necessarily imports that the services had been performed. Gabb v. King, 38 Cal. 143, 144.

RENDITION OF JUDGMENT.

See "From the Rendition of Judgment."

"Rendered," as used by discriminating law writers in speaking of a judgment as being rendered, has reference only to judgments which are not obtained by confession. Schuster v. Rader, 22 Pac. 505, 506, 13 Colo. 329.

"Rendered," as used in Code Proc. Colo. c. 23, § 272, giving a defendant in ejectment the right of a new trial upon application therefor and payment of costs within a limited time after judgment is rendered, means rendered in the trial court, rather than the judgment which happens to be rendered on writ of error. Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Mike & Starr Gold & Silver Min. Co. (U. S.) 56 Fed. 956, 957, 6 C. C. A. 180.

As announcement of decision.

A judgment is said to be "rendered" at the time the judgment was in fact pronounced; and a statute providing that the judgment of the justice's court shall be a lien on real property from the time of filing the transcript with the clerk of the district court, and the lien shall extend for five years from the rendition of the judgment, does not make the lien extend five years from the date of the filing of such transcript, nor make the filing of such transcript a judgment of the district court. Farmers' State Bank v. Bales, 90 N. W. 945, 946, 64 Neb. 870.

The "rendition of a judgment" is the judicial act of the court in pronouncing the sentence of the law upon the facts in controversy as ascertained by the pleadings and the verdict. Columbus Waterworks Co. v. City of Columbus, 26 Pac. 1046, 1049, 46 Kan. 666; Winstead v. Evans (Tex.) 33 S. W. 580; Burns v. Skelton, 68 S. W. 527, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 453.

Within the meaning of a statute providing that a writ of error shall be brought within two years after the rendering of the judgment or final determination of the court, the import of the expression "rendering of such judgment" is the annunciation or declaring of the decision of the court indicated by the rule for judgment, and not the entry of the judgment upon the record. Fleet v. Youngs (N. Y.) 11 Wend. 522, 527, 528.

"Rendered," as used in Code, § 462, relating to a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, refers to the making up and announcing of the judgment, and not to the clerical act of reducing it to writing. Ryals v. McArthur, 17 S. E. 350, 92 Ga. 378.

"Rendering judgment," as used in a statute requiring a writ of error to be brought within two years after rendering judgment, in its more obvious and natural import means the announcing or declaring of the decision of the court, indicated by the rule for judgment. Fleet v. Youngs (N. Y.) 11 Wend. 522, 524.

The act, after the trial and final submission of a case, of pronouncing judgment in language which fully determines the rights of the persons to the action and leaves nothing more to be done except the entry of the judgment by the clerk, constitutes the rendition of the judgment. State ex rel. Green v. Henderson, 64 S. W. 133, 141, 164 Mo. 347, 86 Am. St. Rep. 618.

"Rendition of the judgment," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 1, providing that an exception to a decision or verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence cannot be reviewed on appeal, unless the appeal is taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment, means its announcement by the court and not its entry in the judgment book. A judgment is rendered when it is announced by the court. Schurtz v. Romer, 22 Pac. 657, 81 Cal. 244.

When a referee signs his report and notifies the parties thereof, though the same is not yet filed, the report is "rendered," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1023, providing that before the decision or report is rendered either party may submit a statement of facts which he deems established by the evidence and of the rulings and questions of law which he desires the court or referee to make. The decision is rendered when the judgment of the referee, embodied in a report duly signed, is announced. Craig v. Craig, 21 N. Y. Supp. 241, 242, 66 Hun, 452.

Docketed distinguished.

A judgment of a justice of the peace is not rendered in the county court, when it is docketed there, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 382, providing that an action on a judgment or decree rendered in a court not of record shall be commenced within six years, and the cause of action in such a case shall be deemed to have accrued when final judgment was rendered. Such a meaning of the word "rendered" is certainly not according to the common understanding. Ordinarily any one would understand that a judgment which had been recovered in a justice's court and subsequently docketed in the county court was in no sense rendered in the county court, and there is no countenance for such a meaning to be found in any statute. The word "rendered," as applied to judgments, is always used in the sense of judgments given by judicial action. Diefenbach v. Roch, 20 N. E. 560, 561. 112 N. Y. 621, 2 L. R. A. 829.

As entered.

"Rendition," as used in Code 1873, § 2883, declaring that a judgment is a lien on lands in the county wherein it is rendered from the date of such rendition, is the act of rendering. To render is to make up; to furnish; to state; to deliver—as to render a judgment. Webst. Dict. A judgment is not rendered, so as to be effective and capable of enforcement as a lien, until it is made up, furnished, stated, or delivered in the form and manner as required by statute. It must be entered of record in the books prescribed by statute. The date of rendition of the judgment is when it is completely rendered; i. e., entered on the record books prescribed therefor. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Hesser, 42 N. W. 325, 328, 77 Iowa, 381, 4 L. R. A. 122, 14 Am. St. Rep. 297.

"Rendition of judgment," as used in a statute relative to the time within which an appeal may be taken, and allowing it within a certain time from the rendition of judgment, means its announcement by the clerk and entry on the minutes by the clerk, or the filing of the findings and order for judgment. Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co., 54 Pac. 728, 728, 122 Cal. 152.

Entered distinguished.

"Rendition" and "entry," in reference to judgments, are used in different senses, and express the idea that there is a rendition of the judgment before it is actually entered in the judgment book. In re Cook's Estate, 19 Pac. 431, 433, 77 Cal. 220, 1 L. R. A. 567, 11 Am. St. Rep. 294.

The "rendition" of a judgment is a purely judicial act of the court alone, and must be made before the entry thereof. State v. Brown, 72 Pac. 86, 87, 31 Wash. 397, 62 L. R. A. 974.

"The rendition of a judgment" is distinct from the entry of a judgment, which is a ministerial act, which consists in spreading upon the record a statement of the final conclusion reached by the court in the matter, thus furnishing external and incontestable evidence of the sentence given, and designed to stand as a perpetual memorial of its action. Winstead v. Evans (Tex.) 33 S. W. 580 (citing 1 Black, Judgm. § 106).

The rendition of a judgment is the act of the court in pronouncing its judgment, and differs from the entry of a judgment, in that the latter act required its actual entry in the judgment book of the court. Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416, 418; McLaughlin v. Doherty, 54 Cal. 519; In re Cook's Estate, 19 Pac. 431, 433, 77 Cal. 220, 1 L. R. A. 567, 11 Am. St. Rep. 267 (cited in Schurtz v. Romer, 22 Pac. 657, 81 Cal. 244).

The rendition of the judgment is a judicial act, and differs from the entry thereof, which is the ministerial act of making a record of the judgment. Martin v. Pifer, 96 Ind. 245, 248.

"The rendition of a judgment and the entry of such judgment are different and distinct each from the other. The former is the act of the court, while the latter is the act of the clerk of the court." Vigo County Com'rs v. City of Terre Haute, 46 N. E. 350, 351, 147 Ind. 134 (quoting Smith v. State, 71 Ind. 230, citing, also, Chamberlain v. City of Evansville, 77 Ind. 542, 548, and following Chissom v. Barbour, 100 Ind. 1, and Mayer v. Haggerty, 138 Ind. 628, 38 N. E. 42).

"Rendition of the judgment," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 939, providing that an exception to the decision or verdict, because not supported by the evidence, cannot be reviewed unless the appeal is taken within 60 days after "the rendition of the judgment," does not mean the same as "entry of the judgment," but means either the announcement from the bench entered in the minutes, or the filing of findings, if there are findings, or both. In re Rose's Estate (Cal.) 20 Pac. 712, 713.

It is true that the two words "rendered" and "entered," in their strict sense, bear a clear difference in meaning and intent. Giving to these words such signification, a judgment may be said to be rendered by a declaration from the bench; but to enter it requires the act of the clerk in writing it upon the journal. It is true, also, that for some purposes a judgment may be regarded as rendered so soon as it is pronounced. In order to create a judgment lien upon the lands of a judgment debtor, as of the first day of the term at which a judgment against such debtor is rendered, under Rev. St. § 5375, providing that such lands and tenements within the county where the judgment is entered shall be bound for the satisfaction thereof from the first day of the term at which judgment is rendered, the judgment must not only be pronounced during the term, but an entry of such judgment must be made on the journal during the term. Coe v. Erb, 52 N. E. 640, 641, 59 Ohio St. 259, 69 Am. St. Rep. 764.

As ordered.

A judgment is rendered when the court makes an order therefor. State v. Biesman, 29 Pac. 534, 536, 12 Mont. 11.

"Rendered," as used in a complaint alleging that a judgment was rendered, is not equivalent to "duly given or made," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 103, requiring the allegation to be that the judgment was duly given or made. A judgment is duly rendered when it is duly pronounced and ordered to be entered, but a judgment duly made or given is a complete judgment properly entered in the judgment book, so that it may be pleaded in bar of another action. Harmon v. Comstock Horse & Cattle Co., 23 Pac. 470, 471, 9 Mont. 243.

Taxation of costs required.

A judgment in ejectment is not rendered, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 3092, requiring the application for a new trial to be made within one year from the rendition of the judgment, until the costs are taxed and inserted therein. Haseltine v. Simpson, 21 N. W. 299, 300, 61 Wis. 427.

RENEW.

"To renew," in its popular sense, is to refresh, revive, or rehabilitate an expiring or declining subject; but it is not appropriate to describe the making of a new contract or the creation of a new existence. Carter v. Brooklyn Life Ins. Co., 110 N. Y. 15, 22, 17 N. E. 396, 399 (citing Webst. Dict.; Worc. Dict.).

An act providing that building and loan associations might bring and maintain suits after the expiration of their charter, for the sole purpose of enabling them to wind up their affairs, is not in violation of article 1, § 25, of the Constitution, declaring that no law shall "create, renew, or extend the charter of more than one corporation." The act neither created charters, nor did it renew or extend the time of its existence, within the meaning of the Constitution. Cooper v. Oriental Savings & Loan Ass'n, 100 Pa. 402, 406.

Though it is held that a policy of insurance requiring the payment of annual premiums is renewed by the payment of each annual premium, a statute requiring notice to the insured as a condition precedent to the forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of the premium, which is in force at the time of the issuance of the policy, but after its payment, does not cease to be applicable and require the notice, by the payment of subsequent premiums, on the ground that such payment constitutes a renewal of the policy and is in effect a new contract, so as to render the statute inapplicable. Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Peetz (Tex.) 47 S. W. 687, 689.

Within the meaning of Laws 1876, c. 341, providing that "no life insurance company doing business in the state of New York shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy thereafter issued or renewed, by reason of nonpayment of any annual premiums or interest, unless a notice in writing," etc., was sent to the policy holder, the payment of each annual premium constituted a renewal of the policy; and where a policy provided that it should continue for the term of the natural life of the insured, on condition that he should pay the annual premiums as they become due, and that a failure to pay such premiums in any year should render the policy void, but, when paid, it continued, by force of such payment, the policy in existence for the period of another year, this process each year revived or renewed the policy as it approached the period of its agreed termination. It is not according to the popular notion of the meaning of the word "renewal" that it can take place only after the death or expiration of the subject to which it is applied. Thus, to renew a note, a lease, or a contract, it is not essential to wait until they have respectively expired; for after that time it would be practically impossible to renew them. A new note or lease may be made, or contract created; but they would have force and effect from the new creation, and not from the original agreement. To renew in its popular sense is to refresh, revive, or rehabilitate an expiring or declining subject, but is not appropriate to describe the making of a new contract or the creation of a new existence, and the claim made by the insurance company that a policy could not be said to have been renewed, within the meaning of the act, unless it had become forfeited or lapsed, and afterwards restored or reinstated by the company, was not in accordance with the meaning of the act. Carter v. Brooklyn Life Ins. Co., 110 N. Y. 15, 22, 17 N. E. 396, 398.

As establish for another period.

The word "renewed," or "renewal," as applied to promissory notes in commercial and legal parlance, means something more than the substitution of another obligation for the old one. It means to re-establish a particular contract for another period of time, to restore to its former conditions an obligation on which the time of payment has been extended. Kedey v. Petty, 54 N. E. 798, 800, 153 Ind. 179.

The word "renewed," as indorsed on a note, may be considered as meaning received the interest for a renewal, and may be properly regarded as an agreement to consider the note to be the same as if made in the same terms anew from that date. Lime Rock Bank v. Mallett, 34 Me. 547, 549, 56 Am. Dec. 673.

A renewal of a patent renovates a patent which has become void, and restores it to the same condition in which it was when it became void and for the same period of duration. An extension differs from this. It operates upon the franchise at the expiration of the 14 years, and extends it 7 years. Wilson v. Rousseau (U. S.) 30 Fed. Cas. 162, 168.

As extended.

Where a bill of exchange drawn November 28, 1836, payable 42 months after date, was accepted on the condition of its being renewed until November 28, 1844, payable without interest, the word "renewed" meant "extended," and intended nothing more than an extension of time, and the acceptance was good. Russell v. Phillips, 14 Q. B. 891, 901.

The indorsement of the words "Renewed for three months" on notes by the payee at the time when they became due does not make such words a part of the original contract, but at most can only be construed as a collateral contract not to sue until the time for which they are to be renewed. Such an indorsement constitutes no legal defense to an action commenced on the note before the expiration of the three months. Central Bank v. Willard, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 150, 153, 28 Am. Dec. 284.

As substitution of new obligation.

"Renew" means specifically to substitute for an old obligation a new one of the same nature. Thus, in a contract providing that plaintiff shall procure and pay for all insurance for the period of three years, and shall from time to time as the same expire renew all the policies, means to renew the policies for the same term as the original policies. Tannenbaum v. Bloomingdale, 58 N. Y. Supp. 235, 237, 27 Misc. Rep. 532.

New promise imported.

A memorandum on the back of a promissory note, stating that "I hereby renew the within note," means something more than the words, "I admit the within note to be due." It imports a new promise to pay the old note. Daggett v. Daggett, 124 Mass. 149, 151.

As repair.

A contract by which the plaintiff agreed to "repair and renew," so far as necessary, the gutter of a mill, only meant that the plaintiff was to make such repairs and renewals as was necessary in order that the existing gutter should do all that it was capable of doing when in good condition, according to its original construction, and did not require of the plaintiff that he build a new gutter of a different construction, even though the original plan was defective. Dwight v. Ludlow Mfg. Co., 128 Mass. 280, 282.

Same conditions imported.

Where plaintiff's last insurance was had with the defendant insurance company through the same agent, the word "renew," in an oral contract with such agent to renew the insurance, sufficiently designates the company, as well as the property to be insured, and the terms of the policy. Abel v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. Supp. 218, 219, 47 App. Div. 81.

A clause in a lease giving the lessee the "first privilege of a renewal" gives the prior right to a lease for the same term as the first lease, and upon terms the same, providing the property is relet at the expiration of the first lease. Holloway v. Schmidt, 67 N. Y. Supp. 169, 33 Misc. Rep. 747.

Each renewal of a policy of insurance is a new contract, subject to the local laws in force at the time of the renewal. Jenkins v. Covenant Mut. Life Ins. Co., 71 S. W. 688, 690, 171 Mo. 375 (citing Brady v. Northwestern Insurance Co., 11 Mich. 425; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 115).

RENEWAL.

"Renewals of licenses," as used in P. L. 1891, p. 12, providing that under a license to sell liquors or keep a victualling house, which has been once granted, it should not be requisite, in order to give the board of excise jurisdiction to grant renewals of such licenses, that a new application recommended by freeholders should be first signed and presented to such board, does not indicate a purpose to permit more than one renewal, though, if the phrase were "renewal of a license," it might indicate such a purpose. Tross v. Board of Excise of City of Elizabeth, 35 Atl. 646, 59 N. J. Law, 97.

As confirmation of infant's contract.

"Renewal," is the proper designation of the conduct of an infant or a person of unsound mind in reference to the confirmation of a contract. Minnich v. Darling, 36 N. E. 173, 175, 8 Ind. App. 539.

As extension.

A renewal of an indemnity bond given to insure a merchant against loss through the insolvency of debtors would be simply an extension of it, with all of its terms and conditions. Strouse v. American Credit Indemnity Co., 46 Atl. 328, 333, 91 Md. 244.

The word "renewal," as used in a lease providing that the lessee has the privilege of a renewal for a certain number of years more from the expiration of the lease, implies nothing more than the extension of the term. Insurance & Law Bldg. Co. v. National Bank of Missouri, 71 Mo. 58, 60.

"Renewal," as used in an agreement by a patentee with a person that in case of the renewal of the patent, after the expiration of the patent then existing, such person should have a certain interest in the rights secured by the further or renewed letters patent, refers to and provides for an extension of the patent under the general patent law. Pitts v. Hall (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 758, 759.

"Renewals," as contained in a contract executed by a patentee transferring the exclusive right under his patent for the unexpired term of all "patents or renewals of patents owned by him or in which he may have an interest, issued or to be issued," is synonymous with "extensions," and carries with it the right to extensions of such patents, including extensions of patents issued to the patentee. Goodyear v. Cary (U. S.) 10 Fed. Cas. 649.

The renewal of a negotiable bill or note is regarded simply as a prolongation of the original contract. Koehler v. Hussey (Ky.) 57 S. W. 241, 244.

As prevention of forfeiture of insurance.

The office of a "renewal," as it is termed, of a life policy, is to prevent discontinuance or forfeiture. Heusser v. Continental Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 20 Fed. 222, 225.

As payment.

The general rule is that the renewal of notes does not amount to payment. Savings Bank of San Diego County v. Central Market Co., 122 Cal. 28, 54 Pac. 273. The presumption is that they were not so taken. Sather Banking Co. v. Arthur R. Briggs Co., 72 Pac. 352, 355, 138 Cal. 724.

Proximate succession.

Where a mortgage was given to secure the payment of certain promissory notes made by the mortgagee for the accommodation of the mortgagor, and the renewals of those notes from time to time until the whole should be finally paid, it was held that it was not necessary, in order to constitute notes subsequently issued renewals of such original notes, that they should have been issued for the same amounts and that each successive note should have been applied to take up its immediate predecessor. The court said "renew," and, of course, "renewal," is not a word of art. It has no legal or technical signification. "Renew," says Webster, "is to grant a new loan on a new note for the amount of a former one; renewal, a loan on a new note given." This applies clearly to the relation of creditor and debtor, and may call for a strict construction when the debtor claims the benefit of an agreement which is to delay the person to whom he is indebted. This is clearly not the meaning of the word when applied to the present case, where this relation did not exist, and where the transaction is simply a reload of the name. This case was a continuing loan of credit through a series of years, forming but one transaction, of course, secured by the mortgage, which was given for this very object. Gault v. McGrath, 32 Pa. (8 Casey) 392, 397, 398.

As re-establishment of contract.

The word "renewed" or "renewal," as applied to promissory notes, in commercial and legal parlance means something more than the substitution of another obligation for the old one. It means to re-establish a particular contract for another period of time, to restore to its former conditions an obligation on which the time of payment has been extended. Kedey v. Petty, 54 N. E. 798, 800, 153 Ind. 179.

New instrument required.

"Renewal," as used in a lease giving the privilege of renewal, means that a new lease must be executed; and hence an extension of the lease without a new lease being given does not comply with the provision. Kollock v. Scribner, 73 N. W. 776, 779, 98 Wis. 104.

A "renewal" is the substitution of a new right or obligation for another of the same nature; the word being not a word of art, nor having any legal or technical signification. Another definition is that it is a change of something old for something new. Sponhaur v. Malloy, 52 N. E. 245, 247, 21 Ind. App. 287.

RENOUNCE.

"Waive" and "renounce," as used in a lease whereby the lessee waives and renounces all claim to title of any kind, other than the leasehold interest created in the lease, are not words of conveyance, and the lessee is not thereby estopped from claiming any interest which he may have had in the premises. Davis v. McGrew, 23 Pac. 41, 42, 82 Cal. 135.

RENOVATED BUTTER.

The term "renovated butter," as used in an act relating to oleomargarine, is defined to mean butter which has been subjected to any process by which it is melted, clarified, or refined, and made to resemble genuine butter, always excepting adulterated butter. Supp. U. S. Comp. St. 1903, p. 287.

RENT.

See "Ancient Rents"; "Certain Rent"; "Fee Farm Rent"; "Grain Rent"; "Ground Rent"; "Net Rent and Profits"; "Water Rents."

Rents or otherwise, see "Otherwise."

Rent to become due, see "Become Due."

Rent is a compensation paid for real estate. Linton v. Lucy Cobb Institute, 45 S. E. 53, 55, 117 Ga. 678.

"Rents" is a term which is peculiarly and fitly applicable to income to be derived only from real estate. Lombard v. Boyden, 87 Mass. (5 Allen) 249, 254.

Rent is the price agreed to be paid for land. Bledsoe v. Nixon, 69 N. C. 89, 91.

Rent is a corporeal hereditament. It is certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements. Brown v. Brown, 83 N. J. Eq. (6 Stew.) 650, 659.

Rent is a species of incorporeal hereditament. It is defined to be a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal. It issues out of the thing granted, and is no part of the thing or land itself. It is collateral to a corporeal hereditament, and a thing unconnected with and independent of the possession or enjoyment of any real or corporeal property. Payn v. Beal (N. Y.) 4 Denio, 405, 412.

Rent is a right to profit, usually, though not necessarily, money; for it frequently consists of a part of the products of the land, labor, etc. It is the compensation, either in money, provisions, chattels, or labor, which is received by the owner of the soil, or the person entitled to the possession of the premises leased, for the use and occupation thereof. Fisk v. Brayman, 42 Atl. 878, 880, 21 R. I. 195.

"It is well settled as a general rule of law that the devise of the rents, issues, and profits of land is equivalent to a devise of the land itself." In re France's Estate, 75 Pa. (25 P. F. Smith) 220, 224.

Rent is a profit in money, goods, or labor, issuing out of lands and tenements, in retribution for the use. Rummel v. New York, L. & W. Ry. Co., 9 N. Y. Supp. 404, 407 (citing 3 Kent, Comm. [12th Ed.] 460); Thorn v. De Breuille, 83 N. Y. Supp. 849, 856, 86

App. Div. 405; Gugel v. Isaacs, 21 App. Div. 503, 506, 48 N. Y. Supp. 594.

A rent is a compensation paid for the use of land. It need not be money. Any chattels or products of the soil serve the purpose equally as well. Clarke v. Cobb, 121 Cal. 595, 600, 54 Pac. 74; Bloodworth v. Stevens, 51 Miss. 475, 480.

The term "rent" is used in different senses. In its largest sense it means all the profit issuing yearly out of lands in return for their use. Schuricht v. Broadwell, 4 Mo. App. 160, 161.

Rent is a sum of money or other consideration issuing yearly out of lands and tenements. It must be a profit, but it is not necessary that it should be money; and the profit must be certain or capable of being reduced to a certainty. Parsell v. Stryker, 41 N. Y. 480, 483.

"Rent" is defined to be a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands, and is a return to the landlord for their own use. Where there is no covenant to pay at any particular time, the end of the year is the period which the law assigns for the annual reditus to the landlord. Boyd v. McCombs, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 146, 147.

Rent is that which is to be paid for the use of land, whether in money, labor, or other thing agreed upon. It is not due until the year is out when the renting is by the year, nor in arrears until after it is due. If not in arrears, it passes with the sale of the reversion, without regard to the time of the year it was made, unless there has been some stipulation to the contrary. Hudson v. Fuller (Tenn.) 35 S. W. 575, 576.

Technically rent is something which a tenant renders out of the profits of the land which he enjoys. Equitably it is a charge upon the estate, and the lessee in good conscience ought not to take the products thereof without a due discharge of the rent. Otis v. Conway, 114 N. Y. 13, 16, 20 N. E. 628, 629.

The definition of "rent" given in 2 Bl. Comm. 41, as "a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal," includes every species of rent which can constitute a debt, without regard to the nature of the contract under which it is reserved. It is equally rent, whether reserved on a lease under seal or by parol. Chappell v. Brown (S. C.) 1 Bailey, 528, 529.

"Rent" is defined by Bouvier and other writers as a return or compensation for the possession of some corporeal inheritance, and is a profit issuing out of lands or tenements in return for their use. Armstrong v. Cummings (N. Y.) 58 How. Prac. 331, 332. Though rent is usually paid in money, yet there is a species called "rent service," which Chief Baron Gilbert defines as an annual rent.

paid by the tenant either in labor, money, or provisions, in retribution for the land that passes; the return in money being a substitute for the service originally required. Gilbert further says, when the services are expressed in the contract, the quantum must be certainly mentioned, or be such as by reference to something else may be reduced to a certainty; and he cites as sufficiently certain a contract to shear all the landlord's sheep in a designated manor. This degree of certainty is one of the properties of rent at common law. Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Ass'n v. Sanders, 50 Atl. 449, 450, 87 N. J. Law, 1.

A rent is said to be a sum of money or other consideration issuing yearly out of lands or tenements. Blackstone defines "rent" or "reditus" as a compensation or return, it being in the nature of an acknowledgment given for the possession of some corporeal inheritance; and it is defined to be a yearly profit issuing out of lands. It must be a profit, but it is not necessary that it should be in money; for spurs, capons, horses, corn, and other matters are frequently rendered for rent. This profit must be certain, or capable of being reduced to a certainty. It must also issue yearly. Wegner v. Lubenow (N. D.) 95 N. W. 442, 445.

Rent (originally rendered "reditus") signifies a compensation or return, it being in the nature of an acknowledgment or recompense given for the possession of some corporeal hereditament. It must be a certain profit issuing out of lands and tenements corporeal; that is, from some inheritance whereunto the owner or grantee of the rent might have recourse to distrain. Unless specially reserved, rent follows an estate of reversion. It is an incident to the reversion, though not inseparably so. Van Wicklen v. Paulson (N. Y.) 14 Barb. 654, 655.

Annuity distinguished.

A covenant in a deed to pay the grantor a certain sum on each and every year during the lifetime of the grantor, such payment to be made a lien on the land, was a covenant to pay an annuity, and not rent. Nehls v. Sauer, 93 N. W. 346, 119 Iowa, 440.

Any charge.

Revision, p. 320, § 2, provides that, until a widow's dower is assigned to her, she shall hold and enjoy the mansion house of her husband without being liable to pay any rent for the same. Held, that it was the legislative intent to merely make temporary provision pending the assignment of the dower, and that, while the word "rent" was used, it is evidently the intention that she should hold without being subject to any charge whatever, such as, for example, interest on incumbrances, or taxes, or necessary annual repairs. Spinning v. Spinning, 5 Atl. 278, 280, 41 N. J. Eq. (14 Stew.) 427.

Price of conditional sale.

Where goods were delivered under an agreement that the party receiving them was to pay a certain sum as rent, and that on default his right to retain the goods should cease, and the title to the goods should vest in him only on performance of the conditions of the agreement, the payment constituted the agreed price of the goods, and it was a misnomer to call it rent. Bailey v. Hervey, 135 Mass. 172, 174.

Compensation for the use of chattels.

While "rent" is defined as the recompense for the use and occupancy of lands, it is not confined solely to compensation for the use of the land; for chattels are often demised with the land and form a portion of the consideration for which the rent is paid. The statute giving a lien for rent of "any residence, storehouse, or other building" does not change the above proposition of law, and the fact that the rent of a house might be increased by the furniture contained therein would not demand separation of the rent of the house unfurnished from the increase by reason of the use of the furniture. Stein v. Stely (Tex.) 32 S. W. 782, 783.

The ordinary definition of "rent" as a profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal is defective, in overlooking some of the cases that belong to the class, as where a furnished house or a stock farm is leased, which are common instances. In such cases the personal property is really part of the consideration of the rent, and it is only by a fictitious accommodation of the case to the defective definition that it can be said that the rent issues exclusively out of the land. Mickle's Adm'r v. Miles (Pa.) 1 Grant, Cas. 320, 328.

Rent is a profit out of lands and tenants. To rent is to grant the right to occupy lands, paying a certain sum therefor. The term "rent" does not apply to vessels. Rouse v. Catskill & N. Y. Steamboat Co., 13 N. Y. Supp. 126, 128.

Crop rent.

Rent is a yearly profit issuing out of land. It must be a profit, but it is not necessary that it should be money; for spurs, horses, corn, and other matters are frequently rendered for rent. Stephens v. Reynolds, 6 N. Y. (2 Seld.) 454, 458.

The word "rent" is comprehensive, and embraces a compensation either in money, provisions, chattels, or labor received by the owner of soil from the occupant thereof. Under Code, § 5549, giving the purchaser of real estate at a mortgage foreclosure sale the right to receive from the agent in possession the rents of the property sold, or the value of the use and occupation thereof, from the date of his purchase until redemption is made, the purchaser is not limited to the recovery of money rent alone, but may recover a portion of crops agreed to be paid as rent. Whithed v. St. Anthony & D. Elevator Co., 83 N. W. 238, 240, 9 N. D. 224, 50 L. R. A. 254, 81 Am. St. Rep. 562; Little v. Worner, 92 N. W. 456, 457, 11 N. D. 382.

As debt.

See "Debt."

As arising from actual enjoyment.

A rent, says Baron Gilbert in his treatise on Rents (page 145), as quoted by Justice Paxson in Hoeverler v. Fleming, 91 Pa. 322, 324, "is something given by way of retribution to the lessor of the land demised to him by the tenant; and consequently the lessor's title to the rent is founded upon this: that the land demised is enjoyed by the tenant during the term included in the contract; for the tenant can make no return for a thing he has not." If, therefore, the tenant be deprived of the thing let the obligation to pay the rent ceases; for the obligation has its force only from the consideration which was the enjoyment of the thing demised. Wayne v. Lapp, 36 Atl. 723, 180 Pa. 278.

Rent is a sum stipulated to be paid for the actual use and enjoyment of another's land, and is supposed to come out of the profits of the estate. The actual enjoyment of the land is the consideration for the rent which is to be paid. Marsh v. Butterworth, 4 Mich. 575, 577.

Rent is compensation for the use of land, and what the tenant pays rent for is quiet possession or beneficial enjoyment. When, therefore, the use or possession ceases, the consideration for the payment ceases. Grommes v. St. Paul Trust Co., 35 N. E. 820, 821, 147 Ill. 634, 37 Am. St. Rep. 248.

Rent is the compensation for the use and enjoyment of the thing rented, and is ordinarily demandable, whether the tenant actually enjoy the use and possession of the subject of the rent or not, unless the failure is due to some fault of the lessor. Lamson Consol. Store Service Co. v. Bowland (U. S.) 114 Fed. 639, 641, 52 C. C. A. 835.

Rent is something given by way of retribution to the lessor for the land leased by him to the tenant, and consequently the lessor's title to the rent is founded on the fact that the land leased is enjoyed by the tenant during the term included in the contract; for a tenant can make no return for a thing he has not. Legal eviction of a tenant by a third person, therefore, excuses the payment of rent. So in eviction by the lessor, and if the eviction be partial by a third person, the rent will be apportioned; but a partial eviction by the lessor excuses the tenant from a payment of the whole rent. Dyatt v. Pendleton (N. Y.) 8 Cow. 727, 730.

As sums due.

"Rents," as used in an administrator's bond conditioned that he would well and truly make a proper distribution of any surplus money, effects, and rents which may come to him, or any one for him, by color of his office, means rents which belonged to the intestate, and not the rents of land leased by the administrator and collected by him after the death of the intestate. Wilson v. Unselt's Adm'r, 75 Ky. (12 Bush) 215, 219.

Exception distinguished.

A rent cannot be part of the profits demised, as the herbage or vesture of the land; for that would be an exception out of the grant, and not a rent reserved. Moulton v. Robinson, 27 N. H. (7 Fost.) 550, 554.

Land presupposed.

The existence of rent presupposes land, and a possible usufruct. Coogan v. Parker, 2 S. C. (2 Rich.) 255, 268, 16 Am. Rep. 659.

Rent is defined to be a yearly profit in retribution for the use. The existence of a rent, therefore, presupposes land, and a possible usufruct; for there can be no just demand for retribution or compensation for that which does not exist. An agreement to pay rent, whether a simple contract or a covenant in form, is controlled by the nature of rent. Taylor v. Hart, 18 South. 546, 549, 73 Miss. 22, 30 L. R. A. 716.

Fixed sum implied.

Rent is defined as the right to the periodical receipt of money or money's worth in respect of land held in possession, reversion, or remainder by him from whom the payment is due. 2 Washb. Real Prop. (5th Ed.) 284. This definition implies a fixed sum, or property amounting to a fixed sum, to be paid at stated times. A rent is regarded as an interest or estate in land which may be the subject of a grant, and which may be created in fee, for life, or for years. If it be in fee, or fee tail, it is subject to the incidents of curtesy and dower. Dodge v. Hogan, 31 Atl. 268, 269, 19 R. L. 4.

Rent is the return, whether of money, services, or specified property, which the tenant makes to the landlord as compensation for the use of the premises. It is not necessary that it should be a great sum. The word "rent," in Gen. St. c. 46, § 25, by which the plaintiff's right of recovery of rents before a justice of the peace is limited to $30, does not necessarily mean the rents stipulated in the lease. Under this section, and under section 27 of the same chapter, requiring a defendant, on appealing a case to the county court, to give security "to pay all the rent then due, and all the intervening rent, damages, and costs," the plaintiff is not restricted, in an action to recover possession of the premises against one holding over the same after the expiration of his lease, to a recovery computed at the rate of the rent reserved in the defendant's lease, but may recover a fair and reasonable compensation for the use of the premises during the time of their detention. Baldwin v. Skeels, 51 Vt. 121, 124.

Payment for franchise.

In its strict sense the word "rent" can be applied only to lands and tenements corporeal, and it would not apply to a franchise. The word, in the charter of the city of Laredo, by which it was "authorized and empowered to establish ferries across the Rio Grande, and fix the rates, fees, and rents therefor," is not used in such a restricted sense, but means that the city shall have the power to fix the sum which shall be paid, not only for the use of the land on or contiguous to which ferries are established, but also the sum which shall be paid for the appurtenances to the ferry and the franchise of operating one or more. Macdonell v. International & G. N. Ry. Co., 60 Tex. 590, 595.

As hire.

Rent is a profit out of lands and tenements, and to rent is to grant the right to occupy lands, paying a certain sum therefor. While in a loose way "renting" may be used for "hiring," it certainly would be extending the meaning of the word as used in the New York civil damage act (Laws 1873, c. 643), providing that any person "owning or renting or permitting the occupation of any building or premises, and having knowledge that intoxicating liquors are to be sold therein," shall be liable "for damages sustained in means of support by any wife, child," etc., "of a person to whom such liquors are sold, by reason of the sale," to make it applicable to vessels. Rouse v. Catskill & N. Y. Steamboat Co., 13 N. Y. Supp. 126, 128, 59 Hun, 80.

Payment for improvements.

"Rent," as used in a contract by a landlord, who had demised premises for a term of years at a certain sum per year, by which he agreed with his tenant to lay out a certain sum in making improvements upon the premises, the tenant undertaking to pay an increased rent of a certain sum per year during the remainder of the term, does not mean rent in the legal sense and understanding of the word "rent," but is merely a personal contract to pay the additional sum per year. Donellan v. Read, 3 Barn. & Adol. 899, 905.

A stipulation in a coal lease for the repayment of an improvement fund by "an additional rent of ten cents per ton on all coal taken out" is a provision for the repayment of a loan merely, and the amount due thereunder is not "rent," properly so called. Miners' Bank of Pottsville v. Hellner, 47 Pa. (11 Wright) 452, 459.

As income.

See "Income."

As an incident to land.

An assignment of rent must be in writing under the statute of frauds, rent being an incident to the ownership of real estate. King v. Kaiser, 3 Misc. Rep. 523, 524, 23 N. Y. Supp. 21.

Rent "is defined as a certain profit issuing yearly out of land. Rent arrear is a chose in action, and would be taxable as a credit; but rent to become due is a part of the land, is an incident to it, and passes as such to a grantee by a grant of the land." Scully v. People, 104 Ill. 349, 351.

Rent is a "right to a certain profit issuing periodically out of land. The rent of land is incident to it, a right connected with it, and is not a part of the land. The reservation, in order to come within the definition of rent, must be a profit, whether in labor, provisions, part of the annual product, money, or other things." Hayden v. McMullan, 23 S. W. 430, 432, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 479 (citing 2 Minor, Inst. p. 32).

Payment under indefinite oral contract.

In a Massachusetts case it is said that by statute, as well as by usage, in this commonwealth, the word "rent" may include the compensation to be paid for the occupation of the land by a tenant, whether he holds under a written lease, or at will, or at sufferance, and whether the amount to be paid has been defined by agreement of the parties or has been left indefinite. Kites v. Church, 8 N. E. 743, 745, 142 Mass. 586.

As rent of inheritance.

"Rent," as used in St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 27, § 2, providing that no person shall make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover any land or rent, but within 20 years next after the time at which the right to make such entry or distress, or to bring such action, shall have first accrued, means rent of inheritance, and does not mean rent reserved by a lease, for example, or rent in the common and ordinary form of a render of rent for property. Dean of Ely v. Bliss, 19 Eng. Law & Eq. 190, 197.

As issues.

In a will by which a husband devised to trustees certain property, to collect the income, issues, and profits thereof, and, after paying all necessary expenses and repairs, pay the income to his wife, the omission of the word "rents" in the gift to the life tenant has no special signification, for the reason that "income, issues, and profits" include the rents of the whole estate. The word "issues" is an apt term to indicate the rents and profits derived from realty. Appeal of Lindley (Pa.) 40 Leg. Int. 303; Appeal of Perot, Id.

Royalty for mining privilege.

"Rent" is an annual profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements. A contract provided that the party of the first part leased a tract of land to the party of the second part, and that the party of the second part should have the exclusive right to mine and sell all the coal in the tract, and that he should open the mines, etc., and pay a royalty of a certain amount per ton. Such royalty could not in any sense be considered rent, nor could the contract be considered a lease. It was a sale of a portion of the real estate. Appeal of Duff (Pa.) 14 Atl. 364, 367.

Rent has been defined to be a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements. An agreement whereby a party had the exclusive right to mine coal under certain land for 20 years, unless the coal should give out, and to use in connection with the mine 5 acres of the surface of the land to erect buildings thereon, and to build and operate railroads and flow water thereover, for a certain royalty per ton of coal mined, not to fall below a fixed amount per annum, payable as rent for all the privileges, created the relation of landlord and tenant, within Code 1873, § 2017, giving a landlord a lien for rent. Lacey v. Newcomb, 63 N. W. 704, 706, 95 Iowa, 287.

As profits.

The word "profits," as used in the phrase "rents, issues, and profits," is synonymous with "rents." In re Vedder, 15 N. Y. Supp. 798, 805, 2 Con. Sur. 548, 561.

"Rents," as used in Act April 8, 1801 (1 Kent & R. St. p. 562), declaring that the people will not sue for lands by reason of any right or title of the people to the same which shall not have accrued within the space of 40 years, unless the people or those under whom they claim shall have received the rents and profits, is equivalent to the term "profits," though rent is a tribute which issues out of land as a part of its actual or supposed profits, and the word "profits" means yearly profits. People v. Van Rensselaer (N. Y.) 8 Barb. 189, 199 (citing Ivy v.

Gilbert, 2 P. Wms. 13, 2 Ves. Jr. 480, 1 Atk. 506).

The rent of land or buildings is such a sum as may be paid and realized from their occupation by tenants, and is fixed and certain; while profits are the result of trade, which is fluctuating and uncertain, and dependent on skill, care, and the nature and amount of the business transacted. Bennett v. Austin, 81 N. Y. 308, 319.

Payments by tenant at will or at sufferance.

According to usage in Massachusetts the word "rent" applies as well to payments made by a tenant at will or at sufferance as to those made by a tenant for years. Rice v. Loomis, 1 N. E. 548, 139 Mass. 302.

Taxes, insurance, etc.

The character of "rent," which is a certain yearly return, reserved to the landlord in money, or coin, or services, for the enjoyment of the freehold, does not embrace taxes. Garner v. Hannah, 18 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 262, 268.

Under Code, § 2256, giving a dispossessed tenant the right to redeem the demised premises on paying or tendering to the landlord the rent in arrears, and the costs and charges incurred, the term "rent" does not include taxes, insurance, and cost of repairs, although the covenants of the lease require the tenant to pay them. The term "rent," when used in relation to summary proceedings, has a limited meaning, and does not import the entire consideration which the tenant pays to the landlord for the use of the demised premises, whether directly, as rent proper, or indirectly for his benefit, in the form of taxes and assessments. Blen v. Bixby, 41 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435, 18 Misc. Rep. 415.

The term "rent," in its largest signification, may mean all the property issuing yearly out of the lands in return for their use; but it does not ordinarily include taxes, which are generally paid under a separate covenant. Schuricht v. Broadwell, 4 Mo. App. 160, 161.

As value of use and occupation.

The word "rent," as used in Laws 1849, c. 193, authorizing an appeal from judgments in certain cases, is to be construed as meaning, when the proceedings are between a judgment debtor and the purchaser of land on execution, the value of the use and occupation. Spraker v. Cook, 16 N. Y. 567, 568.

RENT CHARGE.

A rent charge is a burden imposed on and issuing out of lands. Wagstaff v. Low-erre (N. Y.) 23 Barb. 209, 217.

A rent charge was a holding under a lease containing a clause reserving the right to distrain. Herr v. Johnson, 18 Pac. 342, 343, 11 Colo. 393.

"Rent charge" is where a man seised of lands grants by a deed poll or indenture a yearly rent to issue out of the same land in fee, in tail, for life, or for years, with a clause of distress, because the lands are charged with the distress by the express grant or provision of the parties, which otherwise they would not be; and hence a "rent charge" is any rent granted out of lands by deed with a clause of distress. Horner v. Dellinger (U. S.) 18 Fed. 495, 499.

A yearly rent, issuing out of land held by another in fee with a clause of distress, is a "rent charge," because the lands are charged with a distress by the express grant or provision of the parties. Main v. Featherers (N. Y.) 21 Barb. 646, 648.

"Rent charge" is where the owner of the rent has no future interest or reversion expectant in the land, as where a man by deed makes over his whole estate in fee simple, with a certain rent payable thereout, and adds a clause of distress. People v. Haskins (N. Y.) 7 Wend. 463, 467.

A rent charge arises where "a man, by deed indented at this day, maketh a feoffment in fee, and by the same indenture reserveth to him and to his heirs a certain rent, and that if the rent be behind it shall be lawful for him and his heirs to distrain," because "such lands or tenements are charged with such distress by force of the writing only, and not of common right." Co. Litt. § 217.

An annual rent, reserved by deed with a clause of distress upon a grant in fee, is valid as a rent charge, notwithstanding there is no reversion in the person entitled to it. Such rent is a hereditament, descendible and devisable forever. Van Rensselaer v. Hays, 19 N. Y. 68, 76, 75 Am. Dec. 278.

Where the right of distress was reserved or given with the rent, the payment might be enforced by distress of the case of any one in possession under the grantee. Such a rent was termed a rent charge. Rochester Lodge, No. 21, A. F. & A. M., v. Graham, 65 Minn. 457, 460, 68 N. W. 79, 80, 37 L. R. A. 404.

A "rent charge," strictly speaking, arises where a man, being seised in fee of lands, grants a rent in fee or for life out of them, with a power to the grantee to distrain; and since the passage of the statute quia emptores terrarum of 18 Edw. I, if the owner of lands in fee makes a feoffment of them in fee, reserving a rent to be paid to himself and his heirs, with the right of distress, it has been considered in England a "rent charge" also. Nevertheless, these rents differ from each other; the payment of the first being founded on a consideration actually paid to the grantor of the land at or before the time of granting the rent charge. The rent is not extinguished, but must be paid, though the title of the grantor to the land upon which it is charged proved defective, and he is evicted by title paramount. But in the second case the continuance of the rent and the payment of it depend entirely on the right of the grantee to the future enjoyment of the land under the title conveyed to him by the grantor, to whom the rent is to be paid, so that if the grantee of the land, his heirs or assigns, be evicted by any one having a title paramount, the rent ceases and becomes extinct. The latter bears a strong analogy to a grant of land from A. to B., his heirs and assigns, under a certain annual rent payable forever to the grantor and his heirs, which in this country is designated as a "ground rent." Franciscus v. Reigart (Pa.) 4 Watts, 98, 116.

"Rent charge" is any rent granted out of lands by deed with a clause of distress, whence it derives its name, because the land is charged with distress by the express provision of the parties, which it would not otherwise be. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 44; Law Library (3d Series) 120. See, also, Cornell v. Lamb (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 659; People v. Haskins (N. Y.) 7 Wend. 464; Van Rensselaer v. Hays, 19 N. Y. 68, 75 Am. Dec. 278; Farley v. Craig, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 262. It is a rule of the common law that a rent charge, being an entire thing, and issuing out of every part of the estate, cannot be apportioned. It is entire and indivisible, so that, if any part of the land out of which a rent charge issued is released from the charge by the owner of the rent, either by an express deed of release or virtually by his purchasing part of the land, all the rest of the land will enjoy the same benefit, and be released also. Horner v. Dellinger (U. S.) 18 Fed. 495.

"Rent charge" arises where a man, being seised of lands, made a gift in tail by deed indented, or by deed poll, the remainder over in fee, or a lease for life, with such remainder over, or a feoffment in fee, and by the same deed reserved to himself and his heirs a certain rent, and that, if the rent should be unpaid, he and his heirs might distrain, or where, being so seised, he granted a rent in fee or for life out of the lands, with a power to the grantee to distrain. Rent so reserved or granted was a rent charge, because the lands were charged with such distress by force of the deed only, and not of common right. Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. (2 Comst.) 141, 151.

Annuity distinguished.

An annuity is a yearly sum of money granted by one party to another in fee, for life, or for years, charging the person of the grantor only; while a rent charge is a burden imposed on and issuing out of lands. Wagstaff v. Lowerre (N. Y.) 23 Barb. 209, 216.

RENT IN ARREAR.

Rent in arrear is a chose in action, and does not pass by a conveyance of the reversion. Damren v. American Light & Power Co., 40 Atl. 63, 64, 91 Me. 334.

RENT OF NOT LESS THAN FIFTY POUNDS.

A tenant who holds under two different landlords two different sets of premises, the rent of each being less than £50 a year, though together they amount to more than that sum, will not be deemed a tenant who pays a "yearly rent of not less than £50," within St. 2 Wm. iv, c. 45, § 20, entitling those to vote who "shall be entitled either as lessee or assignee to any lands or tenements, whether of freehold or of any other tenure whatever, * * * of the clear yearly value of not less than £10 over and above all rents and charges payable out of or in respect of the same." Gadsby v. Barrow, 7 Man. & G. 21, 27.

RENT SECK.

"Rent seck" is a rent reserved by deed, but without any clause of distress. People v. Haskins (N. Y.) 7 Wend. 463, 467.

"Rent seck" is the same as "rent charge"—i. e., a rent reserved where the landlord has no reversionary interests—except that there is no right to distrain reserved. Cornell v. Lamb (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 652, 659.

"Rent seck" arose where a man had granted a rent by deed without a clause of distress; and for this rent, if in arrear, there was no distress at the common law. Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. (2 Comst.) 141, 151.

"Rent seck," or "barren rent," is in effect nothing more than a rent for the recovery of which no power of distress is given, either by rule of the common law or by agreement of the parties. Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 492, 501.

Where no right of distress was reserved in a lease, there was no remedy for its collection, except the personal liability of him who made the covenant to pay rent. This was termed a "rent seck." Rochester Lodge, No. 21, A. F. & A. M., v. Graham, 65 Minn. 457, 460, 68 N. W. 79, 37 L. R. A. 404.

RENT SERVICE.

"Rent service" is not a debt, and a covenant to pay it is not a covenant to pay a debt; but it is a security for the performance of a collateral act. The annual payments spring into existence, and for the first time become debts, when they are demandable. A ground rent coming due after the discharge of a debtor as a bankrupt is not extinguished by the certificate of his discharge. Bosler v. Kuhn (Pa.) 8 Watts & S. 183, 186.

A rent service arose where the tenant held by fealty or homage, as well as a certain rent. Herr v. Johnson, 18 Pac. 342, 343, 11 Colo. 393.

"Rent service," says Littleton, "is where the tenant holdeth the land of his lord by a fealty and certain rent, or by other services and certain rent." Ingersoll v. Sergeant (Pa.) 1 Whart. 337, 347.

Rent service was the only kind of rent originally known to the common law; and a right of distress was inseparably incident to it so long as it was payable to the lord who was entitled to the fealty. It was called "rent service," because it was given as compensation for military or other service, for which the land was originally liable. Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 492, 501.

Rent service is defined to be "where the tenant holdeth his land of his lord by fealty and certain rent, or by homage, fealty and certain rent, or by other services and certain rent." Co. Litt. § 213. Where a lessee surrenders a part of the land to the lessor, the rent for the remainder is not extinguished, but apportioned. Ehrman v. Mayer, 57 Md. 612, 622.

Rent service arose where the tenant held his land by fealty and certain rent, or by a certain rent, together with homage, fealty, or other services. It was called "rent service," because it had some corporal service, as fealty, at least, belonging to it (Co. Litt. § 215); and to this rent distress was incident, provided that the reversion were in the landlord or lessor making the distress. Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. (2 Comst.) 141, 151; Cornell v. Lamb (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 652, 659.

RENTAL.

The term "rental," as defined by Webster, is "a sum total of rents; as an estate that yields a rental of $10,000 a year." Freemont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Bates, 58 N. W. 959, 963, 40 Neb. 381.

Charge for use of streets by telegraph.

The term "rental" is properly applied to the charge imposed by a city on a telegraph company for the privilege of using the streets, alleys, and public places of the city, graduated by the amount of such use; for it is not a privilege or license tax, the amount paid not being graduated by the amount of the business, nor a sum fixed for the privilege of doing business, but is more in the nature of a charge for the use of property belonging to the city. City of St. Louis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 485, 487, 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. Ed. 380.

Royalty distinguished.

"Royalties" are commonly understood as meaning something proportionate to the use of a patented device; in other words, a kind of excise. Bouv. Law Dict. In its more ordinary meaning it would not literally include the shares of stock in a corporation for which an accounting is demanded. In some of its uses it is a broader word than "rentals," and yet in other aspects "rentals" is a broader word than "royalties." Rentals, in their ordinary signification, are not limited, as royalties, in their ordinary signification; that is, to something proportionate to the use of a patented device. Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Bell Telephone Co. (U. S.) 125 Fed. 342, 348, 60 C. C. A. 220.

RENTAL AGENT.

A mere rental agent is ordinarily one who rents premises and collects rents thereon, and in the absence of definite proof it cannot be said that such agent is in all respects, so far as the control of the property is concerned, the representative of the owner. City of St. Paul v. Clark, 86 N. W. 893, 894, 84 Minn. 138.

RENTAL VALUE.

The terms "rental value" and "value of the use" of the premises, means substantially the same thing. Alexander v. Bishop, 13 N. W. 714, 717, 59 Iowa, 572.

The term "rental value," as applied to realty, is but another form of saying the value of the use, and means simply the value of the use of the land for any purpose for which it is adapted in the hands of a prudent and discreet occupant upon a judicious system of husbandry. Nelson v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 42 N. W. 788, 789, 41 Minn. 131.

The term "rental value" of an article is said in Wood v. State, 66 Md. 61, 67, 5 Atl. 476, to be the value and use of the same. If, therefore, the cost of working a machine remains the same, its rental value must necessarily vary from time to time, as it is more or less available for existing needs. For instance, the summer of 1890 was preceded by a winter so mild that but little natural ice was produced, and in consequence the market of Baltimore, being almost bare of this commodity, was dependent for its supply entirely upon the artificial product, or ice transported from points far north, with freights that largely increased its cost. In fact, during the summer of that year, the price of ice in that market arose to a figure at least double that which is usual in ordinary seasons. If the hire of an article depends not only upon its cost, but upon its capacity to supply an existing demand, it is not unreasonable to conclude that an ice machine in the city of Baltimore in the summer of 1890 was more valuable than in an ordinary year, and its rental value correspondingly greater; and this would be so, not upon the basis of speculative profits that might possibly be made from its use, but because, as a business proposition, the peculiar conditions of the market had created an unusual demand for such machinery growing out of its capacity to produce on profitable terms a commodity of such high price, and so essential to the health, comfort, and convenience of the people. It is a fact that cannot be controverted that, though the hire of an article of personal property for a series of years may be estimated upon an average at a given sum, yet, by reason of the existence of peculiar circumstances, an unusual demand for the use for which it is available will sometimes arise, and when such exists, there will be an increase in the sum for which it can be hired. Maryland Ice Co. v. Arctic Ice Machine Mfg. Co., 29 Atl. 69, 70, 79 Md. 103.

Rental value or hire of a saw mill with a known capacity is the value of the use of the same. Wood v. State, 5 Atl. 476, 478, 66 Md. 61.

RENTED.

"Rented," as used in Rev. St. § 1038, subd. 3, providing that the parsonages, whether of local churches or districts, whether occupied by the pastor permanently or rented for his benefit, shall be exempt from taxation, according to its common and authorized use, refers as well to the act of a lessee as to that of a lessor. The lessor rents land to the lessee; the lessee rents land of the lessor. The word "rented" may mean a renting of a parsonage by a church association as lessee, as well as a renting to a lessee by the association of a parsonage owned by it. "Rented" is, or at least may be, a word of broader signification than "leased," which is an act that cannot be done by the lessee, but by the lessor only. Gray v. La Fayette County, 27 N. W. 311, 65 Wis. 567.

The word "rented," aside from the qualification of it by words with which it stands connected, naturally means that the tenant to whom the property is rented has the exclusive possession for the time. Noyes v. Stillman, 24 Conn. 15, 24.

"The word 'rented' may be used in two senses. It is said that a landlord rented his lands to his tenant, and with almost equal propriety it may be said that the tenant rented an estate from his landlord." Zink v. Grant, 25 Ohio St. 352, 354.

RENTS AND PROFITS.

All rents and profits, see "All."

"Rents and profits of real estate mean the sum annually yielded by the same." In re Vedder's Will, 15 N. Y. Supp. 798, 805, 2 Con. Sur. 548.

Generally speaking, the interpretation of the words "rents and profits" of land or estate is "annual rents and profits." Delaney v. Van Aulen, 84 N. Y. 16, 19.

"Rents and profits," as applied to real estate, means the sum annually yielded by the same. In re Vedder, 2 Con. Sur. 548, 561, 15 N. Y. Supp. 798.

The words "rents and profits," in a devise, may be so construed as to authorize a sale of land, when necessary, to raise a sum so as to effect the object of testator, as where testator devises all of his estate to his wife for life, and after her death to his son in fee, on condition that he shall comfortably maintain a daughter of testator during life; and therefore, if the son fails to maintain the daughter, then the executors are authorized to take possession of the land, "and lease, or by any other means, out of the profits therefrom arising, support and maintain" the daughter. The words "rents and profits" include the whole estate. "The word 'profits,'" says Sir Thomas Plumer in Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 65, "does ex vi termini include the whole interest," as a devise of the profits would pass the land itself; and it was held in that case that the words "rents and profits" extended beyond their natural meaning by a technical, artificial, but liberal, construction, established by a long train of decisions, and were held to mean, not merely only rents and profits, but a mortgage and sale, when the same was necessary to raise a gross sum and thereby effect the testator's object. This extension of the word "profits" is supported by a series of authorities from the case of Backhouse v. Middleton, as early as 22 Car. II (1 Ch. Cas. 173), down to the present time. Lord Hardwicke observed that, if there be no other words to restrain the meaning of "rents and profits" and confine them to the receipt of rents and profits as they accrue, the court, to obtain the end which the party intended by raising the money, has by the liberal construction of the words taken them to amount to a direction to sell. Schermerhorne v. Schermerhorne (N. Y.) 6 Johns. Ch. 70, 73.

A devise of the rents and profits of land passes the land itself. It has the same effect as a devise of the land. The "rents and profits" of an estate, the "income," or the "net income" of it, are all equivalent expressions. "Net" is a term used among merchants to designate the quantity, amount, or value of an article or a commodity after all tare and charges are deducted. The income of an estate means nothing more than the profit it will yield after deducting the charges of management or the rent which may be obtained for the use of it. Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. (5 Greenl.) 199, 202.

It is well settled that in an action to recover mesne profits the plaintiff must show in the best way he can what those profits are, and there are two modes of doing so, to either of which he may resort. He may either prove the profits actually received, or the annual rental value of the land. West v. Hughes (Md.) 1 Har. & J. 574, 576, 2 Am. Dec. 539; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 10 Md. 234. The latter is the mode usually adopted. Where there is occupation of a farm or land used only for agricultural purposes, and the income and profits are of necessity the produce of the soil, the owner may have an account of the proceeds of the crops and other products sold or raised thereon, deducting the expense of cultivation. These are necessarily rents and profits in such cases; but even there it is more usual to arrive at the same result by charging the occupier, as tenant, with a fair annual money rent. McLaughlin v. Barnum, 31 Md. 452. But the proprietor of city lots, with improvements upon them, can only derive therefrom, as owner, a fair occupation rent for the purposes for which the premises are adapted. This constitutes the "rents and profits," in the legal sense of the term, of such property, and is all the owner can justly claim in this shape from the occupier. Worthington v. Hiss, 16 Atl. 534, 536, 70 Md. 172.

RENTS, ISSUES, AND PROFITS.

Increase of live stock.

Under a statute providing that either a husband or wife may hold separate property acquired by gift, devise, or descent, with the "rents, issues, and profits" thereof, cattle given to a wife as her separate property, together with the increase thereof, belong to her separate estate. Harris v. Van De Venter, 50 Pac. 50, 17 Wash. 489.

Land included.

"It is well settled as a general rule of law that the devise of the rents, issues, and profits of land is equivalent to a devise of the land itself." In re France's Estate, 75 Pa. 220, 224.

As net income.

A testator devised all his real and personal estate to his only son J., to hold the same in trust for J.'s children. The will required that the son should be "held responsible and legally bound to his children for the 'rents, issues, and profits' of the estate devised to him," etc. Held, that the phrase "rents, issues, and profits" should be construed to mean such income as arises after the taxes, as well as the necessary expenses of cultivating the farm and managing the trust, were paid. Burroughs v. Gaither, 7 Atl. 243, 251, 66 Md. 171.

Products of land.

"Rents, issues, and profits," as used in Comp. St. p. 403, § 15, providing that the rents, issues, and profits of the real estate of any married woman and the interest of the husband in her right in any real estate shall during coverture be exempt from attachment or levy of execution for the sole debt of the husband, cannot be construed to include annual products of the wife's land. The words have no very marked fitness to express the yearly products of land, which are the joint results of labor and the use of the land. Rents, issues, and profits more commonly signify a chattel real interest in land, a kind of estate growing out of the land for life or years, producing an annual or other rent. Rents, issues, and profits apply only to net profits, and such as are of the nature of rent, which is, as every one understands, a "reditus" or return by some one holding the land of another for which he owes such return. Bruce v. Thompson, 26 Vt. 741, 746.

RENUNCIATION.

Renunciation, as executor, is an act whereby a person named in a will as executor declines to take on himself the burden of that office. The act is therefore predicated of an existing office. In re Maxwell, 3 N. J. Eq. (2 H. W. Green) 611, 614.

"Renunciation" is simply the giving up of a right; but, if the person who renounces chooses to withdraw his renunciation and to resume the exercise of his right before any rights inconsistent with his retraction have been acquired, there is no rule of law or equity which would require him to persevere in his renunciation. Codding v. Newman (N. Y.) 3 Thomp. & C. 364, 365.

To constitute a "renunciation of a trust" there must be an express rejection or a tacit refusal to act; for there can be no renunciation where the trustee is ignorant of the existence of the paper creating the trust. Read v. Robinson (Pa.) 6 Watts & S. 329, 333.

Dereliction or renunciation properly require both the intention to abandon and external action to do so. The casting overboard of articles in a tempest to lighten a ship is not dereliction, as there is no intention of abandoning the property in the case of salvage. Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 452, 455, 43 Am. Rep. 600.

A renunciation does not create a breach of a contract. There must be an adoption of the renunciation. Wells v. Hartford Manna Co. (Conn.) 55 Atl. 599, 602.

REORGANIZATION.

"The term 'reorganization' is commonly applied to the formation of a new company by the creditors and shareholders of a corporation which is in financial difficulties, for the purpose of purchasing the company's works and other property after the foreclosure of a mortgage or judicial sale. The result of a transaction of this kind is to form a new corporation to carry on the business of the old company upon a new basis, free from its debts and obligations, except to the extent that they have been expressly assumed." Symmes v. Union Trust Co. (C. C.) 60 Fed. 830, 870 (quoting Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 812).

REPAIR—REPAIRS.

See "Good Repair"; "Necessary Repairs"; "Ordinary Repairs"; "Sufficient Repair."

All repairs, see "All."

Keep in repair, see "Keep."

"Repair" means to mend, add to, or make over; restoration in a sound or good state after decay, waste, injury, or partial destruction. Farraher v. City of Keokuk, 111 Iowa, 310, 313, 82 N. W. 773; Martinez v. Thompson, 80 Tex. 568, 571, 16 S. W. 334, 335.

Change of grade of street.

A city charter, conferring the power to "repair and regulate" streets of the city upon the commissioners of highways, should be construed to mean that they had the power to change the grade of a street after it had once been established. Waddell v. City of New York (N. Y.) 8 Barb. 95, 97.

"Repair," as used in St. 1786, c. 81, § 1, providing that all highways within any town shall be kept in repair from time to time, that the same may be safe and convenient for travelers and for their horses, teams, carts, carriages, etc., means to replace or remake, to restore what has been impaired or injured; and hence such word would not include the cutting down of the street to reduce the grade, which was so steep as to render it difficult to pass up and down the street with carts and carriages. Callender v. Marsh, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 418, 429.

Where a road was in good repair, but was built at such a level that it was liable temporarily to be flooded more or less with water, and the only way to avoid that trouble was to make a new roadbed about seven feet above the old one, involving a radical change of level, it was not the repair of an existing roadbed, within the statute providing that, if a town fails to keep a road in good repair, the county commissioners may order such repair. Appeal of Goodspeed, 53 Atl. 728, 729, 75 Conn. 271.

As construction.

"Construct and repair," as used in Act Nov. 18, 1883, § 8, giving the city of Olympia power to "construct and repair" sidewalks, and to levy and collect a special tax or assessment on the lots fronting on such street sufficient to pay the expenses of construction of said sidewalks, construed as synonymous with the word "construction" as used in the statute. McNair v. Ostrander, 23 Pac. 414, 415, 1 Wash. St. 110.

Efficient maintenance required.

The duty imposed on a railroad to keep its right of way fences in repair has been construed to require it to keep gates constituting part of such fences securely closed. West v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 26 Mo. App. 344, 348.

Existence of thing repaired implied.

"Repair," as defined by Webster, means to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, and the phrase "in good repair" means in such state of reparation, and implies existence of thing to be repaired. Gulf City St. Ry. & Real Estate Co. v. City of Galveston, 7 S. W. 520, 521, 69 Tex. 680.

Future repairs.

Gen. Laws, c. 72, § 4, providing for an apportionment of the expense of "rebuilding or repairing a highway" in one town to other towns benefited thereby, fairly means keeping a highway in repair, in view of its continuing interests and the continuing duty of the town benefited by it; and therefore "rebuilding or repairing" is not to be construed as limited to one point of time, but as including the future as well as the present. Town of Campton v. Town of Plymouth & Holderness, 8 Atl. 824, 825, 64 N. H. 304.

As maintain.

To repair means to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction. Webst. Dict.; Gulf City St. Ry. & Real Estate Co. v. City of Galveston, 69 Tex. 683, 7 S. W. 520; Pittsburg & B. Pass. Ry. Co. v. City of Pittsburg, 80 Pa. 72, 76. The words "maintain" and "repair" practically mean one and the same thing. Verdin v. City of St. Louis (Mo.) 27 S. W. 447, 451; Id., 33 S. W. 480, 494, 131 Mo. 28.

"Permission to repair" a dam in a navigable stream is to be construed as permission to repair and maintain such dam at its legal height, and no liability is on the one granting such permission if the dam is illegally maintained. Arpin v. Bowman, 53 N. W. 151, 83 Wis. 54.

"Maintenance" and "repair," when applied to a street, practically mean one and the same thing. To repair means to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction. Webst. Dict. The word "maintain" does not mean to provide or construct, but means to keep up, to keep from change, to preserve. Worcester. Dict. To hold or keep in any particular state or condition; to keep up. Webst. Dict. In Moon v. Durden, 2 Exch. 21, it was said: "The verb 'to maintain' signifies to support what has already been brought into existence." Barber-Asphalt Co. v. Hezel, 56 S. W. 449, 451, 155 Mo. 391, 48 L. R. A. 285.

"Repairs," as used in a city charter requiring contracts for making repairs on streets to be let to the lowest bidder, signifies the restoration of a street already defective from use and decay, and is not synonymous with "maintenance," so as to render invalid a provision of a paving contract providing that the contractor shall pay the cost of maintenance of the streets paved; the requirement of maintenance being imposed as a mere guaranty of the perfection of the work when completed and the duty to preserve from decay and ordinary use. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten, 48 S. W. 939, 944, 147 Mo. 467, 48 L. R. A. 279.

"Repair," as used in a contract by which the plaintiff agreed to "repair and renew," so far as necessary, the gutter of a mill, only meant that the plaintiff was to make such repairs and renewals as were necessary in order that the existing gutter should do all that it was capable of doing when in good condition, according to its original construction, and did not require of the plaintiff that he build a new gutter of a different construction, even though the original plan was defective. Dwight v. Ludlow Mfg. Co., 128 Mass. 280, 282.

In a will directing the executor to collect the income of certain real estate, and, after paying the taxes, repairs, assessments, and insurance, to apply the remainder of the income to certain specified purposes, the term "repairs" included new roofing, new plumbing, and whatever was reasonably necessary to keep up the house. Steven's Ex'rs v. Milnor, 24 N. J. Eq. (9 C. E. Green) 358, 373.

New or additional structure.

"Repair," as used in Pub. St. c. 34, § 5, providing that towns may appropriate money for repairing bridges, means a restoration to a sound state of what had gone into a decayed or dilapidated condition, or the bettering of what had been destroyed in part. "Repair" means to restore to its former condition, not to change either the form or the material, so that building a new bridge is not a repair of the highway. State v. White, 18 Atl. 179, 180, 16 R. I. 591.

"Repair," as used in Gen. St. c. 44, §§ 12, 14, 15, requiring a surveyor of highways to disburse the whole sum allowed to him for the repair of the highways within his district, and authorizing him to repair the ways within his district so that the same shall be safe and convenient, when the town neglects to vote a sufficient sum for such purposes, does not mean to make a new thing, but to refit, make good, or restore an existing one. The surveyor cannot make new structures and additions to the roads. Todd v. Inhabitants of Rowley, 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 51, 56.

"Repair," as used in Elliott's Supp. § 1193, empowering a county surveyor to levy assessments to keep public ditches in repair, by its own force and vigor repels the implication that there is authority to construct new drains. Romack v. Hobbs (Ind.) 32 N. E. 307.

"Altering, repairing, or ornamenting a building," as used in the Illinois mechanic's lien law, does not include putting a lightning rod on a house. Drew v. Mason, 81 Ill. 498, 499, 25 Am. Rep. 288.

"Repair a building" means to replace it as it was, or to restore it after dilapidation; not to enlarge or elevate it, by raising it from one to two or more stories, nor to extend its sides. Douglass v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 2 Rawle, 262, 264.

"Repair," as used in a statute giving a mechanic's lien for materials furnished and services rendered in the repair of any building, will not be construed to include putting in certain fixed machinery for the manufacture of paper into a building erected for a paper mill. Rose v. Persee & Brooks Paper Works, 29 Conn. 256, 268.

A lease providing that the premises should at all times be open to the inspection of the lessor or his agents, to applicants for purchase or lease, and for necessary repairs, means ordinary repairs, but does not include the substitution of one system of heating for another, or for a new heater, unless the old one was worn out. Gulliver v. Fowler, 30 Atl. 852, 854, 64 Conn. 556.

"Repair" means to restore to sound and good condition after injury or partial destruction. Pittsburg & B. Pass. R. Co. v.

City of Pittsburg, 80 Pa. 72. To repair a building is to replace it as it was, or to restore after injury or dilapidation. Douglass v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 2 Rawle, 262, 264. The erection or maintenance of a guard rail, loose slat door, hurdle, or other device is not a matter of repair, falling upon the tenant, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary. City of Reading v. Reiner, 31 Atl. 357, 167 Pa. 41.

The inherent power in the circuit court to order repairs for the courtroom is confined to repairs in the sense of the necessity out of which the power springs, and does not include practically rebuilding the courthouse, or the construction of permanent improvements, such as extensions and additions. White County Com'rs v. Gwin, 36 N. E. 237, 244, 136 Ind. 562, 22 L. R. A. 402.

A covenant to repair will not make a lessee liable for the expense of laying a new floor. Soward v. Leggatt, 7 Car. & P. 613.

The authority to repair public drains, given to the township trustees by Drainage Act 1883, § 7, does not authorize the enlargement of the drains. Under authority to repair there can be no enlargement and improvement, except in so far as the work of repairing necessarily enlarges and improves. "Repair," says the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, "means to restore to a sound or good condition after injury or partial destruction." Weaver v. Templin, 14 N. E. 600, 602, 113 Ind. 298 (citing Pittsburg & B. Pass. Ry. Co. v. City of Pittsburg, 80 Pa. 72).

"Repairs," as used in Sp. Acts 1883, c. 348, authorizing the assessment of a sum to reimburse a town for money paid out for making repairs on school houses, does not include building a schoolhouse. Carlton v. Newman, 1 Atl. 194, 199, 77 Me. 408.

A covenant in a lease of a farm requiring the tenant to make repairs cannot be construed to require him to construct fences around lands not inclosed at the time of the execution of the lease. Hazlewood v. Pennybacker (Tex.) 50 S. W. 199, 202.

As requiring repair of damage committed by public enemy.

A covenant in a lease of a house to deliver up the premises at the end of the term in good repair cannot be construed to require the tenant to repair a waste committed on the premises by an alien military force, who invades the city and takes possession of the premises during the term. Pollard v. Shaaffer (Pa.) 1 Dall. 210, 213, 1 L. Ed. 104, 1 Am. Dec. 239.

As rebuilding.

The word "repair" means to renew or restore an existing thing, not to make a new one. A covenant to repair ordinarily does not bind the landlord to rebuild, though there are cases in which the word "repair," aided by the context, has been held to mean "rebuild." Where the contract requires the tenant to keep the premises in repair and return them in the same condition as when received, or other language is employed showing an intention to make either party rebuild, such duty will be imposed, even though the word "rebuild" is not used. Meyers v. Myrrell, 57 Ga. 516. Usually, however, an agreement to repair would only include ordinary repairs, and the provision of Civ. Code 1895, § 3123, making landlords liable for repairs, does not require them to rebuild in case of the destruction of the tenement. Gaven v. Norcross, 43 S. E. 771, 772, 117 Ga. 356.

As used in reference to authority of an administrator to expend money for the repair of buildings belonging to the estate, "repair" extends to the erection of new buildings, in cases where the building has been destroyed by fire, or damaged so as to be no longer available, and where a new building could be paid for in a short time out of the rental. In re Freud's Estate, 63 Pac. 1080, 1081, 131 Cal. 667, 82 Am. St. Rep. 407.

"Repair" ordinarily means to mend, to restore to a sound state what has been partially destroyed, to make good an existing thing, and as used in Civ. Code, § 3123, requiring a tenant to "keep * * * in repair" the leased premises, does not require him to replace a gin house entirely destroyed by fire. Mayer v. Morehead, 32 S. E. 349, 350, 106 Ga. 434.

"Repair," as used in P. & L. Laws 1866, c. 474, providing that the work of constructing any crosswalk, culvert, or sewer, or the keeping in repair of cross-walks, sewers, streets, etc., after the same had been constructed, graded, planked, or paved in a city, the expense thereof should be paid out of the road fund, refers to the ordinary repairs which are necessary to keep the street in a good condition, when there has been a partial waste or destruction of existing material, but does not import the rebuilding in case of total loss or destruction. Blount v. City of Janesville, 31 Wis. 648, 654.

The word "repair," as used in a lease stipulating that the lessee shall keep the leased premises in good repair, is not used in any technical sense, but should receive its ordinary interpretation; and "to repair" as it is ordinarily used means to amend, not to make a new thing, but to refit, make good, or restore an existing thing. Therefore it does not include the rebuilding of buildings destroyed without the fault of the lessee. Wattles v. South Omaha Ice & Coal Co., 69 N. W. 785, 787, 50 Neb. 251, 36 L. R. A. 424, 61 Am. St. Rep. 554.

As used in a lease in which the lessee promises to keep the building in repair, the word "repair" will be held to mean amend, not to make a new thing, but to refit, make good, or restore an existing thing; and when we speak of repairing a thing, the very expression presupposes something in existence to be repaired, and hence, where the building leased is destroyed, the lessee is not under obligations to rebuild under such a promise. Wattles v. South Omaha Ice & Coal Co., 69 N. W. 785, 787, 50 Neb. 251, 36 L. R. A. 424, 61 Am. St. Rep. 554 (citing Todd v. Inhabitants of Rowley, 90 Mass. [8 Allen] 51; Stevens' Ex'rs v. Milnor, 24 N. J. Eq. [9 C. E. Green] 358).

"Repair," as used in Rev. St. 1893, c. 121, § 21, declaring that towns shall build and repair bridges at their expense over streams on roads on town lines, should be construed as including in its meaning to restore or to renew, so that towns are bound to rebuild worn-out bridges. People v. Highway Com'rs of Towns of Dover and Ohio, 41 N. E. 1105, 1107, 158 Ill. 197.

The replacing of an old bridge by a new one is within the meaning of the word "repairs," and the cost of it was properly chargeable to the ordinary expense account of the company building the same. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. v. Grant (U. S.) 11 Fed. Cas. 699, 701.

A covenant in a lease in which the lessee binds himself to keep the leased premises in repair, and to return them in as good condition as when he received them, makes the lessee liable to rebuild buildings destroyed by fire. Abby v. Billups, 35 Miss. 618, 632, 72 Am. Dec. 143.

Plaintiff sold to defendants his timber on a certain tract of land, with the privilege of a quarter steam sawmill belonging to plaintiff on the premises for the purpose of manufacturing said timber. Defendants covenanted to put said sawmill in good repair, and the same so keep, and to deliver the same to plaintiff in reasonably good condition and repair. Before the timber was sawed the mill was burned without defendants' fault. The court held that the covenant to keep and deliver the mill in good repair required them to replace the mill or make it good. Hoy v. Holt, 91 Pa. 88, 90, 36 Am. Rep. 659.

A covenant in a lease to repair, uphold, and support, or to well and sufficiently repair, or to keep in repair and leave as found, or to repair and keep in repair, or to keep in good repair, natural wear and tear excepted, or to make all necessary repairs, or to deliver up in tenantable repair, or to deliver up the premises in as good a condition as they now are, all impose upon the covenantor the duty of rebuilding or restoring the premises destroyed or injured by the elements. Armstrong v. Maybee, 48 Pac. 737, 738, 17 Wash. 24, 61 Am. St. Rep. 898.

Reconstruct distinguished.

See, also, "Reconstruct — Reconstruction."

"Repair" means to mend, add to, or make over, and differs from "reconstruct," which means to construct again, or rebuild; so that, where a sidewalk was reconstructed, rather than repaired, and such reconstruction, under a notice to the owner to repair or that the same shall be repaired by the city, does not authorize the city to recover for such reconstruction. Farraher v. City of Keokuk, 82 N. W. 773, 774, 111 Iowa, 310; State ex rel. Kansas City v. Corrigan Consol. St. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 263, 55 Am. Rep. 361; Western Paving & Supply Co. v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 26 N. E. 188, 191, 128 Ind. 525, 10 L. R. A. 770, 25 Am. St. Rep. 462.

Repair is restoration to a sound, good, or complete state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, and it has such meaning in the rule that a purchaser may repair, but not reconstruct or reproduce, a patented device or machine. Good-year Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson (U. S.) 112 Fed. 146, 150, 50 C. C. A. 159, 55 L. R. A. 692.

The use of a coupling head or knuckle, which is the peculiar and unique feature of a certain combination constituting an improved car coupler, to supply the place of knuckles worn out or broken in actual use, amounts to a reconstruction, and not repairs. St. Louis Car Coupler Co. v. Shickle, Harrison & Howard Iron Co. (U. S.) 70 Fed. 783, 785.

To repair a building means simply to reconstruct it to a sound condition. First Nat. Bank v. Sarlis, 28 N. E. 434, 437, 129 Ind. 201, 13 L. R. A. 481, 28 Am. St. Rep. 185.

Removal of building.

Gen. St. c. 150, § 1, giving a mechanic's lien for labor or materials in the "erection, alteration, or repair" of any building, cannot be construed to mean labor performed in the removal of a building from one place to another. Trask v. Searle, 121 Mass. 229, 230.

As rendering suitable for use.

"Repair," as used in reference to the right of a grantee of a right of way to keep the road in repair, is not limited to making good the defects in the original soil by subsidence or washing away; but it includes the right of making the road such that it can be used for the purpose for which it was granted. United States Pipe Line Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 41 Atl. 759, 767, 62 N. J. Law, 254, 42 L. R. A. 572 (citing Newcomen v. Coulson, 5 Ch. Div. 133).

Repavement of street.

"Repair," as used in a city charter, giving the city authority to repair streets, does not include the right to repave. Hurley v. Inhabitants of City of Trenton, 49 Atl. 518, 66 N. J. Law, 538.

"Repair," as used in a city ordinance requiring a street railway to keep and maintain a portion of the street inside its rails and for two feet outside of them in good and sufficient repair, cannot be construed to mean repave with a new and different material selected by the city. Dean v. City of Paterson, 50 Atl. 620, 621, 67 N. J. Law, 199.

Webster defines the word "repair" to mean to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, as to repair a house, a wall, or a ship. He defines "reconstruction" to mean to construct again, to rebuild. Where a brick pavement was taken up, the grade changed, new sand used, and part of the bricks used were new ones, it was not a repair of the pavement, but a reconstruction, within Ky. St. § 2835, apportioning the cost of reconstruction of sidewalks to the front foot of the adjoining property. Levi v. Coyne (Ky.) 57 S. W. 790, 791.

A street railway company, under a charter requiring it to keep in repair the grounds between its tracks, is not liable for repaving of such space. City of Williamsport v. Williamsport Pass. R. Co., 52 Atl. 51, 203 Pa. 1.

The removal of the whole of an existing pavement on each side of a railroad track, and the substitution for it of another of an entirely different character, when for aught it appears the existing pavement was at the time in good repair, and the object was not to make it better, but to remove it altogether, and to substitute for it one of a better kind, thus improving the street by making the carriageway better than it could have been made by any repairs or alterations that could have been made in the existing pavement, was not a repair of the street, but an improvement thereof. The demolition of a structure, and its replacement by one of a different character, cannot be considered a repair of that structure. In re Repaving of Fulton St., Brooklyn (N. Y.) 29 How. Prac. 429, 431.

As restoration to original condition.

A building is properly said to be repaired when it is restored to its original condition after having been damaged. Vincent v. Frelich, 23 South. 373, 375, 50 La. Ann. 378, 69 Am. St. Rep. 436.

A mere covenant in a lease to repair may be construed to embrace only the making good of what may be damaged ad interim; but a covenant to deliver the premises at the expiration of a term "in good tolerable repair in every respect" binds the covenantor to restore the premises in tenantable condition, without any reference to the condition in which he received them. Brash-ear v. Chandler, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 150, 151.

"Repairs," as used in a covenant to make all necessary repairs to a gate, includes the replacing of the gate if removed. Beach v. Crain, 2 N. Y. (2 Comst.) 86, 93, 49 Am. Dec. 369.

"Repairs," as used in Laws 1850, p. 264, conferring upon the common council of the city of Brooklyn the general power to make such improvements in and about the streets as the public need and convenience may require, and providing that the expense of such improvements, except for repairs, shall be assessed upon the property benefited thereby, includes the substitution of new curbstones and gutters for old ones. The interpretations of the term "repair" given by Walker are "reparation; supply of loss; restoration after dilapidation." The last definition would seem to include whatever might be requisite to restore the positive usefulness of a depressed street. When a street has been once put in a condition conformable to what is required at the time, whatever is subsequently done to it for the purpose of a street, whether in improving an existing constituent or substituting a new one, or in adding some material required by a new regulation, comes appropriately under the head of repairs. People v. City of Brooklyn (N. Y.) 21 Barb. 484, 488.

Sewer.

The putting in of a sewer connection does not come within the meaning of the word "repairs," as contained in a lease. It is the furnishing of a new improvement or addition of an original character. Torreson v. Walla, 92 N. W. 834, 836, 11 N. D. 481.

Street paving.

An obligation to repair a street is not an obligation to construct thereon a new pavement. State ex rel. Kansas City v. Corrigan Consol. St. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 263, 264, 55 Am. Rep. 361.

"Repair," as used in Act March 18, 1885, § 23, authorizing the county commissioners to keep streets in repair after certain work had been done on them, will not be held to include power to cause such streets to be paved, when they have not been paved before. Santa Cruz Rock Pavement Co. v. Broderick, 45 Pac. 863, 865, 113 Cal. 628.

A statute giving a lien for labor and materials furnished for building, altering, repairing, or ornamenting any house or other building, or appurtenance thereto, does not give a lien on a lot for curbing, grading, and paving the street in front of the same Smith v. Kennedy, 89 Ill. 485.

Removal of obstructions from street.

"Repair," as used in a city ordinance giving a railroad company the right to use a city street providing the company should keep the street in a good and sufficient state of repair, means to restore to sound or good condition after injury or partial destruction. Where a street had been rendered impassable or obstructed by rocks, stone, gravel, and earth deposited on the street by washing from a ravine, to repair it or restore it to its former condition required the removal of the deposit thrown upon it. Pittsburg & B. Pass. Ry. Co. v. City of Pittsburg, 80 Pa. 72, 74.

In the case of Gibson v. City of Huntington, 38 W. Va. 177, 18 S. E. 447, 22 L. R. A. 561, 45 Am. St. Rep. 853, the holding that a municipal corporation is absolutely liable for injuries caused by its failure to keep in repair the streets, sidewalks, alleys, roads, and bridges, and that the word "repair" was recognized to mean obstructions on the highway, as well as defects in it, was approved. Arthur v. City of Charleston, 41 S. E. 171, 51 W. Va. 132.

Repair of vessel.

A statute giving a materialman a lien for materials, etc., furnished in the repair of a vessel, included the labor and materials furnished in enlarging or extending the promenade deck of the steamer, taking off and replacing the hurricane deck, and sheathing her inside, a considerable part of which work was done for the purpose of adapting the steamer to new use and services. Donnell v. The Starlight, 103 Mass. 227, 232.

The term "repairs," within the rule that the master of a vessel while in a foreign port may bind the owner for repairs and supplies, is not confined to such as are absolutely or indispensably necessary, but includes all such as are reasonably fit and proper for the ship and the voyage. Such necessity for repairs and supplies is proved, where such circumstances of exigency are shown as would induce a prudent owner, if present, to order them, or to provide funds for the cost of them on the security of the ship. The Lulu, 77 U. S. (10 Wall.) 192, 200, 19 L. Ed. 906.

Use of same material implied.

"Repair" means to restore to its former condition, not to change either the form or the material. "If you are to repair a wooden building, you are not to make it brick, stone, or iron; but you are to repair wood with wood." Where a lessee of an oil tank, made with iron sides and a wooden bottom, who covenanted to repair the tank and return it in good repair, made it as tight and secure as it could be made with a wooden bottom, the covenant was complied with. Ardesco Oil Co. v. Richardson, 63 Pa. 162, 166.

REPAIR TRACK.

A "repair track" is one on which cars needing repairs are put, and upon which it is not customary for the shifting engine to come without notice to the overhaulers at work there. With such a track, overhaulers can do their work without being subjected to unnecessary danger. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 175, 4 S. E. 211, 215, 10 Am. St. Rep. 827.

REPAIRS NECESSARY FROM ANY IMPERFECTION.

A provision in a paving contract requiring the contractor to bear the entire expense of all the repairs which may become necessary from any imperfection in the work or material, does not cover usual or ordinary repairs, or the expenses incident to the natural wear of the pavement, or its destruction by flood or other cause, other than those resulting from the defect of workmanship or material. "Manifestly such paragraph is merely a guaranty on the part of the contractor for the faithful performance of his contract, requiring him merely to make good any defects arising from bad materials or the improper manner in which the work was performed." Robertson v. City of Omaha, 76 N. W. 442, 444, 55 Neb. 718, 44 L. R. A. 534.

REPAVE—REPAVEMENT.

Repaving occurs when a pavement is replaced by another one. Ten Eyck v. Rector, 65 Hun, 194, 197, 20 N. Y. Supp. 157.

Repairs to a pavement, which has become so worn and dilapidated that a reconstruction with new materials is essential, amount to a repaving, within the proviso of an ordinance requiring a street railway company to keep certain surface of the street in good order and repair, providing that upon the paved portion of such streets the materials for repaving shall be supplied at the city's expense. Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co. v. City of Detroit, 34 Mich. 78, 79.

The flagging and reflagging of sidewalks, and the setting of curb and gutter stones, is not a repavement, within the meaning of the acts of 1872 and 1874, relative to the vacating of assessments for repavements in the city of New York. In re Fay (N. Y.) 12 Hun, 490.

Where, after a street has been regulated, graded, curbed, guttered and flagged, the grade thereof is lawfully changed, thereby necessitating the replacing of the flagging and the curb and gutter stones, such replacing is not a "repavement," within the meaning of that term as used in a city charter requiring the expense of a "repavement" to be imposed upon the city generally. In re Roberts (N. Y.) 25 Hun, 371, 375.

Under Detroit City Charter (Loc. Acts 1887, p. 874) § 35, providing that the expense of paving a street may be assessed on adjoining property, but that the cost of repaving shall be paid by the city out of the repaving fund, the removal of the pavement 40 feet in width through the center of a street 200 feet wide, and the paving of a roadway 25 feet wide along each side of the street instead, constitute a repavement of the street, the cost of which cannot, therefore, be charged on the abutting property. Dickinson v. Detroit, 111 Mich. 480, 481, 69 N. W. 728.

REPAY.

"Repay," as used in Act April 4, 1864, making a grant in aid of a railroad and requiring the railroad company to enter into an agreement promising to comply with the terms and conditions set forth in the act, and providing that, in case the company failed or refused to perform any of such conditions, it should be liable to repay to the state the amount which should have been paid by the state under the act, imports a payment to the state of the moneys granted by the state, but does not itself necessarily imply a promise to repay the moneys as moneys advanced by way of loan to the defendant. People v. Central Pac. Ry. Co., 18 Pac. 90, 93, 76 Cal. 29.

"Repay," as used in an order reading, "Let plaintiff and family have whatever they want for their support, and I will repay you for the same," does not necessarily mean to pay money. It has also the meaning of return, restore, etc.; and to hold that the party making the order had the right to repay any kind of articles furnished for the support of plaintiff and family would not be at variance with the language of the order. Grant v. Dabney, 19 Kan. 388, 389, 27 Am. Rep. 125.

REPEAL

A repeal signifies the abrogation of one statute by another. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 60 Pac. 1039, 1042, 24 Mont. 125.

The primary meaning of the word "repealed," as used in speaking of the repeal of a statute, is, as its etymology imports, that the statute has been recalled or revoked. Oakland Pav. Co. v. Hilton, 11 Pac. 3, 6, 69 Cal. 479.

A repealing clause is such an express enactment as necessarily divests all inchoate rights which have arisen under the statute which it destroys. These rights are but an incident of the statute, and fall with it, unless saved by express words in the repealing clause. Duffus v. Howard Furnace Co., 40 N. Y. Supp. 925, 930, 8 App. Div. 567.

Suspension distinguished.

There is a material difference between the repeal and the suspension of a statute. A repeal removes the law entirely; but, when suspended, it still exists, and has operation in every respect, except wherein it has been suspended. Mernaugh v. City of Orlando, 27 South. 34, 36, 41 Fla. 433.

The difference between a repealed and a suspended law is this: A repeal puts an end to the law. A suspension holds it in abeyance. Hienssen v. State, 23 Pac. 995, 997, 14 Colo. 228.

A repealing ordinance is a total abrogation of the law repealed. The suspension of an act or an ordinance cannot be construed to be the repeal of it. The Rochester city charter gives the city council the sole power to order street improvements when the expenses are to be defrayed by local assessments, and provides that the executive board shall have power to let all contracts to be made in pursuance of any ordinance, and shall have superintendence and control of all work ordered by the council. Under this provision an ordinance directing the improvement of a street may be repealed by the council before the contract has been awarded by the executive board. Ashton v. City of Rochester, 60 Hun. 372, 376, 14 N. Y. Supp. 855.

Re-enactment.

The term "repeal," in Const. art. 3, § 11, declaring that no law shall be amended unless the new act contains the section or sections amended, and the section or sections amended shall be repealed, was employed in the sense in which the term was understood at the time the Constitution was adopted. It had before that time been definitely settled as a rule of construction that the simultaneous repeal and re-enactment of the same statute in terms or in substance is a mere affirmance of the original act, and not a repeal in the strict and constitutional sense of the term. Where the re-enactment is in the words of the old statute, and was evidently intended to continue the uninterrupted operation of such statute, the new act or amendment is a mere continuation of the former act, and not in a proper sense a repeal. State v. Bemis, 64 N. W. 348, 350, 45 Neb. 724.

REPEAL BY IMPLICATION.

To constitute a repeal by implication there must be such repugnance or conflict between the positive and material provisions of the different acts that they cannot stand together. Hunter v. City of Memphis, 28 S. W. 828, 829, 93 Tenn. (9 Pickle) 571.

A repeal by implication must be by necessary implication. It is not sufficient to establish that the subsequent law or laws cover some, or even all, of the cases provided for by it; for they may be merely affirmative, or cumulative, or auxiliary. But there must be a positive repugnance between the provisions of the new law and those of the old, and even then the old law is repealed by implication only pro tanto, to the extent of the repugnancy. Hornaday v. State, 65 Pac. 656, 657, 63 Kan. 499.

To repeal a statute by implication there must be such a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law and the old that they cannot stand together or be consistently reconciled. There should be a manifest and total repugnancy in the new law, to lead to the conclusion that the new law abrogated or was designed to abrogate the former law. A later statute, which is general and affirmative, does not abrogate a former one which is particular, unless negative words are used, or unless the acts are irreconcilably inconsistent. Pacific R. Co. v. Cass County, 53 Mo. 17, 18.

REPEATED.

"Repeated," as used in a printed statement that a telegraph company will only be responsible for error or delay in transmission of a message when it is repeated, etc., means telegraphed back to the originating office for comparison, and does not include the repeating of the message by the operator at the office where the message was received to the person to whom it was sent at the latter's request. Bennett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 2 N. Y. Supp. 365, 367, 50 Hun. 600.

REPEATED AND EXTREME CRUELTY.

Repeated and extreme cruelty, within the meaning of the divorce statute, making such cruelty a ground for divorce, characterizes the act of a husband in first striking his wife twice in anger, and again striking her a year later, and two years thereafter knocking her down. Abbott v. Abbott, 61 N. E. 350, 351, 192 Ill. 439.

REPLENISH.

"Replenish," as used in a chattel mortgage, covering a stock of goods and any of the goods that may be bought by the mortgagor from time to time to replenish the stock, necessarily includes or implies a power to sell. "Replenish," from the Latin word "re" (again) and "plenus" (full), means literally to fill again, to fill up. Nothing can be filled again that is already full. If the goods would remain in the hands of the mortgagor, to be kept in statu quo until the mortgage was due, there would be nothing to replenish. To replenish a thing necessarily implies exhaustion, reduction, or diminution in the quantity of the commodity. There could have been no other mode of reduction in the quantity of these goods in the contemplation of the parties than by sale. Bynum v. Miller, 89 N. C. 393, 395.

REPLEVIN.

Replevin lies to recover possession of goods or chattels wrongfully taken or detained. McJunkin v. Mathers, 27 Atl. 873, 158 Pa. 137.

Replevin is a possessory action, and can only be maintained by one entitled to the possession of the property claimed at the time of the commencement of the action. Eldridge v. Sherman, 38 N. W. 255, 256, 70 Mich. 266.

Replevin is an action to recover the possession of personal property. The right to recover possession in an action of replevin depends upon the question who has the right of possession. Parlman v. Young, 4 N. W. 139, 146, 2 Dak. 175.

"A mere naked possessory right, without any title to or right of possession of the property, will not maintain replevin, if the plaintiff's title or right of exclusive possession is put in issue by the defendant's plea." Chambers v. Hunt, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 339, 343.

Primarily the action of replevin is possessory in its character, and unless the title to the property is distinctly put in issue a judgment determines nothing more than the right of possession. Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Bronson, 2 Ind. App. 1, 5, 28 N. E. 155, 156; Riggenberg v. Hartman, 124 Ind. 186, 190, 24 N. E. 987.

Replevin is a possessory action, and the issue to be determined by it is the right of the parties litigant to possession of the subject-matter at the time the action was commenced. Fischer v. Cohen, 48 N. Y. Supp. 775, 776, 22 Misc. Rep. 117; Hancock v. Shockman (Ind. T.) 69 S. W. 826, 828; Boruff v. Stipp, 126 Ind. 32, 33, 25 N. E. 865; Hall v. Durham, 113 Ind. 327, 330, 15 N. E. 529, 531.

Replevin lies for him who has the general or special property in goods against him who has wrongfully taken them. The remedy in this form, even if it did not originally extend to the recovery of chattels in the custody of the law, is now given by statute to all persons whose goods are attached on mesne process or taken on execution, except the defendant in the suit. Tracy v. Warren, 104 Mass. 376, 377.

Replevin "is an action at law which lies for all goods and chattels unlawfully taken or detained, and may be brought whenever one person claims personal property in the possession of another; and this, whether the claimant has ever had possession or not, and whether his property be absolute or not, providing he has the right of possession." Lazard v. Wheeler, 22 Cal. 139, 142 (quoting Morris, Repl. 37).

Replevin, under our statute, is peculiarly a possessory action, and its object is to enable the plaintiff to obtain the actual possession of property wrongfully detained. Stevenson v. Taylor, 2 Mich. N. P. 95, 96 (citing Hickey v. Hinsdale, 12 Mich. 99, 100; Comp. Laws, § 5005).

Replevin is an action which lies for the recovery of the special articles which have been taken or detained by a person whom the claimant holds has no right to them. Under this special form of action the value of the articles may be recovered in money if the property itself cannot be found, or the property may be recovered if the possession thereof can be had. Replevin lies for all goods and chattels unlawfully taken or detained and personal property in the possession of another; and this, whether the claimant has ever had possession or not, and whether his property in the goods be absolute or qualified, providing he has the right to possession. Therefore the question of possession enters into and becomes the very gist of the action of replevin. Maclary v. Turner (Del.) 32 Atl. 325, 326, 9 Houst. 281.

Replevin is a summary proceeding whereby, upon proper security, the pledge is redelivered, where property is pledged as security, and the question of right is to be subsequently determined. Hewitson v. Hunt (S. C.) 8 Rich. Law, 106, 110, 111.

Replevin is for a particular thing. The action of replevin is sui generis, and governed by its own provisions, as found in the Code. Ellison v. Lewis, 57 Miss. 588, 590.

Replevin, strictly speaking, is a possessory action. Its primary object is to enable the plaintiff to obtain the actual possession of the personal property wrongfully detained by the defendant at the time the suit is begun. Often, in actions of replevin, the right to the possession of the property is the only matter in controversy, and the only question that can be tried and determined. It is so far a possessory action that a mere right of possession may prevail against the absolute legal title to the property, where the right of possession and the title have been separated, or are held by different parties.

Meiser v. Smith, 2 Ind. App. 37, 39, 27 N. E. 871.

A replevin is a justicial writ to the sheriff, complaining of an unjust taking and detention of goods or chattels, commanding the sheriff to deliver back the same to the owner on security given to make out the justice of such taking, or else to return the goods and chattels. Gilb. Repl. 58. Replevin is a remedy granted upon a distress. 2 Sell. Prac. p. 153. Replevin is an action founded on a taking, and the right which the party from whom the goods were taken has to have them restored to him until the question of title to the goods is determined. Shannon v. Shannon, 1 Schoales & L. 327. The action of replevin is granted on tortious taking, and sounds in damages, like an action of trespass, to which it is extremely analogous, if the sheriff has already made a return (of the goods) and the plaintiff sues only for damages for the caption. Replevin will lie for the goods of a stranger taken on execution as the goods of the debtor, if taken out of the actual or constructive possession of the plaintiff. Williamson v. Ringgold (U. S.) 30 Fed. Cas. 19, 20.

At common law an action in replevin tested only the right of possession of the replevied property at the time of the commencement of the action, and provided no method whereby the defendant might have judgment for the value of the property in case the adjudged return thereof could not be had, but left the successful defendant to another action in another forum to procure such relief. But under our statute, as is the case under most statutes of replevin, an additional or cumulative remedy to that found in the common law has been provided. Johnson v. Boehme, 71 Pac. 243, 244, 66 Kan. 72, 97 Am. St. Rep. 357.

An action in replevin is a possessory action, and will lie only in cases where the plaintiff is entitled to the immediate possession of the property in controversy. While it may be said that the question of ownership is in some instances involved also in the trial of such cases, it does not follow that in every case of replevin the title to the property is in issue. On the contrary, a man may be entitled to the possession of the property as bailee, pawnee, or in many other cases, without having the ultimate legal title to the property. Whitehead v. Coyle, 1 Ind. App. 450, 452, 27 N. E. 716.

Replevin is an action at law for the recovery of specific personal chattels wrongfully taken and detained, or wrongfully detained, with damages which the wrongful taking or detention has occasioned. It is what it usually termed a mixed action, being partly in rem and partly in personam—in rem so far as the specific recovery of the chattels is concerned, and in personam as to the damages. Fredericks v. Tracy, 33 Pac. 750, 751, 98 Cal. 658.

Originally at common law the action of replevin lay to recover the possession of goods illegally restrained by the landlord. The primary object of the action was to recover possession of specific chattels. The form of action was so useful that the action was extended to nearly all cases of unlawful caption or detention of chattels, where it was sought to recover the chattels in specie. In many cases, where the plaintiff was unable to obtain the return of the chattels, he could recover in the action their value. Still the action remains essentially to recover possession of chattels, as distinguished from actions for trespass or trover, to recover damages for the seizure of or for value of the property. Sinnott v. Felock, 59 N. E. 265, 165 N. Y. 444, 53 L. R. A. 565, 80 Am. St. Rep. 738.

Replevin is essentially a possessory action, and does not lie against one who is not either actually or constructively in possession of the property described in the complaint. In replevin, therefore, parties cannot with any propriety be made defendants merely because they claim some interest in the property in controversy, but have none; and a general denial by such defendants makes no issue to try. Van Gorder v. Smith, 99 Ind. 404, 407.

An action for the recovery of the possession of personal property, or, in case possession thereof cannot be had, then for the value thereof, is an action in replevin. At common law this was a local action. It is made local likewise by most of the statutes of the states. Healey v. Humphrey (U. S.) 81 Fed. 990, 991, 27 C. O. A. 39.

Demand required.

"The gist of the action of replevin being the wrongful detention, we apprehend that, if a person rightfully comes into possession of personal property of which he is not the owner, his possession is not wrongful until a demand is made on him for a return of it, but that if a person comes into the possession of personalty by his own wrong, and against the will of the owner, or without his consent, no demand is necessary in order to maintain replevin." Jordan v. Johnson, 42 Pac. 415, 416, 1 Kan. App. 656.

Detinue distinguished.

See "Detinue."

As a substitute for trespass and trover.

Replevin is a substitute for trespass and trover, and in the case of property subject to a lien where the leaseholder is either in, or entitled to, the immediate possession of the property, it seems that a levy on the whole of it, in defiance of his rights, is unauthorized by law, and is a trespass on account of which he may maintain replevin. Lowe v. Wing, 13 N. W. 892, 893, 56 Wis. 31.

The use of the writ of replevin and the relief afforded by it are not limited to the taking of goods and chattels by way of distress. Where goods or chattels are unlawfully taken, where they are so taken as to entitle the owner or possessor to an action of trespass, an action of replevin may be maintained. Bruen v. Ogden, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 370, 378, 20 Am. Dec. 593.

Unlawful taking required.

At common law a writ of replevin never lies unless there has been an unlawful taking, either originally or by construction of law, by some act which makes the party a trespasser ab initio. In case of a bailment or rightful possession of the property, replevin is certainly not the proper remedy at common law. Meany v. Head (U. S.) 16 Fed. Cas. 1302, 1303.

REPLEVIN BOND.

A replevin bond operates as a guaranty for the delivery of the chattels taken under the writ. Ward v. Hood, 27 South. 245, 246, 124 Ala. 570.

A replevin bond is a bond executed to indemnify the officer who executed the replevin writ, and to indemnify the defendant or person from whose custody the property is taken for such damages as he may sustain. Imel v. Van Deren, 5 Pac. 803, 807, 8 Colo. 90.

A replevin bond is an indemnity, not only for the costs that the defendant in replevin may recover, but for damages to the value of the property replevied. Walker v. Kennison, 34 N. H. 257, 259.

The liabilities of the securities on a replevin bond are similar, or nearly so, to the liabilities of bail. The security in the one case is no more a substitute for the goods than that in the other is a substitute for the person. Badlam v. Tucker, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 284, 287.

REPLEVY.

The term "replevy" means to redeliver goods which have been distrained. Kirk v. Morris, 40 Ala. 225, 229 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

A replevy is intended merely as an inexpensive method of preserving the property until it is wanted for the payment of the judgment that may be rendered. Humes v. Scott, 30 South. 788, 789, 130 Ala. 281.

The word "replevied," as used in the rule that it is the duty of the officer, when property described in the writ is pointed out to him, to immediately take it in his possession for the purpose of having it appraised and ready to be replevied as soon as the bond is given, is used in its technical sense, and means "delivered to the owner." Steuer v. Maguire, 68 N. E. 706, 707, 182 Mass. 575.

REPLICATION.

See "General Replication"; "Special Replication."

A replication in equity is the plaintiff's answer or reply to the defendant's plea or answer. Appeal of Worthington (Pa.) 9 Kulp, 132, 133.

REPLY.

As answer, see "Answer."

REPORT.

A report or finding of a referee is not a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken, but may more properly be deemed a finding upon the law and facts submitted to him for the information of the court appointing him, upon which the court may properly act, as upon the verdict of a jury or an award of arbitrators, and pronounce judgment. Chambers v. Savage, 13 Fla. 585, 586, 589.

Mailing a letter prepaid and properly addressed to an insurance company, if done by general direction of their agent, satisfies a condition in a policy that the facts stated in the letter shall be "reported" to the company. Edwards v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 1 Mo. App. 192, 198.

"Report" is one of the synonyms of "rumor," which is defined by Webster to be "flying or popular report; a current story passing from one person to another, without any known authority for the truth of it." State v. Culler, 82 Mo. 623, 627.

"Reported at the custom house," as used in a charter party providing that a vessel was to be reported at the custom house by a certain firm, is equivalent to "entered at the custom house," and does not include the right to collect the freights and do the other business in connection with the inward voyage. Mignano v. MacAndrews (U. S.) 49 Fed. 376, 377.

A "report" to be made by a guardian on citation, which does not require of him to file a final account, though not precisely equivalent to "account," includes it. Helsen v. Smith, 71 Pac. 180, 181, 138 Cal. 216, 94 Am. St. Rep. 39.

The word "report," when used in connection with a trial or other inquiry, or a judgment, means a referee's report. Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. 1899, § 3343, subd. 5.

"Report" and "comment" are two separate and distinct things. A report is the mechanical reproduction of what actually took place. Comment is the judgment passed on the circumstances by one who has applied his mind to them. Fair reports are privileged, while fair comments are no libel at all. Blending the report and comment together does not make the article libelous, if it would not be such if the one were separated from the other. Jones v. Press Pub. Co., 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. (29 Jones & S.) 207, 209, 19 N. Y. Supp. 3, 5.

The report of a referee is simply the response of an officer of the court to the order of the court to find the law and facts involved in the controversy. It is then before the court, to be dealt with in the sound discretion invested in it in reference to such matters, but is not of any juridical force. Citizens' Bank of Humphrey v. Stockslager, 96 N. W. 591, 593, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 799.

The expression "report the same to Congress," as used in Act Cong. July 8, 1886, providing that the claims of certain persons for property claimed to have been taken and impressed into the service of the United States, but referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication according to law, and requiring the court to report the same to Congress, means no more than that the court is to report the result of the adjudication directed by Congress to be made. The court is not to certify its opinion to Congress, nor is it to report it to any other department of the government; but the judgment must in due course be reported to Congress, as other judgments. Irwin v. United States, 23 Ct. Cl. 149, 155.

REPORT THEIR CONCLUSIONS.

See "Conclusion."

REPORTER.

A reporter of a newspaper is a person employed "in reporting proceedings of courts, public meetings, legislative assemblies, and other services of a kindred character for the newspaper," and is a laborer or servant, within the act imposing individual liability for debts of companies for services of laborers and servants. Harris v. Norvell (N. Y.) 1 Abb. N. C. 127, 131. See, also, Michigan Trust Co. v. Grand Rapids Democrat, 71 N. W. 1102, 1103, 113 Mich. 615, 67 Am. St. Rep. 486.

REPOSITORY.

A repository is a place where things are or may be deposited for safety or preservation; a depository; a storehouse; a magazine; "a place where things are kept for sale; a shop, as a carriage repository." State v. Sprague, 50 S. W. 901, 903, 149 Mo. 409.

REPRESENT.

As act on stage.

Act Aug. 18, 1856 (11 Stat. 188), confers on the author or proprietor of a copyrighted dramatic composition, suited for public representation, the sole right to act, perform, or represent it on the stage. Held, that the words "act, perform, or represent" means representation in dialogue and actions by persons who represent the composition as real, by performing or going through the various parts or characters severally assigned to them. Daly v. Palmer (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 1132, 1136.

As showing agency.

"Representing," as used in a petition stating that "the undersigned, representing a majority of the taxpayers of a town," etc., should be construed to mean that the petitioners were themselves such majority; the word "representing" not qualifying the phrase, so as to import that such majority did not themselves subscribe the petition, but did it only through the instrumentality of others and in the relation of agents for the other taxpayers. Town of Solon v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 114 N. Y. 122, 130, 21 N. E. 168.

As conduct legal proceeding.

"Represent," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 372, authorizing appointment of a guardian ad litem to represent an infant in an action or proceeding, means that he is to conduct and control the proceeding on behalf of the infant. Carpenter v. Superior Court of San Joaquin County, 19 Pac. 174, 176, 75 Cal. 596.

As occupied or developed.

"Represented," as used in St. 1861, § 11, relating to lode claims, and protecting the locations of soldiers in the army from forfeiture because not "represented," means occupied or developed. Consolidated Republican Mountain Min. Co. v. Lebanon Min. Co., 12 Pac. 212, 213, 9 Colo. 343.

A promise indicated.

"Represented," as used in an allegation that a person falsely represented, should not be construed to mean that a promise was imported, and to give notice to the opposite party that a mere promise is relied on, but rather alleges fraud. Cooper v. Landon, 102 Mass. 58, 60.

As stand in place of.

To represent a person is to stand in his place, to act his part, to exercise his right, or to take his share. Plummer v. Brown, 1 Pac. 703, 704, 64 Cal. 429.

To represent means to stand in the place of; and so insurance money represents the property insured, so that, where the property is exempt from execution, the insurance money is also. Chase v. Swayne, 30 S. W. 1049, 1051, 88 Tex. 218, 53 Am. St. Rep. 742.

The word "representing," in a petition by taxpayers which states that "the undersigned, representing a majority of the taxpayers, desire the town to issue its bonds," etc., means that the undersigned stand for or are a majority of the taxpayers of the town. It cannot be construed to mean that the undersigned represent, as agent or otherwise, a majority of the taxpayers. Town of Solon v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank (N. Y.) 35 Hun, 1, 7.

"Represent," as used in Act March 2, 1895, c. 191, § 1, 28 Stat. 963 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3178], making it an offense to cause to be carried from one state to another any instrument purporting to represent a ticket in a lottery, means represent to the purchaser. It means stand as the representation of title to the indicated thing, and policy slips retained by a customer to indicate his choice of numbers, and delivered by him to an agent of the policy game, to be forwarded to another state, as little represent the purchaser's chance as the stubs in a check book represent the sums coming to the payees of the checks, and are not within the statute. Francis v. United States, 23 Sup. Ct. 334, 335, 188 U. S. 375, 47 L. Ed. 508.

As state.

"Represented," as used in a question on a trial for selling beer to a minor, as to whether at the time of the sale the purchaser had not "represented" himself to be over 21 years of age, should be construed in the sense of "stated." Peterson v. State, 34 Atl. 834, 835, 83 Md. 194.

"Represent" means to describe or portray in words; to declare; to set forth; to exhibit to another mind in language. In Butts v. Long, 68 S. W. 754, 755, 94 Mo. App. 687, which was an action for slander of title, the petition declared that the defendants did represent and state in the presence and hearing of certain persons that plaintiff was not the owner of certain property described in the petition, etc., and it was held that the allegations charged that the defendants spoke the language charged, the words "represent" and "state" imply the utterance of the language mentioned in connection with these words. Butts v. Long, 68 S. W. 754, 755, 94 Mo. App. 687.

REPRESENTATION.

See "Affirmative Representations"; "By Right of Representation"; "False Representation"; "Fraudulent Representation"; "Material Representation"; "Promissory Representation"; "Public Representations."

Representation is a fiction of the law, the effect of which is to put the representative in the place, degree, and rights of the person represented. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 894.

The right of representation invests the representative with the place, degree, and rights of the person represented. It was recognized both in the civil and common law as existing ad infinitum in the direct descending line. Gaines v. Strong's Estate, 40 Vt. 354, 356.

Heirship distinguished.

"Representation" and "heirship," though they may produce the same result, are not the same thing; and it is not necessary that a person should be the heir of another, in order to be his representative. "Heirship" is the result, while "representation" is but a process through which that result is produced. Representation is not predicated of the person dying seised, but of the next line of takers from him, and the very nature of the right implies that those should be considered as the representatives of the deceased person who would have inherited of him, if he had died seised of the estate at the time when the descent was cast. Gaines v. Strong's Estate, 40 Vt. 354, 362.

Implied statements.

A representation may arise, not only by way of concealment of part of the truth in regard to a whole fact, but from total and misleading silence. With knowledge or passive conduct, joined with a duty to speak, an estoppel will arise. The case must be such that it would be fair to interpret the silence into a declaration of the party that he has, e. g., no interest in the transaction. Watson v. Prather (Ky.) 65 S. W. 439 (citing Bigelow, Estop.).

The term "representation" is used for convenience as including both express and implied statements. It is not necessary that there should be an express statement. Whatever word, action, or conduct conveys a clear impression as of a fact is embraced in the term. Indeed, the term "representation" includes silence in certain cases; for silence, where one is bound to speak, is ordinarily equivalent to an admission of fact. Foster v. McAlester, 58 S. W. 679, 684, 3 Ind. T. 307.

In insurance.

A "representation," as the term is used in insurance, is an affirmation or denial of some fact, or an allegation which would plainly lead the mind to the same conclusion. Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co., 11 U. S. (7 Cranch) 506, 507, 3 L. Ed. 421.

A representation in insurance law is an assertion by the insured of some fact, but the validity of the policy does not depend on the literal truth of the assertion. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Rehlaender (Neb.) 94 N. W. 129, 132 (citing Ætna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 49 Neb. 811, 69 N. W. 125).

"Representation," as used in the law of insurance, is a statement in regard to a material fact, made by the applicant for insurance to the insurer with reference to the proposed contract, but which is not a part of such contract. Price v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 17 Minn. 497, 503 (Gil. 473, 480), 10 Am. Rep. 168.

"Representations," in the law of insurance, in their usual significance precede the policy, and refer to the character, ownership, use, and other particulars of the subject insured, whether material or not. If they are made part of the policy, and are false, they are treated also as warranties, and the misrepresentation avoids the policy. Goldman v. North British Mercantile Ins. Co., 19 South. 182, 183, 48 La. Ann. 223 (citing Wood, Ins. § 150).

"Representation" is defined in May, Ins. § 181, as "a statement, incidental to a contract, relative to some fact having reference thereto, and upon the faith of which the contract is entered into. If false, and material to the risk, the contract is avoided. Such false statement is termed in insurance a 'misrepresentation,' which has been well defined to be a statement of something as a fact which is untrue in effect, and which the insured states, knowing it to be untrue, with the intent to deceive the insurers, or which he states positively as true, without knowing it to be true, and which has a tendency to mislead." An application for insurance provided that, if any misrepresentation or fraudulent or untrue answers were given, the policy should be void. Untrue statements did not avoid the policy, unless they were fraudulently made. Fitzgerald v. Supreme Council Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 56 N. Y. Supp. 1005, 1009, 39 App. Div. 251.

"Representation," in the law of insurance, is defined to be a collateral statement, either by parol or in writing, of such facts or circumstances relative to the proposed adventure, and not inserted in the policy, as are necessary for the information of the insurer to enable him to form a just estimate of the risk. If the fact or circumstances appear on the face of the policy, it becomes a warranty, and not a representation. It is essential, therefore, that it be of some matter out of and collateral to the contract, and makes no part of the policy. Vandervoort v. Smith (N. Y.) 2 Caines, 155, 160.

A representation in insurance is not, strictly speaking, a part of the contract of insurance, or of the essence of it, but rather something collateral and preliminary, and in the nature of an inducement to it. A false representation will not operate to violate the contract or avoid the policy, unless it relates to a fact actually material, or clearly intended to be made material by the agreement of the parties. It is sufficient if representations be substantially true. A misrepresentation renders the policy void on the ground of fraud. Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 80 Ala. 467, 470, 2 South. 125, 59 Am. Rep. 816.

In insurance, "representations" are no part of the contract of insurance, but are collateral or preliminary to it. When made to the insurer, at or before the contract is entered into, they form a basis upon which the risks proposed to be assumed can be estimated. They operate as the inducement to the contract. Unlike a false warranty, they will not invalidate the contract, because they are untrue, unless they are material to the risk, and need only be substantially true. They render the policy void on the ground of fraud, while a noncompliance with the warranty operates as an express breach of contract. Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 25 S. W. 835, 836, 58 Ark. 528.

In the law of insurance, a representation to the insurer, before or at the time of making a contract of insurance, is a presentation of the elements upon which to estimate the risk proposed to be assumed. They are the basis of the contract, its foundation, on the faith of which it is entered into. If wrongly represented in any respect material to the risk, the policy that may be issued thereupon will not take effect. To enforce it would be to apply the insurance to a risk never presented. Davis v. Ætna Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 39 Atl. 902, 903, 67 N. H. 335 (citing Campbell v. New England Mut. Life Ins. Co., 98 Mass. 381, 390; Kimball v. Ætna Ins. Co., 91 Mass. [9 Allen] 540, 85 Am. Dec. 786; Eastern R. Co. v. Relief Fire Ins. Co., 98 Mass. 420).

In insurance, a representation is a statement by the applicant to the insurer regarding a fact material to the proposed insurance, and it must be not only false, but fraudulent, to defeat the policy. While a warranty in the law of insurance is a binding agreement that the facts stated by the applicant are true, and is a part of the contract, a condition precedent to a recovery upon it, and its falsity in any particular is fatal to an action on the policy, a representation is a mere declaration of a fact; but it is neither a condition precedent, nor a part of the contract, like a warranty. The crucial distinction between a representation and a warranty is that the one is not, and the other is, a part of the contract between the parties, and that the truth of the one is not, and the truth of the other is, a condition precedent to a recovery upon the policy.

Rice v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland (U. S.) 103 Fed. 427, 430, 43 C. C. A. 270.

In the law of insurance, representations are of two classes, affirmative and promissory. The former are those which affirm the existence of a particular state of things at the time the contract of insurance is made and becomes operative. The latter are those which are made by the insured concerning what is to happen during the term of the insurance, stated as matters of expectation, or, it may be, of contract. The one is an affirmation of a fact existing when the contract begins. The other is a promise to be performed after the contract has come into existence. New Jersey Rubber Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. of London, 46 Atl. 777, 778, 64 N. J. Law, 580.

"Representations," in connection with an application for an insurance policy, have not always been confined to representations of fact existing at the time of the making of the policy, but to the future; not to facts which any person knows, or can know, but to matters of expectation or belief. Such statements, when not expressed in the form of a distinct warranty, are sometimes called promissory representations, to distinguish them from those relating to facts or affirmative representations, and these words express the distinction: The one is an affirmation of a fact existing when the contract begins; the other is a promise to be performed after the contract has come into existence. Kimball v. Aetna Ins. Co., 91 Mass. (9 Allen) 540, 543, 85 Am. Dec. 786.

"Representation," as the term is used in the law of insurance, "is a verbal or written statement made by the assured to the underwriter, before the subscription of the policy, as to the existence of some fact or state of facts tending to induce the underwriter more readily to assume the risk by diminishing the estimate he would otherwise have formed of it." Aetna Ins. Co. v. Grube, 6 Minn. 82, 87 (Gil. 32, 36) (citing Ang. Ins. § 147; Byers v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 35 Ohio St. 606, 620, 35 Am. Rep. 623).

Same—Warranty distinguished.

See "Warranty."

REPRESENTATIVE.

See "Lawful Representatives"; "Legal Representative"; "Personal Representative"; "Proper Representative."

A representative is one who stands in the place of another as heir, or in the right of succeeding to an estate of inheritance; one who takes by representation; one who occupies another's place, or succeeds to his rights and liabilities. Lee v. Dill (N. Y.) 39 Barb. 516, 520.

The terms "representatives," "legal representatives," and "personal representatives" of deceased persons were used interchangeably, and primarily meant those artificial representatives, the executors and administrators, who by law represented the deceased, in distinction from the heirs, who were the natural representatives; but as, under statutes of distribution, executors and administrators are no longer the sole representatives of the deceased as to personal property, these words have lost much of their original distinctive force, and are now used to describe either executors and administrators, children or descendants, next of kin or distributees, and, when not applied to those who represent deceased persons, they may mean trustees in insolvency and receivers. Staples v. Lewis, 41 Atl. 815, 71 Conn. 288.

As one having authority to act for another.

In construing a paving contract with a city, which referred to a former contract made by the contractors with the owners of the property, and reciting that, "whereas, the owners and representatives of three-fourths of the property fronting on the street," etc., the court said: "Representatives," we must therefore assume, means legally, and when here used was intended to mean, what the term imports; that is, one having legal authority to act in behalf of the property and bind the owner of record thereof—not merely one not having such authority, but assuming to have it." City of Chicago v. Sherwood, 104 Ill. 549, 554.

Assignees in bankruptcy.

The assignees of a bankrupt are to be considered as the representatives of the bankrupt, within the meaning of an act for enlarging the term granted to a patentee for the enjoyment of his patent, declaring that in case the authority granted by the letters patent should at any time become vested in, or in trust for, more than the number of five persons or their representatives at any one time, otherwise than by devise or succession, all liberties vested in the patentees should become void. Bloxam v. Elsee, 6 Barn. & C. 169, 177.

Beneficiary of insurance policy.

The articles of association of the Odd Fellows' Mutual Benefit Society, organized under Gen. St. 1878, tit. 3, c. 34, state that "the general nature of its business and its general purpose is insuring the lives of the members on the plan of paying to the representatives of every deceased member a certain sum to be assessed on and received by the other members of said association," there being nothing in the statute or elsewhere in the articles of association or by-laws limiting the beneficiaries of such insurance to any particular classes of persons. Held, that the word "representatives," as here used, is to be construed, not in any limited or technical sense, but as meaning and including any person whom the principal may designate, or, if he fail to designate, the person whom the by-laws designate. Walter v. Odd Fellows' Mut. Ben. Soc., 44 N. W. 57, 58, 42 Minn. 204.

Children.

The children of a deceased child of the testator are the representatives of the child, within the meaning of a trust devise providing for the division of a trust estate between the testator's children and the legal representatives of such as may have died. Merrill v. Curtis, 39 Atl. 973, 69 N. H. 206.

Where testator gave the whole of his residuary estate to two brothers, "who, or whose representatives, are to be entitled to possession and enjoyment," such words refer to those who would stand in the place of the brother of the testator; or, in other words, there is a gift by substitution, not dependent upon a precedent estate, but in the nature of an original gift, to take effect if the brother died before the testator. A representative is one who stands in the place of another, of real estate as heir, of personality as next of kin. He is one, also, who takes by representation; and in wills and settlements the terms "representative" and "legal representative" are frequently held to mean heirs and next of kin, and not executors and administrators; and it was so used by testator as to create a substituted gift to the children of his brother or brothers, if one or both died before him. Jones v. Hand, 79 N. Y. Supp. 556, 559, 78 App. Div. 56.

Executor suing individually.

Where promissory notes payable to a foreign executor, as such, are indorsed by him as executor to himself in his individual capacity, and he sues thereon in his own name, he is not to be deemed the representative of a deceased person, so as to exclude the defendant from being a witness in his own favor, under Code, § 399, prohibiting the defendant from testifying in respect to any transactions had personally between deceased and defendant. Buckingham v. Andrews (N. Y.) 34 Barb. 434, 436.

Executor or administrator.

The word "representative" naturally signifies a personal representative—an executor or administrator. In re Phillips' Estate, 55 Atl. 210, 211, 205 Pa. 504, 97 Am. St. Rep. 743.

The term "representative," when applied to those who represent a decedent, includes executors and administrators, unless the context implies heirs and distributees. Shannon's Code Tenn. 1896, § 68.

It is settled that if an inference can be drawn from a will that a testator used the words "personal or legal representatives" to designate individuals answering the description, though not in the strict legal sense of the terms, those persons will be entitled in preference to executors and administrators. Albert v. Albert, 12 Atl. 11, 16, 68 Md. 352 (citing 1 Rep. Leg. 128; Williams, Ex'rs [6th Am. Ed.] 1217-1225).

The "representative" of a deceased person is his executor or administrator, and in that sense alone is the word used in Rev. St. 1881, § 2442, authorizing a suit against heirs, etc., where there has been administration of the intestate debtor's estate, and the defendants have received assets therefrom. Rinard v. West, 92 Ind. 359, 364.

In construing wills, courts have held that the words "representative," "legal representative," and "personal representative" may mean the next of kin or heirs; but the same courts have also held that those words in their ordinary sense are to be understood as synonymous with executors and administrators. Williams says: "The ordinary legal sense of the term 'representatives,' without the addition of 'legal' or 'personal,' is executors or administrators." 2 Williams, Ex'rs (5th Am. Ed.) 1015. In the provision of section 399 of the Code of Procedure allowing parties to be examined as witnesses, except that parties shall not be examined against parties who are representatives of a deceased person in respect to transactions between such deceased person and the witness, the words "representatives of a deceased person" mean executors or administrators. McCray v. McCray (N. Y.) 12 Abb. Prac. 1, 3.

A limitation of a deed to her and her representatives can only mean to her executors and administrators. McLaurin v. Fairly, 59 N. C. 375, 377.

The word "representative," in a policy of insurance effected by the assured on his life, and expressed to be payable on his death to his heirs or representatives, does not embrace a third person; but the policy is payable to the administrator as administrator of the estate of the deceased, and oral declarations of the assured, after receiving the policy, that he intended it for the benefit of a son, are inadmissible. Wason v. Colburn, 99 Mass. 342, 343.

The expression "legal representatives," as used in the statute of 1788 authorizing a remedy by motion by a surety against the legal representatives of a deceased co-surety, may mean, if taken in its more general signification, as synonymous with "lawful," either the lawful representatives of the real estate, or the lawful representatives of the personal estate of the deceased; but since the undertaking between sureties to make contribution is an implied assumpsit, which properly applies to and devolves upon the executor or administrator, but does not devolve upon the heir, it seems more proper to render this expression in the statute according to the subject-matter, and to refer the phrase to the executors and administrators, who lawfully represent and are bound by the implied assumpsit of the deceased, than to the heirs. Lansdale's Adm'rs v. Cox, 23 Ky. (7 T. B. Mon.) 401, 405.

The primary sense of the word "representatives," when used in a bequest of personal property, is the same as that of "legal representatives" or "personal representatives," and each of them is equivalent to executors or administrators. Brent v. Washington (Va.) 18 Grat. 526, 533.

Grantee.

The word "representatives" has no technical meaning in law. It may signify heirs or executors, or a representative may mean one who is substituted for another in any business; but the word never signifies a grantee. A partition, under the statute of March 16, 1785 (1 Jones & V. Laws, p. 201), in which the commissioners awarded certain lands in severalty to B.'s representatives, without naming them, was void for uncertainty of the persons who were to take. Jackson v. Tibbits (N. Y.) 9 Cow. 241, 252.

Heirs not equivalent.

"Representatives," as used in a deed providing that, in case the grantee should survive the grantor, the premises should go to the children and their representatives of the grantee, cannot be construed as equivalent to "heirs." Mattocks v. Brown, 103 Pa. 16, 21, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. 365, 366.

A deed provided that on certain contingencies the land should "go to and be vested in the five children and their representatives of the said C." Held, that the word "representatives," so used, is not equivalent to the word "heirs," and that the deed passed nothing to the children but an estate for life. Brown v. Mattocks, 103 Pa. 16, 21.

A reservation by the grantor of land to himself and his "representatives, forever," of the right of passage over the land conveyed, should be construed to reserve only a life easement, and not an estate in fee. A reservation to himself and "representatives, forever," is not equivalent to a reservation to himself and his heirs, since the word "heirs" is required by statute to create an estate in fee. Clafin v. Boston & A. R. Co., 32 N. E. 659, 660, 157 Mass. 489, 20 L. R. A. 638.

As heir, devisee, or administrator.

"Representatives of deceased persons," as used in Gen. St. 1888, § 1094, making the declarations of deceased persons relevant to the matter in issue admissible in evidence in actions against their representatives, refers to either executors, administrators, or some person who takes a portion of the estate of the deceased in consequence of his death either as devisee or heir. Lockwood v. Lockwood, 14 Atl. 293, 295, 56 Conn. 106.

Gen. St. 1888, § 1094, provides that in actions by or against the representative of a deceased person, the entries, memoranda, and declarations of deceased may be received as evidence. Held that, to constitute one a representative of a deceased person within the meaning of the statute, he must take some portion of his estate in consequence of his death, either as heir or devisee, or else he must be strictly a personal representative, as executor or administrator. Had the statute used the word "personal" before the word "representative," the admission of such evidence would be confined to suits by or against such administrator. Pixley v. Eddy, 15 Atl. 758, 760, 56 Conn. 336.

A representative is one that stands in the place of another, as heir, or in the right of succeeding to the estate by inheritance; one who takes by representation; one who occupies another's place and succeeds to his rights and liabilities. Representatives of a deceased person are real or personal; the former being the heirs at law, and the latter being ordinarily the executors or administrators. The term "representatives" includes both classes. When the personal representatives at law are intended in a statute, they are so named; and there is no expression of an intent to limit the protection and benefit of this exception to the personal representatives. The words "representatives of a deceased person," in Code, § 399, as it stood prior to the amendment of 1862, allowing parties to be examined as witnesses, except against parties who are representatives of a deceased person and the witness, includes both real and personal representatives. Lee v. Dill (N. Y.) 16 Abb. Prac. 92, 96 (citing Webst. Dict.).

"Representative" means in law one who represents or stands in place of another. It is frequently used to denote the personal representative—in other words, the administrator or executor—of a deceased person; but it has also a broader meaning, and as used in Sand. & H. Dig. § 5934, relative to the revival of an action against the representatives of a defendant, the term includes both the heirs and administrator or executor of a defendant. State Fair Ass'n v. Townsend, 63 S. W. 65, 66, 69 Ark. 215.

A representative is one who stands in the place of another as heir, or in the right of succeeding to an estate of inheritance; one who takes by representation; one who occupies another's place and succeeds to his rights and liabilities. Executors and administrators represent, in all matters in which the personal estate is concerned, the person of the testator or intestate, as the heir does that of his ancestor. Representatives of a deceased person are real or personal; the former being the heirs at law, and the latter ordinarily the executors or administrators. The term "representative" includes both classes. When the personal representatives alone are intended in the statute, they are so named. Laws 1839-40 provided that, where one jointly bound with another for the payment of a debt should die in the lifetime of his co-obligor, the representative of the deceased might be charged by virtue of the obligation. The heirs of a deceased co-obligor were held liable on such an obligation; the word "representative" including heirs, as well as executors and administrators. Allen v. Stovall, 63 S. W. 863, 866, 94 Tex. 618.

As heir or next of kin.

A representative is one who stands in the place of another as heir, or in the right of succeeding to an estate of inheritance. The term as used in the statutes of New York, as well as when it is used in wills and settlements, frequently means heirs or the next of kin, and not necessarily executors and administrators. Lee v. Dill (N. Y.) 89 Barb. 516, 520.

In no known judicial sense can the heir or next of kin be the representative of a deceased, until the administration has been committed to him. Alexander v. Barfield, 6 Tex. 400, 403.

As issue.

"Representatives," as used by a testator in making a bequest to certain legatees "and their representatives," means "issue." Bronson v. Phelps' Estate, 5 Atl. 552, 554, 58 Vt. 612. See, also, Horsepool v. Watson, 3 Ves. 383, 384.

Judgment creditor.

The word "representatives," as used in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5291, providing that the sheriff shall pay over moneys collected on executions to the clerk of the court issuing the writ, and if, after the satisfaction of the judgment, any proceeds of sale remain, the clerk shall pay such proceeds to the judgment debtor or his representatives, is broad enough to include judgment creditors having a lien on the surplus. Mayer v. Morgan, 66 Pac. 123, 130, 26 Wash. 71.

Lineal descendants.

"Representatives," within the meaning of the statute of distributions, where children and the legal representatives of any of them who may be dead are spoken of, means neither heirs generally, nor executors and administrators, but lineal descendants, taking by representation per stirpes, and not according to their number. Ketchum v. Corse, 31 Atl. 486, 487, 65 Conn. 85.

As next of kin.

"Representative," as used in a will providing that the remainder of the property should be distributed and go to the personal representatives of a certain person, who shall be entitled to his personal estate according to law, means those entitled by right of consanguinity; that is, who would be entitled by natural right, by relationship, by being next of kin. Davies v. Davies, 11 Atl. 500, 503, 55 Conn. 319.

In a gift of personal property, where the substitutes of the primary legatee are described by the word "representatives," those will take who have the right to represent the primary legatee as next of kin under the statute of distributions, and not his executors or administrators. Brokaw v. Hudson's Ex'rs, 27 N. J. Eq. (12 C. E. Green) 135.

The word "representatives," as used in a will devising and bequeathing property to the testator's children for life, and providing for the distribution thereof to his grandchildren and the representatives of any deceased grandchild, means those distributees of a deceased grandchild living at the time fixed for distribution. In re Bates, 34 N. E. 266, 267, 159 Mass. 252.

"Representatives," as used in a policy of life insurance, providing that, in case of death, the sum insured shall be paid to the "heirs or representatives" of the party insured, will be construed to mean "heirs or next of kin," if it appears from the context that the object of the assured was to make provision for his family, and not that the money should go to his executors or administrators, to be administered as ordinary assets of his estate. "Legal representatives and personal representatives, in the general or professional sense, means simply executors or administrators. Though this is the primary legal meaning, they are often construed differently, if it is clear that the intention was to vest the estate in a different class of persons." Loos v. John Hancock Mut Life Ins. Co., 41 Mo. 538, 541.

President of corporation.

The president of a corporation having the powers usually incident to that office is a "representative" of the corporation, in the sense in which that term is used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, § 23, authorizing suits against a corporation to be commenced in any county in which such corporation has an agency or representative. Sharp v. Damon Mound Oil Co., 72 S. W. 1043, 1044, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 562.

Proponents of will.

The proponents of a will are the legal representatives of the testator. Appeal of Barber, 27 Atl. 973, 981, 63 Conn. 393, 22 L. R. A. 90.

Special agent.

A representative is one chosen by a principal to exercise for him a power or perform for him a trust. In that sense the mayor of a city is a representative for some purposes, the members of the common council for others, and the members of the board of education for still others. The idea of a representative implies, not merely a person chosen for some purpose, but a person chosen for a particular purpose, and confided in to represent his principal therein. One person may be thought suited to one duty, and another to another, and the right to be represented implies a right, not merely to name the person, but also to designate the trust that shall be confided to him. People v. Common Council of Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 245, 15 Am. Rep. 202.

Substituted trustee.

A person appointed by the court as a substitute for a deceased trustee is not a representative of the deceased. Guery v. Kinsler, 3 S. C. 423, 426.

As successor in interest.

The word "representative," in Prac. Act, § 393, as amended by Laws 1863, c. 70, providing that no person shall be allowed to testify when the adverse party, or the party for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended, is the representative of a deceased person, when the facts to be proved transpire before the death of such deceased person, applies to the executor or administrator of the estate of a deceased person, and also to the person or party who has succeeded to the right of deceased, whether by purchase, or descent, or operation of law. Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 36, 35 Am. Dec. 157.

The word "representative," as used in Gen. St. 1894, § 5171, providing that an action does not abate by the death of a party, if the cause of action survives, but may be continued, on motion, against his representatives or successors in interest, is not necessarily limited to the executors or administrators of the deceased person. The usual meaning of the term "personal representative" should include, not only executors and administrators, but also all who occupy a position held by the deceased party, succeeding to his rights and liabilities. Willoughby v. St. Paul German Ins. Co., 83 N. W. 377, 378, 80 Minn. 432.

Code Civ. Proc. § 329, excludes as incompetent, with certain specified exceptions, the testimony of one having a direct legal interest in the event of the suit concerning transactions where conversations occurring between the witness and the deceased person, as against the representative of the latter. Held, that the word "representative" includes any person or party who has succeeded to the rights of the decedent, whether by purchase, descent, or operation of law. Kroh v. Heins, 67 N. W. 771, 773, 48 Neb. 691.

The word "representative," in Code, § 324, providing that "no person having a direct legal interest in the result of any civil cause or proceeding shall be a competent witness therein when the adverse party is an executor, administrator, or legal representative of a deceased person," etc., is used to designate the person who succeeds to the rights of the deceased, whether by purchase, descent, or operation of law. Magemau v. Bell, 13 N. W. 277, 278, 13 Neb. 247.

"Representative," as used in Code, § 320, providing that no person having a direct legal interest in the result of any civil action or proceeding, when the adverse party is the representative of a deceased person, shall be permitted to testify to any transaction or conversation had between the deceased person and the witness, includes any person or party who has succeeded to the rights of the decedent, whether by purchase, descent, or by operation of law. Of course, the question is whether he represents the deceased in the litigation in which the evidence is offered. The fact that he may be the general representative of the deceased will make no difference, unless he represents him in the question which is in dispute in the litigation. If an executor or administrator is engaged in litigating some matter which is entirely foreign to the interests of the estate which he represents, the statute, of course, has no application. McCoy v. Conrad, 89 N. W. 665, 666, 64 Neb. 150.

A representative is one who exercises power derived from another, and, as used in a statute prohibiting a party to a suit from giving evidence in an action against the representative of a decedent, it is held that the word "representative" was intended by the lawgivers to designate the party who succeeds to the rights of the deceased, either by purchase, descent, or operation of law, and hence includes an heir. Brown v. Forbes, 96 N. W. 52, 54, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 888.

Prac. Act, § 376, provides that no person shall be allowed to testify when the other party to the transaction, or opposite party in the action, or the party for whose benefit the action is prosecuted or defended, is the representative of a deceased person, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of the deceased person. A person was employed by another to work at a quartz mill for an association, to whom the latter person had assigned a lease thereof. After the death of the assignor, the employé sued the association for the work and labor done. It was held that none of the association was sued as the representative of deceased, and hence there was nothing in the section of the practice act to prevent plaintiff from testifying as to the conversation and employment by deceased. Fulton v. Day, 8 Nev. 80, 83.

One who has possession of personal property cast on him by the death of the owner is entitled to defend such possession, and, when sued therefor, becomes such a representative of the deceased that plaintiff cannot testify to matters equally within the knowledge of deceased, under 3 How. Ann. St. § 7545, excluding such testimony in actions by or against the representative of a deceased person. Burke v. Dunn, 117 Mich. 430, 431, 75 N. W. 931.

Surviving coplaintiff.

Code Civ. Proc. § 45, declares that, in case of the death of a party to an action, the court may allow an action to continue by or against his personal representative or his successor in interest. Held, that the term "representative," as there used, was not necessarily limited to a deceased party's administrator, but included as well a joint plaintiff, in whose sole name the court ordered the action to proceed as survivor, on the death of the other plaintiff. Mead v. Weaver, 60 N. W. 385, 387, 42 Neb. 149.

Surviving partner.

Surviving partners are not "representatives of a deceased person," within the meaning of a statute making parties to an action by or against the representatives of a deceased person incompetent as witnesses. Crane v. Gloster, 13 Nev. 279, 280.

REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY.

The term "representative capacity" is a well-understood term, and only applies to a party acting for and in behalf of some other party or estate, and not for himself personally. When a party sues or is sued in such capacity, it is necessary that the capacity in which he sues or is sued appear in the title to show the relation between the party and the estate, and that he is in court, not for himself, but for the estate that he represents. Partners occupy no such position. In suing or being sued they represent themselves only. Van Brunt & Davis Co. v. Harrigan, 65 N. W. 421, 422, 8 S. D. 96.

Where a creditor of an insolvent estate purchased property at an executor's sale on credit, the executor, in bringing suit for the purchase price, was the real party in interest, inasmuch as the contract was made with him, and the promise to pay ran to him, and he was personally accountable for the price of the assets which he has sold. For the same reason it is held that the debt did not belong to him in his representative capacity, within the meaning of the statute requiring that, when an action or special proceeding is commenced by an executor upon a cause of action belonging to him in his representative capacity, it must be brought in that capacity. "The phrase 'representative capacity,'" says the court, "relates to debts which belong to the testator, and come to the executor through his representation of the deceased, rather than as a result of his own action." Thompson v. Whitmarsh, 2 N. E. 273, 274, 100 N. Y. 35.

Section 1814, Code Civ. Proc., requires that an action be brought by an executor or administrator "upon a cause of action belonging to him in his representative capacity." Held, that an action by an administrator with the will annexed to recover possession of certain notes, bonds, and mortgages alleged to belong to the estate, but made payable to a former executrix personally, and delivered by her to defendant for safekeeping, was not an action "belonging" to the administrator "in his representative capacity," and should not have been brought in such capacity. Buckland v. Gallup, 11 N. E. 843, 845, 105 N. Y. 453.

An action is brought in a "representative capacity," within Code, § 8246, when the plaintiff, as administrator, having paid a mortgage executed by the decedent, sues certain grantees of the land, claiming that by such payment the estate is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. Weeks v. Garvey, 4 N. Y. Supp. 891, 892, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 562.

REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS.

"Representative in Congress" is a phrase synonymous with "member of Congress." Butler v. Hopper (U. S.) 4 Fed. Cas. 904, 905.

REPRIEVE.

"A reprieve," says Mr. Bishop, "signifies the suspension for a time of the execution of a sentence which has been pronounced." Blackstone says that a "reprieve is the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, and that the word is from 'reprendre,' meaning to take back." Webster defines the word "reprieve" as "the temporary suspension of the execution of a sentence, especially the sentence of death." Butler v. State, 97 Ind. 373, 374.

"A reprieve, from 'reprendre,' to take back, is the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, whereby the execution is suspended." 4 Bl. Comm. 394. It operates only in capital cases, and is granted either by the favor of his majesty himself, or the judge or justices before whom the prisoner was tried, in his behalf, or from the regular operation of law, in circumstances which render an immediate execution inconsistent with humanity or justice. Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio

St. 457, 460, 461, 23 Am. Rep. 762 (citing Obit. Cr. Law, 757).

Under the power to pardon at common law, the power of the King to reprieve was included. Under the Constitution of 1844, giving the power to the Governor to grant a reprieve, and Act April 16, 1846, the term "reprieve" is merely used to signify the postponement of the sentence for a time. It does not and cannot defeat the ultimate execution of a judgment of the court. It merely delays it. Clifford v. Heller, 42 Atl. 155, 159, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 57 L. R. A. 312.

Suspension distinguished.

A reprieve is the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, whereby the execution is suspended. It operates in capital cases only. Chit. Cr. Law, 757. The distinction between a reprieve and a suspension of sentence is that a reprieve postpones the execution of the sentence to a day certain, whereas a suspension is for an indefinite time. Carnal v. People (N. Y.) 1 Parker, Cr. R. 262. Therefore, where a reprieve is granted by a Governor, it is the duty of the sheriff, on the expiration of the time, to execute the sentence without further orders by the court. In re Buchanan, 40 N. E. 883, 886, 146 N. Y. 264.

The term "reprieve," as applied to convicts, has a definite meaning. It postpones the time of execution to a definite day, while a suspension is for an indefinite period. Carnal v. People (N. Y.) 1 Parker, Cr. R. 262, 266.

Stay of execution.

"Reprieve," as used in Const. art. 5, § 17, giving the Governor the power to grant a reprieve, cannot be considered to include the stay of execution of a death sentence, the power to grant which was conferred on the Supreme Court by Rev. St. 1881, § 1888. Parker v. State, 35 N. E. 179, 180, 135 Ind. 534, 23 L. R. A. 859.

REPRISAL.

See "Letters of Marque and Reprisal."

REPRISES.

"Reprises" is not a word in common use, even in the law. The dictionaries give it as a law term, with the following definition: "Deductions and duties paid yearly out of a manor and lands; as rent charge, rent seck, pensions, annuities, and the like." Webst. Int. Dict. "Yearly deductions, duties, or payments out of a manor and lands; as rent charge, rent seck, annuities, and the like." Cent. Dict. "Deductions and payments (as for annuities) out of lands; as a manor's yearly value over and above reprises." Stand. Dict. "Deductions or payments out of the value of lands; as rent charges, annuities, etc." Worcest. Dict. "Deductions and duties which are yearly paid out of a manor and lands, as rent charge, rent seck, pensions, cordies, annuities, etc.; so that, when the clear yearly value of a manor is spoken of, it is said to be so much annum ultra reprises—besides all reprises." Burrill, Law Dict. (citing Cowell). "A resumption or taking back, used for such deductions as rent charges or annuities." Jac. Law Dict. "The deductions and payments out of lands, annuities, and the like, are called reprises, because they are taken back. When we speak of the clear yearly value of an estate, we say it is worth so much a year, ultra all reprises." Bouv. Law Dict. "Deductions on account of payments and expenses." And. Law Dict. Appellants rely strongly on the phrase "a yearly deduction," and argue that the term cannot include something that is sporadic and may never be chargeable against the land. But it does not appear that the yearly feature is of the essence of the definition. Only two of the four lexicographers quoted use the word "yearly" or "annual" in this connection, except in giving examples for illustration, and it is notably absent from three of the four law dictionaries. But, in addition to the general use of the word, we have a very important and persuasive legislative and judicial construction of it. As a legal, if not a popular, term it has survived longer in Pennsylvania than it appears to have done elsewhere. In the act of January 12, 1705-06, "for taking lands in execution for payment of debts" (2 Stat. [Ed. 1896] p. 244), it is provided that upon recovery of judgment and award of execution, to be levied upon lands, etc., it shall not be lawful for the sheriff to sell any such lands, etc., "which shall or may yield yearly rents or profits beyond all reprises sufficient within the space of seven years to pay or satisfy such debt or damages," but such lands shall be delivered to the execution creditor until the debt be levied by a reasonable extent, as upon writs of elegit in England, provided that, if the clear profits of such lands shall not be found by inquest of twelve men to be sufficient within seven years, etc., then the sheriff shall so certify, and a writ of venditioni exponas shall issue. The context of the word "reprises" here, and its use in connection with "clear profits," makes its meaning plain. It means such deductions as are required to be made from gross income in order to ascertain the clear or net profit; not deductions for bad management, or personal shortcomings of the holder of the land, or from fire or flood or similar casualty, but deductions for burdens incident to the land as such, certainly including taxes, charges, and impositions of all kinds which attach to the land itself. And such has been the judicial understanding of the word. Thus, in Mellon v. Campbell, 11 Pa. (1 Jones) 415, it is said by Coulter, J.:

"It is the duty of the jury to fix the annual clear value beyond all reprises, which include expenses of repairs, taxes, costs, trouble," etc. So in Near v. Watts (Pa.) 8 Watts, 319, Kennedy, J., says: "The inquest was to ascertain the clear yearly value of the estate, defraying all expenses and charges usually incident and necessary for the enjoyment thereof." And again, in the same case, drawing the distinction between an extent upon a life estate and upon a fee simple, he says, in regard to the latter, the inquest should "take into consideration all the liens existing against the estate that are or shall become payable within the seven years, as composing in this particular instance a portion of what has been considered reprises, because, unless the aggregate of the rents, issues, and profits beyond the amount of all such liens, including, also, what shall be deemed necessary to meet repairs and discharge all public assessments thereon, will pay," etc., the inquest return that it is insufficient. The act of 1705 remained on the statute books until it was substantially reenacted by the existing act of June 16, 1836, and the legislative and judicial use of the word "reprises" has thus continued in the same sense for nearly 200 years. From these definitions and history of the word it is clear that in the essence of their meaning reprises are deductions necessary to be made from a gross fund in order to show a net result, or, in the language of the statutes, a "clear profit." Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Van Storch, 46 Atl. 375, 376, 196 Pa. 102.

REPROACH.

The word "reproach" is synonymous with the words "censure" and "obloquy." Bettner v. Holt, 11 Pac. 713, 716, 70 Cal. 270.

REPRODUCTION.

Reproduction is the repetition or the act of reproducing, and it has such meaning in the rule that a purchaser may repair, but not reconstruct or reproduce, a patented device or machine. Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson (U. S.) 112 Fed. 146, 150, 50 C. C. A. 159, 55 L. R. A. 692.

REPUBLIC.

"A republic, acknowledged as such by our own government, is an independent sovereign power—in other words, a state—just as certainly and in the same sense as a monarchy, limited or absolute; and every state is a person, an artificial person, in a more extensive and far higher sense than an ordinary corporation." Republic of Mexico v. De Arangoiz, 12 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Duer) 664, 634.

A republic is a government for the protection of the citizen against the exercise of all unjust power. It is a government administered by a few, as the representatives of the people and for their benefit. With this as the cardinal object of the state government, it has no privileges, except such as are conferred on it by the Constitution, by act of the Legislature, or such as are necessary for the due administration of the government. State v. Harris (S. C.) 2 Bailey, 598, 599.

REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE.

The phrases "Republican candidate" and "candidate of the Republican party" are synonymous terms, and are so universally employed or understood, and designating one in a petition of nomination as the Republican candidate does not affect its sufficiency. Wilkins v. Duffy (Ky.) 70 S. W. 668, 671.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT.

A "republican government," within the meaning of the term as used in the federal Constitution, "is one constructed on the principle that the supreme power resides in the body of the people." Per Wilson, J., in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U. S. (2 Dall.) 419, 457, 1 L. Ed. 440.

REPUBLISH.

To "republish" means to publish again that which has been before published, so that, as used in 2 Rev. St. c. 6, tit. 2, § 53, providing that, if a testator execute a second will, the revocation of that will shall not revive the first, unless he republish it, it means to publish it in the same manner as it was originally published.—In re Stickney's Will, 52 N. Y. Supp. 929, 931, 31 App. Div. 382.

REPUDIATION.

The use of the term "repudiation," in an instruction on the question of the repudiation by a bank of the illegal act of its cashier, without expressly defining the term "repudiation," was not objectionable, since the word was not a word of rare use; nor was it a technical term applicable to any branch of learning or science, but it was a word in common use and commonly understood, and, as applicable to the case and used in the instruction, it was used, in its usual and ordinary acceptance, to mean a denial of any responsibility for the act of the cashier. Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Black, 59 N. W. 283, 284, 91 Iowa, 490.

A mere refusal to pay money when due, especially a refusal based upon the terms of the contract and in good faith, although mistakenly believed to be justified by it, is not a repudiation of the contract, and does not warrant a rescission. Daley v. People's Building, Loan & Saving Ass'n, 59 N. E. 452, 453, 178 Mass. 13.

REPUGNANCE.

One definition given of "repugnance" is "inconsistency." These words, though not exactly synonymous, may be and often are used interchangeably. Swan v. United States, 9 Pac. 931, 933, 3 Wyo. 151.

REPUTE.

In prosecution for the seduction of a female of good repute, the meaning of "repute" is not to be limited to the female's reputation for chastity, and as signifying the "esteem" in which she is held for chastity in the neighborhood where she resided or among those with whom she associated, but defendant might give evidence of acts of lewdness or unchastity with others prior to the alleged seduction. State v. Wheeler, 7 S. W. 103, 104, 94 Mo. 252.

"Repute," as used in Rev. St. § 1259, making it an offense to seduce any female of good repute, means character reputed or attributed; established opinion. State v. Patterson, 88 Mo. 88, 104, 57 Am. Rep. 374.

As to pedigree.

"Repute," in matters of pedigree, means such declarations and statements respecting the pedigree as have come down from generation to generation from deceased relatives, in such a way that even though it cannot be said or determined which of the deceased relatives originally made them or was personally cognizant of the facts therein stated, yet it appears that such declarations and statements were made as family history ante litem motam by a deceased person connected by blood or marriage with the person whose pedigree is to be established. In re Hurlburt's Estate, 35 Atl. 77, 81, 68 Vt. 366, 35 L. R. A. 794.

REPUTABLE.

In its ordinary sense, "reputable" means worthy of repute or distinction; held in esteem; and what is reputable in a dental college, within the statute providing that a diploma, to entitle its holder to a license to practice dentistry without examination, must be issued by a "reputable" college, must be determined from the standpoint of men of scientific attainments in the line of work it represents. State v. Chittenden, 88 N. W. 587, 592, 112 Wis. 569 (citing Illinois State Board of Dental Examiners v. People, 123 Ill. 227, 245, 13 N. E. 201, 204).

A college requiring preliminary examination before admittance, and requiring students before graduation to attend two full and regular courses of lectures and practical instruction, might in other respects lack some of the elements making such an institution "reputable." Illinois State Board of Dental Examiners v. People, 13 N. E. 201, 204, 123 Ill. 227.

The term "reputable dental college or university" shall be defined as follows: A dental college or university requiring a preliminary examination for admission to its course of study, and which requires, as requisite for the granting of a dental degree, attendance on at least three courses of lectures of six months each, no two of which said courses to be held within one year, and having a full faculty of professors in all the different branches of dental education, to wit, anatomy and oral surgery, physiology, chemistry, materia medica, therapeutics, operative dentistry, and prosthetic dentistry, and clinical instructions in the last two named. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 9461.

REPUTABLE FREEHOLDERS.

A deed for lands to many persons for a single consideration, and with the purpose of qualifying them to sign recommendations for inn and tavern licenses, is fraudulent, and will not constitute the grantees reputable freeholders, within the New Jersey statute requiring such petitions to be signed by "reputable" freeholders. Austin v. Atlantic City, 3 Atl. 65, 67, 48 N. J. Law (19 Vroom) 118.

REPUTATION.

See "General Reputation"; "Notorious Reputation."

Reputation is the fruit of one's walk and conversation—the result of deportment. Cauley v. State, 9 South. 456, 92 Ala. 71.

Reputation is a sort of right to enjoy the good opinion of others, and is as capable of growth, and has as real an existence, as an arm or leg. It is a personal right, and an injury to reputation (as by a libel) is a personal injury within the meaning of statutes providing that injuries to a person shall not abate. Jones v. Bradstreet Co., 13 S. E. 250, 251, 87 Ga. 79.

As character.

See, also, "Character."

The "reputation" of a witness for truth is equivalent to his character for truth. General reputation is general character, common opinion, that in which there is general concurrence; or, in other words, general reputation or character is presumed to be indicative of actual character. Knode v. Williamson, 84 U. S. (17 Wall.) 586, 588, 21 L. Ed. 670.

"Reputation," as used in Act 1864, c. 33, providing that evidence of facts or reputation proving that a person is habitually and by practice a thief shall be sufficient for his conviction, is satisfactorily establishing the fact that he is a common thief, and is synonymous with "character." Evidence of the character of the person accused is evidence of his reputation. World v. State, 50 Md. 49, 54.

Doubtless there is a distinction observed by careful writers between "character" and "reputation"; "character," where the distinction is observed, signifying the reality, and "reputation" merely what is reported or understood from report to be the reality about a person or thing. The word "character," however, is often used as synonymous with and in the sense of "reputation." State v. Wilson, 1 Atl. 415, 416, 15 R. I. 180.

"Character consists of the qualities which constitute the individual; reputation, the sum of opinions entertained concerning him. The former is interior, the latter external; one is the substance, the other the shadow." In re Spencer, 7 Cent. Law J. 84-85.

"Reputation" and "character" "are not synonymous terms. Character is what a man or woman is morally, while reputation is what he or she is reputed to be. Yet reputation is the estimate which the community has of the person's character, and it is the belief that moral character is wanting in the individual that renders him unworthy of belief; that is to say, that reputation is evidence of character, and if the reputation is bad for truth, or reputation is bad in other respects affecting the moral character, then the jury may infer that the character is bad and the witness not reliable." Leverich v. Frank, 6 Or. 212, 213.

Webster defines "reputation" to be good name; the credit, honor, or character which is derived from a favorable public opinion or esteem, and character by report. "It is very true that the word 'character' is often used colloquially in the same sense as 'reputation,' but such is not its true signification. According to Webster, 'character' signifies the peculiar qualities impressed by nature or habit on a person, which distinguish him from others. These constitute real character, and the qualities which he is supposed to possess constitute his estimated character or reputation." Andre v. State, 5 Iowa (5 Clarke) 389, 394, 68 Am. Dec. 708.

"Character" and "reputation" are the same. The reputation which a man has in society is his character. Where, in judicial proceedings, character is made a part of the inquiry, it never can be proved by the proof of particular facts. General report is general reputation; general reputation is general character. A person may testify of his knowledge of the general character for truth of a witness which he has derived from common report. Kimmel v. Kimmel (Pa.) 3 Serg. & R. 336, 338.

As general reputation.

"Reputation," as used in a question to a witness as to the reputation of a witness whom it was sought to impeach, meant "general reputation." French v. Millard, 2 Ohio St. 44, 50.

"Reputation" is said to be the common knowledge of a community. Chellis v. Chapman, 125 N. Y. 214, 28 N. E. 308, 11 L. R. A. 784 (cited in Smith v. Compton, 52 Atl. 386, 388, 67 N. J. Law, 548, 58 L. R. A. 480).

At common law, marriage may be established by cohabitation and "reputation." But there must be a general reputation of the parties that they are husband and wife, and a conflict in such reputation will not establish the marriage. And reputation in such a case consists of the belief and speech of the people who have an opportunity to know the parties, and have heard of and observed their manner of living. Ashford v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 80 Mo. App. 638, 644.

As popular estimation.

Reputation is the estimation in which a person is held by others, especially the popular opinion. A critic has said that "character lives in a man; reputation outside of him." State v. Ussery, 24 S. E. 414, 415, 118 N. C. 1177.

"Reputation," as used in the statement of the rule that cohabitation and reputation are necessary to ground a presumption of marriage, means the speech of the people who have an opportunity to know the parties. Commonwealth v. Stump, 53 Pa. (3 P. F. Smith) 132, 135, 91 Am. Dec. 198.

Reputation is no other than the hearsay of those who may be supposed to have been acquainted with the fact handed down from one to another. Bliss v. Johnson, 38 N. E. 446, 447, 162 Mass. 323 (citing Higham v. Ridgway, 10 East, 109, 120); State v. Reed, 7 South. 132, 133, 41 La. Ann. 581.

"Reputation" is defined to be the concurrence of many voices to the same fact. Deputy v. Harris (Del.) 40 Atl. 714, 715, 1 Marv. 100.

"Reputation is the estimation in which one is held, and this may be indicated by the way in which the person whose character is under consideration is received and regarded in society, and may be made manifest by acts and treatment as well as by words." Peters v. Bourneau, 22 Ill. App. 177, 179.

A person's "reputation for truth" is made by what his neighbors generally say of him in this regard. If they generally say he is untruthful, that makes his general reputation for truth bad. Upon the other hand, if a man's neighbors say nothing whatever about him as to his truthfulness, that fact of itself is evidence that his general reputation for truth is good. Treschman v. Treschman, 61 N. E. 961, 966, 28 Ind. App. 206.

A woman's reputation for chastity is what the people of her acquaintance generally say of her in this regard; that is, the general credit for chastity which she bears among her neighbors and acquaintances. If a woman's neighbors and acquaintances say nothing of her, or do not question her character for chastity, then her reputation in this regard should be considered good. The best character is generally that which is the least talked about. Therefore the negative evidence of a witness that he never heard anything against the character of a woman for chastity on whose behalf he has been called—that is, that he never heard her conduct criticised, condemned, or even talked about—is admissible upon the trial where the reputation of the woman for chastity is in question, and is strong evidence of the woman's good repute. State v. Bryan, 8 Pac. 260, 266, 34 Kan. 63 (citing Reg. v. Rowton, 10 Cox, 34; Gandolfo v. State, 11 Ohio St. 114; 1 Whart. Ev. § 49).

As to pedigree.

"Reputation," in matters of pedigree, means such declarations and statements respecting the pedigree as have come down from generation to generation from deceased relatives in such a way that, even though it cannot be said or determined which of the deceased relatives originally made them or was personally cognizant of the facts therein stated, yet it appears that such declarations and statements were made as family history ante litem motam by a deceased person connected by blood or marriage with the person whose pedigree is to be established. In re Hurlburt's Estate, 35 Atl. 77, 81, 68 Vt. 366, 35 L. R. A. 794.

REPUTED CHARACTER.

The reputed character of a person is said to be the slow-spreading influence of opinion arising out of the deportment of an individual in the society in which he moves, as distinguished from his real character, which is that impressed by nature, traits, or habits upon a person. Wright v. City of Crawfordsville, 42 N. E. 227, 229, 142 Ind. 636.

REPUTED HOUSE OF PROSTITUTION.

The term "reputed house of prostitution or assignation," as used in the Penal Code, includes all premises which by common fame or report are used for the purpose of prostitution or assignation. Pen. Code N. Y. 1903, § 718.

REPUTED LIQUOR SHOP.

Act 1877, forbidding the keeping open of a "reputed liquor shop" on the day of any electors' meeting, means a shop with the reputation of selling liquors, gained by sales on other days than merely days on which electors' meetings are held. The reputation proved need not be that of selling liquors on the days of electors' meetings only. Reputation is necessarily of slow growth, and could not be well acquired within a few specified hours of a particular day occurring ordinarily but once a year. State v. Cady, 47 Conn. 44, 46.

REPUTED OWNER.

Evidence that a husband signed a contract for street work in front of a lot, the record title to which was in the wife, and stated to the contractors that the lot was community property, is sufficient to sustain a finding that the husband was the "reputed owner" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1191, as amended, providing that any person performing work on a street in front of a lot, at the request of the reputed owner, shall have a lien on the lot for work and materials, the words "reputed owner" importing merely a supposition or opinion derived or made up from outward appearances. Santa Cruz Rock Pav. Co. v. Lyons (Cal.) 43 Pac. 599, 601.

REPUTED THIEVES.

1 St. 3 Geo. IV, c. 55, § 21, relating to the apprehension of "reputed thieves" without warrant, only extends to persons generally reputed to be thieves, and not to one suspected of a particular theft. Cowles v. Dunbar, 2 Car. & P. 565, 567.

REQUEST.

See "Instance and Request."

Webster defines "request" to mean to ask; to solicit; to express desire for. Johnson v. Clem, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 860, 867 (quoting Webster, Dict.).

As at the instance of.

"Request," as contained in Laws 1875, c. 397, § 2, giving a lien on real estate to "any person who at the request of owner of any lot, etc., grades, fills in or improves the same," for his work done and materials furnished, is used in the same sense as the word "instance" in section 1 of the same act, providing that "every person performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in the construction, etc., of any building, etc., shall have a lien on the same for the work or labor done or materials furnished by each respectively, whether done or furnished at the instance of the owner of the building or other improvement for his agent." Cornell v. Barney, 94 N. Y. 394, 399.

As imposing a duty.

In a will, "request" may impose a duty. In re Byers' Estate, 40 Atl. 524, 525, 186 Pa. 404 (citing Hutton v. Hutton, 41 N. J. Eq. [14 Stew.] 267, 3 Atl. 882; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 138).

As allegation of employment.

The statement in a lien notice given by a street contractor that assignor performed labor; etc., "at the request of defendant," is equivalent to the phrase that "the assignor was employed by the defendant," as required to be alleged in such notice by 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4835. Young v. Barzone, 66 Pac. 135, 139, 26 Wash. 4.

Implied request.

The words "instance and request," in an allegation in a petition that the plaintiff performed services for the defendant at his instance and request, do not operate to limit the plaintiff to proof of an express contract, but he may support his petition by evidence of facts giving rise to an implied contract. Columbus, H. V. & T. Ry. Co. v. Gaffney, 61 N. E. 152, 154, 65 Ohio St. 104.

The word "request," as used in reference to the law that a testator must "request" the witnesses to his will to sign it, would ordinarily be understood as meaning "ask," but such is not its meaning in this connection, and a request may be shown by the testator's assent to the writing. Gross v. Burneston, 46 Atl. 993, 994, 91 Md. 383.

Instigation distinguished.

To say that one "requested" another to do an act does not imply that there was anything wrong in the act, but to say that one "instigated" another to do an act does imply that the act itself was wrongful. The word is never used lawfully with reference to a good, virtuous, lawful act. Cone v. Ivins, 35 Pac. 933, 938, 4 Wyo. 203.

Option to refuse not imported.

"Request," as used in a will in which the testator "requests" his wife to make provision for the testator's mother and sister, should not be construed as importing an option to refuse, and excluding the idea of obedience as corresponding duty, but to give a recoverable legacy. Colton v. Colton, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 1173, 127 U. S. 300, 32 L. Ed. 138.

Preliminary act imported.

A vote of the members of a religious society on approval of proposed amendments is not a "request," within a provision of its constitution providing that a change therein cannot be granted unless two-thirds of its society request it, the word "request" being used in its ordinary import, and the provision meaning that such request must precede any action looking to a change in the constitution. Philomath College v. Wyatt, 31 Pac. 206, 216, 27 Or. 390, 28 L. R. A. 68.

As procure.

"Request," as defined by Webster, is "to ask for earnestly; to express desire for; to solicit; to entreat; to address with a request;" so that its use in an instruction that if defendant "requested, advised, and incited," etc., instead of "aided, abetted, and procured," is not erroneous. Long v. State, 86 N. W. 310, 315, 23 Neb. 83.

Ratify distinguished.

The constitution of a religious society provided that it should not be amended unless by request of two-thirds of the whole society. In determining the meaning of the word "request" as used in this provision, the court holds that it was undoubtedly the intention of the framers of the constitution that before any change could be made in the instrument it must be preceded by the expressed desire of two-thirds of the members, and consequently that the term "request" required action on the part of the membership prior to the amendment, and its requirements were not satisfied by a subsequent assent or a passive concurrence to or in the adoption of an amendment. Philomath College v. Wyatt, 37 Pac. 1022, 1028, 27 Or. 390, 28 L. R. A. 68.

Require equivalent.

The use of the word "requested," in a notice by executors to creditors in which the latter are requested to present their claims, instead of the word "required," which is the word used in the statute requiring executors to publish a notice in which the creditors are required to present their claims, does not invalidate the notice, but it is a sufficient compliance with the statute. Prentice v. Whitney (N. Y.) 8 Hun, 300, 301.

Trust created.

Where a donee of property is "requested" by his testator to dispose of that property in favor of others, the word is imperative, and its employment creates a trust. Riker v. Leo, 21 N. E. 719, 720, 115 N. Y. 93 (citing Vandyck v. Van Beuren [N. Y.] 1 Caines, 84); Eddy's Ex'r v. Hartshorne, 34 N. J. Eq. (7 Stew.) 419, 422.

"Request," as used in a will, wherein testator makes a devise and thereafter expresses a wish as to the disposition of the property or fund, is a precatory word, sufficient to create a trust in the property devised, Curd v. Field, 45 S. W. 92, 103 Ky.

293; where the subject and object of the trust are sufficiently certain, Major v. Hern-don, 78 Ky. 123, 129.

The word "request," as used in a will in a clause that the testator requests a legatee to make a certain disposition of the fund bequeathed, is a word of intention, which the court will carry into effect as if the testator had used an absolute word of devise in trust, and the court will direct the donee or first taker to hold as a trustee for those whom the donor intended to benefit. Cockrill v. Armstrong, 31 Ark. 580, 589.

The authorities are conclusive and harmonious that a trust will be created by such precatory words as "hope," "wish," "request," etc., if they be not so modified by the context as to amount to no more than mere suggestions. Bohon v. Barrett's Ex'r, 2 Ky. Law Rep. 371, 374, 79 Ky. 378.

The words "request" and "requesting" under many circumstances are precatory words sufficient to raise a trust, it depending not only upon the sense in which the words are used, whether intended as imperative or as merely the expression of a wish or preference, the observation of which is left to the discretion of the first taker; and hence, as used in a will giving the widow of the testator all his property for her use while living, and requesting her to have certain bequests paid to descendants of the testator named, at her death, will be construed as sufficiently definite to create a trust in favor of such beneficiary. Coulson v. Alpaugh, 45 N. E. 216, 217, 163 Ill. 298.

The word "request," in a will in which testator had given the whole of his estate to his wife, with an express wish that she divide the property at her death between certain designated beneficiaries, and which stated in a subsequent clause of the will that the testator requested her to make such distribution, is synonymous with "wish" in the former part of the will, and is to be considered as a precatory word, but not sufficient to create a trust after an unqualified devise. Hopkins v. Glunt, 2 Atl. 183, 185, 111 Pa. 287.

Where a will recites that the testator "hereby requests" that the life tenant cause the estate to be equally divided between certain persons, on her death, the phrase means that testator intends to create a trust in favor of such persons, and that it was his will that the persons named receive the estate as remaindermen. Knox v. Knox, 18 N. W. 155, 160, 59 Wis. 172, 48 Am. Rep. 487.

REQUEST BY MAIL.

An insured was "requested by mail" to pay his premium note as required by the policy, when a written request for payment prepaid, duly directed and deposited by the company in the post office in due course of mail, would reach the place of his residence. A "request by mail" is a familiar phrase, and has a well-understood meaning. It does not import that the person to whom it is addressed shall receive it, but only that the person by whom it is made shall deposit in the post office a written request, duly directed, so that in the usual course of the mail it will reach its destination. Lothrop v. Greenfield Stock & Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 84 Mass. 82, 84 (citing Shed v. Brett, 18 Mass. [1 Pick.] 401, 11 Am. Dec. 209).

REQUEST FOR DELIVERY OF GOODS.

A "request for the delivery of goods" is when the maker of it has no interest in the goods at all, as distinguished from a "warrant," which is when the person has a right, and warrants the person who has the goods to deliver them as far as he is concerned, or as distinguished from an "order," which is given when the party has a right to have the goods delivered. Regina v. Illidge, 2 Car. & K. 871, 874.

REQUEST IN WRITING.

A "request in writing," as used in Act July 3, 1890, relating to the removal of a cause upon the simple "request in writing" of a party to the suit, and a petition, are one and the same thing. Washington & I. R. Co. v. Cœur D'Alene R. & Nav. Co. (U. S.) 60 Fed. 981, 984, 9 C. C. A. 303.

REQUIRE.

See "Legally Required."

"Require" means to make necessary; to demand; to ask as of right. Mattingly's Heirs v. Read, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 524, 526, 79 Am. Dec. 565.

Webster defines "require" to mean (1) to demand; to ask as of right, and by authority; (2) to claim; to render necessary as a duty; (3) to ask as a favor; to request; (4) to call to account for; (5) to make necessary; to demand; (6) to avenge. Johnson v. Clem, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 860, 867.

The words "prescribe," "direct," and "order" are all synonyms of the word "require." United States v. Dimmick (U. S.) 112 Fed. 350, 351.

As allow.

"Required," as used in Code 1871, § 760, providing that husband and wife may be witnesses for each other in all criminal cases, but they shall not be "required" to testify against each other as witnesses for the prosecution, should be construed as synonymous with "allowed," so that a wife was not a competent witness against her husband, notwithstanding her testimony was voluntary. Byrd v. State, 57 Miss. 243, 246, 34 Am. Rep. 440.

As authorize.

"Require," as used in an instruction in a criminal prosecution to convict if the evidence require it, is synonymous with "authorize." Turner v. State, 70 Ga. 765, 777.

As compel.

"Require," as used in Comp. Laws, § 2742, declaring that the fees of witnesses "required" to attend in any court may be taxed as costs, is used as synonymous with "compel," and hence the fees of a witness who appears on a request without being subpoenaed are not taxable as costs. Meagher v. Van Zandt, 2 Pac. 57, 58, 18 Nev. 230.

"Required," as used in Laws 1871, p. 280, c. 118, § 1, providing that a husband or wife of the accused is not incompetent to testify in a criminal prosecution, and providing that no wife or husband of such accused shall be "required" to testify except as a witness on behalf of the accused, means "compelled," but does not mean that a husband or wife of the accused cannot testify against the accused voluntarily. State v. McCord, 8 Kan. 232, 239, 12 Am. Rep. 469.

Where Act Cong. March 3, 1887, § 3, provides that an application of removal must be made on or before the time defendant is "required" to answer or plead, and an order of publication required a certain defendant to plead on the first Monday in May, the word "required" should not be construed to mean "compelled," notwithstanding a rule of court provided that judgment pro confesso might be entered if defendant did not plead, etc., by the first Monday in June, since it is no less a requirement because no coercion or compulsion may follow. Tennessee Coal, Lumber & Tan-Bark Co. v. Waller (U. S.) 37 Fed. 545, 547.

As demand or request.

"To 'require' is to demand; to insist upon having; to claim as by right, on authority; to exact; to claim as indispensable." As used in Civ. Code, § 1681, providing that a surety may "require" his creditor to proceed against the principal, it is synonymous with "exact," "direct," "order." Kennedy v. Falde, 29 N. W. 667, 670, 4 Dak. 319.

The word "required," as used in an agreement whereby M. assigned to K. a fifth interest in a railroad contract, payable in stocks and bonds, K. to pay one-fifth of the cash capital as may be "required" by M., means "called for." Appeal of McReynolds, 66 Pa. (16 P. F. Smith) 102, 111.

Testator devised certain property in trust, to pay the interest to his daughter, and so much of the principal as she from time to time, by writing under her hand and attested to by two creditable witnesses, should "require" of the trustees. Held, that since the gift of the entire interest was to the daughter absolutely, and the gift of the principal conditioned only on her calling for or requiring it with certain formalities, the word "require" was used in the sense of "demand." Lippincott v. Ridgway, 11 N. J. Eq. (3 Stockt.) 526, 534.

In a policy of insurance providing that in cases of loss no suit or action for the recovery of any claim shall be sustainable in any court unless commenced within a certain time after appraisal has been required, "has been required" is equivalent to "has been requested," and, where no appraisal has been demanded, an appraisal will not be held to be a condition precedent to the right to sue. National Home Building & Loan Ass'n v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 64 N. W. 21, 22, 106 Mich. 236.

"Requiring," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 122, § 30, providing that inspectors of oil shall be paid by the persons requiring their services, should be construed in the sense of "requesting," "demanding." Hanson v. Maverick Oil Co., 29 Atl. 459, 460, 67 N. H. 201.

There being no substantial difference between the words "request" and "require" as the latter word is used in the statute requiring executors to publish notice requiring creditors of the estate to present their claims, the use of the word "request" in a notice given in pursuance of the statute, which only states that the creditors are requested to present their claims, is sufficient. Prentice v. Whitney (N. Y.) 8 Hun, 300, 301.

The word "require" is not absolutely the synonym of the word "need," though it is of the word "demand." Though "require" may undoubtedly be properly used in the sense of "need," such is not its primary or usual signification. It comes from the Latin "requiro," and compounded of "re" and "quæro," to seek for, or to seek to get back. It means, according to all lexicographers, a demand, or, as Webster defines it, to ask as of right and by authority, as "King David 'required' Joab to number the children of Israel." So a bequest of money to a person to be paid when she may "require" it is not the equivalent of a direction that it be paid when she "needs" it, but rather that she be paid when she "demands" it. Brewster v. Brewster, 52 N. H. 52, 58.

"Required," as used in a statute providing that a railroad, "when required," shall transport certain persons and goods free of charge, means when requested or demanded, and should not be construed to mean only when necessary, or when it is for the public interest or convenience. People v. Central Pac. R. Co., 18 Pac. 90, 97, 76 Cal. 29.

A notification of a vote, at a legal town meeting, that the town of D. "require" a railroad to locate a depot in the town of D. on the line of said railroad west of Black Meadows, is equivalent to the "request" for the establishment of such depot, prescribed by Gen. St. c. 147, § 14, providing that, if the proprietors of any railroad shall not upon "request" establish proper stopping places and depots for the public accommodation, they may, upon such proceedings as are prescribed in the case of passes and bridges, be required to establish such depots. Nashua & R. B. R. v. Town of Derry, 58 N. H. 65, 66.

As fairly or reasonably required.

"Required," as used in a lease providing that the lessors would have the right to purchase whatever buildings the lessees erected on the premises, excepting such parts of the buildings and improvements as might be required by the lessee for the proper and convenient use of its railroad, etc., should be read "fairly required." Coe v. Aiken (U. S.) 61 Fed. 24, 35.

"Required," as contained in an agreement whereby the plaintiffs engaged during a period of three years to supply the defendants, a gas company incorporated by act of Parliament, with such quantities of pipes as should from time to time during the said period be "required" by the defendants, means that the plaintiff was bound to supply all such pipes as the company might reasonably require for such works as they were actually carrying on under the authority of their incorporation, and not such pipes as the company might think fit to order. Whitehouse v. Liverpool New Gaslight & Coke Co., 5 Man., G. & S. 798, 806.

Intention to be obeyed implied.

To "require" is to order, direct, or command; and a charge in an information that the defendant "required" its laborers to work more than eight hours necessarily implies that in making such requirement there was an intention upon the part of the defendant that its order or direction should be obeyed. United States v. San Francisco Bridge Co. (U. S.) 88 Fed. 891, 893.

As necessary.

"Require," as used in an agreement to purchase all the necessary brick which the defendant would require for the construction of certain buildings, means all the brick necessary to complete the buildings, and not merely such as were asked for by the defendant, so that the defendant was bound to order all these things from the plaintiff. Miller v. Leo, 55 N. Y. Supp. 165, 167, 35 App. Div. 589.

The word "required," as used in the Constitution providing that the General Assembly shall raise by taxation each year, in addition to the sum "required" to pay the public expenses and interest, the sum of $100,000, etc., may be defined as "having imperative need." Standard Dict. The direction as to raising "the sum required to pay the public expenses and interest" must have meant to refer particularly to the condition of the treasury. If there were on hand funds available to pay any part of the public expenses or a part of the interest, there would be neither sense nor reason in directing that the full amount to pay each should be raised by taxation, and that there should be left for an indefinite time an available balance in the treasury unused. Park v. Candler, 40 S. E. 523, 529, 114 Ga. 468.

The word "required," as used in Rev. St. § 8822, providing that mine operators shall keep a sufficient supply of timber when required for use as props, was used as the equivalent or synonym of "needed," and should be so read and understood, and not as "requested." According to the lexicographers, the term "required" has several well-recognized meanings, and where the term is found in a statute, and the precise meaning which should be given it is involved in doubt or uncertainty, then, in interpreting the statute, we should, we think, select that shade of meaning which will serve what appears to have been the purpose of the Legislature in the enactment thereof. Bowerman v. Lackawanna Min. Co., 71 S. W. 1062, 1064, 98 Mo. App. 308.

Where defendants agreed to purchase from plaintiffs as much coal as they should "require" for their mill, and by the contract plaintiffs were not to be liable for failure to furnish coal where they were prevented by unavoidable causes, and defendants were not to be compelled to accept the coal when their works should be out of operation, the word "require," as used in the contract, imports so much as is necessary for consumption in their business, and no more. McKeever v. Canonsburg Iron Co., 16 Atl. 97, 98, 138 Pa. 184.

Where a mother devised her estate in trust during the lives of her husband and son, and during the minority of any of the son's children, and the trustee was to pay to the husband so much of the income and principal as he might "require" for his own personal use, to be paid on the husband's written request, the word "require" should be construed to mean "need" or "shall be requisite," and not to mean that the husband might demand or claim as of right and by authority whatever he chose. Hull v. Holloway, 20 Atl. 445, 447, 58 Conn. 210.

A testator devised the residue of his estate to his executors, in trust for the use and benefit of his daughter H. for life, the interest to be paid to her "as she may need or require." Held, that the word "require," as used by the testator, was substantially equivalent to the antecedent word "need," with which it was associated, and that the clause should be read as if testator had said "as she may need or her necessities require," and hence H. was entitled to only so much of the interest of the residuary fund as the executors should deem reasonably necessary for her support according to her station and situation in life, and not according to her desire or will. Corlies v. Allen, 36 N. J. Eq. (9 Stew.) 100, 101.

In a petition by a railway corporation to take land, setting up the rights which the petitioner seeks to acquire, and alleging that the property thus sought is "required" for the public, "required" is synonymous with the word "necessary," and conveys the same meaning. Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Detroit & B. C. R. Co., 31 N. W. 281, 285, 64 Mich. 350.

"Required," as used in a contract with the federal government to deliver stone at such times and in such quantities as may be required by the government, should be construed to refer to the wants of the service, and not to an unsettled purpose of the government; and hence, if the government caused delay by a change of plans, the contractor may recover damages. Mueller v. United States (U. S.) 19 Ct. Cl. 581, 591.

As precatory word in wills.

"Requires," as used in a will wherein testator makes a devise, and thereafter requires the disposition of the property or fund, is a precatory word, sufficient to create a trust in the property devised. Curd v. Field, 45 S. W. 92, 103 Ky. 293.

In appeal pro forma pauperis.

"Require," as used in Const. 1877 (Civ. Code, § 5881), providing that plaintiffs in error shall not be "required" to pay costs in the Supreme Court when the usual pauper oath is filed in the court below, does not relieve plaintiff in error, who filed a pauper affidavit, of all liability for costs in the Supreme Court, but entitled such plaintiff in error to be heard in the Supreme Court at the expense of the state, if at the time he desired to bring his case to the Supreme Court he was in a position where he was unable from poverty to pay the costs due and made an affidavit to that effect; and the state, having given him, on account of his poverty, the right to be heard in its highest court, may enter a judgment on the records of the Supreme Court against him to be satisfied out of any property that he may thereafter acquire. Sigman v. Austin, 37 S. E. 894, 896, 112 Ga. 570.

As required by law.

"Required," as used in Pub. St. c. 39, § 52, providing that an administrator's sale shall not be audited if it appears, etc., that the administrator gave a bond in case the bond was required upon granting the license for the sale, is not used in the sense of "ordered" or "demanded," but, in speaking of the bond, has reference to a bond required by law. Babcock v. Cobb, 11 Minn. 347, 354 (Gil. 247, 253).

As expressive of wish.

In Act March 7, 1887 (St. 1887, p. 46, § 8), reciting that it is "desired and required" that all growers and manufacturers, traders, handlers, or bottlers of California wine, when selling or putting it up for sale, or when shipping it to parties sold, shall plainly stencil, brand, or have printed, where it may be easily seen, "Pure California Wine," and his name both on the label or bottle or package, "desired and required" should be construed as intended to express rather a legislative wish and permission than a mandate. As words of legislative command, they are singularly inappropriate and inconsistent. The word "desired" cannot be ignored in the construction of the act any more than the word "required," and the former is at least as forcible in its expression of a request as the latter is in its expression of a command. Ex parte Kohler, 15 P. 436, 437, 74 Cal. 88.

REQUIREMENT.

Where defendant agreed to buy its "requirements" of coal of plaintiff, the contract was mutual, and was one in which plaintiff could maintain an action for breach, as such provision required defendant to buy all its coal from plaintiff. Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co., 180 Ill. 85, 43 N. E. 774, 31 L. R. A. 529 (cited in McCaw Mfg. Co. v. Felder, 41 S. E. 664, 667, 115 Ga. 408, holding a contract to furnish all the boxes necessary to be valid).

REQUISITION.

"Requisition of a physician," as used in Code 1876, § 4205, prohibiting the sale of liquors to minors except on the requisition of a physician for medicinal purposes, does not merely mean on the mere advice of the physician that liquor should be used, communicated to the vendor by the minor to whom it is given or sold, but an application or a request communicated by the physician directly to the seller, either orally or in writing. Bain v. State, 61 Ala. 75, 79.

"Requisition," as the word is used in speaking of the requisition by the President of the United States upon the Governor of the state for troops; is a request by the chief executive magistrate to the executive officer representing state sovereignty, requesting that the state furnish a certain number of troops. Mills v. Martin (N. Y.) 19 Johns. 7, 28.

As requiring or demanding.

"Requisition," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 207, § 7, providing that a mortgagor entitled to redeem may require the mortgagee to assign the mortgage debt to such other person as the mortgagor directs, and providing that such right shall belong to each incumbrancer or to the mortgagor notwithstanding any intermediate incumbrance, but a requisition of an incumbrancer shall prevail over the requisition of the mortgagor, is not equivalent to a desire to retain, but should be considered in its literal sense of the act of requiring or demanding. Atwood v. Charlton, 45 Atl. 580, 581, 21 R. I. 568.

REQUISITION TO SUE.

A notice given by a security in a note to the payee that "you are hereby notified that I will not stand good as security any longer, on the note you hold against William Upton and myself as security," was held to be insufficient as a requisition to sue, within the meaning of the Missouri statute relating to securities. There ought to be an express direction to sue, that there may be no misapprehension of the meaning. It is as easy to speak out plainly as mysteriously, and there would be no certainty in the rule if it led the courts to grope for the meaning of the party among ambiguous words. Cases will arise in which it would be difficult to determine and in the end there would be no rule at all; nor would the creditor know how to keep himself safe unless he would fly at the principal on the first intimation of the surety's impatience. Lockridge v. Upton, 24 Mo. 184, 185.

REQUISITION FOR SURRENDER OF FUGITIVES.

"Requisitions for surrender of fugitives," as used in the Spanish treaty of January 5, 1877, art. 11, providing that requisitions for the surrender of fugitives from justices shall be made by the respective diplomatic agents of the contracting parties, or, in their absence, by superior consular officers, means the application for the final warrant for the surrender of the fugitives, which can only be executed by the executive authority after a judicial examination. Castro v. De Uriarte (U. S.) 16 Fed. 93, 96.

RES.

In the civil law the term "res" signifies a thing, an object. As a term of law, this word has a very wide and extended signification, including not only things which are objects of property, but also such as are not capable of individual ownership. And in old English law it is said to have a general import comprehending both corporeal and incorporeal things, of whatever nature or species. In modern usage the term is particularly applied to an object, subject-matter, or status considered as the defendant in an action, or as the object against which directly proceedings are taken. Thus in a prize case the captured vessel is the res. And proceedings of this character are said to be in rem. Black, Law Dict.

RES ADJUDICATA.

See, also, "Former Adjudication."

"Res judicata" means a thing definitely settled by a judicial decision. State v. Wear, 46 S. W. 1099, 1107, 145 Mo. 162.

Res adjudicata is a matter adjudged; a thing judicially acted on or decided. "The principle is that the decision of a court of competent jurisdiction upon a point which is or should have been construed as necessarily involved is final and conclusive." Warren v. Raymond, 17 S. C. 163, 164, 189.

"Res adjudicata" means that if an action be brought, and the merits of the question be discussed between the parties, and a final judgment be obtained by either party, the parties are concluded, and cannot canvass the same question in another action. It is founded upon two maxims of the law, one of which is that a man should not be twice vexed for the same cause, and the other that it is for the public good that there be an end of litigation. Wisconsin v. Torinus, 9 N. W. 725, 726, 28 Minn. 175.

In Smith v. Auld, 1 Pac. 626, 628, 31 Kan. 262, Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for this court, said: "The whole philosophy of the doctrine of res adjudicata is summed up in the simple statement that a matter once decided is finally decided, and all the learning that has been bestowed and all the rules that have been laid down have been for the purpose of enforcing that one proposition. One rule fully established is that you may examine the entire record of the prior action in order to determine what was in fact adjudicated. The inquiry is not limited to the mere formal judgment. It extends to the pleadings, the verdict, or the findings; and the scope and meaning of the judgment is often interpreted by pleadings, verdict, or findings. Indeed, to determine the matters which are adjudicated, not only may you look to the entire record, but also, in many instances, you may resort to parol testimony." Hoisington v. Brakey, 3 Pac. 353, 355, 31 Kan. 560.

Matters once determined by a court of competent jurisdiction can never be questioned. It matters not under what form the question be presented. Whenever the same question recurs between the same parties, the plea of res adjudicata estops. McNeely v. Hyde, 15 South. 167, 46 La. Ann. 1083.

The basic principle of res judicata is found in the necessity that a time should come when litigation shall cease, in order that the decree of the court may be carried out. Res judicata deals with the decree of the court, as contradistinguished from the judgment of the court, since it does not take place with respect to the reasons of the judgment, but only with respect to what was the object of the judgment. The office and function and utility of res judicata is not to settle law questions, but to lend stability to a decree, in order that such decree may be effective. State v. American Sugar Refining Co., 32 South. 965, 966, 108 La. 603.

The term "res judicata" is used with different meanings in connection with different conditions, and not always with discrimination. Perhaps an exact discrimination is not always practicable, in the present state of the law on this subject. The two most important applications of the principle are when it is invoked in respect to a cause of action once finally determined by a judgment, and where it is invoked in respect to the conclusiveness of a fact contested between the parties to an action, and determined by the judgment in that action, upon the same parties, when agitating their controversies in another suit upon a different cause of action. There is an evident distinction in these cases not only as to the effect of a judgment, but as to the grounds on which the principle producing the effect is based. The distinction is drawn with great clearness in the opinion of Justice Field in Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 357, 24 L. Ed. 195. In the former case the judgment is produced as conclusive evidence that no cause of action exists. Either the cause of action has been satisfied and merged in the judgment, or its nonexistence has been judicially determined and forever settled by the judgment, and the controlling principle depends primarily on the legal effect of a judgment on the cause of action determined. The judgment is not treated merely as an estoppel to the proof of any fact involved in the trial of the cause of action alleged, but is rather held to be conclusive evidence that the cause of action alleged does not now exist, or never had any existence. In the latter case the judgment is produced as evidence of some material fact in the cause of action on trial, the truth of which fact both parties are es-topped from denying. In such case the controlling principle depends upon the effect of a judgment in giving indefinite life and irrefutable probative force to any fact judicially found to be true. The considerations of public policy which support the rules of res judicata do not justify its extension to make a fact adjudicated in an action between two persons litigating a cause of action which has arisen between them in their individual capacity res judicata in subsequent actions brought by one, as assignee of a chose in action, against the other and a third person, which the plaintiff has purchased of such third person after his right therein has become fixed, and since the judgment in the first action was rendered. Fuller v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 35 Atl. 766, 767, 68 Conn. 55, 57 Am. St. Rep. 84.

An estoppel precludes parties and privies from contending to the contrary of that point on a matter of fact which, having been once distinctly put in issue by them, or by those with whom they are privy in estate or law, has been, on such issue joined, found against them. Jones v. Muldrow (S. O.) Cheves, 254, 255.

The essence of estoppel by judgment is that there has been a judicial determination of a fact. Last Chance Min. Co. v. Tyler, Min. Co., 15 Sup. Ct. 733, 736, 157 U. S. 683, 39 L. Ed. 859.

An estoppel is an omission or determination under circumstances of such solemnity that the law will not allow the fact so admitted or established to be afterwards drawn in question between the same parties or their privies. A judgment and verdict are conclusive by way of estoppel only as to those facts which are necessarily involved in them. Orr v. Mercer County Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 6 Atl. 696, 699, 114 Pa. 387.

The doctrine of res adjudicata is plain and intelligible, and amounts simply to this: That a cause of action once finally determined, without appeal between the parties on the merits, by any competent tribunal, cannot afterwards be litigated by new proceedings either before the same or any other tribunal. Weigley v. Coffman, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. 453, 455, 144 Pa. 489, 22 Atl. 919, 27 Am. St. Rep. 667 (citing Foster v. The Richard Busteed, 100 Mass. 409, 1 Am. Rep. 125).

As requiring decision on merits.

An estoppel by a former judgment is based upon public policy. It demands that, when a fact has been judiciously and finally determined between the same parties, it should be at rest. It is, however, equally well settled that a former judgment, to be a bar, must have been a decision upon the merits. Thus a judgment for want of jurisdiction, or by reason of a technical defect in the pleadings or as to the parties, or upon any ground not going to the merits, will not prevent a second action. Where a petition is dismissed without a reason being given, such dismissal will not work an estoppel. Pepper v. Donnelly, 8 S. W. 441, 442, 87 Ky. 259.

An estoppel must be certain to every intent, and if, upon the face of the record, anything is left to conjecture as to what was necessarily involved and determined, there is no estoppel. The entry of a default is therefore not an estoppel. Board of Trustees of School Dist. No. 1 v. Whalen, 41 Pac. 849, 851, 17 Mont. 1.

A decree dismissing a bill solely for want of jurisdiction is not a bar to another bill in the same court for the same cause of action after a decision of the Supreme Court on appeal, in an action brought in a different court, that the former court had jurisdiction. Welgley v. Coffman, 144 Pa. 489, 498, 22 Atl. 919, 27 Am. St. Rep. 667.

Necessary elements.

It is held that a matter is not regarded as res adjudicata unless there be a concurrence of four conditions: First, identity in the thing sued for; second, identity of the cause of action; third, identity of persons and of parties to the action; fourth, identity in the quality of the persons for or against whom the claim is made. Jackson v. Cable (Tex.) 27 S. W. 201, 203; Mershon v. Williams, 44 Atl. 211, 213, 63 N. J. Law, 398 (citing 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 467; Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 423, 24 L. Ed. 204); Child v. McClosky, 84 N. W. 769, 770, 14 S. D. 181; Brady v. Pryor, 69 Ga. 691, 696. The court will inquire whether the subject-matter of the controversy has been brought in question, and within the issue in the former proceeding, and has terminated in a regular judgment on the merits, and whether the former suit was between the same parties in the same right or capacity, or their privies claiming under them, and whether the former judgment was before a court of competent jurisdiction. Stevens v. Stembridge, 31 S. E. 413, 414, 104 Ga. 619.

"In order to make out a defense of res adjudicata, it must appear that the parties were the same, and that the matter involved was the same; and it must also appear that the matter was adjudicated in a suit and before a court having competent jurisdiction to adjudicate the matter." Cherry v. York (Tenn.) 47 S. W. 184, 188.

In order to establish a plea of res judicata, there must generally be an identity of parties, of subject-matter, and of cause of action. Baldwin v. Hanecy, 68 N. E. 560, 562, 204 Ill. 281.

Res adjudicata is determined as existing when it is ascertained that the matters of the two suits are the same, and the issues in the former suit were broad enough to have comprehended all that is involved in the issues in the second suit. Tankersly v. Pettis, 71 Ala. 179. To support the plea of res adjudicata, the parties must be the same, the subject-matter the same, and the point must be directly in question, and the judgment must be rendered upon that point. Wood v. Wood, 33 South. 347, 349, 134 Ala. 557.

In order to make a plea of res judicata effective, there must be at least the concurrence of two things: First, identity of subject-matter; and, second, identity of persons and parties. Lindauer Mercantile Co. v. Boyd (N. M.) 70 Pac. 568, 570.

In order to make a matter res judicata, there must be a concurrence of the following conditions: First, identity in the thing sued for; second, identity of the cause of the action; third, identity of persons and parties to the action; fourth, identity of the quality in the persons for or against whom the claim is made. 2 Bouv. Law Dict. That there should be identity of persons and of parties to the action is a necessary consequence of the rule of natural justice. "Ne inauditus condemnatur." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jefferson County Com'rs, 12 Kan. 127, 135.

A judgment cannot be res judicata as to any right or claim unless both claim and claimant have been before the court. Gay v. Brierfield Coal & Iron Co., 11 South. 353, 364, 94 Ala. 303, 16 L. R. A. 564, 33 Am. St. Rep. 122.

Before plea of res adjudicata can be sustained, it must appear that there has been a trial, at which the party appeared or was bound to appear; that he was duly warned, had his day in court, and was defeated. Mahon v. Luzerne County (Pa.) 9 Kulp, 453, 461.

Matters included.

The rule of res adjudicata applies only in cases where the matter in issue is identical with that which was in issue at the former trial. Keith v. City of Philadelphia, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. 115, 116, 125 Pa. 575, 17 Atl. 883.

A judgment makes only that which was in issue and decided res judicata. The reasons given by the judges, whether few or many, are not res judicata. Where the Supreme Court determines a demurrer to the complaint, any judgment based on facts assumed to exist by the opinion, but which are not alleged in the complaint, is not res judicata. The reasons of a judgment set forth in a Supreme Court opinion are not res judicata. Case v. Hoffman, 72 N. W. 390, 100 Wis. 314, 44 L. R. A. 728.

The judgment of a court rendered without opposition on a motion to annul a judgment for want of jurisdiction is res judicata on the question of jurisdiction. Bartlett v. Wheeler, 31 La. Ann. 540, 543.

Except in special cases, the plea of res judicata applies not only to points upon which the court was actually required to form an opinion and pronounce judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of the allegation, and which the parties exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time. Grant County Com'rs v. Cross (N. M.) 73 Pac. 615, 616.

To work an estoppel by judgment, the former judgment must be directly in point, and involve the identical matter presented in the new action. Water Com'rs of City of Brunswick v. Cramer, 39 Atl. 671, 672, 61 N. J. Law, 270, 68 Am. St. Rep. 705 (citing Chamberlain v. Hopper, 84 N. J. Law [5 Vroom] 220; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Newton, 50 N. J. Law [21 Vroom] 571, 576, 14 Atl. 756).

All questions properly before the appellate court, and decided by them, are res judicata, regardless of whether the case is further proceeded with in the lower court, if remanded thereto. Stewart v. Stebbins, 30 Miss. 66, 81.

Although a court of law declines to determine a question of set-off, yet this is not res judicata, so as to preclude an inquiry in a court of equity. Hackett v. Connett (N. Y.) 2 Edw. Ch. 73, 75.

The principle of res adjudicata operates only as a bar to a second suit when the point in controversy is the same in both cases, and when the decision was upon the merits. The points actually decided will determine if the estoppel exists, and the identity of the cause of the demand must be the same in both instances. The judgment may be resorted to as showing what issues were determined, and for this purpose may prima facie establish the issue. But parol evidence is also competent to show what was the issue before the court, and the point actually adjudicated. Freeman v. McAninch, 24 S. W. 922, 925, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 644.

The doctrine of res adjudicata is founded on public policy, as conducive to peace, repose, and morality, and without working any injustice. The rule in regard to the conclusiveness of the verdict and judgment rendered in a former trial between the same parties, when invoked in a subsequent suit, requires that the controversy must be the same on both sides, and that the matter in issue must have been directly, and not collaterally or inferentially, decided. Faires v. McLellan (Tex.) 24 S. W. 365, 366.

Parties.

A matter once adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction may be invoked as an estoppel in any collateral suit in any court of law or equity, or in admiralty, when the same parties or their personal representatives, or one of the parties and the privy and privies of the other, allege anything contradictory to it; and those who assume a right to control or actively participate in the trial or its management, though not formal parties, will be concluded. State v. Johnson (Mo.) 25 S. W. 855, 857.

One of the settled rules governing estoppels by judgment is that the estoppel cannot be successfully invoked, except against a party or privy. Another rule is that the estoppel must be mutual. Lochridge v. Corbett, 73 S. W. 96, 98, 81 Tex. Civ. App. 676.

Under a plea of res judicata, two elements are necessary, namely, identity of the thing demanded, and identity of the cause of demand or cause of suit. Gallagher v. City of Moundsville, 84 W. Va. 730, 12 S. E. 859, 26 Am. St. Rep. 942. But it is not necessary that precisely the same parties were plaintiffs and defendants in the two suits, provided the same subject in controversy between two or more of the plaintiffs and defendants to the suit, respectively, has been in the form of suit directly in issue and decided. Brown v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 70 S. W. 527, 96 Mo. App. 164 (citing Western Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Virginia Cannel Coal Co., 10 W. Va. 250).

As applying to points which might have been raised.

The rule of res adjudicata only extends to such questions as are actually litigated, and, under certain circumstances, to such as might be litigated. Ward v. Joslin (U. S.) 100 Fed. 676, 679.

All matters presentable to sustain the particular demand litigated in prior suit, and all matters presented or presentable under the issue to defeat such demand, are concluded by the judgment or decree in the former suit. Withers' Adm'r v. Sims, 80 Va. 651, 658.

In Francis v. Wood, 81 Ky. 16, 221, it was said: "Res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points on which the court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward. They cannot open the litigation in respect to matters which might have been brought forward only because by negligence or inadvertence they have been omitted from their case." And in Davis v. McCorkle, 77 Ky. (14 Bush)

746, it was said: "A party can no more split up differences than indivisible demands, and present them piecemeal in successive suits growing out of the same transaction." Hardwicke v. Young, 62 S. W. 10, 11, 110 Ky. 504.

Except in special cases, the plea of res judicata applies not only to points upon which the court was actually required to form an opinion and pronounce judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time. A recovery in one suit upon issue joined on matter of title is equally conclusive upon the subject-matter of such title, in any subsequent action, as an estoppel. The estoppel where the judgment was rendered upon the merits, whether on demurrer, agreed statements, or verdict, extends to every material allegation or statement which, having been made on one side and denied on the other, was at issue in the cause, and was determined in the course of the proceedings. Aurora City v. West, 74 U. S. (7 Wall.) 82, 102, 103, 19 L. Ed. 42.

A decision by a court of competent jurisdiction is binding on all other courts of concurrent jurisdiction: The defense of res judicata only extends to the matter necessarily determined before the judgment could have been given, and does not include every question which could have been raised, whether considered or not. A judgment, therefore, is not conclusive of a matter of fraud when the question of fraud was not raised, nor the facts constituting the fraud known to the party injuriously affected. Hart v. Bates, 17 S. C. 35, 42.

The general principle that the judgment or decree of a court possessing competent jurisdiction shall be final as to the subject-matter thereby determined can admit of no doubt. The principle, however, extends further. It is not only final as to the matter actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties might litigate in the cause, and which they might have had decided. Le Guen v. Gouverneur (N. Y.) 1 Johns. Cas. 492, 502, 510, 1 Am. Dec. 121.

All matters presentable to sustain the particular demand litigated in the prior suit, and all matters presented or presentable under the issue to defeat such demand, are concluded by the judgment or decree in the former suit. Withers' Adm'r v. Sims, 80 Va. 651.

Effect in subsequent related suit.

The effect of an estoppel by judgment may present two aspects—one, where a second suit is brought between the same parties for the same cause of action; the second, where a second suit between the same parties is brought, not for the same cause of action, but for a cause of action so related to the cause in the preceding suit that some matter, the establishment of which is essential to the recovery in the last suit, was determined in the preceding suit. It is settled as to the first class that, after one judicial determination by a court of competent jurisdiction, a second suit for the same matter between the same parties cannot be relitigated. Where a second suit, however, is brought, not for the same demand, but for a cause which was a part of the same matter, but was not included in the first action, the estoppel is not so sweeping. In such instance only those issues which are common to both suits, and which had to be or were actually decided in the first suit, are regarded as res adjudicata in the second suit. Clark Thread Co. v. William Clark Co., 37 Atl. 599, 600, 55 N. J. Eq. 658.

See "Collateral Attack."

RES DERELICTA.

Res derelicta is that property from which the mind has withdrawn affection, and which has thus fallen back into the natural state of res nullius, and is again susceptible of becoming the property of the occupant. Rhodes v. Whitehead, 27 Tex. 304, 313, 84 Am. Dec. 631.

RES GESTÆ.

The res gestæ is defined by Wharton, in his work on Evidence, 258, 267, "as those circumstances which are the undesigned incidents of particular litigated acts, and are admissible where illustrative of such acts. These incidents may be separated from the act by lapse of time more or less appreciable. Their sole distinguishing feature is that they should be necessary incidents of the litigated act—necessary in this sense: that they are part of the immediate preparations for, or emanations from, such acts, and are not produced by the calculated policy of the actors. In other words, they must stand in immediate causal relation to the act—a relation not broken by individual wariness seeking to manufacture evidence for itself. Therefore declarations which are the immediate accompaniments of an act are admissible as part of the res gestæ; remembering that immediateness is tested by closeness, not of time but by causal relation, as just explained." This is an accurate statement of the rule. Ft. Smith Oil Co. v. Slover, 24 S. W. 106, 108, 58 Ark. 168; Little Rock, M. R. & T. Ry. Co. v. Leverett (Ark.) 3 S. W. 61; Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vernon) 495; Freeman v. State, 51 S. W. 230, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 545; Coll v. Easton Transit

Co., 37 Atl. 89, 90, 180 Pa. 618; People v. Wong Ark., 30 Pac. 1115, 1117, 96 Cal. 125; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Spencer, 52 Pac. 211, 212, 225 Colo. 9; Graves v. People, 18 Colo. 170, 177, 32 Pac. 63, 65; McLeod v. Johnson, 52 Atl. 760, 761, 96 Me. 271; State v. Thompson, 34 S. W. 31, 37, 132 Mo. 301; State v. Hudspeth, 51 S. W. 481, 486, 150 Mo. 56; State v. Walker, 78 Mo. 380, 386; State v. Tighe, 71 Pac. 3, 7, 27 Mont. 327; St. Clair v. United States, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 1008, 154 U. S. 134, 38 L. Ed. 936.

Res gestæ are the circumstances, facts, and declarations which grow out of the main fact, or are contemporaneous with it, and serve to illustrate its character. Stirling v. Buckingham, 46 Conn. 461, 464.

The doctrine of res gestæ is based upon the presumption that declarations made at the same time with the principal act, evoked by it without premeditation, and giving it color and character as explanatory of the mind and purpose of the actor, are as reliable as the act itself, of which it is a part, and can be proved along with it, without the oath of the party. Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615, 624. The res gestæ differ according to the circumstances of the particular case. It may be embraced within the brief compass of time which comprises the duration of the principal act or transaction itself, or it may extend over a much longer period of time, if the transaction be one of a continuing character. McGowen v. McGowen, 52 Tex. 657, 664.

Circumstances attending a particular transaction on investigation by the jury, if so interwoven with each other and with the principal fact that they cannot well be separated without depriving the jury of proof that is essential in order to reach a just conclusion, are admissible in evidence. These surrounding circumstances constituting part of the res gestæ, says Greenleaf, may always be shown to the jury. State v. Prater, 48 S. E. 230, 235, 52 W. Va. 132 (citing St. Clair v. United States, 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936).

"Res gestæ," it has been said, "are events speaking for themselves through the instinctive words and acts of participants, not the words and acts of participants when narrating the events. * * * And as long as the transaction continues, so long do acts and deeds emanate from it, become part of it, so that, in describing it in a court of justice, they can be detailed. The question is, is the evidence offered that of events speaking through participants, or that of observers speaking about the event? * * * Nor are there any limits of time within which the res gestæ can be arbitrarily confined." Territory v. Clayton, 19 Pac. 293, 297, 8 Mont. 1 (citing Whart. Cr. Ev. § 262).

Two things must concur to render declarations admissible as part of the res gestæ. The facts themselves must be relevant and material, independently of what was said, and the declaration must relate to those facts, and must be explanatory of them. Morrill v. Foster, 32 N. H. 358, 360.

Whenever it becomes important to show upon the trial of any cause the occurrence of any fact or event, it is competent also to show any accompanying act, declaration, or exclamation which relates to, or is explanatory of, such fact or event. Such act, declaration, or exclamation is known to the law as res gestæ. Dauids v. People, 61 N. E. 537, 541, 192 Ill. 176.

The "res gestæ" may be defined as those circumstances which are the undesigned incidents of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible when illustrative of such act. These incidents may be separated from the act by a lapse of time more or less appreciable. They may consist of speeches of any one concerned, whether participant or bystander. They may comprise things left undone, as well as things done. Little Rock & F. S. R. Co. v. Leverett, 3 S. W. 50, 51, 48 Ark. 261.

Declarations, as a part of the res gestæ, are regarded as verbal facts indicating a present purpose and intention, and therefore are admitted in proof like any other material fact. Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 99, 100, 105.

No inflexible rule has ever been adopted as to what is part of the res gestæ. It must be determined largely in each case by the peculiar facts and circumstances incident thereto, but it may be stated as a fixed rule that included in the res gestæ are the facts which so illustrate and characterize the principal fact as to constitute the whole one transaction, and render the latter necessary to exhibit the former in its proper effect. Chicago & E. Ry. Co. v. Cummings, 53 N. E. 1026, 1031, 24 Ind. App. 192.

Hill's Ann. Code, § 680, provides that "where also a declaration, act or omission forms part of a transaction which is itself the fact in dispute, or evidence of the fact, such declaration, act or omission is evidence as a part of that transaction." This section is declaratory of the common law, and is a legislative definition of res gestæ. What is res gestæ, and what is not, is sometimes difficult to distinguish, but the difficulty in making the application does not in any manner impair the rule. Humphrey v. Chilcat Caning Co., 25 Pac. 389, 390, 20 Or. 209.

Declarations made at the time of the commission of a criminal act, and expressive of its character, are admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ; but, where the declaration and the act done are inconsistent, the presumption of intention is to be gathered from the act. State v. Shelledy, 8 Iowa, (8 Clarke) 477, 489.

Utterances and exclamations of participants, or of persons acting in concert, made immediately before or after or in the execution of an act, which go to illustrate the character and quality of the act, are usually admissible on the ground that they are a part of the res gestæ. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Whitaker, 66 N. E. 433, 434, 160 Ind. 125.

Coincidence in time.

Declarations, in order to be parts of the res gestæ, need not be exactly coincident in point of time with the principal fact. People v. Vernon, 35 Cal. 49, 51, 95 Am. Dec. 49; Dauids v. People, 61 N. E. 537, 541, 192 Ill. 176. If they sprang out of the principal fact, tended to explain it, were voluntary and spontaneous, and made at a time so near it as to preclude the idea of deliberate design, they may be regarded as contemporaneous and admissible in evidence. Almost immediately after deceased was shot, he was carried into a house by defendant and others, and within an hour afterwards, on being asked how it occurred, he said that defendant shot him, but did not intend to. This declaration was admissible as a part of the res gestæ. Johnson v. State, 58 Pac. 761, 763, 8 Wyo. 404.

It is said that there are no limits of time in which the res gestæ can be arbitrarily confined. They vary, in fact, with each particular case. To make declarations a part of the res gestæ, they must be contemporaneous with the main fact, but, in order to be contemporaneous, they are not required to be precisely concurrent in time. If the declarations sprang out of a transaction, if they elucidate it, and if they were made at a time so near to it as to preclude the idea of deliberate design, they are then to be regarded as contemporaneous. If they amount to no more than a mere narrative of the past occurrence, or of an isolated conversation held or an isolated act done at a later period, they are inadmissible; but if declarations of a past occurrence are made under such circumstances as will raise a reasonable presumption that they are the spontaneous utterances of thoughts created by, or springing out of, the transaction itself, and so soon thereafter as to exclude the presumption that they are the result of premeditation and design, they will be admissible as a part of the res gestæ. State v. Lockett, 68 S. W. 563, 565, 168 Mo. 480; Lambright v. State, 16 South. 582, 587, 34 Fla. 564.

The statements of an accused in regard to the homicide, in order to be admissible as res gestæ, must appear to be closely connected with the homicide in point of time, though not necessarily exactly contemporaneous; but they should be so near as to suggest the absence of any fabrication, and it should appear to be spontaneous, and not the relation of a past transaction. Ford's Case, 50 S. W. 350, 351, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 230.

In order to constitute declarations a part of the res gestæ, it is not necessary that they were precisely incident in point of time with the principal fact. If they spring out of the principal fact, tend to explain it, were voluntary and spontaneous, and made at a time so near it as to preclude the idea of deliberate design, they may be regarded as contemporaneous, and are admissible in evidence. Lewis v. State, 15 S. W. 642, 643, 29 Tex. App. 201, 25 Am. St. Rep. 720; State v. Hudspeth, 60 S. W. 136, 143, 159 Mo. 178.

No inflexible rule can be adopted as to what lapse of time between the commission of an act and a declaration made should exclude the declaration, as not being a part of the res gestæ. Each case must depend on its own facts and circumstances. The act or declaration sought to be proven must, however, be so connected with the transaction as to be a part of it. In a trial for murder, where the witness testified that as soon after the murder as he could get over his scare or excitement, and thought it over, he went up to defendant and had a talk with him, the declarations then made by the latter are not admissible in his own behalf as part of the res gestæ. Wright v. State, 41 Atl. 1060, 1061, 88 Md. 705.

The res gestæ of a transaction is what is done during the progress of or so nearly upon the actual occurrence as fairly to be treated as contemporaneous with it. No precise point of time can be fixed a priori where the res gestæ ends. Each case turns on its own circumstances. Indeed, the inquiry is rather into events, than into the precise time which has elapsed. Is the proof offered of a matter fairly a part of the same transaction? Is it an event pending naturally and spontaneously as a part of the occurrence under investigation? If so, the law permits it to be proven as part of it, since the whole scene, as it had transpired, ought to appear to the tribunal called upon to determine its character. Matters occurring before or after—that is, before the transaction began, or after it ended—are not part of it. Hall v. State, 48 Ga. 607-608.

The declarations of a person, to be a part of the res gestæ, must have been made at the time of the act done, which they are supposed to characterize, and have been calculated to unfold the nature and quality of the facts they were intended to express, and so harmonize with them as obviously to constitute one transaction. Enos v. Tuttle, 3 Conn. 247, 250.

Declarations, as parts of the res gestæ, made at the time of a transaction, are regarded as verbal acts, and are hence admissible as any other material facts. An indispensable characteristic of these declarations is that they must be made at the time of the act, and calculated to unfold the nature and quality of the fact they are intended to explain. Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615, 623.

At common law the res gestæ was strictly confined to the transaction itself, but the doctrine in some of the American states has been extended beyond the very time of the transaction. A test as to what constitutes res gestæ is that it is the event speaking for itself at the time. To illustrate, if, during the difficulty, one cry out, "Spare me!" or, "Don't stab me again!" But if it is the narration of a past transaction, it ought not to be admitted, as if, after a difficulty between A. and B., A. narrates to C. the circumstances of the difficulty in the past tense. So far as the Texas cases are concerned, they appear to have made a complete departure from this rule, for a large portion of the decided cases on this question are, in phraseology, narratives of a past transaction. In Craig's Case, 30 Tex. App. 619, 621, 18 S. W. 297, Judge Hurt said: "Just when the fact or statement is or is not a part of the res gestæ is one of the most difficult questions to solve known to the writer. The old rule was that, to be a part of the res gestæ, the fact of statement should be contemporaneous with the transaction, and this rule is approved by many courts of the first ability. On the other hand, the rule has been construed so as to admit acts and declarations occurring not contemporaneous with the transaction which preceded or followed it; and when they are to be admitted or rejected, if not coincident with the act or transaction in question, is a question of judicial discretion of embarrassing nicety." In Freeman v. State, 51 S. W. 230, 231, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 545, it was held that statements made by a wounded person from 30 to 60 minutes after the wounds were inflicted were admissible as part of the res gestæ, though the mind of the injured person had in the meantime been diverted by other affairs. The general rule is that what was said or done by the injured party at the time and place of the injury, as to its cause, is admissible as part of the res gestæ. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 108. While the above states the general rule, cases may be found where the courts of last resort of this state have upheld the admission of the declarations of the injured party as to the cause of the injury, made after the transaction, when the circumstances were sufficient to exclude the presumption that they were the result of premeditation or design. Declarations by one injured as to what caused the injury, though made several hours thereafter, are admissible as part of the res gestæ; the injury being such as to occasion immediate unconsciousness, he having been unconscious when found a few minutes after the accident, and having of his own accord made the statement on regaining consciousness. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. of Texas v. Moore, 59 S. W. 282, 283, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 489.

The declarations of a party are competent as a part of the res gestæ when confined strictly to such complaints, expressions, and exclamations as furnish evidence of a present, existing pain or malady, to prove his condition, ills, pains, and symptoms, whether arising from sickness or from an injury by accident or violence. And a declaration made by a deceased person contemporaneously, or nearly so, with a main event, by whose consequence it is alleged that he died, is admissible. Generally the declarations must be contemporaneous with the event; yet, where there are connecting circumstances, they may, even when made some time afterwards, form a part of the whole res gestæ. Where the principal fact is the fact of bodily injury, the res gestæ are the statements of the cause, made by the injured party almost contemporaneously with the occurrence of the injury, and those relating to the consequences, made while the latter subsisted and were in progress. Travelers' Ins. Co. of Chicago v. Mosley, 75 U. S. (8 Wall.) 397, 407, 19 L. Ed. 437.

In a prosecution for murder, defendant testified in his own behalf that he remained at the place of the shooting for some time, and then rode to the home of deceased and notified the family, after which he started to deliver himself to the sheriff, and, meeting a person one mile and a half from the place of the shooting, delivered the gun to him. Held, that testimony of the defendant as to what he said when he delivered the gun was not competent as part of the res gestæ. It was not so closely connected with the act as to become an incident thereof, or to be the facts talking through the defendant. So much time had elapsed after the shooting took place that the defendant had ample opportunity to form his design and plan of defense; the shooting was complete; provision had been made for the comfort of the victim; the defendant had gone a mile and a half for the purpose of submitting to arrest; the event was past; the tragedy had been acted; and defendant's statement was but his history of a deed that was already done and complete in all its parts. Territory v. Clayton, 19 Pac. 293, 297, 8 Mont. 1.

Where accused procured a gun in a saloon, went back about 50 feet, killed a man with it, then returned to the saloon, and, throwing the gun on the floor, exclaimed: "My God! I have killed my best friend"—then hurried back to the dying man, raised his head, repeating that he had shot his best friend and would be hanged, such declarations constituted parts of the res gestæ, and were legitimate independent evidence of the homicidal act. Sullivan v. State, 79 N. W. 721, 723, 58 Neb. 796.

Deceased was shot in the neck, and his articulation was affected by blood collecting in his throat. About 15 minutes after he was shot, brandy and camphor were administered; and about 15 minutes afterwards, when able to talk, he made certain statements as to the circumstances of the shooting and who shot him. Held, that the declarations were admissible as part of the res gestæ. Fulcher's Case, 13 S. W. 750, 751, 28 Tex. App. 465.

The declarations of a prisoner in his own behalf are not admissible for the defense unless they form part of the res gestæ. To be such, it is not necessary that they should be precisely concurrent with the act under trial. It is enough if they spring from it, and are made under circumstances which preclude the idea of design. It is only when the declarations are distinguishable in point of time, and are open to the suspicion of being a part of defendant's plan of defense, that they should be excluded. Thus, where one is charged with stealing a certain thing, his declarations that it was his property, made before the alleged stealing, were admissible in evidence. State v. Thomas, 30 La. Ann. 600, 602.

Declarations made about 20 minutes after the homicide, and so intimately connected with it as to negative the idea of manufacturing testimony, are a part of the res gestæ. Stagner v. State, 9 Tex. App. 440, 456.

The conversation of a party within two to five minutes of the transaction which resulted in the homicide, and before preparation for defense could probably have been in the mind of the party speaking, especially if the sayings are against his interest, is part of the res gestæ. O'Shields v. State, 55 Ga. 696, 701.

Declarations of a donor made on the evening of the same day on which an alleged gift was made, but after it was made, going to show that there was a gift, and the manner of it, are not admissible as part of the res gestæ. Carter v. Buchannon, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 513, 517.

A statement made by defendant 10 minutes after the homicide, and within 500 yards of where it occurred, to the effect that he went to deceased's house to get some clothes, and while there they quarreled, whereupon deceased cut defendant's coat, and that he shot her to prevent her from killing him, is inadmissible as part of the res gestæ; it not appearing what defendant was doing in the interval between the statement and homicide. Ford's Case, 50 S. W. 350, 351, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 280.

The statement of a person fatally injured in a railroad collision, made from 30 to 60 minutes after the accident, as to the manner in which it occurred, is simply the narrative of a past transaction, and is not admissible as part of the res gestæ. Steinhofel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 65 N. W. 852, 853, 92 Wis. 123.

On a trial for murder, evidence that, a few minutes after the shooting, deceased said that defendant had shot her, is not admissible as part of the res gestæ. People v. Wong Ark, 30 Pac. 1115, 1117, 96 Cal. 125.

On the trial of an issue as to whether some of the heirs of a decedent had received property from him as an advancement, declarations of deceased, made years after the transaction took place, that the transfer was intended as a gift, were too remote to be admitted as a part of the res gestæ. Thistlewaite v. Thistlewaite, 31 N. E. 946, 132 Ind. 355.

Declaration of deceased person.

The term "res gestæ" means a thing or things done in and about as a part of the transaction out of which the litigation in hand grew, and on which transaction said litigation is based. The declaration of a person since deceased is competent evidence, as being part of the res gestæ, of some transaction occurring in the life of said deceased, provided the declaration so made was near the time of the transaction, and under such circumstances as to raise the presumption that it was an unpremeditated explanation thereof. Collins v. State, 64 N. W. 432, 434, 46 Neb. 37.

In case of homicide resulting from an operation performed by the accused upon the body of the deceased to bring about an abortion, the declaration of the deceased, made at the time she was introduced to the accused, to the effect that she was pregnant, and which had direct reference to the contemplated transaction between deceased and the accused, is admissible in evidence as a part of the res gestæ. State v. Alcorn, 64 Pac. 1014, 1018, 7 Idaho, 599, 97 Am. St. Rep. 252.

Deceased made statements to his son, and wrote a note to his wife, a few hours before leaving home on the night of the murder, to the effect that he was going to the city of C. on business, and that the prisoner was going with him. Held, that such statements, both oral and written, were admissible as part of the res gestæ; as explanations of the act of going from home. Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 495, 538.

As illustrative of main transaction.

Res gestæ are the circumstances, facts, and declarations which grow out of the main fact, are contemporaneous with it, and serve to illustrate its character. Carter v. Buchannon, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 513, 517; Chicago & R.

Ry. Co. v. Cummings, 53 N. E. 1026, 1031, 24 Ind. App. 192. "When the act of a party may be given in evidence, his declarations made at the time, and calculated to elucidate and explain the character and quality of the act, and so connected with it as to constitute one transaction, and so as to derive credit from the act itself, are admissible in evidence. There must be a main or principal fact or transaction, and only such declarations are admissible as grow out of the principal transaction, illustrate its character, are contemporary with it, and derive some degree of credit from it." Pinney v. Jones, 30 Atl. 762, 763, 64 Conn. 545, 42 Am. St. Rep. 209.

Res gestæ is a matter incidental to a main fact and explanatory. It is made up of acts and words which are so closely connected with a main fact as to really constitute a part of it, and without a knowledge of which the main fact might not be properly understood. Eagon v. Eagon, 60 Kan. 697, 706, 57 Pac. 942, 943.

The idea of res gestæ presupposes a main fact or principal transaction, and the res gestæ mean the circumstances, facts, and declarations which grow out of the main fact, are contemporaneous with it, and serve to illustrate its character. In an action against a railroad company for the killing of a child, evidence as to what the engineer said about the accident within a few minutes after the child was killed is admissible as a part of the res gestæ. Hermes v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 50 N. W. 584, 585, 80 Wis. 590, 27 Am. St. Rep. 69.

As a part of principal act.

Declarations, in order to become a part of the res gestæ, must accompany the act which they are supposed to characterize, and must so harmonize as to be obviously one transaction. Coffin v. Bradbury, 35 Pac. 715, 720, 3 Idaho (Hasb.) 770, 95 Am. St. Rep. 37.

In order to make a declaration admissible as part of the res gestæ, it must accompany an act which directly or indirectly is relevant to the issue, and must in some way qualify, explain, or characterize that act, and be in legal sense a part of it. Commonwealth v. Trefethen, 31 N. E. 961, 963, 157 Mass. 180, 24 L. R. A. 235.

"Evidence, to constitute part of the res gestæ, must be connected with the subject-matter under investigation. Thus declarations and exclamations of persons not present at the place where an accident occurred which is the subject of the action, and who did no act which contributed to the accident, are no part of the res gestæ, as they are in no wise connected with the accident itself. It is stated in Waldele v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 274, 47 Am. Rep. 41, that the rule is that, when the act of a party may be given in evidence, his declarations made at the time, and calculated to elucidate and explain the character and quality of the act, and so constitute one transaction, and so as to derive credit from the act itself, are admissible in evidence. But declarations of a person, made while looking from a window of a house, having a tendency only to corroborate his testimony that he then saw a street railway accident, are not admissible as part of the res gestæ of the accident." Ehrhard v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 74 N. Y. Supp. 551, 552, 69 App. Div. 124.

Declarations accompanying and explaining the res gestæ may be proved, but such declarations are not admissible as part of the res gestæ unless they in some way elucidate or tend to characterize the act which they accompany, or may derive a degree of credit from the fact itself. If the declaration offered in evidence depends entirely for its effect on the credit of the person making it, it is inadmissible. United States v. Angell (U. S.) 11 Fed. 34, 39.

The declarations of a prisoner are not admissible as part of the res gestæ unless they are made at the time of the act which is being investigated, and which they are calculated to characterize. They must so harmonize and be connected with the act as to constitute a part of it. Nelson v. State, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 237.

Narratives.

The term "res gestæ" is defined as "the transaction, thing done, or subject-matter, as when it is necessary, in the course of a case, to inquire into the nature of a particular act, or the intention of the party who did the act." Proof of what the person said at the time of doing it is admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ, for the purpose of showing its true character. The general rule is that declarations, to become part of the res gestæ, must accompany the act which they are supposed to characterize, and so harmonize with them as to constitute one transaction. If the declarations are mere narratives of a past event or occurrence, they are not res gestæ. People v. Dewey, 6 Pac. 103, 105, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 83.

Statements of observers.

Statements of observers not participants in the act, the subject of investigation, are not admissible as res gestæ. On a trial for manslaughter, testimony that a witness for the state, present when the deceased received the shot, on passing from the room where the shot was delivered to the front room, stated to the persons who were there, in answer to the question, "What is the matter back there?" that accused had shot deceased, and shot him down for nothing, was inadmissible as part of the res gestæ. State v.

Ramsey, 20 South. 904, 905, 48 La. Ann. 1407.

The res gestæ in larceny is not restricted to the limited time when the fingers reach out and grasp the articles stolen. The quo animo, and all actions and words whereby that is demonstrated, form part of the res gestæ, and thus become admissible in evidence to prove the character of the act charged to be a crime. Declarations of a third person are not hearsay, and therefore are admissible in evidence where they are the natural concomitants of an act done by him, and are explanatory of such act, and such act is a part of the res gestæ. State v. Gabriel, 88 Mo. 631, 638.

As related to pertinent fact.

A declaration is not admissible as characterizing an act and constituting part of the res gestæ unless the act also is pertinent to the issue. Thus, on an indictment for poisoning, evidence that the deceased, on going out of her house just before she was poisoned, said she was going to meet the prisoner, is not admissible as tending to prove their meeting, even in connection with evidence of her illness on her return and her attributing it to what the prisoner had given her to drink. People v. Williams (N. Y.) 3 Abb. Dec. 596, 601.

Reply to question.

In an action against a railroad company for the negligent killing of a brakeman while in its employ, the declaration of the brakeman that "that handhold let me down," made to a witness who had seen the accident when a few yards away, and had run to help the brakeman in answer to his call after the exclamation by witness of "What in the world!" is not a part of the res gestæ, but is in the nature of a response to an inquiry. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearson, 12 South. 176, 179, 97 Ala. 211 (following Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Hammond, 9 South. 577, 93 Ala. 181).

Spontaneity.

The test of whether or not declarations are res gestæ is, were they the facts talking through the party or the party's talk about the facts? Instinctiveness is the requisite, and when this exists the declarations are admissible. State v. Lockett, 68 S. W. 563, 565, 168 Mo. 480.

Declarations res gestæ are not merely declarations accompanying acts, but they are also declarations concomitant with present facts. The test of their admissibility is instinctiveness of utterance. If they appear to be the spontaneous and unpremeditated speech of the party in immediate causal relation to the thing in question, they are admissible, whether that thing be an act concurrently performed or a fact concurrently existing, or whether it be inculpatory or exculpatory in character or import. The declarations, therefore, of a person found in the possession of stolen goods as to how he came by them, made by him at once upon their being discovered in his keeping, are res gestæ. State v. Gillespie, 63 Pac. 742, 743, 62 Kan. 469, 84 Am. St. Rep. 411.

There are no limits of time within which the res gestæ can be arbitrarily confined. They vary, in fact, with each particular case. The distinguishing feature of declarations of this class is that they should be the necessary incidents of the litigated act—necessary in this sense: that they are part of the immediate concomitants or conditions of such act, and are not produced by the calculated policy of the actors. They need not be coincident as to time if they are generated by an excited feeling which extends, without break or let, down from the moment of the event they illustrate. In other words, they must stand in immediate causal relation to the act, and become part either of the action immediately producing it, or of action which it immediately produces. Whart. Cr. Ev. (8th Ed.) §§ 262, 263. The test is, were the declarations the facts talking through the party, or the party's talk about the facts? Instinctiveness is the requisite, and, where this obtains, the declarations are admissible. Bradberry v. State, 22 Tex. App. 273, 2 S. W. 592, 593.

Res gestæ are events speaking for themselves through the instinctive and spontaneous words and acts of participants, and not the words of participants when narrating the events. The distinguishing characteristic of these declarations is that they must be necessary incidents of the criminal act, or immediate concomitants of it, and that they are not due to calculated policy. State v. Mollisse, 38 La. Ann. 381, 382, 58 Am. Rep. 181.

Statements not made in defendant's presence.

Concomitant acts speaking through the principal actor, and events incident to the main transaction, are a part of the res gestæ. Sullivan v. State, 58 Neb. 796, 800, 79 N. W. 721. And statements made by deceased to a third person immediately preceding a homicide, and bearing a causal relation thereto, are admissible as a part of the res gestæ, though not made in the immediate presence of the defendant. McCormick v. State (Neb.) 92 N. W. 606, 607.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

"Res ipsa loquitur" imports that the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case without any direct proof of actionable negligence. Bien v. Unger, 46 Atl. 593, 595, 64 N. J. Law, 596.

The meaning of the phrase "res ipsa loquitur" is that the jury are warranted in finding from their knowledge as men of the world that such accidents usually do not happen except through the defendant's fault, and therefore in inferring that this one happened through the defendant's fault, unless otherwise explained. Pinney v. Hall, 156 Mass. 225, 30 N. E. 1016 (cited in State v. Green, 52 Atl. 678, 675, 95 Md. 217).

The phrase "res ipsa loquitur," which, literally translated, means that "the thing speaks for itself," is merely a short way of saying that the circumstances attendant upon an accident are, of themselves, of such a character as to justify a jury in inferring negligence as the cause of that accident, and the doctrine which it embodies, though correct in itself, may be said to be applicable to two classes of cases only, to wit: "First, when the relation of carrier and passenger exists, and the accident arises from some abnormal condition in the department of actual transportation; second, where the injury arises from some condition or event that is in its very nature so obviously destructive of person or property, and is so tortious in its quality, as in the first instance, at least, to permit no inference save that of negligence on the part of the person in the control of the injurious agency," Benedick v. Potts, 40 Atl. 1067, 1068, 88 Md. 52, 41 L. R. A. 478 (citing Thomas, Negl. 574); Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 926, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630. There must be reasonable evidence of negligence, but when a thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or its servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of an explanation by defendant, that the accident arose from want of care. For instance, where a piece of coal flew from the tender of a passing train and injured a section hand who was standing at a reasonable distance from the track, this, in the absence of explanation, and under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, constituted sufficient negligence on the part of the company to establish a prima facie case, notwithstanding that the coal was properly loaded on the tender. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wood (Tex.) 63 S. W. 164, 165.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, as expounded by the Court of Appeals in its latest utterance on the subject, in Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630, relates simply to the probative force of evidence. It does not dispense with the necessity of evidence of the defendant's negligence in any case, but, on the contrary, expressly requires it. In its application in those cases where the accident is such as in the ordinary course of business does not happen if reasonable care is used, the effect of the rule is that evidence of the attendant circumstances is sufficient for an inference of negligence, without proof of any specific negligent act. But the attendant circumstances shown must be such as will warrant an inference not of negligence only, but of defendant's negligence—an inference that the injury is attributable to some violation of defendant's duty. The learned judge who wrote the opinion in Griffen v. Manice, supra, in explaining the meaning and application of "res ipsa loquitur," quotes approvingly section 59 of Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, as follows: "It is not that in any case negligence can be assumed from the mere fact of the accident and injury, but in these cases the surrounding circumstances which are necessarily brought into view by showing how the accident occurred contain, without further proof, sufficient evidence of defendant's duty, and his neglect to perform it. The fact of the casualty and the attendant circumstances may themselves furnish all the proof of negligence that the injured person is able to offer, or that it is necessary to offer." The judge, in his opinion, also quotes approvingly from Benedick v. Potts, 88 Md. 52, 40 Atl. 1067, 41 L. R. A. 478, and concludes: "The res includes the attending circumstances, and, so defined, the application of the rule presents principally the question of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to establish or to justify the jury in inferring the existence of the traversable or principal fact in issue—the defendant's negligence. The question in every case is the same—whether the circumstances surrounding the occurrence are such as to justify the jury in inferring the fact in issue." Thus it was held in an action for personal injuries that the doctrine did not apply, as, while the circumstances may have shown negligence, there was nothing to suggest that it was the negligence of the master, rather than that of fellow servants. Fink v. Slade, 72 N. Y. Supp. 821, 824, 66 App. Div. 105.

"Res ipsa loquitur" is a phrase which, as was said by Mr. Justice Garrison in Bahr v. Lombard, 21 Atl. 190, 23 Atl. 167, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 233, imports that in each case there must be something in the facts that speaks of the negligence of defendant; that is, that the thing which caused the injury was under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident was so unlikely to occur, if proper care had been exercised, as to justify an inference that it was due to some neglect of duty. The general rule is that the occurrence of an accident does not raise the presumption of negligence, but, where the testimony which proves the occurrence by which the plaintiff was injured discloses circumstances from which the defendant's negligence is a reasonable inference, a case is presented which calls for a defense. Excelsior Electric Co. v. Sweet, 30 Atl. 553, 554, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 224.

The term "res ipsa loquitur" is used in the law of negligence with reference to cases where an accident has occurred, and the physical facts surrounding it are such as to create a reasonable probability that the accident was the result of negligence. In such cases the physical facts themselves are evidential, and furnish evidence of negligence. It is often difficult to determine when this maxim is to be applied, and its application must depend to a very great extent upon the circumstances of each case as it arises. The maxim is applicable where a servant is injured by the defective manner in which a wheel in the tackle block of a derrick is held in place, if it appears that the pin would not have worked out of place if it had been securely fastened in the block and had been kept in that condition, and therefore the mere fact that the pin worked out is presumptive evidence of the master's negligence. Houston v. Brush, 29 Atl. 380, 383, 66 Vt. 331.

What the court designates as a free paraphrase of the expression "res ipsa loquitur" is as follows: There are a class of cases in which there has been no direct evidence of any particular act of negligence, beyond the mere fact that something unusual has happened, which caused the injury. In such cases each will depend upon its own facts, with this understanding: that where a certain course of action has been pursued by any person without injury to others, and he, upon changing that course, injures another, the thing, unexplained, speaks for itself that such person has been negligent; or, if something unusual happens with respect to the defendant's property, or something over which he has control, which injures the plaintiff, and the natural inference on the evidence is that the unusual occurrence is owing to the defendant's act, the occurrence, being unusual, is said to speak for itself that such act was negligent. Bahr v. Lombard, 21 Atl. 190, 192, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom) 233.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has received recent consideration from the courts, and the doctrine given a liberal construction. In Breen v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 109 N. Y. 297, 16 N. E. 60, 4 Am. St. Rep. 450, the rule is thus stated: "There must be reasonable evidence of negligence, but when the thing causing the injury is shown to be under the control of a defendant, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of business, does not happen if reasonable care is used, it does, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, afford sufficient evidence that the accident arose from want of care on its part." In Griffen v. Manice, 166 N. Y. 188, 59 N. E. 925, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630, the cases are examined, and the rule stated is approved. The opinion, in part, reads: "The maxim is also, in part, based on the consideration that, where the management and control of the thing which has produced the injury is exclusively vested in the defendant, it is within his power to produce evidence of the actual cause that produced the accident, which the plaintiff is unable to present." These views have been recently reiterated in this department in the case of Fink v. Slade (decided at the November term) 72 N. Y. Supp. 821, 96 App. Div. 105, and also find support in analogous cases in this and other states. In White v. Boston & A. R. Co., 144 Mass. 404, 11 N. E. 552, it is held that there is a presumption of negligence where a passenger is injured by the falling of a lamp shade. In Och v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 130 Mo. 27, 31 S. W. 962, 36 L. R. A. 442, a presumption of negligence was held to arise where the injury was caused by the falling of a ventilator window. In Horn v. New Jersey Steamboat Co., 23 App. Div. 302, 48 N. Y. Supp. 348, it was held that the falling of an upper berth from an unexplained cause was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the steamboat company. See, also, Gerlach v. Edelmeyer, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. (15 Jones & S.) 292, affirmed 88 N. Y. 645; Wolf v. American Tract Society, 164 N. Y. 30, 58 N. E. 31, 51 L. R. A. 241; Stewart v. Ferguson, 52 App. Div. 317, 320, 65 N. Y. Supp. 149. The falling of a fire extinguisher fastened to the side of a car, resulting in the injury to plaintiff, was held to establish a prima facie case of negligence against defendant, in the absence of evidence explaining the occurrence. Allen v. United Traction Co., 73 N. Y. Supp. 737, 67 App. Div. 363.

Where the physical facts of an accident themselves create a reasonable probability that it resulted from negligence, the physical facts themselves are evidential, and furnish what the law terms "evidence of negligence," in conformity with the maxim "res ipsa loquitur." Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 562, 47 Am. Rep. 75. Thus, where a loud and unusual noise came from an electric car, and a volume of smoke issued therefrom, frightening plaintiff's horse, an instruction that such noise and smoke raised a presumption that it would not have been caused if defendant had used proper care in relation to the machinery of the car, and that the jury may infer that the defendant was guilty of negligence, was properly given. Richmond Ry. & Electric Co. v. Hudgins, 41 S. E. 736, 733, 100 Va. 409.

The theory of "res ipsa loquitur" may be illustrated by a statement from Blanton v. Dold, 18 S. W. 1140, 1149, 109 Mo. 64, where plaintiff was injured by the sudden starting of a machine contrary to its ordinary mode of operation. The court held that such action of the machinery tended of itself to show want of care in its construction or condition, and, by way of argument, said: "Some catastrophes are of a nature such as to carry in a mere statement of their occurrence an implication of neglect. In such event the theory speaks for itself." Cothron v. Cudahy Packing Co., 73 S. W. 279, 280, 98 Mo. App. 343.

The most apt and concise statement of the principle of res ipsa loquitur is found in the leading case of Scott v. London & St. Katherine Docks Co., 3 Hurl. & C. 596, where the plaintiff sued for personal injuries, and the court held there must be reasonable evidence of negligence, but, where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by defendant, that the accident arose from want of care. Chenall v. Palmer Brick Co., 43 S. E. 443, 445, 117 Ga. 106 (citing Waterhouse v. Schlitz Brewing Co., 81 N. W. 725, 12 S. D. 397, 48 L. R. A. 157).

RES JUDICATA.

See "Res Adjudicata."

RESCIND.

To rescind is to abrogate, annul, avoid, or cancel a contract. Powell v. F. C. Linde Co., 60 N. Y. Supp. 1044, 29 Misc. Rep. 419 (citing Abb. Law Dict.).

The word "rescind," as used in a statement by a party to a contract as follows, "I hereby terminate and rescind my said written contract," is synonymous with the word "terminate," and the rescission therefore relates only to the unfulfilled part, and not to the entire agreement, making the party rescinding liable on notes executed pursuant to the contract which matured before the rescission. Hurst v. Trow Printing & Bookbinding Co., 22 N. Y. Supp. 371, 374, 375, 2 Misc. Rep. 861.

RESCISSION.

Bishop defines a rescission of a contract as the avoidance of a voidable contract. Bish. Cont. § 679. But even where a contract is voidable, and is sought to be rescinded by one of the parties thereto, equity and good conscience require that he shall place the other in statu quo. He will not be permitted to repudiate a contract, and retain the benefits derived therefrom. Tecumseh State Bank v. Maddox, 46 Pac. 563, 568, 4 Okl. 583.

The rescission is the unmaking of a contract, requiring the same concurrence of wills as that which made it, and nothing short of this will suffice. There is a wide difference between the rescission of a contract and its mere termination or cancellation. Winton v. Spring, 18 Cal. 451, 452. It is well settled that a technical rescission of a contract has the legal effect of entitling each of the parties to be restored to the condition in which he was before the contract was made, so far as that is possible, and that no rights accrue to either party by the force of the terms of the contract. Clark v. American Developing & Mining Co., 72 Pac. 978, 980, 28 Mont. 468 (citing Anvil Min. Co. v. Humble, 153 U. S. 540, 14 Sup. Ct. 876, 38 L. Ed. 814).

After a contract has been broken, whether by an inability to perform it, or by a rescinding against right or otherwise, the party not in fault may sue the other for the damages suffered, or, if the parties can be placed in statu quo, he may, should he prefer, return what he has received, and recover in a suit the value of what he has paid or done. The latter remedy is termed "rescission." Merrill v. Merrill, 35 Pac. 768, 769, 103 Cal. 287.

Where the purchaser of goods fails to accept the same, and the seller refuses to take them back, and sues for the price, there is no rescission. The act of refusing to accept an article is not in accordance with the contract, but one of insistence on, and no rescission of, the contract. Potsdamer v. Kruse, 58 N. W. 983, 57 Minn. 193.

Rescission is a fact. The word itself may be used by contracting parties to indicate the right, but other words may be adopted to point out that course of conduct of the parties which shall constitute the fact of rescission. Hence omission of the term "rescind" in a contract does not indicate that other language was not intended to give a right to rescind. Seanor v. McLaughlin, 30 Atl. 717, 719, 165 Pa. 150, 32 L. R. A. 467.

RESCUE.

Aiding prisoner to escape distinguished.
see "Aid."

Rescue is forcibly and knowingly freeing another from arrest or imprisonment. Code, § 4478. A rescue takes place where there is no effort on the part of the prisoner to escape, but his delivery is effected by the interference of others without his co-operation, whereas the offense of aiding a prisoner to escape consists in inciting, supporting, and re-enforcing his exertions in his own behalf tending to the accomplishment of the object. Robinson v. State, 9 S. E. 528, 529, 82 Ga. 535.

A rescue is defined to be "when a man lawfully arrested and taken is set at large wrongfully." An indictment for a rescue will not lie for a trespass on property. State v. Mazyck (S. C.) 3 Rich. Law, 291, 292.

The taking away and setting at liberty against the law a distrained animal constitutes a rescue, and it is not necessary that positive violence or menacing or threatening words should be employed to characterize the act as a rescue, and such a taking is esteemed in law a violent taking. Hamlin v. Mack, 33 Mich. 103, 108.

Taking cattle from the lawful custody of a field driver while driving the cattle to the pound is a rescue, though the cattle are never out of the sight of the field driver, and are finally yielded to him and impounded. Vinton v. Vinton, 17 Mass. 342, 344.

RESENTMENT.

Anger distinguished, see "Anger."

RESERVATION.

See "Military Reservation."

A reservation is a clause in a deed creating or reserving something out of the thing granted that was not in existence before. Winston v. Johnson, 45 N. W. 958, 959, 42 Minn. 398; Fischer v. Laack, 45 N. W. 104, 105, 76 Wis. 313; Langdon v. City of New York (N. Y.) 6 Abb. N. O. 314, 321; Gould v. Glass (N. Y.) 19 Barb. 179, 192; Barnes v. Burt, 38 Conn. 541, 542; Gay v. Walker, 36 Me. 54, 60, 58 Am. Dec. 734; Morrison v. First Nat. Bank, 33 Atl. 782, 88 Me. 155; State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9, 21. A reservation is something taken back out of that which is granted, such as rent, or some right to be exercised, such as the cutting of timber. Youngerman v. Polk County Sup'rs, 81 N. W. 166, 167, 110 Iowa, 731; Randall v. Randall, 59 Me. 338, 340.

A reservation is defined to be a keeping aside or providing, as where a man lets or parts with his land, but reserves or provides himself a rent out of it. Stephens v. Reynolds, 6 N. Y. (2 Seld.) 454, 458 (citing Jacob, Law Dict.); Parsell v. Stryker, 41 N. Y. 480, 483; Wegner v. Lubenow (N. D.) 95 N. W. 442, 445.

A reservation in a deed is something created out of the granted premises by force and effect of the reservation itself, as an easement out of land granted, or rent out of premises devised. In re Narragansett Indians, 40 Atl. 347, 355, 20 R. I. 715; Elliot v. Small, 29 N. W. 158, 159, 35 Minn. 396, 59 Am. Rep. 329.

Reservation is something taken from the whole thing covered by the general terms making the grant, and cuts down and lessens the grant from what it would be except for the reservation. Miller v. Lapham, 44 Vt. 416, 435.

A reservation is a proviso in a deed which reserves to the grantor some new right or interest in the thing granted, not before existing in him, operating by way of an implied grant. If it does not contain words of inheritance, it will only give an estate for the life of the grantor. Engel v. Ayer, 27 Atl. 352, 354, 85 Me. 448.

A reservation is a proviso in a deed creating some new right issuing out of the thing granted, which did not exist before as an independent right, in the behalf of the grantor, and not of a stranger. Gould v. Howe, 23 N. E. 602, 603, 131 Ill. 490 (citing 2 Washb. Real. Prop. [2d Ed.] pp. 646, 693, § 67).

A reservation is something in futuro in respect to the use of the land, as an easement or the like. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Hewitt, 66 Wis. 461, 466, 29 N. W. 237.

A reservation in a grant must be of some new right not in esse before the grant, as of rent, etc., or perhaps of some pre-existing easement. Cutler v. Tufts, 20 Mass. (2 Pick.) 272, 278.

A reservation is a proviso in a deed creating some new right or interest in the thing granted, and reserving the same for the benefit of the grantor. Inhabitants of Winthrop v. Fairbanks, 41 Me. 307, 311.

A reservation is always something issuing or coming out of the thing or property granted, and not a part of the thing itself, and must be to the grantor or party executing it, and not to a stranger. Karmuller v. Krotz, 18 Iowa, 352, 358 (quoting Borst v. Emple, 5 N. Y. [1 Seld.] 33, 38).

Exceptions distinguished.

Strictly speaking, a reservation in a deed "is something merely created or reserved out of the thing granted, that was not in existence before—to illustrate, an easement—while an exception is of a part of the thing granted, and of something in esse at the time." Winston v. Johnson, 45 N. W. 958, 959, 42 Minn. 398; Moffitt v. Lytle, 30 Atl. 922-923, 165 Pa. 173; Cocheco Mfg. Co. v. Whittier, 10 N. H. 305, 310.

The words "reserving and excepting," in a deed, are often used indiscriminately, and whether a particular provision is an exception or reservation does not depend on the use of either term, but on the nature and effect of the provision itself. Martin v. Cook, 60 N. W. 679, 680, 102 Mich. 267; Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co., 107 Mass. 290, 298.

The terms "exception" and "reservation" are often used in deeds indiscriminately, and sometimes what purports to be a reservation as to form is an exception. A reservation is a thing issuing out of the land granted. Thus a provision in a deed conveying certain premises, except the dower of 50 acres, etc., is an exception. McAfee v. Arline, 10 S. E. 441, 442, 83 Ga. 645.

A reservation differs from an exception in this: that the latter is a part of the thing granted—of the thing in esse at the time—but the former is of a thing newly created or reserved out of the thing demised, that was not in esse before. The two words are, however, often used indiscriminately. Whether a particular provision is an exception or a reservation does not depend on the use of the word "reservation" or "exception," but on the nature and effect of the provision itself. A reservation, in a conveyance, is the withholding by the grantor of some right or privilege for his own use out of, or in connection with, the estate conveyed, while an exception relates to a part of the thing granted. A reservation, and not an exception, is created by a deed conveying certain premises, but "excepting and reserving * * * the right and privilege of taking water from" a stream on the premises conveyed, and "also the right and privilege of three watering places for the convenience of" the grantor. Smith v. Cornell University, 45 N. Y. Supp. 640, 641, 21 Misc. Rep. 220.

The words "exception and reservation" are frequently used indiscriminately, and it not infrequently happens that a deed that purports to be a reservation has the force of an exception, or vice versa. A provision in a deed reserving to the grantor so much of the premises as may be needful for his enjoyment of the waters of a creek and all water rights for mining purposes is a reservation, pure and simple. Wilson v. Higbee (U. S.) 62 Fed. 723, 726.

A reservation in a deed has sometimes the force of a saving or exception. "Exception" is always a part of the thing granted, and a reservation is of a thing not in being, but is newly created out of the lands and tenements demised. Though "exception" and "reservation" have been used promiscuously, it is well settled that, in giving construction to instruments, the intention of the party is to be effectuated, and, if a deed cannot effect the design of them in one mode known to the law, their purpose may be accomplished in another, provided no rule of law is violated. Hence the distinction between an exception and reservation is so obscure in many cases that it has been observed that that which in terms is a reservation in a deed is often construed to be an exception, in order that the object designed to be secured may not be lost. A deed from a father to son of a tract of land lying between two other tracts owned by the father, and across which was a road connecting the two tracts retained by the father, contained a clause, "reserving forever for myself the privilege of passing with teams and cattle across the same in suitable places to land I own south of the premises." This reservation was construed to be an exception. Inhabitants of Winthrop v. Fairbanks, 41 Me. 307, 311, 312; Myers v. Bell Tel. Co., 82 N. Y. Supp. 83, 84, 83 App. Div. 623; McClintock v. Loveless, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 417, 418; Sears v. Ackerman, 72 Pac. 171, 172, 138 Cal. 583.

A deed contained a specific description of the land conveyed, and also this clause, "Said R. reserving lots sold, Nos. 1, 2, 3," etc.; designating by number 29 lots. The grantee claimed that the grantor excepted from his deed such lots only as he had in fact sold, and that such of the lots specified in the reservation as he had in fact not sold passed to the grantee in the deed. The word "reserving," used in this deed, in strict sense, means excepted. The office of an exception in a deed is to take something out of the thing granted that would otherwise pass, while a reservation creates in favor of the grantor some new right out of the thing granted which was not before in esse. The terms, however, as used in deeds, are often treated as synonymous; and words creating an exception are to have effect as such, although the word "reservation" is employed. In this case the grantor undertook to withdraw from his grant certain lots, and the language is to be construed as an exception. The same rules of construction apply to an exception in a deed as govern the grant itself. Indeed, all books treat of an exception upon the theory that it is a regrant by the grantee to the grantor of the estate described in the exception. Roberts v. Robertson, 53 Vt. 690, 692, 38 Am. Rep. 710.

By an exception some portion of the subject of the grant is excluded from the conveyance, and the title to the part excepted remains in the grantor by virtue of his original title. A reservation creates a new right out of the subject of the grant, and is originated by the conveyance. A deed conveying certain premises, excepting and reserving the right of interment on the land reserved for that purpose in the land conveyed, is an exception, and not a reservation. Mitchell v. Thorne, 32 N. E. 10, 12, 134 N. Y. 536, 80 Am. St. Rep. 699.

The words "exception" and "reservation" are often used indiscriminately, though there is a known difference between them. An exception is separating a part of that embraced in the description and already existing in specie, as excepting a particular parcel of land from a farm granted by general words. A reservation is something newly created out of the granted premises by force and effect of the reservation itself, as an easement out of lands granted, or rent out of lands demised. By a certain deed A. conveyed to C. a parcel of land, together with a certain water right for the running of a mill, "except the reserve of the right and privilege of conveying water through the premises hereby granted and conveyed, in the channel now open." A. controlled other water in the stream besides that conveyed to C. Held, that the phraseology was equivalent to "except and reserve," and that the grantor meant by such terms to secure himself the easement to convey water through the channel referred to; that it could not have been a reservation out of the water power, because the grant of water to C. was clear and distinct. And even had it been a reservation, in terms, as to water not granted to him, it would have been void as a reservation, because there was nothing for it to operate on. If the clause had been inserted, "except and reserve all the grantor's other water power," it would still be void; neither adding to nor diminishing the grantor's such other water power. Hurd v. Curtis, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 94, 110.

A reservation is always of something taken back out of that which is already granted, while an exception is of some part of the estate not granted at all. A reservation is never of any part of the estate itself, out of something issuing out of it, as, for instance, rent, or some right to be exercised in relation to the estate, as to cut timber. An exception, on the other hand, must be of a part of the thing granted or described, and can be of nothing else. Blackman v. Striker, 37 N. E. 484, 485, 142 N. Y. 555.

An exception in a grant is always a part of the thing granted and of a thing in being, while a reservation is of a thing not in being, but is merely created out of lands and tenements devised. It is said that, although these terms are frequently used as substantially synonymous, yet they are in reality different. A reservation is a clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves something to himself out of that which he granted before. This differs from an exception, which is always a part of the thing granted and of a thing in existence at the time. A reservation is always something taken back out of that which is granted, while an exception is some part of the estate not granted at all. A reservation is never of any part of the estate itself, but of something issuing out of it, as, for instance, rent, or some right to be exercised in relation to the estate, as to cut timber upon it. An exception, on the other hand, must be a portion of the thing granted, or described as granted, and must also be of something which can be enjoyed separately from the thing granted. Where a deed of a certain piece of land reserved the right to cut and remove all the pine timber or trees upon said premises, and provided that the right "is hereby reserved by the grantor to enter upon said lands at any time within two years from the date of the deed, for the purpose of cutting or removing the trees or timber so reserved," it was held that there was a reservation, and not an exception, so that the absolute right of property in the trees was not excepted out of the estate granted, but there was only a right reserved to enter within two years and cut and remove the trees. Rich v. Zeilsdorff, 22 Wis. 544, 547, 99 Am. Dec. 81.

"A reservation is a clause of a deed whereby the feoffor, donor, lessor, grantor, etc., doth reserve some new thing to himself out of that which he granted before. This doth differ from an exception, which is ever of part of the thing granted, and of a thing in esse at the time; but this is of a thing newly created or reserved out of a thing demised that was not in esse before, so that this doth always reserve that which was not before, or abridge the tenor of that which was before. If one grant land yielding for rent money, corn, a horse, spurs, a rose, or any such thing, this is a good reservation; but if the reservation be of grass, or of the vesture of the land, or of a common or other profit to be taken out of the land, then these reservations are void." Whitaker v. Brown, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 197, 198 (quoting Shep. Touch. p. 80); Goodrich v. Eastern R. R., 37 N. H. 149, 164, 167; Adams v. Morse, 51 Me. 497, 498; Inhabitants of Winthrop v. Fairbanks, 41 Me. 307, 311. .

An exception is something taken out of that which is before granted, by which means it does not pass by the grant, but is severed from the estate granted. A reservation is something issuing out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing granted. Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, "Deed," c. 3; Cunningham v. Knight (N. Y.) 1 Barb. 399, 407; Herbert v. Pue, 20 Atl. 182, 183, 72 Md. 307.

A provision in a deed to a railroad company, "Said company to build a crossing over said railroad to pass to the back land with cart or otherwise," could not constitute an exception. The office of a provision of that description is to exclude from the grant, and retain to the grantor, some portion of his estate; whatever is thus excluded remaining in him as of his former right and title, because it is not granted. A reservation, on the other hand, is a new creation of something not previously existing. The grantee under the deed was subjected by its terms to the duty of building a crossing over the proposed railroad, to be used to pass to the back land with cart or otherwise. The railroad was yet to be constructed. Whatever was thus to be done was to be done as a new thing in the future, and the words in question therefore are to be construed as a reservation. Knowlton v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 44 Atl. 8, 9, 72 Conn. 188.

In construing a deed conveying in fee a tract of land, and stating that "the said grantor doth reserve a road ten feet wide" along a certain line, it being claimed that such reservation excepted the fee to such 10 feet, the court said: "A 'reservation' is the creation of a right or interest which had no prior existence as such in a thing or part of a thing granted. It is distinguished from exception, in that it is of a new right or interest. An exception is always of part of the thing granted. It is of the whole of the part excepted. A reservation may be of a right or interest in the particular part which it affects. These terms are often used in the same sense, the technical distinction being disregarded. Though apt words of reservation be used, they will be construed as an exception if such was the design of the parties." Klister v. Reeser, 98 Pa. 1, 5, 42 Am. Rep. 608.

"A reservation is the creation in behalf of the grantor of a new right issuing out of the thing granted—something which did not exist as an independent right before the grant. An exception is a clause in a deed which withdraws from its operation some part of the thing granted, which would otherwise have passed to the grantee under the general description. The part excepted is in existence at the time of the grant, and remains in the grantor, unaffected by the conveyance. Frequently the words 'exception' and 'reservation' are used as synonymous, and the term 'exception' will be held to mean reservation whenever it may be necessary to effectuate the intention of the parties to the instrument." Thus, in a deed of railroad land, expressly reserving and excepting a strip of land for a right of way, the words must be construed to mean either a reservation or an exception, for, strictly speaking, a thing cannot be both reserved and excepted at the same time. The clause was held to create a reservation, and not an exception. Blies v. Tacoma, O. & G. H. R. Co., 32 Pac. 211, 212, 5 Wash. 509.

Both a reservation and an exception must be a part or arise out of that which is granted in a deed. The difference is that an exception is something taken back out of the estate then existing and clearly granted, while a reservation is something issuing out of what is granted. So, where a man grants a tract of land described by metes and bounds, except one acre, which is also particularly described, there is an exception, and the acre never passes; but, on the other hand, if one grants a tract of land without any exception of a part, but reserves rent or some right which he may exercise in relation to the estate, as to cutting timber or to have an easement of some kind therein, this is a reservation; and so, where a conveyance of a sawmill provided that the grantor reserved all slabs made at the mill, there was a reservation. Adams v. Morse, 51 Me. 497, 498; Inhabitants of Winthrop v. Fairbanks, 41 Me. 307, 311.

A part of two lots was conveyed by a deed under which plaintiff deraigned title, "saving and excepting therefrom" 15 feet square "as a way to" the grantor's cellar. The adjoining property, including the store to which the cellar pertained, was conveyed by the same grantor to a remote grantor of defendants by a deed including the right of way as mentioned in the first deed, and the plot was used by defendant and his predecessors as a way to the cellar, and who later erected thereon a two-story structure. Plaintiff and his grantors did not use or attempt to use the plot in any way. Held, that the clause in the deed should be considered as an exception, by which no right in the plot was granted to plaintiff, and not as a reservation by the grantor simply of a right of way. Mount v. Hambley, 50 N. Y. Supp. 813, 815, 22 Misc. Rep. 454.

An exception is said to be a withdrawal from the operation of a grant of some part of the thing granted, while a reservation is of some new thing issuing out of what is granted. Thus, where real estate is granted, a portion thereof may be excepted from the terms of the conveyance, or the trees or woods grown thereon. If the exception be valid, the title to the thing excepted remains in the grantor, the same as if no grant had been made. A reservation, while not affecting the title to the thing granted, may reserve to the grantor the right to the use or enjoyment of a portion thereof, as an easement, the right to pass over, or the like. Thus a conveyance of land subject to a lease which expires on a specified day—the 6th—subject to the lease, does not create an exception or reservation. Eiseley v. Spooner, 36 N. W. 659, 660, 23 Neb. 470, 8 Am. St. Rep. 128.

Every reservation in a deed is the act of the grantor, and should be construed most strongly against him, and most beneficially for the grantee. A reservation has sometimes the force of a saving or exception. A reservation is of a thing not in being, but newly created out of the land and tenements devised, though "exception" and "reservation" have often been used promiscuously. The construction given to a clause called a reservation is that it is an exception if it falls within that definition, and if such was the design of the parties. Wellman v. Churchill, 42 Atl. 352, 353, 92 Me. 193 (citing State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9; Inhabitants of Winthrop v. Fairbanks, 41 Me. 307).

Exemption from taxation.

Act Tenn. March 20, 1858, authorizing the Home Insurance & Trust Company to organize "with all the forms, officers, terms, powers, rights, reservations, restrictions, and liabilities given to" the M. Company, did not pass to the Home Company an exemption from taxation granted to the M. Company by its charter. Home Ins. & Trust Co. v. State of Tennessee (U. S.) 161 U. S. 198, 200, 16 Sup. Ct. 476, 40 L. Ed. 670.

As disposition of public land.

"Reservation," as used in speaking of the reservation of public lands, does not imply an absolute disposition of the lands in all cases, but the withholding of them from some other disposition, such as sale, or for the use of schools and other objects. It differs in meaning from the word "appropriation," which implies a setting apart or application to some particular use. Jackson v. Wilcox, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 344, 359.

The word "reservation," as used in the treaty of October 2, 1863, between the United States and the Chippewa Indians, which provided that there should be set apart from the tract thereby ceded a reservation of 640 acres near the T. river for Chief Moose Dung, had the effect of vesting in the chief a title or interest in the 640 acres upon selection made, so that he could execute a valid lease thereof without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Meehan v. Jones (U. S.) 70 Fed. 453, 455.

The term "reservation," in the sixth article of the Chickasaw Treaty of May 24, 1834, reading, "also reservations of a section shall be granted to persons, male and female," etc., was equivalent to an absolute grant. Anderson & Orne v. Lewis & Niles (Miss.) Freem. Oh. 178, 203; Wray v. Ho-yapa-nubby (Miss.) 10 Smedes & M. 452, 461.

Right of way.

A right of way to land conveyed is not an exception, but a reservation, which may be inferred from any wording indicating an intention to create an easement. Calhoun Gold Min. Co. v. Ajax Gold Min. Co., 59 Pac. 607, 615, 27 Colo. 1, 50 L. R. A. 209, 83 Am. St. Rep. 17.

RESERVE—RESERVED.

See "Premium Reserve"; "Reinsurance Reserve"; "Way Reserved."
Keep in reserve, see "Keep."

"Reserve" means to keep, to hold, to retain. Myers v. Conway, 7 South. 639, 640, 90 Ala. 109.

The word "reserve" means to appropriate; to set aside. Meigs v. McClung, 13 U. S. (9 Cranch) 11, 15, 16, 17, 3 L. Ed. 639, 641.

"Reserve," as used in a contract to render services as a baseball player for a certain season, and providing that the player might be reserved by the other party to the contract for the succeeding season, is used in its ordinary sense of to hold; to keep for future use. Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ward, 9 N. Y. Supp. 779, 780, 24 Abb. N. C. 393.

In a conveyance of house lots upon a street not yet made or accepted, but existing only upon a plan, the words "with a reserve of the street" may be construed as words of grant, when such was the obvious meaning of the parties. Palmer v. Dougherty, 33 Me. 502, 54 Am. Dec. 636.

As creating estate.

An exception in a deed in fee that the grantor "reserves the use of certain tracts of land and farm thereon, or the rents and profits arising from it, during his life and the life of his wife," is insufficient to create any estate in the wife; and therefore the money becoming due after the death of the grantor, for the use and occupation of the premises, goes to the grantor's personal representatives, and not to his wife. Logan's Adm'r. v. Caldwell, 23 Mo. 372, 373.

As except.

"Reserve" and "except" are often used indiscriminately, and whether a particular provision is an exception or a reservation does not depend upon the use of either term, but upon the nature and effect of the provision itself. Therefore, while a reservation in favor of a stranger to the instrument is invalid, yet, in order to effectuate the intention of the grantor, such a reservation has been treated as excepting from the grant the thing reserved. Under these principles, where the grantor reserved to himself and to his daughter, who was a stranger to the deed, an estate for the lives of both in the property conveyed, the life estate, in accordance with the intention of the parties, was valid as an exception to the grant in the deed. Martin v. Cook, 60 N. W. 679, 680, 102 Mich. 287.

It is held that to "reserve" means an exception, and to "except" means a reservation, when these words are used in a deed. Negaunee Iron Co. v. Iron Cliffs Co. (Mich.) 98 N. W. 468, 474.

A deed contained a specific description of the land conveyed, and also a clause reserving certain lots. Held, that the two lots did not pass to the grantee, but the clause should be construed as an exception. Roberts v. Robertson, 53 Vt. 690, 692, 38 Am. Rep. 710.

"Saving and reserving" are apt words to use in a deed that constitute a reservation, but, when used in a deed reserving and saving coal in the lands to the grantor, they must operate as an exception, because the coal is a corporeal hereditament in esse at the date of the deed, part of the land itself, and therefore not the subject of a reservation. Says Lord Coke: "Note a diversity between an exception, which is ever of part of the thing granted and of a thing in esse, but newly created or reserved out of the land or tenement demised." And his criticism upon the word "reserved" is as follows: "Reserve cometh of the Latin word 'reservo'; that is, to provide for store, as, when a man departeth with his land, he reserveth or provideth for himself a rent for his own livelihood. And sometimes it hath the force of saving or excepting." Whitaker v. Brown, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 197, 198 (quoting 2 Co. Litt. [Thomas' Ed.] *412).

"Reserving," in a deed, technically saves only a right to some use or benefit in the thing granted, instead of excluding or excepting from the operation of the deed a part of the thing embraced in the general description. But it may be used in the sense of excepting, the words "reserving all the minerals underlying the soil," in the granting clause of a deed, constituted prima facie an exception of the minerals from the operation of the grant. Sloan v. Lawrence Furnace Co., 29 Ohio St. 568, 569.

Where A., owner in fee of a parcel of land on which were two dwelling houses, one of which had been assigned to his father's widow as dower, conveyed an undivided one-half of the dower estate to B., and afterwards the probate guardian of A. conveyed the land with one dwelling house thereon, reserving the house occupied by the widow, the word "reserving" must be construed as "excepting," because the widow had a life estate in the house, which could not be reserved by the grantor, but only excepted out of the grant. Kimball v. Withington, 6 N. H. 759, 760, 141 Mass. 376.

The word "reserved," as used in a deed conveying certain lots, "said described pieces and parcels of land all fronting on M. street, and running back from said street 100 feet to an alley reserved by the grantor," was not used in the sense of "excepting from." The grantor was the absolute owner of the entire premises, and, had it been his intention to grant only the specific number of feet, without the alley, the most natural thing would have been to have said just that; but what was added was evidently intended as descriptive of the alley, and as an insurance to the grantee that the strip described had been set apart by the grantor for alley purposes, and appurtenant to and for the benefit of the abutting sublots into which he was dividing the land. Long v. Fewer, 53 Minn. 156, 159, 54 N. W. 1071.

As applicable to inception of contract.

"Reserved or taken," as used in statutes providing that all notes, bills, bonds, etc.,

on which a higher rate of interest than therein specified is reserved or taken shall be utterly void, do not invalidate a security originally free from corruption, but under which there has been a subsequent taking or agreement to take illegal interest. Sloan v. Sommers, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 509, 515.

"Reserved," as used in Rev. St. c. 35, § 4, providing that, when it shall appear that "unlawful interest has been taken or reserved," it shall be lawful for the debtor to become a witness, etc., refers to a usurious contract for the loan of money, whereby there has been reserved or taken a greater rate of interest than is allowed by law at the inception of the contract, and not to the payment of unlawful and usurious interest on a lawful contract. Brickett v. Minot, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 291, 294.

As creating mere license.

Where, in a deed of land containing a bed of ore, there was a clause "reserving to the grantor the right to mine on the granted premises" a certain quantity of ore annually at a certain duty per ton, the grantor was licensed to enter the mine; but it saved him no title in the land or in the ore before mined, and it did not restrict the grantee from mining at the same time, even to the exhaustion of the ore. Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co., 107 Mass. 290, 321.

As giving option.

A written contract for the regulation and grading of real property, which contains a provision that the owner "reserves the right to decide" after the rock has been uncovered whether he will have the same removed or not, entitles him to decide that the same shall not be removed, and gives him the right to thereafter remove it himself. Riley v. Black, 16 N. Y. Supp. 206.

As pledged.

In relation to school lands, "reserved" is synonymous with "pledged." Ferry v. Street, 11 Pac. 571, 573, 4 Utah, 521.

As creating reservation.

The word "reserving," in its strict and technical sense, when used in a deed granting real estate, but reserving something therein, implies a reservation of some use or lesser estate out of the estate granted. Keeler v. Wood, 30 Vt. 242, 245.

"Reserving," as used in a deed containing a clause "reserving to myself the use of the well in the highway in front of said land," created a reservation in favor of the grantor, and not an exception, though the word "reserving" is often construed to create an exception, and the word "excepting" to create a reservation, it appearing that the water in the well was ample for the use of both parties; and therefore the grantor was not entitled to change the manner of obtaining water from the well so as to exclude the grantee from its use. Barnes v. Burt, 38 Conn. 541.

"Reserving," as used in a warranty deed of certain land, reserving therefrom a strip for a public street, cannot be construed as an exception of anything, for an exception is a part of the thing granted, and of something in esse at the time of the grant, while a reservation is defined to be something newly created or reserved out of the thing granted that was not in esse before, so that although the terms "exception" and "reservation" are often used indiscriminately, and the difference between them is in particular cases sometimes obscure and uncertain, the so-called reserving for a public street would be a reservation proper, as distinguished from an exception, properly so called. Elliot v. Small, 29 N. W. 158, 159, 35 Minn. 396, 59 Am. Rep. 329.

"Reserving the highway," as used in a conveyance of land containing the usual covenants of warranty, but reserving the highway, means the reservation of the highway for its use and purpose as a highway, and does not prevent the fee of the lands included in the highway from passing to the purchaser, subject only to the easement of the public. Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 103, 134, 6 Am. Dec. 216.

"Reserving three rows of apple trees for the use of our mother," as used in a conveyance granting certain real estate, but reserving "three rows of apple trees for the use of our mother," will be construed to only indicate a reservation for the life of the mother. Keeler v. Wood, 30 Vt. 242, 246.

In construing a deed of a tract of land, "reserving always a right of way as now used, on the west side of the above-described premises, for cattle and carriages from the public highways to a piece of land now owned by R., lying north of and adjoining the premises hereby conveyed," the court said: "A right of way cannot be created by an exception in a deed. It may be created by a reservation. If the word 'excepting,' or an equivalent word, is used in the deed for the purpose of creating the right, the courts have considered it as meaning reserving, in order to give effect to the intention of the parties." Bridge v. Pierson (N. Y.) 66 Barb. 514, 518.

The word "reserving," in a deed of a railroad right of way, releasing all claims for damages, but "reserving" to the grantor a private crossing over the walk along the course of a previously existing cartway, has the effect of excepting the cartway from the grant, and does not create a new right in the grantor by way of reservation, and therefore the word "heirs" is not necessary to make the easement of crossing perpetual. Hamlin v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 36 N. E. 200, 201, 160 Mass. 459.

"Reserve," in a conveyance of land, with covenant for quiet enjoyment, "reserving" the right to enter on a certain part thereof and dig and take sand and clay fit for brick-making, did not make a technical reservation. Lord Coke says: "The word 'reserve' sometimes hath the force of saving and excepting. Sometimes it serveth to reserve a new thing, namely, a rent, and sometimes to except a part of the thing in use that is granted." Ryckman v. Gillis (N. Y.) 6 Lans. 79, 81.

"Reserving" is often considered as creating an exception, and the word "excepting" as creating a reservation. The clause in a deed of land, "reserving to myself the use of the well in the highway in front of said land," created a reservation, and not an exception, where it appeared that the water was employed for the use of both parties, so that the grantor had no right to exclude the grantee. Barnes v. Burt, 38 Conn. 541.

As withdrawn.

"Reserved to the United States," as used in Act Cong. July 5, 1866, § 1, providing for the construction of a military wagon road, does not describe or include lands "sold or otherwise disposed of," but only Indian and military reservations, and the like—lands withdrawn from the public domain for some special use of the United States, and not lands already disposed of to states or others. Cahn v. Barnes (U. S.) 5 Fed. 326, 331.

The word "reserved," in a land grant made by Congress, may not always be held to include lands withdrawn for the purpose of supplying possible deficiencies in some prior land grant. Yet, as that is the ordinary scope of the word, if any narrower or different meaning is to be attributed to it in such grant the reasons therefor must be clear. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Log & Mfg. Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 205, 206, 168 U. S. 604, 42 L. Ed. 596.

RESERVE LANDING.

The words "reserve landing" on a certain tract of land, fronting on a river, and included in a plat of land dedicated as part of a city which covered other lands fronting on the river, were construed to show a reservation to the use of the owner of the particular tract, and not a dedication thereof to the public. Grant v. City of Davenport, 18 Iowa, 179, 186.

RESERVE FUND.

Expert evidence has been held admissible that the term "reserve," among insurance people, where the word or term is applied to a level rate policy, means a sufficient percentage of the annual premiums to meet, when invested at the given rate of interest, all present and prospective liability on account of the particular policy. When applied to term insurance, it means the entire mortuary premiums collected for the particular term. It has no application to assessment insurance. Fry v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York (Tenn.) 38 S. W. 116, 126.

A statute of New York provides that, whenever any policy of life insurance issued by a domestic company shall lapse for the nonpayment of any premium, the "reserve on such policy" shall, on demand made, with surrender of the policy, within six months after the lapse, be applied, as shall have been agreed, to continue the policy in force at its full amount so long as such amount will purchase temporary insurance. The policy of a New York company stipulated to insure the assured for one year, accompanied by an agreement to renew the insurance from year to year, without examination, on the payment of a fixed annual premium, and provided that the excess of such premiums over operating expenses and the assured's share of death losses should constitute a "guaranty fund" to apply in reduction of later premiums, and after five years to extend the insurance in case of lapse. Held, that the fund classed in the policy as a "guaranty fund" was embraced within the meaning of the words "reserve on such policy," as used in the statute. Nielsen v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 73 Pac. 168, 169, 139 Cal. 832, 96 Am. St. Rep. 146.

A reserved fund, under Comp. Laws, § 5169, is a fund kept for the protection of the patrons of an insurance company, so that the company may have the means to reinsure its risks if necessary. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hartz (Mich.) 94 N. W. 78.

RESERVED PUBLIC SQUARE.

The words "Reserved public square," written upon a block in the recorded plat of a village, which village was the county seat, do not indicate whether the ground is to be appropriated to the use of the county for the erection of buildings thereon, or whether it is to be used solely for pleasure grounds, and as a public square, with ornamental trees, walks, etc. Daniels v. Wilson, 27 Wis. 492, 497.

RESERVOIR.

In common speech, a "reservoir" often signifies the water kept, not the structure in which it is kept. Hutchinson v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 37 Wis. 582, 603.

RESETTLE.

The word "resettle," as used in a contract in which a party agrees to give another full possession of his medical practice, and promises not to resettle in the town so long as the other party is located there, means that he will not resettle in said town to engage in the practice of medicine. Haldeman v. Simonton, 7 N. W. 493, 494, 55 Iowa, 144.

RESHIPPING.

See "Privilege of Reshipping."

RESIDE.

See "Cease to Reside."

Come to reside, see "Come."

The word "reside" is used in two senses—the one, constructive, technical, legal; the other, denoting the personal, actual habitation of individuals. When a person has a fixed abode, where he dwells with his family, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides. The place of his personal and legal residence is the same, so that when a person has no permanent habitation or family, but dwells in different places, as he happens to find employment, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides. He must be considered as residing where he actually or personally resides. But some individuals have permanent habitations where their families constantly dwell, yet pass a great portion of their time in other places. Such persons have a legal residence with their families, and a personal residence in other places; and the word "reside" may, with respect to them, be used to denote either their personal or their legal residence. Shattuck v. Maynard, 3 N. H. 123, 124.

The word "reside" may, and sometimes does, have different meanings in the same or different articles or sections of a Constitution or statute. The constitutional direction that a district judge shall reside within his district was not intended for his convenience, but for the benefit of the people, whose servant he is. In this case, "reside" will be held to mean an actual, as distinguished from a legal or constructive, residence or domicile. But this section will be given a reasonable, and not a purely technical, interpretation. So, where a judge retained his actual residence in a district, though his health was such that it became necessary for him to be at a lower elevation for as much of the time as his actual presence was not needed in his judicial district for the discharge of his official duties, it is only a fair and reasonable construction to say that it is his bona fide intention to return to his district as soon as his health permits, for the purpose of maintaining there his actual residence. People v. Owers, 69 Pac. 515, 518, 29 Colo. 535.

In reference to corporations.

"Probably the only sense in which a corporation may be said to reside anywhere is with reference to its legal or statutory habitat, which is the jurisdiction of its incorporation. In this sense, to say that a corporation is a nonresident is to say that it is a nondomestic corporation, and all corporations which are not domestic are foreign." Thus an affidavit by an attorney for a corporation that the reason why the complaint was not verified by the plaintiff was because it did not reside in the county was to be construed to mean the corporation was a foreign corporation. Clark's Cove Fertilizer Co. v. Stever, 62 N. Y. Supp. 249, 251, 29 Misc. Rep. 571.

The word "residing," as used in the statute providing that every overseer of highways shall give at least three days' notice to those residing in his district against whom a land, railroad, property, or personal property road tax is assessed, either in person or in writing left at his usual place of abode, of the time of and the place where he may appear and pay his road tax in labor, includes railroad corporations having a line of road in the district and an agent or representative residing in the district on whom the overseer may serve the notice the company is entitled to receive. It is not the duty of the overseer, in order to perform the official act of serving the notice, to seek beyond the limitations of his district for the taxpayer. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. People, 55 N. E. 643, 645, 183 Ill. 196.

The word "reside," as used in Civ. Code Prac. § 73, providing that an action against a common carrier for personal injury must be brought in the county in which the defendant resides, or in which plaintiff is injured or in which he resides, if he resides in the county through which the carrier passes, means, with reference to a corporation, its chief office or place of business. Eichhorn v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 65 S. W. 797, 112 Ky. 338.

As domicile.

See "Domicile."

As dwell.

"Reside" means to live in a place. Middlebury v. Waltham, 6 Vt. 200, 202.

According to Walker's Dictionary "reside" means "to live; to dwell; to be present." Lask v. United States (Wis.) 1 Pin. 77, 79.

To "reside" means to dwell permanently for any length of time; a settled abode. Graham v. Commonwealth, 51 Pa. 255, 258, 88 Am. Dec. 581.

In the statutes generally the word "reside" is used in a sense which includes all who are the actual stated dwellers in any stated place, though they may have a technical domicile elsewhere; and the word "resides," as applied to a minor, refers to his actual stated residence. Kelsey v. Green, 37 Atl. 679, 682, 69 Conn. 291, 38 L. R. A. 471.

"Resides," as used in Code, § 2370, declaring that guardians of minors must be appointed by the court of probate of the county in which such minor resides, means to live; to dwell; to have one's home or domicile. Allgood v. Williams, 8 South. 722, 723, 92 Ala. 551.

"Reside," as used in Poor Act, § 3, providing that any stranger who shall come to reside in a town, etc., means to live in a place as one's abode; and where one came into a town as a servant in a family, and was hired for no definite time, such person had come to reside, within the meaning of the statute. Middlebury v. Waltham, 6 Vt. 200, 202.

"Residing out of the state," as used in an attachment statute, means having no abode within the state. Stout v. Leonard, 37 N. J. Law (8 Vroom) 492, 495.

"Residing therein," as used in Rev. Laws, § 2818, requiring every town to relieve and support the poor and indigent persons residing therein, is to be construed as referring to persons having an actual residence, as contradistinguished from transients, and does not require a residence of three years, though Acts 1886, No. 42, § 13, declares, for the purpose of the act, that the residence of a person shall be in the town in which he last resided for three years. Town of New Haven v. Town of Middlebury, 21 Atl. 608, 610, 63 Vt. 399.

The word "resides," in R. L. § 2817, as amended by section 4, St. 1886, making it the duty of plaintiff's overseer to provide for the relief of a pauper found in the town and in need of immediate assistance, means an actual residing, and not a legal three years' residence. Leicester v. Brandon, 27 Atl. 318, 319, 65 Vt. 544, 545.

In reference to municipal corporations.

"Resides," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 395, providing that certain actions shall be brought in the "county in which defendant resides," applies to towns, as well as to private persons, and the county in which they are situated will be construed to be the county of their residence. Buck v. City of Eureka, 31 Pac. 845, 846, 97 Cal. 135.

As have permanent abode.

"Reside," as used in Const. art. 2, § 27, declaring that every white male inhabitant who has resided in the state six months preceding any election may vote, means to take up a permanent abode in the state. Spragins v. Houghton, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 377, 383.

"Reside" is to dwell permanently or for a length of time; to have a settled abode for a time. Webst. Dict. As used in Rev. St. c. 148, § 28, relating to causes of action which shall have accrued against one who shall be absent from and reside without the state, the word is synonymous with "dwelling place" or "home." "Inhabitaney" and "residence" do not mean precisely the same thing as "domicile," when the latter term is applied to the succession of personal estate; but they mean a fixed and permanent abode, a dwelling place for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence. Drew v. Drew, 37 Me. 389, 391 (citing In re Wrigley [N. Y.] 8 Wend. 184).

"Reside," as used in an act relating to the support of paupers and the recovery by one town for supplies furnished from the town wherein the pauper resided or had a legal residence, means to live in a place and have a place of permanent abode; and hence a person coming from another town and engaging in a family as a hired girl, nurse, etc., came there to reside, within the statute, and could not be considered merely as a transient person. Middlebury v. Waltham, 6 Vt. 200, 202.

"Reside," as used in Rev. St. c. 32, § 1, providing that any person 21 years of age who shall reside in any town within the state for the term of five years together, and shall not during that term receive directly or indirectly any supplies or support as a pauper from any town, shall thereby gain a settlement in such town, means to dwell permanently for a length of time, or to have a settled abode for a time. Inhabitants of Warren v. Inhabitants of Thomaston, 43 Me. 406, 417, 69 Am. Dec. 69.

"Reside," as used in Acts 2d Cong. 1st Sess. c. 33, for establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States, making it the duty of the commissioning officer of the company to enroll every citizen who shall come to reside within his bounds, was not meant to include a mere temporary residence. It is true in a strict sense that a man may be said to come to reside at a place where he comes intending to stay for a short time, although he has no intention thereby to change his domicile. But the act should have a reasonable construction, and nothing can be more unreasonable than such a strict interpretation of the law. It cannot be easily believed that it was the intention of Congress that a traveler or person absent from home on a visit to a friend or on special business should be held liable to do militia duty wherever he may be found. Commonwealth v. Swan, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 194, 195.

The word "resides," as used in Code, §§ 1480, 1488, providing that the district court in the county where plaintiff resides has jurisdiction of all cases of divorce, and further providing that the petition for divorce, in addition to the facts on account of which the plaintiff claims the relief sought, must state that he or she has for the last six months been a resident of the state, means a legal residence, not an actual residing alone, but such a residence as that, when a man leaves it temporarily or on business, he has an intention of returning to, and which, when he has returned to, becomes and is de facto and de jure his domicile. So, before the applicant for a divorce can claim to be within the jurisdiction of the court, he must have a fixed habitation with no present intention of removing therefrom. Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 36, 41.

"Resides," as used in Rev. St. 1845, p. 197, § 2, providing that divorce proceedings shall be had in the county where the complainant resides, means something more than merely an existence in the county where the suit is commenced. It means residence, and not a domicile. While a man can have but one domicile he may have several residences; and, though the residence is more transient in its nature, there must be some intent of permanent business. It cannot be acquired by going to a place with the purpose of retiring immediately. When the domicile and entire business are within another jurisdiction, residence cannot be obtained by a visit to this state merely for the institution of the suit, without any other intention. May v. May, 64 Ill. 406, 409.

"Residing therein," as used in Rev. St. tit. 42, § 16, providing that it shall be the duty of the selectmen of a town to furnish necessary support to any person, not an inhabitant of the town "residing therein," who shall become unable to support himself, applies to a pauper who is temporarily within a town at the time when he needs relief. The object of the statute is to afford immediate relief, without waiting to settle the point of final responsibility. The common understanding of the expression is not a mere stopping and being in a place, but abiding in it for some continuance of time. Trumbull v. Moss, 28 Conn. 253, 256.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 80, § 23, prescribes that the application for a writ of habeas corpus under certain conditions shall be made to an officer having proper authority "residing in any adjoining county." Held, that the term "residing in" is not to be restricted to an actual permanent residence in the county, but includes the case of presence in the county of the proper officers for the purpose of transacting judicial business therein. In re Doll, 50 N. W. 607, 608, 47 Minn. 518.

RESIDE OUT OF.

Absence synonymous, see "Absence."

RESIDE OUT OF THE STATE.

"Reside out of the state," in a statute relating to limitation of actions, has the same meaning as the expression "the time of his absence," so that, while the debtor resided out of, he was absent from, the state. "To depart from and reside out of the state," and "to be absent from and reside out of the state," are equivalent expressions. Venable v. Paulding, 19 Minn. 488, 492 (Gil. 422, 424); Penfield v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. Ry. Co., 10 Sup. Ct. 566, 569, 134 U. S. 351, 33 L. Ed. 940; Burroughs v. Bloomer (N. Y.) 5 Denlo, 532, 535.

The words "depart from and reside out of the state," as employed in Gen. St. 1865, p. 747, providing that, if the debtor departs from and has his residence out of this state after the cause of action accrues, the time of his absence shall not be deemed or taken as any part of the time limited, did not necessarily mean a departure with the intent to change permanently the residence of the party. The intent at the time of removal does not necessarily decide anything, since the party's intentions may change at a subsequent period. He may come to a different mind, and fix his dwelling in another locality, with no present purpose of leaving it, and thus become domiciliated there, notwithstanding his original purpose. It is the fact of absence beyond the reach of process, for a substantial period of time and for a purpose not transient in its character, that is important. Johnson v. Smith, 43 Mo. 499, 501.

One's residence out of the commonwealth might have been but temporary, yet, if the time of his proposed return was indefinite, he retained no domicile in the commonwealth, and was "absent from and resided out of the state," within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 120, § 9, relating to the limitation of actions. Sleeper v. Paige, 81 Mass. (15 Gray) 349, 350.

"Reside out of the state," as used in a statute of limitations, prescribing the time of commencing actions, and providing that if, after such cause of action shall have accrued, such person depart from and reside out of the state," the time of his absence should not be deemed or taken as any part of the time limited for the commencement of such action, cannot be construed to include a going out of the state with the intention of returning by a person leaving his family and property in the state, though he may remain in the state to which he went, engaged in business, for several months. Garth v. Roberts, 20 Mo. 523, 525, 64 Am. Dec. 208.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 401, declaring that if, after a cause of action has accrued against a person, he departs from and resides without the state, and remains continuously absent therefrom for a year or more, the time of his absence is not a part of the time limited for commencement of the action, evidence merely that a person having a domicile and residence in the state of New York went to Europe and was absent 2½ years does not show that he resided without the state; it being necessary, for this, that he should at least take up his temporary abode at some particular place with the intention of making it his home while so absent, and actually reside there. Hart v. Kip, 42 N. E. 712, 713, 148 N. Y. 306.

"Reside out of the state," as used in Wag. St. p. 1919, art. 2, § 16, providing that if, after a cause of action accrues against any person, the person shall "depart from and reside out of the state," the time of his absence shall not be deemed or taken as any part of the time limited for the commencement of the action, means a change of his residence, so that the process of the law cannot be served on him. If the residence is not changed, and under the provisions of the law service can be had which will authorize a personal or general judgment, the statute continues to run. Hence, where defendant's family had a permanent residence in the state, and he left them at such residence, supporting them all the time, where they continued all the time that he was gone, and until his return, and his property was left there, the statute of limitations did run; for his place of abode was at the residence of his family, the service of summons there being entirely good at any time, and there being nothing to prevent the plaintiff from bringing an action, and obtaining a personal judgment, and prosecuting it to satisfaction. Venuti v. Cademartori, 59 Mo. 352, 353.

"Residence out of the state," as used in Shannon's Code, § 4455, providing that, if a person against whom an action accrues resides out of the state, the time of such absence shall not be taken as part of the time limited for the commencement of the action, means such nonresidence as renders it impracticable at all times to obtain service of process, so that, while a corporation's technical legal residence may be where it was created, its residence and status for the purposes of suit may be where it can, through its agents and officers, be reached with process. While a corporation may reside beyond the state and be out of the state, still it may, through its officers and agents, subject itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of the state, and hence is not residing outside of the state, within the meaning of this section of the statute. Turcott v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 45 S. W. 1067, 1069, 101 Tenn. 102, 40 L. R. A. 768, 70 Am. St. Rep. 661.

A person who has a domicile and actual residence in another state, and only comes into this state occasionally, or even for a few hours daily, is "absent from and resides out of the state," within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 155, § 9, relating to limitation of actions. Rockwood v. Whiting, 118 Mass. 337, 340.

RESIDENCE.

See "Actual Residence"; "Family Residence"; "Legal Residence"; "Place of Residence"; "Occupied as a Residence"; "Private Residence"; "Usual Place of Residence"; "Usual Residence."

Residence in the city, see "In the City."

In Rap. & L. Dict. p. 1113, it is said: "Residence is used in law to denote the fact that a person dwells in a given place, or, in the case of a corporation, that its management is carried on there." Pittsburg, O., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. City of Indianapolis, 46 N. E. 641, 642, 147 Ind. 292, 298.

An actual residence is a predicament contemplated by the New Jersey statutes relating to attachment, and there is no distinction between a temporary and a permanent residence, between residence for a summer or for life. New York City Bank v. Merrit, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 131, 134.

Residence is defined by Webster to be a dwelling in a place for some continuance of time. "There must be a settled, fixed abode, and an intention to remain permanently at least for a time, for business or other purposes, to constitute a residence within the legal meaning of the term." Bartlett v. City of New York, 7 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Sandf.) 44, 47 (citing Frost v. Brishin [N. Y.] 19 Wend. 11, 32 Am. Dec. 423); Quinn v. State, 35 Ind. 485, 490, 9 Am. Rep. 754; Lask v. United States (Wis.) 1 Pin. 77, 79.

The term "residence" simply means a settled or fixed abode of a character indicating permanency, at least for an indefinite time. It signifies a party's permanent home and principal establishment, to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning. In re Clarke, 15 N. Y. Supp. 370, 371.

Every person has in law a residence. In determining the place of residence the following rules should be observed: (1) It is the place where one remains when not called elsewhere for labor or other special or temporary purpose, and to which he returns in seasons of repose. (2) There can only be one residence. (3) A residence cannot be lost until another is gained. (4) The residence of the father during his life, and after his death the residence of the mother while she remains unmarried, is the residence of an unmarried minor child. (5) The residence of the husband is the residence of the wife. (6) The residence of an unmarried minor, who has a parent living, cannot be changed by either his own act or that of his guardian. (7) The residence can be changed only by the union of act and intent. Pol. Code 1903, Cal. § 52.

"Residence," as used in the Constitution, requiring a voter to have a residence in a district 10 days next preceding the election, did not restrict the term to its ordinary meaning, which is the place where man establishes his abode, makes the seat of his property, and exercises his civil and political rights; but the Constitution used the word in an indefinite sense, leaving the subject of residence in an election district to legislative discretion. Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 403, 420.

Residence means the act or state of being seated or settled in a place. It imports not only personal presence in a place, but an attachment to it by those acts or habits which express the closest connection between a person and a place, as by usually sitting or lying there. In re Collins (N. Y.) 64 How. Prac. 63, 65.

To constitute a "residence" there must be an actual home, in the sense of having no other home, whether he intends to reside there permanently, or for a definite or indefinite length of time. Residence, therefore, is a question depending upon fact and intention, and, if so, it may be applicable to a particular spot or to a whole country. A person who wanders from country to country, with no intention of remaining fixedly anywhere, acquires no new residence. On the other hand, one who confines his wanderings to a particular country or locality, but declines to fix himself upon some particular spot, can very properly be said to be a resident of that country or locality. Home, domicile, or residence may therefore include a spot or a wide area. Each of these words may be applied either to a house, a precinct, a ward, a county, or a state. Langhammer v. Munter, 31 Atl. 300, 301, 80 Md. 518, 27 L. R. A. 330.

The test of residence, under the attachment act, is whether a person has such residence in the state that a summons can be served. If he has not, his creditors are entitled to some remedy against his estate within the state. Weber v. Weiting, 18 N. J. Eq. (3 C. E. Green) 441, 443.

The term "residence," mentioned in the chapter relating to paupers, shall be taken and considered to mean the actual residence of the party, or the place where he or she was employed, or, in case he or she was in no employment, then it shall be considered and held the place where he or she made it his or her home. Cobbey's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 9364; Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 3395.

The legal residence of a person, with reference to his right of suffrage and eligibility to office, is that place where his habitation is fixed and permanent, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 1723.

The term "residence," when in statutes, shall be construed to mean the place adopted by a person as his place of habitation, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning. When a person eats at one place and sleeps at another, the place where such person sleeps shall be deemed his residence. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 7342, subd. 23.

The residence of a married man, if not separated from his wife, shall be where his wife resides. If a married man be separated from his wife, he shall be considered, as to residence, a single man. The residence of a single man shall be where he usually sleeps. Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 1733.

A person's residence is not broken by his going into another state or foreign country to seek a new abode, but continues until the fact and intention unite in another abode elsewhere. Labe v. Brauss, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 255, 256.

Under St. 1801, by which a settlement was acquired by a year's residence in any town without being warned to depart, the residence of a man could not be continued by his wife and family, in his absence from the state, so as to confer upon him a legal settlement, unless they continued together, keeping house as a family. Town of Middleton v. Town of Poultney, 2 Vt. 437, 438.

A railroad contractor, who has left the state and gone to a foreign country to prosecute his business there, and who, if successful, will remain as long as necessary for the completion of the work, and who has actually been gone four months, is not a resident of the state, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 537, providing that a writ of attachment may issue where the defendant is not a resident of the state. Hanson v. Graham, 23 Pac. 56, 57, 82 Cal. 631, 7 L. R. A. 127.

Abode synonymous.

Residence means a place of abode. Midlebury v. Waltham, 6 Vt. 200, 202.

In holding that a return of service of a declaration, showing that it had been served by leaving a copy at the most notorious place of abode of the president of the defendant corporation, was sufficient, under the statute requiring such a service to be made by leaving the notice at his most notorious place of residence, it was said that by the Georgia statutes "notorious place of residence" and "notorious place of abode" are legal synonyms. Water Lot Co. v. Bank of Brunswick, 30 Ga. 685, 686.

In an action of ejectment, the officer returned on the rule to plead: "S. not being found at his place of abode, a true copy was left with his daughter at his residence." Held, that it would be presumed that the word "residence" was used as synonymous with "his usual place of abode," and that the daughter was a member of defendant's family. Smithson v. Briggs (Va.) 33 Gratt. 180, 184.

Citizenship equivalent.

The term "residence" is not synonymous with "citizenship," and an averment of residence is not an equivalent of an averment of citizenship for purposes of jurisdiction of the United States courts. Tug River Coal & Salt Co. v. Brigel, 67 Fed. 625, 628, 14 C. C. A. 577; Wolf v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 602, 603, 148 U. S. 389, 37 L. Ed. 493; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bender, 13 Sup. Ct. 591, 148 U. S. 255, 37 L. Ed. 441; Zambrino v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (U. S.) 38 Fed. 449, 453.

Citizenship and residence are not convertible terms. Citizenship is a status or condition, and is the result of both act and intent. An adult person cannot become a citizen of a state by simply intending to, nor does any one become a citizen by mere residence. Residence and intent must coexist and correspond. Sharon v. Hill (U. S.) 26 Fed. 337, 342. Thus, where a person resided in Illinois, and went to Wisconsin because of litigation, and her stay was prolonged by delay of the hearing, and though she engaged temporary room only, and had neither made nor negotiated permanent arrangements, and her household goods were left in store in Chicago, she was not a resident of Wisconsin. Illinois Life Ins. Co. v. Shenehon (U. S.) 109 Fed. 674, 675.

"Citizenship" and "residence" are not synonymous terms, so that testimony of plaintiff that he lives in a certain state does not show his citizenship. Danahy v. National Bank of Denison (U. S.) 64 Fed. 148, 149, 12 C. C. A. 75.

The terms "citizenship" and "residence," in respect to corporations, within the meaning of the removal acts, are synonymous and are fixed in the state granting the charter, although it may be recognized generally for the purpose of doing business in other states. Baughman v. National Waterworks Co. (U. S.) 46 Fed. 4, 5, 7.

Domicile distinguished.

See "Domicile."

As domicile required for citizenship.

To constitute residence, under Judiciary Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, § 1, as corrected by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, § 1 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 508], providing that "no civil suit shall be brought," etc., "against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant; but, where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant." No more is required than is required in the residence element of citizenship, and where it is shown that a local domicile is not necessary to establish residence in the acquisition of citizenship, it is not necessary to constitute residence within a district. Marks v. Marks (U. S.) 75 Fed. 321, 331.

As dwelling.

Residence is defined to be "place of abode; dwelling." Reg. v. Hammond, 17 Q. B. 772, 781 (citing Johns. Dict.).

The term "residence," as used in the pauper law, is synonymous with home or dwelling place. Town of North Yarmouth v. Town of West Gardiner, 58 Me. 207, 210, 4 Am. Rep. 279.

"There must be a settled, fixed abode, and intention to remain permanently, at least for a time, for business or other purposes, to constitute a 'residence,' within the meaning of that term." Frost v. Brisbin (N. Y.) 19 Wend. 11, 14, 32 Am. Dec. 423.

By the express provisions of Gen. St. 1889, the term "residence" means the place adopted by a person as his place of habitation, and to which, whenever he is absent, he intends to return. Hatch v. Smith, 49 Pac. 698, 699, 6 Kan. App. 645.

The term "residence," as used in Pauper Act (Rev. St. 1845, c. 80) § 15, by the express provisions of such statute, means the actual residence of the party, or the place where he was employed, or, in case he was in no employment, then the place where he made his home. Town of Dorr v. Town of Seneca, 74 Ill. 101, 103.

The term "residence," as used in the homestead exemption laws, has "invariably been construed as meaning an actual residence thereon as a home or dwelling place." Quehl v. Peterson, 49 N. W. 390, 391, 47 Minn. 13.

"Residence," as used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 68, § 8, providing that the claimant of a homestead must be in actual "residence and occupancy" of the premises, means an actual occupancy of the premises and an actual residence thereon as a home or dwelling place. Quehl v. Peterson, 49 N. W. 390, 391, 47 Minn. 13.

"Residence" is defined to be the place of abode, dwelling, or habitation for some continuance of time. To reside in a place is to abide or dwell there permanently for a length of time, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence. Jones v. Commonwealth, 41 S. E. 949, 951, 100 Va. 842.

"Residence" has been defined to be the place where a person's habitation is fixed without any present intention of removing therefrom. The place where a person lives is prima facie taken to be his residence, unless facts be established to the contrary. Tracy v. Tracy, 48 Atl. 533, 534, 62 N. J. Eq. 807.

Within the meaning of Const. art. 3, § 1, requiring an elector to reside a certain time in the election district before he is qualified to vote, the elector's residence is the place where he makes his permanent or true home, his principal "place of business, and his family residence; where he intends to remain indefinitely, without present intention to depart." Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. (21 P. F. Smith) 302, 306, 10 Am. Rep. 698.

"Residence," in attachment laws, "generally implies an established abode, fixed permanently for a time for business or other purposes, although there may be an intent existing all the while to return to the true domicile." Weitkamp v. Loehr (N. Y.) 11 Civ. Proc. R. 36, 40 (citing Krone v. Cooper, 43 Ark. 547).

To constitute a "residence," within the legal meaning of the term, there must be a settled, fixed abode and intention to remain permanently, at least for a time, for business or other purposes. Whether a person has established himself in a certain place, so as to work a change in his domicile, or not, is immaterial; for he may have changed his domicile, but still be a resident there. The domicile of a citizen may be in one state or territory, and his actual residence in another. Tazewell County Sup'rs v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 197, 204.

"Residence" implies an established abode, fixed permanently for a time, for business or other purposes, though there may be an intent in the future at some time or other to return to the original domicile. In the contemplation of the attachment law, there is or may be a marked distinction between "domicile" and "residence." The "domicile" of a citizen may be in one place and his residence in another. They generally, however, are at the same place. Morgan v. Nunes, 54 Miss. 308, 310.

"Residence," as that word is used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 66, § 147, authorizing attachment on the ground of nonresidence, is not to be construed as synonymous with the word "domicile," since a person may have a political domicile in a state, and yet actually reside outside of the state for a large portion of the time. The word is therefore to be construed in its popular sense to mean the place where a person actually is for a sufficient length of time to enable it to be said that he has taken up his residence or actually resides in a particular place, and therefore the fact that a debtor moving from Minnesota to South Dakota did not abandon the home which he had previously occupied in Minnesota did not the less render him a nonresident; he having gone to South Dakota for the purpose of labor and filling a government position for a time. Lawson v. Adlard, 48 N. W. 1019, 1021, 46 Minn. 243.

"Numerous definitions of 'residence' are to be found in the books, but what the word means in any particular statute depends upon its purpose and the phraseology of the context. Every case must be decided upon the particular language of the statute and the circumstances giving rise to the question. To meet the intention and requirements of some statutes a commercial or business residence might be all the law required, while to gratify the intention of another statute it may be necessary to hold residence to be more than a business residence, and to mean all that the word 'domicile' means in its strictest and most technical application. The term 'residence,' in Code, art. 75, § 87, providing that no person shall be sued out of the county in which he resides, until the sheriff or coroner of the county in which he resides shall have returned 'non est' a summons issued in such county, means the county or city where he has his permanent, fixed home, whether he has the intention of returning and remaining there after a temporary absence on account of business, or otherwise. In State v. Gittings, 35 Md. 169, this court uses the word 'home' as synonymous with the word 'residence,' as used in this statute, thereby indicating that such was the real meaning of the statute's language." Tyler v. Murray, 57 Md. 418, 441.

The word "residence" is used to indicate the place of abode, whether permanent or temporary. A man may have a residence in one place and a domicile in another. Residence in a place, without the requisite intention of remaining, will not suffice to give one a domicile; nor will an intention to change one's domicile, unaccompanied by actual removal, result in a change of domicile. State v. Allen, 35 S. E. 990, 992, 48 W. Va. 154, 50 L. R. A. 284, 86 Am. St. Rep. 29.

Within the meaning of Comp. St. c. 37, authorizing an action in bastardy by any woman a resident of the state, the word "residence" is not used in the sense in which it is employed in the Civil Code, but applies as well to the county in which the mother of the child may actually reside, and which is liable to be charged with its support, although she may in fact have a home in another county or state. Clarke v. Carey, 60 N. W. 78, 41 Neb. 780.

By the sixth mode of gaining a settlement, as provided by statute, a residence of 5 years together of a person 21 years of age is required. Such residence means the same thing as "having his home" there, and when the home is once fixed it continues until actually changed. Absences of longer or shorter duration often occur, and the domicile remains unchanged. Inhabitants of Brewer v. Inhabitants of Linnaeus, 36 Me. 428, 429.

In construing statutes relating to attachment of the property of nonresidents, the distinction has been recognized between an actual residence and a legal residence; the latter being generally deemed a domicile, and not the residence contemplated, and the word "residence" being construed in its popular sense, as the act of abiding in a place for some continuance of time. In Morgan v. Nunes, 54 Miss. 308, it is said that residence implies an established abode, fixed permanently for a time for business or other purposes, although there may be an intent in the future at some time or other to return to the original domicile. In Frost v. Brislin (N. Y.) 19 Wend. 11, 32 Am. Dec. 423, it is said that a transient visit of a person for a time at a place does not make him a resident while there, but that something more is necessary. To entitle him to that character, there must be a settled, fixed abode. An intention to remain permanently, at least for a time, for business or other purposes, is necessary to constitute residence within the legal meaning of the term. Lawson v. Adlard, 48 N. W. 1019, 1020, 46 Minn. 243.

"Residence" means the abode or place where one actually lives, and not where he is legally domiciled. A person may temporarily reside out of the state while domiciled within the state, under Code Civ. Proc. § 401, which provides that if, after a cause of action has accrued against a person, he departs from and resides out of the state, and remains continuously absent therefrom for one year or more, the time of his absence is not the time limited to the commencement of the action. Therefore the absence from the state for such time will stop the running of a statute against the defendant, though his domicile is still within the state. Hart v. Kip, 26 N. Y. Supp. 522, 524, 74 Hun, 412.

The term "residence," as used in Rev. St. c. 60, § 4, declaring that in divorce proceedings, if the residence of the libelee is known, it shall be named in the libel and actual notice shall be obtained, cannot be construed to mean whereabouts or commorancy, but means actual residence in its usual sense; and therefore, where a libelee has a known residence in the state and is only temporarily absent from it, actual personal service of the libel must be obtained. Spinney v. Spinney, 32 Atl. 1019, 1021, 87 Me. 484.

In Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 73 Md. 66, 20 Atl. 434, in defining the meaning of "residence" and what is necessary to constitute it, as used in our Constitution, the court said: "It does not mean one's permanent place of abode, where he intends to live all his days or for an indefinite or limited time, nor does it mean one's residence for a temporary purpose, with the intention of returning to his former residence when that purpose shall have been accomplished, but means, as we understand it, one's actual home, in the sense of having no other home, whether he intends to reside there permanently or for a definite or indefinite length of time." Thus where a person moves his family and builds a house in a state, intending to make it his actual home, and his family reside there, but he comes into another state during the week to labor, he is a resident of the state where his family resides. McLane v. Hobbs, 21 Atl. 708, 709, 74 Md. 166.

"Residence" expresses the idea of an abode which may be temporary, but is not transient; that is, an abode where one sits down with some business or other object which requires it, and with the intention of remaining steadily in the place until such object is accomplished. In December, 1889, a New York dealer gave up his house, stored his furniture, and went to Florida for the recovery of his son's health. He returned in April, 1890, remained a little over a month at a hotel, and then went to Europe for the same purpose, finally returning to New York in June, 1893. Though the debtor may have been continuously domiciled in New York, he resided without the state during such absences, within Code Civ. Proc. § 401, and hence they were not a part of the time limit for suing on the debt. Bennett v. Watson, 47 N. Y. Supp. 569, 570, 21 App. Div. 409.

One who is dwelling in the state, with no intention of leaving, being engaged in constructing public work under a contract that will occupy him for an indefinite period, is not a nonresident within the attachment law, providing for attachment of goods of nonresidents. Didier v. Patterson, 25 S. E. 661, 663, 93 Va. 534.

The word "residence," in Laws 1853, p. 974, requiring substituted service to be made at the residence of the person to be served, with some person of proper age, if admittance can be obtained, and if not obtained by affixing the same to the outer or other door of said residence, is clearly synonymous with "dwelling house." Webster defines "residence" to be a "dwelling house; habitation." Foot v. Harris (N. Y.) 2 Abb. Prac. 454, 457.

The term "residence" has been judicially defined as the abode or dwelling place, as distinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence. Residence, and even domicile, is a quality which endures, when once acquired, until changed animo et facto. In re Hughes (N. Y.) 1 Tuck. 38.

The words "resident" and "residence" import more than a temporary stay in a place for the performance of a single piece or job of work, especially where the workman at the same time has a home and permanent place of abode in another place. It is difficult to define in precise language what constitutes a residence, or makes one a resident of a place. It depends upon the circumstances then surrounding the person, upon the character of the work to be performed, upon whether he has a family or a home in another place, and largely upon his present intention. In the language of the law, residence has come to have a well-defined meaning of home or place of abode of the individual. A logging camp has few characteristics and qualities of a residence, especially as applicable to a person who is found to have a home or abode in another place. Rindge v. Green, 52 Vt. 204, 208.

"Residence" means place of abode. Middlebury v. Waltham, 6 Vt. 200, 202.

The word "residence," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 636, providing that a plaintiff shall be entitled to an attachment on showing by affidavit to the satisfaction of the judge, among other things, that the defendant is a nonresident, means the abode or place where one actually lives, and not a legal domicile. In other words, a reading of the section will show that it was intended to give a method for the collection of debts by appropriating the property of the debtor to be found within the state, when proceedings against the debtor personally are impossible, or liable to be made ineffectual, and thus it allows the use of process in rem when process in personam could not be served. So a person is a nonresident of the state when he is actually living out of the state, though his legal domicile may be within the state. Hanover Nat. Bank v. Stebbins, 69 Hun, 308, 309, 23 N. Y. Supp. 529.

A showing that a licensee in a settler's license from the Commissioner of the State Land Office for a tract of swamp lands lived with his father on an adjoining parcel, which was used and partially inclosed with the tract covered by the license, does not establish the nonresidence contemplated by Comp. Laws 1871, § 3990, providing for forfeiture of the license by any person who shall abandon and not reside on the lands described in his license; for an unmarried man, who lives with his father in such close proximity to his own farm, may be fairly said to reside on his own farm, if such occupation is honestly designed as home occupation. Hedley v. Leonard, 35 Mich. 71, 76.

The word "residence," as used in Act April 2, 1822, prohibiting civil process from issuing against a returning soldier until the expiration of a certain period after his return to his usual place of residence, means the residence he had before he entered the service; for a soldier in the field has no residence there, as the word "residence" means a dwelling. Graham v. Commonwealth, 51 Pa. 255, 258, 88 Am. Dec. 581.

As including more than dwelling house.

The word "residence," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3251, giving a landlord a preferred lien for rent on all property of the tenant situated in the residence, cannot be construed to limit the lien solely to property that may be contained within the dwelling house, but he has a lien on all property on the leased premises. York v. Carlisle, 48 S. W. 257, 258, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 269.

Home synonymous.

See "Home."

As residence of individual.

The term "residence," within the meaning of a statute authorizing service on a husband by leaving the notice at his usual place of residence, means the place where the husband himself resides, which is not necessarily where his wife resides, and therefore, in a case where the husband has left the state with an intention never to return, the fact that his wife still resides at the place where she and her husband formerly resided does not make him a resident at such a place, and therefore substituted service cannot be obtained on him by leaving a copy of the summons at such place. Amsbaugh v. Exchange Bank, 5 Pac. 384, 387, 33 Kan. 100.

A party may have a residence in one state, while his family may reside in another. Exchange Bank of St. Louis v. Cooper, 40 Mo. 169, 171.

In a foreclosure suit the subpoena was returned with the usual affidavit of nonresidence of defendant. It appeared that defendant had separated from his wife, who had gone with her child to her father, the complainant. The defendant, after boarding in the county of Hunterdon for a short time, left the state, and was confined for crime in the penitentiary of Pennsylvania. It was held that the actual domicile of the wife was not the legal domicile of the husband, nor could it be regarded, contrary to the fact, as his actual residence within the meaning of the statute regulating the service of process. McPherson v. Howsel, 13 N. J. Eq. (2 Beasl.) 35, 36.

Inhabitaney distinguished.

Fixity and permanence are said to be more strongly imported by the term "inhabitaney" than by "residence." In re Hughes' Infants (N. Y.) 1 Tuck. 38.

As affected by intention.

Residence is a question of intention. The inquiry in determining it is quo animo the party either moved to or from the state. In re Casey (Pa.) 1 Ashm. 128.

Residence is a matter of intention. A minor cannot form such intention for himself. In re Cannon's Estate, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 312, 314.

The question of residence, within the meaning of the law regulating attachments, is generally one of intention, to be determined from the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Johnson v. May, 68 N. W. 1032, 1033, 49 Neb. 601.

One of the marked evidences of residence is that the person claiming it identifies himself and all his interests with his new place of abode, and exercises the right and performs the duty of a citizen. Thomas v. Warner, 34 Atl. 830, 831, 83 Md. 14.

It is true that usually intention is an important element in determining the question of residence, yet where a pauper's home was always with his father, and he never had any other place which he could call his own, and moved with his father from the town where he and the father had resided to another town, he left there no place nor home to which he had a right to return, and the question of his intent in making such change was immaterial in determining his residence. Town of South Burlington v. Town of South Worcester, 31 Atl. 891, 893, 67 Vt. 411.

A person's residence is the place of his domicile, or the place where his residence is fixed without any present intention of removing therefrom. Cooley, Const. Law (5th Ed.) p. 754. A man may acquire a domicile if he be personally present in a place and elect that as his home, even if he never design to remain there always, but design at the end of some short time to remove and acquire another. McCrory, Elect. p. 496, § 38. In the case of Sanders v. Getchell, 76 Me. 158, 49 Am. Rep. 606, it was held that bodily residence in a place, coupled with an intention to make such a place a home, would establish a domicile or residence. It is not necessary that there should be an intention to remain permanently at the chosen domicile. It is enough if it is for a time the home, to the exclusion of other places. It follows that the residence of a person depends on his acts and intentions. His intention may be made to appear from his acts and statements. Brittenham v. Robinson, 48 N. E. 616, 617, 18 Ind. App. 502.

Where a party left the state of Tennessee and went to Texas, with the intention of making that his place of residence, or if, after he got there, he determined to make that his residence, and was residing there, though without his family, he will be considered a nonresident of Tennessee, within the meaning of the attachment laws of Tennessee. Whitly v. Steakly, 62 Tenn. (3 Baxt.) 393.

The words "domicile" and "residence" are often used indifferently. Generally speaking they mean the same thing, but have, however, different meanings. Residence, combined with an intention to remain, constitutes domicile. Residence means a fixed and permanent abode, a dwelling house for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence. Weitkamp v. Loehr, 53 N. Y. Super. Ct. (21 Jones & S.) 79, 82.

Act 1831 abolished imprisonment for debt, providing that no person should be arrested on civil process, save in cases where defendant should not have been a resident of the state for at least one month prior to the commencement of suit against him. Held, that there must be a settled, fixed abode, and an intention to remain permanently, at least for a time, in order to constitute a residence, and that a person having his domicile in the state, but carrying on business out of the state and personally superintending such business, was not a resident within the statute. Frost v. Brisbin (N. Y.) 19 Wend. 11, 14, 32 Am. Dec. 423.

A party who formerly resided in another state, having abandoned that and come to this state, cannot be said to have a residence anywhere until his mind shall have been settled as to whether he will take up his residence here or elsewhere; and until he shall come to the determination, and have a fixed place of habitation, with an intention of staying there, he cannot be said to have a residence anywhere. Miller v. Burrows (N. Y.) 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 157, 158.

"Residence" has much the same signification as "domicile," and means the place where a person lives and has his fixed, permanent home; and where a person has two residences at different seasons of the year, that will be deemed his domicile or home which he himself selects or describes as his home, or where he votes or exercises the rights and duties of a citizen. People v. Surrogate's Court of Putnam County (N. Y.) 38 Hun, 213, 220.

One who, though domiciled in the state of New York, is living in another state and has no place of abode in New York, nor any place which he could call his home, or to which he could return on coming into the state, is a nonresident within the meaning of the Code, permitting an attachment. The intentions of such a person as to the future cannot affect the question of his residence. Wood v. Hamilton (N. Y.) 14 Daly, 41, 42.

G., from 1860 to April, 1885, had a place of business in New York City, and only resided in Paris during a portion of that time for the purpose of purchasing goods for his New York house. In the fall of 1884 he announced his intention to his friends of removing to New York, shipped a large part of his furniture from Paris to New York, and notified his landlord in Paris that he would not need his apartments there after the spring of 1885. On March 17, 1885, he arrived with his family and occupied rooms at a hotel in New York until May 25, 1885, from which date he lived in New York City, declaring his intention to make New York his permanent residence. Held, that G. was not a nonresident, and that an attachment issued on that ground should be vacated. Knapp v. Gerson (U. S.) 25 Fed. 197.

The test of residence, when a party removes from one state to another, seems to be, did he remove from his former residence with the intention of abandoning the same? If he did so leave, and in pursuance of that intention actually went beyond the borders of the state, he will become a nonresident of that state, and upon going into another state with the intention of residing there he will become a resident thereof. Swaney v. Hutchins, 13 N. W. 282, 283, 13 Neb. 266.

Residence is indeed made up of fact and intention; that is, of abode with intention of remaining. But it is not broken by going to seek another abode, but continues until the fact and intention unite in another abode elsewhere. Pfouts v. Comford, 36 Pa. (12 Casey) 420, 422.

Under the statute requiring that "the plaintiff shall have resided in this state one year immediately preceding the time of" applying for a divorce, the plaintiff must have, in fact and intent, an established home in the state for the preceding year, a place where he lives and has an abode, where he would be liable to taxation, where service of process of court could be had upon him by copy, and where he has an actual habitation and residence. Hall v. Hall, 25 Wis. 600, 607, 608.

In order to constitute a residence within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 40, § 2, providing that no person shall be entitled to a divorce who has not resided in the state one year, unless the offense complained of was committed within the state, or while one or both of the parties resided in the state, there must be a fixed abode and an intention to remain, at least for a time, for business or other reasons not solely connected with the bringing of the suit for divorce. A wife, living separate and apart from her husband, might establish an independent residence in a state other than that in which the husband resided, within the meaning of the divorce statute, providing the change was made in good faith and not merely for the purpose of instituting a divorce suit. Chapman v. Chapman, 129 Ill. 386, 21 N. E. 806.

Occupancy distinguished.

Under a statute requiring seven years' residence by adverse possession to give title, seven years' occupancy was not a bar. An occupancy may exist without a residence. Chiles v. Jones, 34 Ky. (4 Dana) 479, 484.

As having place of business.

A defendant, whose domicile is in New Jersey, where he spends his time, except during business hours of the day, is not a resident of New York, though his business is in New York, and he is daily and habitually there from 7 o'clock in the morning to 7 o'clock in the evening, and though he keeps his bank account in New York, and therefore his property may be attached under the New York attachment laws. Bache v. Lawrence (N. Y.) 17 How. Prac. 554, 555.

One had a place of business in New York City, but boarded in Newark, N. J., where he carried on business. He repeatedly stated the latter to be his residence, and was seldom, if ever, at his ostensible place of business in New York City. Held, that he was a nonresident of the state of New York, within the meaning of the attachment law of the state. Greaton v. Morgan (N. Y.) 8 Abb. Prac. 64, 65.

Whether a man's absence from his family be for so many hours in each day or so many days in each week, if his family live in a neighboring state, and he provides for them, resorts to them on the Sabbath and other days of cessation from business, and abides with them whenever the immediate demands of his business will admit, and whenever sickness disables him from business, he is to be deemed a resident of that state, and not a resident of the state of New York, within the provision of the attachment laws. Chaine v. Wilson (N. Y.) 8 Abb. Prac. 78.

A person carrying on within the city of New York a regular business, and in the course of his occupation spending his time during the regular business hours of the business days of the week in the city, keeping his bank account there, and there in good faith transacting all his business, is a "resident," within the meaning of the attachment laws, though his family reside in another state, and he himself spends his Sundays, or even all his nights, with them. Towner v. Church (N. Y.) 2 Abb. Prac. 299, 300.

Where it appeared that defendant, at the time of issuing an attachment against him, kept a house in New Hampshire, in which his wife and children lived, and in which he entertained his friends, and which was frequently called by him his home, such place was the legal "residence" and domicile of defendant, notwithstanding his positive statement that he had since the spring of 1852, and then had, a store of goods, and was doing business as a merchant, and had actually resided, in New York, with the honest intention of making the latter place his permanent residence. Lee v. Stanley (N. Y.) 9 How. Prac. 272, 277.

One had his business and property in the state of New York, and his business capital and his bank account there, where he was engaged in business, and where he spent on an average of eight hours of every business day, but for reasons of convenience and economy maintained his family in the state of New Jersey, and spent with them there his nights and Sundays. Held, that he was not a resident of the state of New York, within the meaning of the attachment laws. Barry v. Bockover (N. Y.) 6 Abb. Prac. 374.

An attachment was issued in New York against a firm doing business in Chicago. One of the partners had his domicile in New York, but a part of each year he resided in Chicago. Held, that the attachment was proper; the partners being nonresidents of the state of New York, as the place of business of a firm, at which its operations are carried on and where the partners are, either continually or at times, to manage the business, can properly be called the "residence" of each of the partners, within the meaning of the attachment laws. McKinlay v. Fowler (N. Y.) 67 How. Prac. 388, 389.

A man's residence is where he actually dwells at the time, not merely where he may carry on business regularly. A man's home, the place where his wife and children actually reside, is ordinarily his place of residence. He may for purposes of business establish himself in another state, away from his family, and remain there so continuously as to make himself a resident thereof for all the purposes of attachment generally; but he cannot be a resident of two distinct places at the same time. Robinson v. Morrison (D. C.) 2 App. Cas. 106, 124.

As having permanent abode.

"Residence" is defined as "the act of residing, abiding, or dwelling in a place for some time," and also as "the place where one rests." Webst. Dict. In Reeder v. Holcomb, 105 Mass. 93, it is said that residence usually imports the place of one's permanent domicile, rather than a temporary abode. Zebert v. Hunt (U. S.) 108 Fed. 449, 451.

The term "residence," in an application for a life policy, was construed to signify place of permanent, rather than mere temporary, abode, in the sense of "domicile," rather er than of mere inhabitancy. Mobile Life Ins. Co. v. Walker, 58 Ala. 290, 295.

"Residence," as used in attachment laws, means an established, fixed, and permanent abode for a time, for business or other purposes, though there may be an intent existing all the while to return to the true domicile. Penfield v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co., 10 Sup. Ct. 566, 569, 134 U. S. 351, 33 L. Ed. 940.

"Residence," within the meaning of the attachment act, is where a man has a settled, fixed abode, with the intention of remaining there permanently for a time, for business and other purposes. Barron v. Burke, 82 Ill. App. 116, 121.

"Residence," within the meaning of Const. art. 2, § 1, which provides that "every male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years, who shall have been a resident of this state 6 months next preceding the election day, and of the county in which he claims his vote 60 days, shall be entitled to vote," means the place of a person's permanent abode, and it will not be changed by the person residing in another county for temporary purposes, as for education, unless the person resides there with the intention of remaining permanently. Vanderpoel v. O'Hanlon, 5 N. W. 119, 120, 53 Iowa, 246, 36 Am. Rep. 216.

"Residence" is defined to be a place of abode; a dwelling; a habitation; the act of abiding or dwelling in a place for some continuance of time. To reside in a place is to abide; to sojourn; to dwell there permanently or for a length of time. It is to have a permanent abode for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence. The word "residence," like "domicile," is often used to express different meanings, according to the subject-matter. Long v. Ryan (Va.) 30 Grat. 718, 719.

"Residence" indicates permanency of occupation, as distinct from lodging or boarding or temporary occupation. Residence indicates the place where a man has his fixed and permanent abode, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning. It is in this sense that the word "residence" is used in St. Okl. § 4953, declaring that the time fixed in the statutes for the prosecution of offenses does not include the time during which the accused is not a resident of the territory. Coleman v. Territory, 47 Pac. 1079, 1081, 5 Okl. 201.

"Residence" means the place where one resides; an abode; a dwelling or habitation. Residence is made up of fact and intention. There must be the fact of abode and the intention of remaining. Wright v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 244, 245, 75 N. W. 465.

A "place of residence," in the common-law acceptance of the term, means a fixed and permanent abode, a dwelling place for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary local residence. Silvey v. Lindsay (N. Y.) 42 Hun, 116, 120.

"Residence" is dwelling in a place for some continuance of time, and is not synonymous with domicile, but means a fixed and permanent abode or dwelling, as distinguished from a mere temporary locality of existence; and to entitle one to the character of a "resident" there must be a settled, fixed abode, and an intention to remain permanently, or at least for some time, for business or other purposes. Barney v. Oelrichs, 11 Sup. Ct. 414, 416, 138 U. S. 529, 34 L. Ed. 1037.

Residence is a place of abode. It never denotes the place where a man is, or happens to be. The term "nonresident," in the attachment act, means a person in the state who is not resident in the state. Evans v. Perrine, 35 N. J. Law (6 Vroom) 221, 223.

A man's residence, like his domicile or usual place of abode, means his home, to and from which he goes and returns daily, weekly, or habitually from his avocation and business, wherever carried on. The indefinite abode of a person in Missouri, doing business therein, but without the intention of remaining there permanently, does not make him a resident of the state, and under the provisions of the attachment act he is a nonresident. Greene v. Beckwith, 38 Mo. 384, 389.

Prison.

Whether the term "residence" be taken in the sense of domicile, or of abode, it implies a place where a party is situated through choice, and where in some conceivable manner his personal belongings would be the more readily found; and neither in its legal nor in its popular meaning is the word "residence" satisfied by an incarceration in any particular place. It is impossible to hold, for purposes of execution against a person, that he resided where he was imprisoned. American Surety Co. of New York v. Cosgrove, 81 N. Y. Supp. 945, 946, 40 Misc. Rep. 262.

Rented house included.

"Residence," as used in Kansas exemption laws, which exempt from sale on execution a homestead occupied as a residence by the family of the owner, together with all the improvements on the same, does not merely mean "dwelling house"; but it may also include everything connected therewith used to make the same more comfortable and enjoyable, but does not include a rented house on the same lot. Ashton v. Ingle, 20 Kan. 670, 671, 27 Am. Rep. 197.

As any place rightfully occupied.

Residence may import temporary sojourn or permanent domicile. The precise meaning depends upon the purpose and phraseology of the particular statute. And. Law Dict. Under Rev. St. 1894, § 1988 (Rev. St. 1881, § 1915), declaring guilty of kidnapping "whoever * * * forcibly or fraudulently carries off or decoys from his place of residence, or arrests, * * * any person, with intention of having such person carried away from his place of residence, unless it be in pursuance of the laws," the term "residence" means, as applied to a child, any place where the child has a right to be. Wallace v. State, 47 N. E. 13, 14, 147 Ind. 621.

Temporary absence.

A man's legal residence is not changed when he leaves it for temporary purposes and transient objects, meaning to return when those purposes are answered and objects attained. Daubmann v. City Council of City of Camden, 39 N. J. Law (10 Vroom) 57, 59.

Residence is the home or habitation fixed in any place, without a present intention of removing therefrom. A change of place for a temporary purpose, with an intention to return, is not change of residence. Stratton v. Brigham, 34 Tenn. (2 Sneed) 420, 422.

The word "residence" is synonymous with the words "dwelling place" or "home," and means some permanent abode with intention to remain. "Residence" in a given place does not necessarily involve continued personal presence in that place. A person may be temporarily absent and remain from home without a change of residence. When a person voluntarily takes up his abode in a given place, with intention to remain permanently or for an indefinite period of time, or, to speak more accurately, when a person takes up his abode in a given place without any present intention to remove therefrom, such place of abode becomes his residence or home, and will continue to be his residence or home, notwithstanding temporary personal absence, until he shall depart with the intention to abandon such home. To establish a residence, there must be personal presence without any present intention to depart, and to break up such residence, when once established, there must be departure with intention to abandon. Inhabitants of Warren v. Inhabitants of Thomaston, 43 Me. 406, 418, 69 Am. Dec. 69.

Temporary presence.

A person's place of residence is where he has his fixed and permanent abode, so that under an act limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to their respective counties, and leaving them without authority to entertain suits for the recovery of money against actual residents in any other county, a person who is temporarily in such county, with the intention to return to the other county as his residence and home, is a resident of the other county. Bradley v. Fraser, 6 N. W. 293, 294, 54 Iowa, 289.

The word "residence," as used in Pub. St. c. 77, § 16, requiring notice of dishonor of a bill of exchange to be directed to the indorser's residence, is not used in a strict sense, as necessarily implying a permanent, exclusive, or actual abode in such place, but may be satisfied by a temporary, partial, or even constructive residence. Wachusett Nat. Bank v. Fairbrother, 148 Mass. 181, 185, 19 N. E. 345, 347, 12 Am. St. Rep. 530.

Settlement distinguished.

See "Settlement (In Poor Laws)."

Suburban distinguished.

The words "residence" and "suburban," as used in the statute authorizing the common council of a city to prohibit sales of intoxicating liquors in the suburban or residence portion of the city, do not mean the same thing. The suburban portion of the city is the outlying part; that portion which is remote from the center of trade and population, where the houses are generally more or less scattered, and where many of the improvements and advantages enjoyed by the central and more densely populated parts of the city are wanting. The suburban part of the city may be occupied for business, or it may be occupied by residences, or it may be used both for residence and business purposes. Rowland v. City of Greencastle, 62 N. E. 474, 476, 157 Ind. 591.

Residence of corporation.

The "residence of a corporation" is for most legal purposes where its chief office or place of business is; and, except where it is by law otherwise provided, its franchise tax should be paid in that jurisdiction. Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Stone (Ky.) 58 S. W. 373, 374.

The residence of a corporation, if it can be said to have a residence, is necessarily where it exercises corporate functions. It dwells in the place where its business is done. It is located where its franchises are exercised. It is present where it is engaged in the prosecution of the corporate enterprise. Bristol v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 436, 438.

The term "residence," or "home," when used with reference to a corporation, means the place where it is located by or under the authority of its charter. It has no power to change its home or residence, or its citizenship. Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 376, 24 L. Ed. 853.

The term "residence of a corporation" is usually used to designate the place where the principal office of the corporation is located, or where its principal operations are carried on; but in contemplation of law the residence of a railroad or turnpike corporation is in every county through which its line passes.

Baltimore & Y. Turnpike Road v. Crowther, 1 Atl. 279, 285, 63 Md. 558.

For the purpose of laying the venue, the principal office or place of business of a corporation is technically the place of "residence" of the corporation. Ordinarily its books are there, and its directors and executive officers meet and transact its business there. Its residence may certainly be with more propriety said to be there than at any other place. Thorn v. Central R. Co., 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 121, 124.

The "residence of a corporation" is the place where the governing power of the corporation is exercised, where those meet in council who have a right to control its affairs and prescribe what policy of the corporation shall be pursued, and not where the labor is performed in executing the requirements of the corporation in transacting its business. In order to determine the legal residence of a corporation, reference must be had to the place where its will is declared and made known, and not to the place where its mandates are obeyed or the business or labor transacted or performed which it authorizes or requires. Where a corporation's charter requires the biennial meetings of its stockholders to be held at a certain city, and its by-laws provide that its offices shall be there and at such other towns as its directors may establish them, that city, being the place where the governing power of the corporation is exercised, is the corporation's residence. State v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co., 29 S. W. 116, 119, 94 Tenn. 295.

The "residence" contemplated by Gen. St. 1901, § 5228, providing that, in any county in which a city court shall have been created, justices outside of the city wherein such court is located shall not have jurisdiction of cases in which any defendant resides in such city, is synonymous with "domicile," and means that place where the habitation is fixed and permanent, and, if applicable to railroad companies at all, it could only apply to the home office, where its general corporate business is conducted, not to its several stations maintained for the transaction of local business. Jossey v. Georgia & A. Ry. Co., 102 Ga. 706, 28 S. E. 273; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Gonzales, 151 U. S. 496, 14 Sup. Ct. 401, 38 L. Ed. 248. The court in the latter case, in discussing the question of residence of a corporation, said: "These cases must be regarded as establishing the doctrine that a domestic corporation is both a citizen and an inhabitant of the state in which it is incorporated; but in none of them is there any intimation that, where a state is divided into districts, a corporation shall be treated as an inhabitant of every district of such state, or in every district in which it does business, or, indeed, any district other than that in which it has its headquarters, or such offices as answer in the case of a corporation to the dwelling of an individual." Robinson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Kan.) 72 Pac. 854, 855.

The word "residence," as used in Gen. St. tit. 19, c. 2, § 12, providing that, when any corporation is engaged in transacting business in any other town than that in which its secretary resides, process of foreign attachment may be served on it by leaving a copy with any agent or clerk employed by the corporation to keep its accounts or pay its employes in the town where it transacts its business, refers to the official residence of the secretary; that is, the town where he performs his duties as secretary. A corporation whose principal office was in H. carried on manufacturing in W., where its accounts were kept and its employes paid. The secretary of the corporation resided in W., but went early every day to H., and spent the entire day in the office of the corporation there, and all his duties were performed there. The secretary must not be regarded as residing in W., within the meaning of the statute, and hence service made upon the clerk who kept the accounts and paid the employes there was good. Adams v. Willimantic Linen Co., 46 Conn. 320, 322.

RESIDENCE PORTION.

"Residence," as used in a statute authorizing the common council of a city to define places for the sale of intoxicating liquors to be used upon the premises in the business portion of the city, and to exclude them from the residence and suburban portions, does not mean the same thing as "suburban." The suburban portion of the city is the outlying part; that portion which is remote from the center of trade and population, where the houses are generally more or less scattered, and where many of the improvements and advantages enjoyed by the central and more densely populated parts of the city are wanting. The suburban part of the city may be used for business, or may be occupied by residences, or it may be used both for residence and business purposes. Rowland v. City of Greencastle, 62 N. E. 474, 476, 157 Ind. 591.

An ordinance prohibiting sales of liquor in the "residence portion" of a city does not mean that such portion should be given up exclusively to family residences to come within the prohibition; and hence, where a part of the city is partly used for residence purposes, it will not become a business portion of the city because a grocery or other business was here and there carried on therein. Shea v. City of Muncie, 46 N. E. 138, 144, 148 Ind. 14.

RESIDENT.

See "Nonresident"; "Not a Resident."

"Resident" is defined in Burrill's Law Dictionary to be "one who has a seat or set-element in a place; one who dwells, abides, or lives in a place; an inhabitant; one who resides or dwells in a place for some time," etc. Brown v. Ashbough (N. Y.) 40 How. Prac. 260, 263.

Worcester defines "resident" thus: "Dwelling; having abode in any place; living; inhabiting; abiding; residing." The Century Dictionary defines "resident" thus: "One who has a residence." In a legal sense a residence in law is defined as "the place where a man's habitation is fixed, without a present purpose of removing therefrom." Brisenden v. Chamberlain (U. S.) 53 Fed. 307, 311.

"Resident" is defined as "dwelling or having an abode in any place." United States v. Penelope (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 486, 487.

"The word 'resident' is the opposite of the word 'transient.' The former describes a person at rest in a town, while the latter describes him in his passage through or across it." Town of New Haven v. Town of Middlebury, 21 Atl. 608, 610, 63 Vt. 399.

The term "resident" has not a technical meaning. In some statutes and for some purposes it means one thing, and in other statutes and for other purposes it means another thing. United States v. Nardello (D. C.) 4 Mackey, 503, 512.

The term "resident," as used in the attachment laws, has a peculiar meaning. The writ of attachment is an extraordinary mode of procuring the appearance of defendant, and is not to be resorted to when the ordinary process of the law can be used, though the legal domicile of defendant may be out of the state. Hackettstown Bank v. Mitchell, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 516, 518.

The term "resident of the state," in the homestead law, means an actual and not a constructive presence. Rix v. McHenry, 7 Cal. 89, 91.

"Resident" is "a word with a great variety of meanings. The necessary element in its signification is locality of existence. The permanency of a residence indicated, however, depends in a great degree upon the context. The word has been variously construed to mean an occupier of lands, a resident, a permanent resident, one having a domicile, a citizen, or a qualified voter. The construction is generally governed by the connection in which the word is used." In re Town of Hector, 24 N. Y. Supp. 475, 479.

"Resident," within the meaning of the court rule requiring all notices of motion to be served on persons not "resident in the state" by setting up the same in the office of the clerk of the court, means having a dwelling house or usual place of abode at which, under the chancery act, process for appearance is to be served. Hervey v. Hervey, 38 Atl. 767, 769, 56 N. J. Eq. 168.

Under the insolvent act, requiring that an insolvent applying for a discharge thereunder be an inhabitant, a plea that the defendant was a resident was sufficient, as the words signify the same thing. A person resident is defined to be one dwelling or having his abode in any place; an inhabitant; one that resides in a place. Roosevelt v. Kellogg (N. Y.) 20 Johns. 208, 211.

A person having left forever his native land, and living in the state of New York, without any determination to reside anywhere else, is a resident of the state of New York. Heidenbach v. Schland (N. Y.) 10 How. Prac. 477, 478.

Code 1873, § 3076, relating to exemptions, provides that any person coming into the state with the intention of remaining shall be considered a resident within the meaning of the chapter. Held, that the term "resident," as so defined, was not to be construed to include merely a person who had come into the state with an intention of remaining, and had actually obtained a place of residence, but that the actual presence of the person in the state with an intention of remaining, though he had not obtained a house to live in, was sufficient to constitute him a resident within such definition. Cox v. Allen, 59 N. W. 335, 338, 91 Iowa, 462.

The word "resident," as used in the attachment laws, requiring an oath or affirmation to the effect that defendant is not a resident at the time in the state, applies to such persons only as are beyond the reach of ordinary process. If a summons or a capias can be served, an attachment does not lie. Kugler v. Shreve, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 129, 130.

A "resident," within the meaning of the title on "Elections," must be construed to mean a person who has resided or will have resided continuously within this state for one year, and in the county four months, and in the precinct sixty days, next preceding the day of the next ensuing election. Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 805.

Under the provisions of the by-laws of a beneficial society that no sick benefits shall be granted to resident brothers for more than a week prior to application therefor, and an absent brother claiming benefits must send a statement of the case, attested by the sachem of a tribe near the place where he may be, one out of the jurisdiction of the tribe or lodge to which he belongs is an absent brother, without regard to the place of his residence, since the term "resident" does not have reference to the legal residence of a party, but designates one who at the time of claiming benefits is within the jurisdiction of the tribe, while an absent brother is one who happens at the time to be permanently or temporarily without the jurisdiction. Walsh v. Cosumnes Tribe, No. 14, L. O. R. M., 41 Pac. 418, 108 Cal. 496.

Absence or removal as affecting.

The word "resident," in Const. art. 10, § 2, exempting the homestead of a resident, has a more restricted meaning than "domicile," and to entitle a person to a constitutional exemption he must be an actual, not a constructive, resident. Where the facts show an actual removal from the state, even for a definite period, the person so removing ceases while absent to be a resident, though he intend to return and resume his residence. Fulton v. Roberts, 113 N. C. 421, 18 S. E. 510, 512.

"Resident," as used in Code, art. 10, §§ 1, 2, securing certain exemptions to residents of a state, means actual, and not constructive, residents; and hence one who has been absent from the state for seven or eight years, working in another state, but expecting to return, is not entitled to the exemption. Munds v. Cassidey, 98 N. C. 558, 4 S. E. 355, 356.

Divorce Act, § 7, provides that no person shall be entitled to a divorce who has not resided in the state one year previous to the filing of the petition. Held that, where there is citizenship once established, the wording of the statute does not require that the residence should have been for one whole year; necessary absence with an intention of returning being sufficient. Fickle v. Fickle, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 203, 204.

A resident who has left the state to escape a prosecution, with an intention of returning as soon as he can succeed in having the prosecution dismissed, his wife and children remaining in the state upon his home place, is a resident of the state, within a homestead statute. Chitty v. Chitty, 24 S. E. 517, 518, 118 N. C. 647, 32 L. R. A. 394.

Aliens.

The term "residents," as used in the conscript laws, includes not only citizens, native and naturalized, but also foreigners, whose residence in this country has been such as to attach to them a national character as members of society. "The word 'residents' is ordinarily used to designate persons in a particular locality, as of a city, town, or county, and not, as in this instance, to designate a class within the whole limits of the government. Congress designed that this term should include more than citizens, native and naturalized; otherwise, the word 'citizen' would have been used. It includes also foreigners, not naturalized, whose residence here has been such as to attach to them a national character as members of society, and who are thereby under obligations to defend the country." Ex parte Blumer, 27 Tex. 734, 736.

As citizen.

The provision of Act Tenn. March 19, 1877 (Laws 1877, c. 31, § 5), that, on the insolvency of a foreign corporation carrying on business in the state, "creditors who may be residents of this state shall have a priority in the distribution of assets over all simple contract creditors, being residents of any other country or countries," must be construed as using the word "residents" as meaning the same as "citizens"; and, as applied to creditors who are residents and citizens of other states, the provision is in contravention of section 2, art. 4, of the Constitution of the United States, declaring that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states. A corporation of another state, however, is not a "citizen," within the meaning of such constitutional provision, and cannot invoke its protection. Blake v. McClung, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. Ed. 432.

To confer jurisdiction on the courts of the United States of a suit for the infringement of a trade-mark at common law, or for unfair trade, there must exist diverse citizenship between the parties, which must appear on the record. An allegation in such a suit that defendants are residents of a state is not a sufficient allegation of their citizenship; for the term "resident" does not necessarily imply citizenship, and cannot be substituted for it. Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. George E. Rouse Soap Co. (U. S.) 90 Fed. 5, 6, 32 C. C. A. 496.

In reference to corporation.

The word "resident," occurring in the Constitution or in a statute, ordinarily means an individual or citizen, and does not mean a corporation. People v. Schoonmaker (N. Y.) 63 Barb. 44, 51.

"The fourth section of the supplement of March 25, 1863, exempting from taxation property out of the state of residents in the state, does not apply to corporations. A corporation may be considered as a resident, inhabitant, or citizen for some purposes, such as jurisdiction or venue, but in this supplement, taking it in connection with the whole tax law, it is evident that the word 'resident' was not intended to include a corporation." Easton Delaware Bridge Co. v. Metz, 32 N. J. Law (8 Vroom) 199, 203.

"A corporation is a mere creation of local law, having no legal existence beyond the sovereignty where created. It dwells in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate. Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. (8 Wall.) 168, 19

L. Ed. 357. How, then, can a corporation of another state become a bona fide resident of Indiana? It is true that the existence of a corporation may be, and frequently is, recognized abroad by the enforcement of its contracts made abroad, as well as at the place of its domicile, and in other ways; but that is done purely upon considerations of comity. A state statute, declaring a conveyance in trust of real or personal property to other than 'a bona fide resident' of the state invalid, does not govern a conveyance in trust to a foreign corporation of property within the state." Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co. (U. S.) 27 Fed. 146, 150.

Inasmuch as a corporation is a mere creation of local law, having no legal existence beyond the sovereignty where it is created, dwelling in that place, and being incapable of migration, a corporation is not a "resident," within a state statute making a conveyance in trust to other than a bona fide resident invalid. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co. (U. S.) 27 Fed. 146, 150.

Domicile distinguished.

See "Domicile."

Females.

Acts 1875, p. 206, authorizing the county court to make an order on the petition of a majority of the adult residents of the township prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within three miles of any academy situated therein, construed to permit the signing of such petitions by women and girls who are adult residents of the township. Blackwell v. State, 36 Ark. 178, 181.

As inhabitant.

The word "resident" has the same meaning as "inhabitant," and means one who dwells or resides permanently in a place. Ullman v. State, 1 Tex. App. 220, 222, 28 Am. Rep. 405; In re Wrigley (N. Y.) 4 Wend. 602, 604; Roosevelt v. Kellogg (N. Y.) 20 Johns. 208, 210, 211; Bell v. Pierce (N. Y.) 48 Barb. 51, 53; United States v. Penelope (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 486, 487, 489.

The words "resident" and "inhabitant" are not synonymous; the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former. Succession of Givanovich, 24 South. 679, 680, 50 La. Ann. 625 (citing Abb. Law Dict.). It frequently imports many privileges and duties a resident could not claim or be subject to. Frost v. Brisbin (N. Y.) 19 Wend. 11, 12, 32 Am. Dec. 423.

The words "resident" and "inhabitant" are not synonymous; the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former. McFarlane v. Cornelius, 73 Pac. 325, 329, 43 Or. 513.

The term "inhabitant" is defined in law to mean one who has a legal settlement in the town, city, or parish, and is synonymous with the word "resident," which is more generally used in this country, and probably better understood. Helle v. Deerfield Tp., 96 Ill. App. 642, 643.

"Resident," as used in a statute requiring the appointment of three persons, citizens of the state, who should be "residents" of the metropolitan police district, and, as often as vacancies should occur by reason of removal from the district, the appointment of others to fill their places, is synonymous with the word "inhabitant," as used in Rev. St. p. 122, § 34, providing that every office becomes vacant on the incumbent ceasing to be an "inhabitant" of the state. An "inhabitant" means one domiciled in a place. People v. Platt, 3 N. Y. Supp. 367, 369, 50 Hun. 454.

Code, § 250, provides that a warrant of attachment may issue whenever it appears by affidavit that a cause of action exists against the defendant, and that the defendant is a foreign corporation or not a resident of the state. Held, that the word "resident" was used as synonymous with "inhabitant," and means a person dwelling or having his place of abode in any place. Munroe v. Williams, 16 S. E. 533, 535, 37 S. C. 81, 19 L. R. A. 665.

The words "inhabitant" and "resident," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 2806, providing that upon the decease of any inhabitant of the state letters testamentary or letters of administration upon his estate shall be granted by the probate court of the county in which the deceased was an inhabitant or resident at the time of his death, are synonymous, and therefore but one court is possessed of jurisdiction to administer the estate of a deceased—the probate court of the county of his residence at the time of his death. Ewing v. Mallison, 70 Pac. 369, 371, 65 Kan. 484, 93 Am. St. Rep. 299.

"Resident" is not synonymous with "inhabitant," as the term "inhabitant" implies a fixed and more permanent abode than the term "resident," and frequently imports many privileges and duties which a mere resident could not claim to be subject to. There is a marked difference in the meaning of the terms "resident" and "inhabitant," growing out of their respective rights and duties. Tazewell County Sup'rs v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 197, 204.

"Resident," as used in St. 1817, c. 190, providing that a probate court shall be held within the several counties of the commonwealth for taking the probate of wills and granting administration on the estates of persons deceased, being inhabitants or residents in the same county at the time of their decease, is not synonymous with the term

"inhabitant," but is a word of different capacity and meaning; for habitation means something different from mere residence. Harvard College v. Gore, 22 Mass. (5 Pick.) 370, 372.

"Resident," as used in Act March 1, 1819, requiring an elector whose vote is challenged to swear that he is a resident of a particular township and has resided in the state six months immediately preceding the election, "may be considered less restricted in its sense and meaning than 'inhabitant,' for which it seems to have been used as equivalent. It is certainly not to be considered more comprehensive and implying other qualifications than those enumerated. If the term 'inhabitant' had been used, instead of 'resident,' it would not have implied any more than is implied by the term 'resident,' though the literal language of the Constitution. If any inference is to be drawn from the use of the term 'resident,' it is certainly fair to presume that by its use the members of the Legislature intended to declare that the term 'inhabitant' did not imply citizen, but one who was a resident of the state, and is an explicit interpretation that the term 'inhabitant' meant absolutely one who dwells in the country." Spragins v. Houghton, 8 Ill. (2 Scam.) 877, 405.

As having place of business.

"Resident," as used in Sess. Acts 1871, c. 193, § 110, prohibiting the sale of goods by sample, etc., by any person not a resident merchant or mechanic, does not import a personal residence, but refers to the place of business. Speer v. Commonwealth (Va.) 23 Grat. 935, 14 Am. Rep. 164.

Within the meaning of Const. art. 6, § 18, prohibiting the Legislature from extending the jurisdiction of the county court to persons not "residents of the county," the word "resident" involves the idea both of a dweller and of permanency, "and does not include a nonresident having a business office in the county." If we were to give effect to the word according to its primary and etymological meaning, it of course refers to one having a dwelling or an abode in a particular place for a continued length of time, as its root implies. But we take it that it is to be applied with the meaning and in the general sense in which the word is used in law, except when a special signification is attached to it by some statute, as in those cases relating to taxation, the settlement of paupers, and other enactments in which a particular or special, as distinguished from the primary and general, meaning is given it. As affecting jurisdiction, the word involves the idea both of a dweller and of permanency. In Isham v. Gibbons (N. Y.) 1 Bradf. Sur. 69, 82, it is said: "So far as our own Constitution and laws speak of residents, the idea of a fixed and permanent dwelling seems to be involved." Routenberg v. Schweitzer, 63 N. Y. Supp. 746, 747, 50 App. Div. 218.

"Resident merchant, mechanic, or manufacturer," as used in Sess. Acts 1870-71, c. 193, § 101, fixing a license tax on every person who sells by sample card, etc., who is not a resident merchant, mechanic, or manufacturer, was not intended to import "a personal residence, but only the place of business"; and, as any person, though not a resident of the state, may take out a license as a merchant, the statute is not in conflict with Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, which declares that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several states. Speer v. Commonwealth (Va.) 23 Grat. 935, 939, 14 Am. Rep. 164.

Person not owning land.

"Resident," as used in Act June 2, 1873, § 2, providing that when any person unlawfully herding horses or cattle shall be requested by any resident of the state residing within one-half mile of the place where such stock is unlawfully herded to remove the same, and shall fail, he shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, does not imply that he must be the owner of the land on which he resides. Caldwell v. State, 2 Tex. App. 53, 55.

Permanent residence indicated.

"Resident," as contained in a plea that the "defendant was a resident citizen," indicated that he had a fixed home within the county alleged; the word "resident" being as forcible in this connection as the words "permanent residence." Powers v. Bryant's Adm'r (Ala.) 7 Port. 9, 15.

A resident is a person having a permanent abode in a particular place, and does not include persons sojourning temporarily in a place for a particular purpose, not intending to continue to live there after such time or purpose is accomplished. Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. (21 P. F. Smith) 302, 10 Am. Rep. 698.

A person residing in Indiana, who has an agent in Illinois to receive applications for loans and transact other business, and who goes to Illinois at regular intervals temporarily for the purpose of transacting business with reference to these credits, is not a resident of Illinois, so as to be taxable on the credits due him in such state. Hayward v. Board of Review of Christian County, 59 N. E. 601, 602, 189 Ill. 234.

"Resident," as used in Act 1831, providing that no person shall be arrested on civil process in suits brought on contracts, express or implied, except in cases where the defendant shall not have been a resident of the state for at least one month previous to the commencement of a suit against him, means one having a fixed, settled abode, with an intention to remain permanently, at least for a time, for business or other purposes, and does not include one making a transient visit for a time at a place. It requires actual residence, without regard to domicile. Frost v. Brisbin (N. Y.) 19 Wend. 11, 12, 32 Am. Dec. 423.

"Resident," as used in Comp. St. c. 17, art. 3, § 1, requiring a petition for the removal of a county seat to be signed by "resident electors" of the county, means actual residents of the county, and not such persons as are temporarily therein. Ayres v. Moan, 51 N. W. 830, 832, 34 Neb. 210, 15 L. R. A. 501.

"Resident," as used in 3 Rev. St. (Banks' 8th Ed.) p. 2111, § 29, providing that every person of full age, who shall be a resident and inhabitant of any town for one year, shall be deemed settled in such town, means a person having a locality of existence as permanent and firmly fixed as is legally conveyed by the word "domicile." "Resident" is a flexible word, having different meanings, according to the context. In re Town of Hector, 24 N. Y. Supp. 475, 476.

A foreigner, who, after a residence of seven years in the state of New York, transacting business as a commission merchant, returns home, taking with him his effects, uncertain whether he will return or not, loses his character as a resident, so that, though he returns to the state after a sojourn of only three weeks in his native land, he is not entitled to be discharged as an insolvent debtor, if after his return he engages in no business, and his residence is merely of a temporary character. In re Wrigley (N. Y.) 8 Wend. 134, 140.

A "resident of the state" is one who resides in the state; one who resides permanently or for a time in the state. There is not necessarily the idea of permanency connected with the signification of the words "resides" and "residence." A resident may have a settled abode for a time, to be determined by circumstances. His residence may be temporary, for temporary purposes. He may retain his citizenship of another state, and still be subject to the law of this state, intended to protect the rights of residents and to provide remedies against them. Mann v. Taylor, 43 N. W. 220, 223, 78 Iowa, 355.

The word "resident," as used in Act Pa. May 4, 1855, declaring that any person desiring to adopt a child may present a petition therefor to the court of common pleas of the county where he may be resident, includes both a permanent and a temporary resident; and therefore the court has jurisdiction to decree an adoption by a petitioner who lives in another state, and who is merely a temporary resident in the county where the petition is filed. Glos v. Sankey, 36 N. E. 628, 631, 148 Ill. 536, 23 L. R. A. 665, 39 Am. St. Rep. 196.

The word "resident," as used in Act Cong. March 28, 1806, c. 9, providing that all commercial intercourse between any person or persons resident within the United States, and any person or persons resident within any part of the Island of St. Domingo, not in possession and under the acknowledged government of France, shall be prohibited, does not include a mere transitory coming into the United States for a special purpose, but the person must come with the intent of staying or abiding for permanent purposes. Hence a British subject coming from Bermuda to Philadelphia in his own sloop to take his children home from school, and who, after remaining in the United States 13 days, purchased a cargo for St. Domingo, was not a person resident within the United States, within the prohibition of the act. United States v. Penelope (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 486, 489.

Unmarried man.

The words "owner, resident, or householder," as used in the homestead statute to describe the persons entitled to the homestead exemption, are not limited to married men, and therefore a widower, whose children are all married and away from home, and who has rented the premises claimed as his homestead, but who still boards and lodges in the house, is entitled to the homestead exemption. Myers v. Ford, 22 Wis. 139, 141.

RESIDENT ALIEN.

Under Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that no distinction shall ever be made by law between resident aliens and citizens in reference to the possession, enjoyment, or descent of property, an alien resident of the state, whose wife and children still remain in England, is entitled to the protection of the exemption laws. These benefits are secured to him, not because of the residence of his family, but his own. They attach to him in his own right as the head of a family actually residing here. That his family did not accompany him in his removal to our state is of no consequence, so long as he came with the settled purpose of abandoning his residence in England, and on his arrival fixed upon this state as his home, to which he intends to bring them. People v. McClay, 2 Neb. 7, 9.

RESIDENT AND INHABITANT.

The term "resident and inhabitant," in Poor Law 1896, § 40, providing that every person of full age who shall be a resident and inhabitant of any city for one year, and the members of his family who have not gained a separate settlement, shall be deemed settled in such city, means the locality as permanent and permanently fixed, as is legally conveyed by the word "domicile." In reaching this conclusion the court said: There are very few adjudged cases in this state defining who are residents and inhabitants, within the meaning of our poor laws. In re Town of Hector, 24 N. Y. Supp. 475, 479, is a carefully considered decision of the learned county judge of Schuyler county upon this subject. The poor persons under consideration were two Italian laborers, who had left their homes and families in Italy, and were employed in railroad construction, and liable to be discharged at any time, and free to leave their employment, and living in rough shanties built by railroad contractors. It was held that they had not gained a settlement in the town of Hector, although they had actually been located and lived in that town for over a year. The county judge points out the difference between the construction of the courts in construing the meaning of the word "residents," when used in those statutes seeking to give a remedy against absent debtors, and those in relation to levying taxes, and the statute in question. In the former case a man may have more than one residence, but only one domicile. The county judge holds that the cases furnishing the best analogy are those where the jurisdiction of the court depends upon the residence or inhabitancy of one or both parties in a particular locality, and, after citing several cases, states, on page 481, as follows: "It seems to the court that these cases may be regarded as establishing the legal proposition that the words 'resident and inhabitant,' in the statute under consideration, mean a locality of existence as permanent and firmly fixed as is legally conveyed by the word 'domicile,' and that at once disposes of this appeal. It has long been settled law that every person has a domicile somewhere. If he has not acquired one elsewhere, he retains his domicile of origin, and, to effect a change of domicile, the fact and intent must concur; that is, there must be, not only a change of residence, but an intention to abandon the former domicile, and acquire another as the sole domicile." De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 491, 24 N. E. 996, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652; Dupuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556. The question involved in the last case was whether there was a change of domicile for the purpose of succession. On page 561 Rapallo, J., says: "There must be both residence in the alleged domicile, and intention to adopt such place of residence as the sole domicile. Residence alone has no effect per se, though it may be most important as a ground from which to infer intention. Length of residence will not alone effect the change; intention alone will not do it; but the two taken together do constitute a change of domicile." In the case of People v. Platt, 117 N. Y. 159, 22 N. E. 937, the defendant was appointed to an office, one of the qualifications of which was that he must be "a resident of the metropolitan police district," and it was claimed that he was not such a resident. Upon the trial it appeared that the defendant had for many years actually resided within the required territory, but during the same period he had always voted, whenever he exercised that right, in the village of Owego, Tioga county, his previous residence; and he testified that he never intended to change his domicile in Owego. Danforth, J., says, on page 167, 117 N. Y., and page 938, 22 N. E.: "The relation [a residence] is one which has a legal sanction, and in some cases secures its possessor a settlement and pauper privileges under the poor laws, or, under the election laws, a right to vote; and in all cases where the statute prescribes 'residence' as a qualification for the enjoyment of a privilege or the exercise of a franchise, the word is equivalent to the place of domicile of the person who claims its benefit." City of Syracuse v. Onondaga County, 55 N. Y. Supp. 634-636, 25 Misc. Rep. 371.

RESIDENT FREEHOLDER.

"Resident freeholder," as used in Laws 1863, c. 133, § 2, as amended by Laws 1868, c. 51, § 2, providing that the power to lay different highways could only be exercised "upon petition of not less than 30 resident freeholders, and not less than 15 from each town through or into which, or along or near to the line of which, it is proposed to lay out such highway," means a resident of the particular town in question, who owns a freehold interest in lands situated therein. The principle of the law and its evident intent is that a highway shall not be laid out without the advice and sanction of the requisite number of residents of the proper town, who by reason of their property interests in such town and their liability to be taxed to pay the resulting damages would not be likely to petition for the highway unless it was needed by the public. Damp v. Town of Dane, 29 Wis. 419, 427.

"Resident freeholder," as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 3153, authorizing a city incorporated under the general law to subscribe to the stock of any railroad, hydraulic company, or water power running in or through such city, etc., a petition of a majority of the resident freeholders of such city means all persons who reside within the city and who are the owners of an estate in lands within the city amounting to a freehold interest. State v. City of Kokomo, 8 N. E. 718, 720, 108 Ind. 74.

The phrase "resident freeholders," as used in Rev. St. 1894, § 3844, providing that, on confirmation of an order for street improvement, the same shall become final, unless within 10 days two-thirds of the resident freeholders on such street remonstrate against the improvement, includes only freeholders residing on the street, and not residents within the city owning property upon the street. Kirkland v. Board of Public Works of City of Indianapolis, 41 N. E. 374, 376, 142 Ind. 123.

Corporations.

The charter of Indianapolis (Act March 6, 1891), authorizing it to annex territory, and providing, in section 38, that an appeal may be taken from such annexation by one or more "resident freeholders in the territory sought to be annexed," means persons who are citizens and freeholders of the territory to be annexed, and does not extend to a railroad company owning land within such territory. Pittsburg, C., O. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. City of Indianapolis, 46 N. E. 641, 147 Ind. 292.

RESIDENT HOUSEHOLDER.

The term "resident householder," within the statute exempting from execution property belonging to a resident householder, includes a judgment debtor, who, after the death of his wife, while he is residing in a certain house, employs a family to keep house for him and his adopted daughter, who is dependent on him for support. Bunnell v. Hay, 73 Ind. 452, 453.

The phrase "resident householder," as embraced in Act March 5, 1859, exempting certain property of resident householders, includes one who is head of a family, but who is in the act or course of moving the family from a house in one county to a house in another. Mark v. State, 15 Ind. 98, 100.

"Resident householders," as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 703, exempting certain property of resident householders from execution sale, cannot be construed to include one who, with his family and part of his household goods, leaves the state for government service in one of the territories, with the intention of returning when such service shall terminate; for, to be a resident householder, he must reside and keep house in the state. Ross v. Banta, 34 N. E. 865, 871, 140 Ind. 120.

The term "resident householder," within the meaning of a statute creating exemptions in favor of such householders, includes a person maintaining a residence, although he is not married. Abell v. Riddle, 75 Ind. 345, 348.

An exemption of property not exceeding $300 in value from execution for debt to any "resident householder" is held to include also property owned by the wife, where the husband and wife are living together, and the property of the husband is not of the value of $300, and the wife is the owner of property levied on under execution; and the plain intent of the statute is to preserve a home or support for the family, and not for its head, as distinguished from its members. Crane v. Waggoner, 33 Ind. 83, 85.

RESIDENT PAUPER.

A "resident pauper" is one who has a legal settlement in some town in the state, and is residing in a town in which aid is needed, and liable to be removed to the town of legal settlement, or to an order of removal to such town. Town of Topsham v. Williamstown, 60 Vt. 467, 471, 12 Atl. 112, 114.

RESIDUARY.

A residuary bequest is one which, if valid, carries all the personal property not otherwise disposed of. Kerr v. Dougherty, 79 N. Y. 327, 359.

A residuary bequest is that which consists of a residue of an estate, and not of a particular article. Patterson v. Devlin (S. C.) McMul. Eq. 459, 468.

A residuary clause in a will is a clause which operates to pass all of testator's property not perfectly disposed of, and it includes legacies which may lapse by events subsequent to the making of a will, or property covered by illegal legacies, or legacies which for some reason are prevented from taking effect. Riker v. Cornwell, 20 N. E. 602, 604, 113 N. Y. 115.

A general residuary clause includes all property of the testator not otherwise disposed of. The presumption is that it includes everything not otherwise disposed of, and the burden rests upon the heir at law or next of kin to show that the testator did not intend his residuary clause to include such property. It carries every real interest, whether known or unknown, immediate or remote, unless it is manifestly excluded, and, when not circumscribed by clear expression in other parts of a will, includes any property or interest of the testator not otherwise perfectly disposed of, and all that for any reason eventually falls into the general residue. Lamb v. Lamb, 14 N. Y. Supp. 206, 210, 60 Hun. 577.

"A devise of the whole of an estate is not a residuary devise, notwithstanding a residuary devise might dispose of nearly the whole of the estate, inasmuch as a residuary devise is a devise of the balance after certain devises have been carried out." Jewett v. Jewett, 12 O. C. D. 131, 133.

RESIDUARY ESTATE.

In order that there should be a residuary estate, the provisions of the will must be fulfilled, and something must be left over. Debts and legacies must be paid, and then the residue goes to residuary legatees. Wetmore v. St. Luke's Hospital, 9 N. Y. Supp. 753, 756, 56 Hun, 313.

The words "residuary estate," as used in Rev. St. § 5971, providing that a devise or bequest shall not lapse by the death of the devisee or legatee, is used in its technical sense, and is defined in Bouvier to be "what remains of testator's estate after deducting the debts and the bequests and devises." Jewett v. Jewett, 12 O. C. D. 131, 133.

RESIDUARY FUND.

Where a testator gave to his widow one-third of all his personal property, and after certain other bequests gave the residue of his estate to others, there is no merit in the widow's claim to have the testator's debts, the expenses of the administration, and costs of audit deducted from the residuary fund. There is no "residuary fund" until the debts and expenses are paid. The gift of one-third of the personal estate was a gift of one-third of what may be left after the payment of debts and expenses. Appeal of Barnett, 104 Pa. 342, 349.

RESIDUARY LEGACY.

A residuary legacy embraces only that which remains after all the bequests of the will are discharged. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 1357, subd. 4; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1071.

A residuary legacy embraces only that which remains after all the other bequests are discharged, and a specific legacy payable out of the residue, after the other legacies are paid, is not a residuary legacy, where the gift of the residuum is to another. In re Williams' Estate, 44 Pac. 808, 810, 112 Cal. 521, 53 Am. St. Rep. 224.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE.

A legacy is a bequest of goods and chattels by will or testament. The person to whom it is given is styled the "legatee"; and, if the gift is of the residue of an estate after payment of debts and legacies, he is then styled the "residuary legatee." Probate Court v. Matthews, 6 Vt. 269, 274.

"Residuary legatee," as used in a will, by which the testatrix, owning real estate, made a certain person her residuary legatee, should be considered as showing that the testatrix intended that the residuum of her estate, both real and personal, should pass to such legatee. Laing v. Barbour, 119 Mass. 523, 525.

A residuary legatee is a legatee who is given all the residuum of a testator's estate after specific devises and bequests have been made therefrom. After giving a bond, as required by statute, he becomes the sole and absolute owner of the estate of the testator, real, personal, and mixed, with all the rights and remedies of an absolute owner, subject to none of the conditions, restrictions, or accountabilities of an executor. Lafferty v. People's Sav. Bank, 43 N. W. 34, 36, 76 Mich. 35.

RESIDUE.

See "Rest and Residue"; "Rest, Residue, and Remainder."

"Residue," as defined by Bouvier, is that which remains of something after taking away some part of it. Morgan v. Huggins (U. S.) 48 Fed. 3, 5, 9 L. R. A. 540.

"Residue," in its natural and popular force and effect, signifies what is left of a number or quantity after something has been abstracted. Of a blended mass of real and personal estate, it is what remains after the mass has been diminished by something abstracted. Stevens v. Flower, 19 Atl. 777, 779, 46 N. J. Eq. (1 Dick.) 340.

In administration and wills.

A residue is what is left after something has been taken out, and, as used in a will, is ordinarily what remains after the payment of debts, funeral charges, expenses of administration, and legacies. Addeman v. Rice, 81 Atl. 429, 19 R. I. 30; In re Harvey, 14 Or. 171, 172, 12 Pac. 307, 308.

"Residue," as used in a will giving several legacies, and then, without creating an express trust to pay them, giving the "residue," can only mean what remains after satisfying the previous gifts. Lewis v. Darling, 57 U. S. (16 How.) 1, 10, 14 L. Ed. 819.

The residue of an estate is that only which remains undisposed of after satisfying all particular legacies and devises, including any which may be made by a codicil. Duffield v. Pike, 42 Atl. 641, 643, 71 Conn. 521.

"Residue" means all that of which no effectual disposition is made by will, other than by the residuary clause. Morton v. Woodbury, 47 N. E. 283, 287, 153 N. Y. 243 (citing 1 Jarm. Wills, 764); Sturgis v. Work, 122 Ind. 134, 138, 22 N. E. 906, 17 Am. St. Rep. 349.

The residue of the testator's estate and effects means what is left after all liabilities are discharged and all the purposes of the testator are carried into effect. Graves v. Howard, 56 N. C. 302, 305.

The gift of a residue is a gift of what remains after the debts and legacies are paid, and is subject to the precedent claims on the estate. Nickerson v. Bragg, 43 Atl. 539, 540, 21 R. I. 296.

The ordinary meaning of "residue," as used in wills, is that portion of an estate which is left after the payment of charges, debts, and particular bequests. The presumption is that the testator uses it in this sense, unless a contrary intent clearly appears. Stevens v. Underhill, 36 Atl. 370, 372, 67 N. H. 68.

The words "rest, residue, and remainder," in a will first giving certain legacies, and then giving the rest, residue, and remainder of his property, were construed to mean the property remaining after the preceding legacies had been paid. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 85 N. Y. 142, 150.

The use of the word "residue," in a will bequeathing all testator's personal estate and devising one-third part of all the income, rents, and use of his real estate to his wife, and giving all the residue of his estate to his son, operates to give to his son all his property in which he has given his wife no right. In re France's Estate, 75 Pa. 220-224.

The residue of a man's estate, in testamentary language, means whatever is not specifically devised or bequeathed; and in whatever part of the will it may happen to be found it ought to have that meaning, unless the whole will, taken together, shows clearly that it was not so intended. A will bequeathing the residue of personalty passes everything not otherwise effectually disposed of. In re Willard's Estate, 68 Pa. (18 P. F. Smith) 327, 332 (quoted in Re Pittman's Estate, 38 Atl. 133, 135, 182 Pa. 355).

The word "residue," in a clause of a will giving each of testator's sons one-half his share, payable $5,000 at 21, and thereafter the income absolutely, etc., leaving the residue of each share in strict trust, was held to mean the other half; that is, the portion left after the distribution of the half which the first clause provided for. In re Baeder's Estate, 44 Wkly. Notes Cas. 73, 75, 190 Pa. 606, 42 Atl. 1102.

Same—As including all descriptions of property.

The term "rest and residue," in a will, naturally includes all property of every description. Bragaw v. Bolles, 25 Atl. 947, 950, 51 N. J. Eq. (6 Dick.) 84.

In construing wills the intention of the testator is the object to be sought; and when a doubt arises as to the extent of the application of the word "residue," as to whether it was intended to apply to the whole residue of the estate or be confined to a particular part, courts generally incline to extend it to the whole, where there is no other residuary claim. Carr v. Dings, 58 Mo. 400, 407.

"Residue" signifies what is left of a number and quantity after something has been abstracted. The residue of a farm is what remains of it after something has been taken away. The residue of a blended mass of real and personal estate is what remains after the mass has been diminished by something which has been subtracted. Hence, when pecuniary legacies are first given, and afterwards the residue of the testator's estate, real as well as personal, his intention to have the legacies payable out of the realty if the personal estate be insufficient appears, in the absence of any inconsistent words or provisions in the will, by necessary implication from the words "residue or remainder," when applied to the two kinds of property combined. Johnson v. Poulson, 32 N. J. Eq. (5 Stew.) 390, 393.

Same—As not changed by enumeration of items.

The character of a gift contained in a will of the "residue" of the testator's personal estate, after a previous direction to pay debts and funeral expenses, is not changed by an enumeration of the items composing the residue. In re Storey's Estate (Pa.) 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. 99.

Same—Legacy distinguished.

See "Legacy."

Same—As modified by location in will.

The residue of a man's estate, in testamentary language, means whatever is not specifically devised or bequeathed; and in whatever part of a will it is found it ought to have that meaning, unless the whole will, taken together, clearly shows it was not so intended. If a testator should begin his will with a bequest or devise of all his residuary estate, and then proceed to make various bequests and devise, it would not vary the proper construction of either; and hence where a testator, having bequeathed his residuary estate to his daughters, then provided: "I give to my sons, I. and J., $1,000 each, the interest to be paid them annually"—the intent was to bequeath them each a legacy of $1,000, and not merely the interest of $1,000. Appeal of Sproul, 105 Pa. 438, 441.

Residue "means that which remains of something after taking away a part of it. The residue of an estate is what has not been particularly devised by will." As used in wills, its ordinary meaning is that portion of the estate which is left after the payment of charges, debts, and particular legacies; and it is presumed to be used in this sense, unless a contrary intention clearly appears. The mere circumstance that, in the arrangement of a will, the word "residue" is used, and the greater part of the particular legacies and bequests are subsequently given, will not of itself be sufficient evidence of such an intention, especially if such an arrangement can be otherwise accounted for. Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 250, 264 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

Same—As residue of realty.

A will directed the sale of testator's real estate, and gave all his personal property and the sum of $2,000, to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of his real estate, to his wife, and certain other legacies, and then directed that the residue of his estate should pass to a certain beneficiary. Held, that the words "residue of my estate" ought to be construed to mean the residue of the proceeds of the sale of the real estate. Applegate v. Birdsall, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 244, 247.

"Residue," as used in a will by which testator authorized and empowered his executors to sell and convey all and any part of his real estate, to pay all his debts out of the proceeds, and gave the net residue, after payment of all such debts, to the executors and to the survivor of them as joint tenants, means the residue of the property he authorized them to sell, whether sold or unsold, and is an absolute gift to the executors of the net proceeds of the sale of testator's real estate after paying debts and mortgages. Forster v. Winfield, 23 N. Y. Supp 169, 170, 3 Misc. Rep. 435.

Same—As conferring power of sale.

Testator's will devised property to his daughter, on condition that, in case of her death before majority, the whole of the residue in the hands of the executors should go to a third person. Held, that the use of the word "residue" did not of itself confer on the executors power to dispose of the principal of the estate. In re Miller's Will, 42 N. Y. Supp. 148, 151, 11 App. Div. 337.

Same—As including subject of void devises.

The word "residue," as used in a will containing several void specific devises and then devising all the residue of testator's estate, is to be construed to include all the estate. "Residue," in such connection, means all "of which no effectual disposition is made by will." Gallavan v. Gallavan, 64 N. Y. Supp. 329, 331, 31 Misc. Rep. 282 (quoting from Beekman v. People [N. Y.] 27 Barb. 260, and Morton v. Woodbury, 153 N. Y. 243, 47 N. E. 283).

A gift of the residue of the testator's estate is not defeated by the failure of the primary gift, but the residue will include all the estate remaining after payment of debts and administration expenses. In re Miller's Will, 55 N. E. 885, 886, 161 N. Y. 71.

RESIDUUM.

See "General Residuum."

A residuum is what is left after a process of separation. There are as many "residuums" of a substance as there are distinct products which may be taken away from it. Pursuant to this definition, it is held that showing that both residuums come from the same source, and that all in the residuum of the earlier of two patents is also in and is obtained by separation from that of the patent of the later date, does not make it an infringement on the former. It does not show that they are the same; otherwise, a prior patent for the same use of the common source would cover both. The proper effect is to limit the application of the term "residuum." Parsons v. Colgate (U. S.) 15 Fed. 600, 603.

Of estate.

"The residuum of an estate is not a part of it to be administered; but what remains after administration, properly so called, is included." Robinson v. Millard, 133 Mass. 236, 239.

No particular form of word is required to pass a "residuum." Thus the words "balance of estate," "balance of my capital," "what is left of my books and furniture and all other things," or "the balance of my estate," are apt words for the purpose. Delehanty v. St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, 8 N. Y. Supp. 797, 798, 56 Hun. 55.

RESIDUUM OF THE RESIDUUM.

An administratrix, after several bequests, directed that the "rest and residue" of her estate be converted into cash, and certain other legacies and annuities be paid out of it, and that the principal of the annuities should "fall into and be disposed of as part of the residuary estate." By another clause she directed that, after providing for such legacies and annuities, there should be paid "out of the residue of the proceeds of my residuary estate the following legacies," enumerating them, and that "all the rest and residue of my residuary estate, any principal otherwise disposed of," should go to certain persons. Held, that there was created what has been termed a "residuum of the residuum." United States Trust Co. v. Black, 30 N. Y. Supp. 453, 454, 9 Misc. Rep. 653.

RESIGN.

A conveyance reciting that the maker "resigned up," forever, all the right and title that he had in certain lands, indicates clearly the maker's intention of surrendering up possession. In re Narragansett Indians, 40 Atl. 347, 355, 20 R. L. 715.

RESIGNATION.

A resignation of an office, to be complete, implies the consent of the incumbent. Where the resignation tendered by a city councilman was to the mayor and council, and on its face stated that acceptance by the body thus composed was requested, which acceptance was refused, the councilman has the right to regard the attempt at resignation as ineffectual and ended. Fryer v. Norton, 50 Atl. 661, 662, 67 N. J. Law, 23.

A resignation, in terms immediate and unconditional, by an army officer, means an entire severance of the officer's connection with the army. Turnley v. United States (U. S.) 24 Ct. Cl. 317, 327.

A resignation, made and accepted, is a complete transaction; for then the minds of the parties have met, and the legal consequence of a mutual assent is shown. Hence, if a mayor of a city send in his resignation, and the aldermen in due exercise of their authority accept the same, the official life of the mayor ceases. But under Act Cong. Aug. 15, 1861, providing that any commissioned officer of the army, navy, or marine corps, who, having tendered his resignation, shall, prior to due notice of the acceptance of the same by the proper authority, and without leave, quit his post or proper duties with intent to remain permanently absent therefrom, shall be registered as a deserter, the resignation of an army officer is not complete until he receives notice of the acceptance of the same. Mimmack v. United States (U. S.) 10 Ct. Cl. 584, 596.

Acquiescence by an officer on the retired list for a long time in the action of the Secretary of War dismissing him is an abandonment of the office, equivalent to a resignation. Fletcher v. United States (U. S.) 26 Ct. Cl. 541, 563.

Where an officer has been appointed during a recess of the Senate, and after taking the oath of office and notifying the Department of War of his acceptance is ordered to return the order of appointment, and is told that it was transmitted to him prematurely, his obeying the order is not a resignation of the office. O'Shea v. United States (U. S.) 28 Ct. Cl. 392, 402.

"Resignation" implies that the person resigning has been elected into the office he resigns. One cannot resign that which he is not entitled to, and which he has no right to occupy. A person disqualified as elector of the President and Vice President of the United States, by reason of holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, cannot remove the disqualification by resigning the office, unless his resignation precedes his appointment or his election to the position of elector. In re Corliss, 11 R. L. 638, 643, 23 Am. Rep. 538.

RESIST.

To "resist" is to oppose by a direct, active, and quasi forcible means. Crabb tells us that resistance is always direct, and, applied to persons, always implies more or less force. Bouvier defines it to be the opposition of force to force. The word is Latin, and its use seems to be singularly true to its etymology, and to retain the exact classical meaning. The word means to stand against, or to withstand, as used in Rev. St. c. 167, § 18, providing for punishing every person who shall knowingly resist any sheriff, etc., while engaged in the lawful execution of process. This is the popular, the scholarly, and the legal sense of it. State v. Welch, 37 Wis. 196, 201.

RESISTANCE.

"Resistance," as used in Rev. St. § 725 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 583], relating to the power of the court to punish for contempt any one who willfully exercises any resistance to the execution of the lawful process or commands of the court, is understood as implying a willful purpose to interfere, so as to prevent the execution or enforcement of such process. United States v. Jose (U. S.) 63 Fed. 951, 954.

"Resist," as used in Rev. St. § 5359 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3639], making it criminal for any of the crew on any American vessel to solicit, incite, or stir up any other of the crew to disobey or resist the lawful orders of the master or other officer, is not synonymous with "disobedience"; for, "while resistance embraces the former, it implies much more, and requires an active element of opposition to authority in any connection with the refusal or neglect to obey." United States v. Huff (U. S.) 13 Fed. 630, 639.

RESISTING AN OFFICER.

To constitute the offense of "resisting an officer," under Act March 8, 1831, § 9, it is not necessary that the officer should be assaulted, beaten, or bruised. Woodworth v. State, 26 Ohio St. 196, 200.

The term "resisting an officer in the execution of legal process," in Code 1876, § 4137, making such act criminal, does not include resisting or striking a constable when commanding the peace, if he has no writ or process in his hands. Jones v. State, 60 Ala. 99.

"Resist," as used in Code, § 4476, providing for the punishment of any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct, resist, or oppose any officer or other person duly authorized in serving or executing any lawful process, imports force. The words "obstruct," "resist," or "oppose" mean the same thing, and the word "oppose" would cover the meaning of the word "resist" or "obstruct." It does not mean to oppose or impede the process with which the officer is armed, or to defeat its execution, but that the officer himself shall be obstructed. Davis v. State, 76 Ga. 721, 722.

RESOLUTION.

A resolution is not a law, but merely the form in which the legislative body expresses an opinion. Village of Altamont v. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co., 56 N. E. 340, 341, 184 Ill. 47 (citing Chicago & N. P. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 174 Ill. 439, 51 N. E. 596); Reynolds v. Blue, 47 Ala. 711, 713.

A resolution of a city council is nothing more than the formal expression of the will of the city council. El Paso Gas, Electric Light & Power Co. v. City of El Paso, 54 S. W. 798, 799, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 309.

"Resolutions" adopted by municipal corporations are special and temporary, applicable only to a single matter of passing moment. A city council cannot fix the amount, terms, and manner of issuing licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors by a resolution. People v. Mount, 58 N. E. 360, 364, 186 Ill. 560.

The characteristic feature of a resolution of a legislative body is its enacting clause, "Be it resolved." Were any other term used, it would cease to be a resolution. State v. Delesdenier, 7 Tex. 76, 95.

According to ordinary parliamentary practice a resolution is a very different thing from a law or an ordinance. A resolution is merely a suggestion or direction in writing, concurred in by the two houses of the Assembly, if there be two houses, or passed by one house, if there be but one, and not submitted to the executive for his approval. A resolution is ordinarily passed without the forms and details which are generally required by Constitutions and municipal charters as prerequisites to the enactment of valid laws or ordinances. It need be read but once, and may be passed by a viva voce vote, without calling the ayes and noes, whereupon, when engrossed, it becomes operative. It is a form of action different from an ordinance, and less formal and solemn. City of Cape Girardeau v. Fougén, 80 Mo. App. 551, 556.

As contract.

See "Contract."

By-law distinguished.

See "By-Law."

As limited by context.

Gen. Laws, p. 896, declares that on the passage or adoption of every by-law or ordinance, and every resolution or order to enter into contract by any board of trustees of any municipal corporation the ayes and nays shall be called and recorded, and that a majority of the members elected shall be required. Held, that the words "resolution or order" were used in a restricted sense, as only applicable to resolutions or orders adopted for the purpose of entering into contracts. Tracey v. People, 6 Colo. 151, 153.

Ordinance distinguished.

The distinction between a resolution and an ordinance is stated as follows: "An ordinance prescribes a permanent rule of conduct or government. A resolution is of a temporary character." An ordinance is the proper form for state legislation, and requires concurrence of the executive head of the municipality. An order or resolution is the proper form for such acts of a council as are temporary or ministerial in character, and do not require executive approval. A resolution by the common council of a city authorized to transact business by resolution, directing its mayor to offer a reward for any persons setting incendiary fires, is binding on the city only during a reasonable time, because it is a resolution, and not an ordinance. Seventeen years after the date of resolution, and 10 years after the last proclamation thereunder, is not such reasonable time. Shaub v. Lancaster City, 28 Atl. 1067, 1068, 156 Pa. 362, 21 L. R. A. 691.

A municipal corporation may declare its will as to matters within the scope of its corporate powers by a resolution or an ordinance, unless its charter requires it to act by ordinance. If the action of a municipality amounts to prescribing a permanent rule or condition thereafter to be observed by the inhabitants of the municipality or by its officers in the transaction of the corporation business, such rule shall be expressed in the form of an ordinance; but it is proper to act by resolution, if the action taken is merely declaratory of the will of the corporation in a given matter, and is in the nature of a ministerial act. Municipalities may therefore submit to the voters the question of borrowing money and issuing bonds therefor by means of a resolution, rather than by an ordinance, where there is nothing in the statute expressly requiring an ordinance in such a case. City of Alma v. Guaranty Sav. Bank, 60 Fed. 203, 206, 8 C. C. A. 564, 19 U. S. App. 622.

A resolution or order is not a law, but merely a form in which the legislative body expresses an opinion. An ordinance prescribes a permanent rule of conduct or government, while a resolution is of a special and temporary character. Acts of legislation by a municipal corporation, which are to have and continue in force and effect, must be embodied in ordinances, while mere ministerial acts may be in the form of resolutions. McDowell v. People, 68 N. E. 379, 381, 204 Ill. 499; City of Paxton v. Bogardus, 66 N. E. 853, 858, 201 Ill. 628 (citing Chicago & N. P. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 174 Ill. 439, 51 N. E. 596).

When the law requires a proceeding to be instituted by an ordinance, it cannot be effected by resolution merely. The latter, wanting the solemnities of the former, is not regarded as a legal equivalent. City of Patterson v. Barnett, 46 N. J. Law (17 Vroom) 62, 68.

"A distinction is sometimes drawn between an ordinance and a resolution, by which the one prescribes a permanent rule of conduct or government, while the other is of a temporary character and prescribes no permanent rule of government"; but it is apparent that such distinction between the words does not exist in Rev. St. § 1694, providing that by-laws, resolutions, and ordinances of a general or permanent nature shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, except, etc., as the resolution there referred to is made of a general or permanent nature by the express terms of the statute. Campbell v. City of Cincinnati, 31 N. E. 606, 607, 49 Ohio St. 463.

"Resolution," in reference to the acts of a city council, is only a less solemn or less usual form of an ordinance, and is included within the term "ordinance." Fuller v. City of Scranton (Pa.) 4 Atl. 467, 469.

A resolution is not a statute. A legislative body may by a resolution express an opinion, may govern its own procedure within the limitations imposed on it by its constitution or authority, and, in case it have ministerial functions, may direct their performance, but it cannot adopt that mode of procedure in making laws, where the power which created it has commanded that it shall legislate in a different form; and hence where a city charter gives the city council power to create by ordinance any office or employ any agent, etc., and provides that "the style of the ordinance shall be" a prescribed form, such city council cannot by resolution abolish an office created by ordinance. City of San Antonio v. Mickeljohn, 33 S. W. 735, 736 89 Tex. 79.

Verbal motion included.

A verbal motion, made and carried in a city council, to accept a proposed contract, was not a "resolution," in the proper sense of the term. City of Galveston v. Morton, 58 Tex. 409, 414.

RESOLUTORY CONDITION.

A resolutive condition is one in which the obligation depends on an uncertain event, but which is to take effect immediately, though liable to be defeated when the event happens. Moss v. Smoker, 2 La. Ann. 989, 991.

RESOLVE.

"Resolved," as used at the head of a bill by the Legislature, is as potent to declare the legislative will as the word "enacted," and a resolution may or may not take the force of law, depending on the occasion and object of its use, and resolutions may be resorted to as vehicles to convey the opinions and wishes of the Legislature, without prescribing any rule of conduct to be observed; but whenever a general resolution does undertake to lay down a rule of conduct, it becomes a law, and will take effect as such, notwithstanding the word "resolved" was used in its title, instead of the word "enacted." Swann v. Buck, 40 Miss. 268, 293.

The fifth definition of the word "resolve," given by Webster, is "to express an opinion or determination by resolution or vote; as 'it was resolved by the Legislature.'" It is of similar force to the word "enact," which is defined by Bouvier as meaning "to establish by law; to perform or effect; to decree." In re Senate File No. 31, 41 N. W. 981, 984, 25 Neb. 864.

RESORT.

See "Common Resort"; "Public Resort."

A "resort," according to Webster's Dictionary, is a place of frequent assembly, a haunt. In re Sic, 14 Pac. 405, 410, 73 Cal. 142.

"Resort" is the "act of visiting; assembly; meeting; concourse; frequent assembly." Bandalow v. People, 90 Ill. 218, 220 (citing Webst. Dict.).

A house or apartment kept as a place of resort is a place for the entertainment of others than the inhabitants or occupants of the premises. State v. On Gee How, 15 Nev. 184, 187.

As temporary residence.

A place wherein people live during the whole year, and not merely during the summer season, is not a "seaside resort," within the meaning of Act May 3, 1880, providing that any railroad company whose road is constructed at any seaside resort, not exceeding four miles in length, etc., shall be exempted from the provisions of Act Feb. 12, 1874, etc. In re Delaware Bay & C. M. R. Co. (N. J.) 11 Atl. 261, 263.

RESORT TO.

An allegation that a house had been "resorted to for immoral purposes" meant something of a common occurrence. People v. Pinkerton, 44 N. W. 180, 181, 79 Mich. 110.

"Resort," as used in Gen. St. 1889, par. 2533, providing that all places where persons are permitted to resort for the purpose of drinking intoxicating liquors, etc., means something of a common occurrence; the habitual frequenting of a place by more than one person. State v. Owens, 58 Pac. 240, 241, 9 Kan. App. 595.

"Resorted," as used in an instruction in a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, declaring that, in order to find defendant guilty, it must have been shown that the house was resorted to for the purpose charged, signifies visited frequently. O'Brien v. State, 28 Mich. 213, 214.

St. 1879, p. 121, § 6, declaring that it shall not be lawful for any person to "resort to any house," room, or other place kept for any of the purposes forbidden by this act, for the purpose of indulging in the use of opium by smoking or otherwise, means to go once or more to a place kept for opium smoking. State v. Ah Sam, 15 Nev. 27, 32, 27 Am. Rep. 454.

A resort to an outhouse for the purpose of playing cards on more than one occasion may constitute it an outhouse where people resort, within the meaning of the statute prohibiting gaming in such a place. Downey v. State, 8 South. 869, 870, 90 Ala. 644.

"Resort," as used in a statute imposing a punishment on playing cards for money in an outhouse where people resort, means one to which the people have resorted on more than one occasion, or that more persons than those actually engaged in playing are assembled on the particular occasion at which the offense is charged to have been committed. State v. Norton, 19 Tex. 102, 105; Wheelock v. State, 15 Tex. 260, 262.

Single visit.

"Resorted to," as used in a Michigan statute punishing any person keeping a house of ill fame resorted to for the purpose of prostitution, means something of a common occurrence, and a single visit is insufficient proof thereof. People v. Pinkerton, 44 N. W. 180, 181, 79 Mich. 110.

As used.

The term "resorted to," as used in Gen. St. c. 87, § 6, making the keeping or maintaining of a building resorted to for illegal gaming an offense, etc., does not mean "used." Commonwealth v. Stahl, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 304, 305.

"Resorted to," as used in an indictment charging a person with keeping and maintaining a building occupied by himself as a saloon and resorted to for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, is not equivalent to

"used for" in Rev. St. c. 17, § 1, declaring all places used for the illegal sale or keeping of intoxicating liquors to be common nuisances. Neither word has any technical meaning attached to it. Both must therefore be construed in their ordinary and usual signification. The building may be used by the occupant or keeper. It is resorted to by other persons. If used for sale, it must be understood that sales are made by the keeper or under his authority. If resorted to for that purpose, sales may or may not be made, and, if made, are supposed to be made by the persons so resorting. State v. Dodge, 6 Atl. 875, 78 Me. 439.

RESORT TO CHANCE.

A verdict obtained according to an agreement by the jury that each member thereof shall mark the sum which he thinks the plaintiff is entitled to recover on a slip of paper, and then ascertain by addition the amount of the sums so marked, and to then divide said amount by 12, the number of jurors, and that the quotient resulting from such division shall be the amount of the verdict, is obtained by "resort to a determination by chance," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1887, § 4439, subd. 2, making a finding on any question submitted to the jury by resort to a determination by chance misconduct of such jury. Flood v. McClure, 32 Pac. 254, 255, 3 Idaho (Hasb.) 587.

A verdict obtained by averaging the amount marked down by all the jurors was not a verdict obtained "by resort to the determination of chance," prohibited by Code Civ. Proc. § 657; there having been no agreement among the jurors that the result obtained should be binding. Hunt v. Elliott, 20 Pac. 132, 77 Cal. 588.

RESOURCES.

See "Available Assets and Resources."

"Resources" is defined by Webster as "money or other property that can be converted into supplies; means of raising money or supplies; capabilities of producing wealth or to supply necessary wants; available means or capability of any kind." Ming v. Woolfolk, 3 Mont. 380, 386.

As money in hand.

"Resources" does not necessarily mean money in hand. "A debtor may have ample resources to pay all his debts to become due, and yet have no money in his pocket or in bank." Sacry v. Lobree, 23 Pac. 1088, 1090, 84 Cal. 41.

As products of state.

"Resources," as used in Acts 1895, c. 25, authorizing the county courts to appropriate money to provide for an exhibit of their resources at the Tennessee Centennial Exhibition, included products of farm, forest, manufacture, art, education, etc. Shelby County v. Tennessee Centennial Exposition Co., 36 S. W. 694, 607, 96 Tenn. (12 Pickle) 653, 33 L. R. A. 717.

RESPECT.

See "In Respect To."

"Respect" is a voluntary tribute of the people to worth, virtue, and intelligence. Carter v. Commonwealth, 32 S. E. 780, 784, 96 Va. 791, 45 L. R. A. 310 (citing State v. Frew, 24 W. Va. 416, 49 Am. Rep. 257).

RESPECTABLE.

"In Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 606, it is held error for the court to deny a change of venue on the grounds that it did not appear that affiants were respectable people, as required by law; it being said that the word 'respectable,' as used in the statute, was intended to be synonymous with the word 'competent.'" Cox v. United States, 50 Pac. 175, 177, 5 Okl. 701.

"Respectable witnesses," as used in Act Feb. 9, 1843, requiring two respectable witnesses to a petition for a change of venue, was equivalent to the phrase, "credible, disinterested witnesses," as used in the act of 1835, which act it superseded; and both phrases are synonymous with the words "competent witnesses." Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 606, 610.

It is slanderous per se to state to a person that his house is not respectable. Loranger v. Loranger, 74 N. W. 228, 115 Mich. 681.

RESPECTIVE.

"Respective," as used in a will giving property "to my two grandchildren, Richard and Elizabeth, equally to be divided, and to the heirs of their respective bodies, and in default of such issue, I give the same to Anna," the word "respective" was that which "such" might refer to. The effect was not to create cross-remainders, but would cause the will to have the same operation as if the devises had been by separate clauses, giving one half to the grandson and the other to the granddaughter, and, for default of issue, respectively, giving the same to Anna. Comber v. Hill, 2 Strange, 969, 970.

As used in a will, which provided that under a limitation (after an estate for life to A. and B.) of premises to all and every the younger children of B. to be equally divided among them, and to the heirs of their respective body and bodies, as tenants in common, and, if only one child, then to such only child and to the heirs of its body, and, for want of such issue, then the said premises should go to C., the word "respective" did not disjoin the title and prevent the raising of cross-remainders between such children, but the cross-remainders were to be implied from the apparent intention of the testator from the whole of the will, notwithstanding the use of the word "respective." Watson v. Foxon, 2 East. 36, 41.

RESPECTIVE CLAIMS.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors "in proportion to their respective claims" means the claims which they respectively held at the time the assignment was made. Allen v. Danielson, 8 Atl. 705, 707, 15 R. I. 480.

RESPECTIVE HEIRS.

"Respective heirs and assigns," as used in a will devising to the children of testator's son and to their respective heirs and assigns to be divided between them, mean more than the quantity of estate the children of such son were to take. They repel the idea of a survivorship, and show that the testator intended by this devise a benefit, not only to his son's children, but to the families of such of them as might die before the contingency happened when they were to take. Manners v. Manners, 20 N. J. Law (4 Har.) 142, 145.

RESPECTIVE SERVICES.

"Respective services," as used in Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 9, 26 Stat. 829 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 552], providing that the marshals, criers, clerks, bailiffs, and messengers of the Circuit Court of Appeals shall be allowed the same compensation for their respective services as are allowed for similar services in the existing Circuit Courts, are used to distinguish between the different classes of officers named. United States v. Morton (U. S.) 65 Fed. 204, 208, 13 C. C. A. 151.

RESPECTIVELY.

The obvious and most usual meaning of the word "respectively" is as relating to each. Theberath v. Celluloid Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 3 Fed. 143, 148.

"Respectively," as used in a will giving to testator's wife the use and improvement of the real and personal estate, to have and to hold until his children should "respectively" attain to the age of majority, must be taken as a word of division or separation. Alsop v. Russell, 38 Conn. 99, 103.

The word "respectively" means singly or severally considered; singly in the order designated; as relating to each. Hence, as used in an instruction requiring the jury to assess damages for the beneficiaries respectively, it means that such damages shall be assessed for the beneficiaries distributively; that is, the jury shall ascertain how much pecuniary injury each beneficiary singly has sustained, and then bring in a verdict in gross made up of the single sums combined. Wolf v. Lake Erie & W. Ry. Co., 45 N. E. 708, 711, 55 Ohio St. 517, 36 L. R. A. 812.

"Respectively," as used in Act 1887 providing that in certain cases a child and its issue should inherit from its parents respectively, and from their lineal and collateral kindred, conveys the idea that such child shall inherit in each case from the parent or parents of whom the act has declared him to be an heir and from the kindred of such parent or parents. Messer v. Jones, 34 Atl. 177, 179, 88 Me. 349.

As creating tenancy in common.

A devise or bequest to several persons "respectively" makes the objects tenants in common. Stetson v. Eastman, 24 Atl. 868, 870, 84 Me. 366.

In Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Younge & C. 252, Lord Abinger very correctly says that "it has been settled by a series of decisions that the words 'respectively in equal shares,' when not controlled by other words in the will, shall be taken to indicate the nature of an estate or interest bequeathed, and shall constitute a tenancy in common." Where a devise is to a son and daughter, and the remainder is to the children of the son and daughter "respectively," that word has the effect of dividing the devise between the son and daughter. This was the construction given by Lord Mansfield in Pery v. White, 2 Cowp. 777. Doe ex dem. Patrick v. Royle, 13 Q. B. 98, 112, 114.

RESPITE.

A respite is a temporary suspension of the execution of a sentence; a delay, a forbearance, or the continuation of time. Mishler v. Commonwealth, 62 Pa. (12 P. F. Smith) 55, 60, 1 Am. Rep. 377 (citing Bouvier Law Dict., Wharton's Law Lexicon).

A respite is an act by which a debtor who is unable to satisfy his debts at the moment transacts with his creditors and obtains from them time or delay for the payment of the sums which he owes to them. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 3084.

A respite is a privilege granted to a debtor, and always derogatory to the rights of creditors who are in a minority, by changing their contracts without their consent.

Effect should not be given to it, unless obtained under strict observance of law. Dauphin v. Soulie (La.) 3 Mart. (N. S.) 446, 448.

RESPONDEAT OUSTER.

The judgment of "respondeat ouster" is merely interlocutory, and never given either upon a demurrer or trial of a plea in bar. It is confined to a plea in abatement, put in before any plea in bar pleaded, and decided upon by demurrer in favor of the plaintiff. Bauer v. Roth (Pa.) 4 Rawle, 83, 91.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

The maxim "respondeat superior" means that a master is responsible for the acts of its servants if the particular act causing the injury be within the scope of and be done in the exercise of the servant's delegated authority. The test of the existence of the relation of master and servant is found in the exercise of authority in appointing the servant, in directing his acts, in receiving the benefits of his acts, and in reserving the power of dismissal. Southern Ry. Co. v. Morrison, 31 S. E. 564, 566, 105 Ga. 543.

The principle of "respondeat superior" applies only when what is complained of was done in the course of the employment. The principal is responsible, not because the servant has acted in his name or under color of his employment, but because the servant was actually engaged in and about his business and carrying out his purposes. He is then responsible, because the thing complained of, though done through the agency of another, was done by himself; and it matters not in such case whether the injury with which it is sought to charge him is the result of negligence, or of unskillful or wrongful conduct, for he must choose fit agents for the transaction of his business. But if his business is done, or is taking care of itself, and his servant, not being engaged in it, not concerned about it, but impelled by motives that are wholly personal to himself, and simply to gratify his own feeling of resentment, whether provoked or unprovoked, commits an assault upon another, when that has and can have no tendency to promote any purpose in which the principal is interested, and to promote which the servant was employed, then the wrong is the purely personal wrong of the servant, for which he alone is responsible. Haehl v. Wabash R. Co., 24 S. W. 737, 740, 119 Mo. 325.

The rule of "respondeat superior," as its terms imply, belongs to the relation of superior and subordinate, and is applicable to that relation wherever it exists, whether between principal and agent or master and servant, and to the subjects to which that relation extends, and is coextensive with it, and ceases when the relation itself ceases to exist. The test in all cases is, who conducts and supervises the particular work, the doing of which, or the careless and negligent doing of which, causes the injury or damage? State v. Gillespie, 63 Pac. 742, 743, 62 Kan. 469.

RESPONDENT.

"Respondent," as the term was used in the English court of chancery, meant the person against whom a bill was exhibited. Brower v. Nellis, 83 N. E. 672, 673, 6 Ind. App. 823.

The party appealing is known as the "appellant," and the adverse party as the "respondent." Cr. Code N. Y. 1903, § 516.

RESPONDENTIA.

The word "respondentia" properly applies to a loan of money upon merchandise retained on board a ship the repayment whereof is made to depend upon the safe arrival of the merchandise at the destined port. Maitland v. The Atlantic (U. S.) 16 Fed. Cas. 522, 523.

"Respondentia" is a contract by which a cargo, or some part thereof, is hypothecated as security for a loan, the repayment of which is dependent on maritime risks. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 3036; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4783; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2143.

RESPONSIBLE.

A promise to be responsible for the contract of another is merely a guaranty, and not a suretyship. An agreement to be responsible to a landlord for the true and faithful performance of the lease on the part of the tenant is a contingent liability, and becomes absolute by showing due and unsuccessful diligence to obtain a satisfaction of the principal. Bickel v. Auner (Pa.) 9 Phila. 499.

RESPONSIBLE BIDDER.

See "Lowest Responsible Bidder."

Laws 1875, c. 634, declaring that all contracts for certain work should be awarded to the lowest bona fide "responsible bidder," meant that the successful bidder should be one able to respond or to answer in accordance with what is expected or demanded. People v. Dorsheimer (N. Y.) 55 How. Prac. 118, 120.

"Responsible," as used in a corporate charter providing that contracts for public improvements shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder, is not limited to financial, but means ability to perform all the conditions of the contract; and the commissioner of public works may reject a bid, notwithstanding it is the lowest made and the bidder is able to give the required bond, if, in the judgment of that official after due investigation, the materials customarily used and the workmanship exhibited by the bidder in the performance of the kind of work required are poor and unsatisfactory. People v. Kent, 43 N. E. 760, 761, 160 Ill. 655.

Act May 23, 1874, requiring all public work and materials which are capable of being contracted for to be awarded to the "lowest responsible bidder," means the bidder lowest in amount and peculiarly responsible. The word "responsible," as defined by Webster, is liable to accounting, accountable, answerable, able to discharge an obligation, or having an estate adequate to the payment of a debt. As used in the statute, it refers to the pecuniary ability of the bidder to answer to the undertaking, so that the interest of the city should suffer no damage. Lowest in price and responsible, in the sense of being accountable, or able to discharge the obligation so as to save the city from pecuniary loss, is what is intended by the act of 1874. Gutta Percha Co. v. Stokely (Pa.) 11 Phila. 219, 221.

"Responsible," as used in Act May 23, 1874 (P. L. 230), declaring that all work to be done for the city shall be performed under contract, to be given to the lowest responsible bidder, means not only pecuniary ability to make a good contract by security for its faithful performance, but means the one who, under all the circumstances, will probably best perform the work. Commonwealth v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 343, 349.

"Responsible," as used in Act May 23, 1874, directing municipal officers to award certain contracts to the lowest responsible bidder, applies not to pecuniary ability only, but also to judgment and skill. The duties imposed on the city authorities are not merely ministerial, limited to ascertaining whose bid was the lowest and the pecuniary responsibility of the bidder and his sureties, but the statute calls for the exercise of duties which are deliberative and discretionary. Interstate Vitrified Brick & Paving Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 30 Atl. 383, 164 Pa. 477; Renting v. City of Titusville, 34 Atl. 916, 918, 175 Pa. 512.

"Lowest responsible bidder," as used in Act May 23, 1874, directing municipal contracts to be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder, refers, not to pecuniary ability only, but also to judgment and skill. Doug- lass v. Commonwealth, 108 Pa. 559, 563, 42 Leg. Int. 337.

St. 1881, p. 59, § 5, providing that the board of commissioners having charge of the erection of an insane asylum may adopt or reject any or all bids for the erection of such asylum not being responsible or satisfactory, but in determining bids for the same work or material the "lowest responsible bid" shall be taken, means, not only the bid by the one whose pecuniary ability to perform the contract is best, but the one in point of skill, ability, and integrity who is most likely to do faithful, conscientious work, and fulfill the contract promptly according to its letter and spirit. Hoole v. Kinkead, 16 Nev. 217, 220.

The word "responsible," in a statute authorizing the letting of contracts to the lowest responsible bidder, means something more than pecuniary ability, and refers to ability to promptly, faithfully, and conscientiously perform the work in question. State v. Rickards, 40 Pac. 210, 213, 16 Mont. 145, 28 L. R. A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 476.

Rev. St. § 3988, provides that in the erection of schoolhouses none but the lowest responsible bid shall be accepted. Held, that the word "responsible" has a broader meaning than is involved in the pecuniary ability to make a good contract by security for its faithful performance, and where the term is applied to contracts requiring for their execution, not only pecuniary ability, but also judgment and skill, the statute imposes not merely a ministerial duty, but also duties and powers which are discretionary, and therefore, where these authorities have exercised a discretion, mandamus will not lie to compel them to modify their decision. State v. Board of Education of Columbus, 6 Ohio N. P. 336, 338.

In the requirement that public work should be let to the lowest responsible bidder, the term "lowest responsible bidder" means one who complies with all the requirements of the statute, specifications, etc., and not merely one whose bid is less than his competitors. Boseker v. Wabash County Com'rs, 88 Ind. 267.

RESPONSIBLE PERSON.

Strictly speaking, the word "responsible" means liable, answerable, rather than able to discharge an obligation; but the word is used in the latter sense in Rev. St. c. 183, § 17, requiring a writ to be indorsed by a responsible person. Farley v. Day, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 527, 531.

"Responsible," as used in Sess. Laws Okl. art. 1, c. 29, § 1, authorizing the Governor to enter into a contract with some responsible person to do all printing, etc., for the territory, means that the Governor shall contract with some person who is able to do the printing and discharge the obligations required of him. While the element of trust is to some extent included in the word "responsible," it is simply that there would be a reasonable expectation that the person will faithfully carry out his provisions; in other words, the contract should be let to some trustworthy person. Leader Printing Co. v. Lowry, 59 Pac. 242, 244, 9 Okl. 89.

"Responsible," as used in a letter or certificate given to a person who desired credit in the purchase of goods, certifying that those signing such certificate had a personal acquaintance with the person named and that they could testify to his strict adherence to truth, punctuality in contracts, and perseverance in business, and concluding with the statement, "In a word, we look upon him as an honest and 'responsible' man, and worthy of all credit," meant capability to discharge obligations. It conveyed the idea that the person referred to possessed the means of making payment. Clopton v. Cozart, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 363, 368.

Where a bequest was made upon condition that within six months after the testator's decease responsible citizens of a particular town and county should pledge a certain amount for the same object, and subscriptions aggregating more than the amount, but over 700 in number, were obtained, many from men of small means, to whom a long time of payment had been given, many signed by other parties than the subscribers, and some upon condition, the condition of the will had not been complied with. Yale College v. Bunkle (U. S.) 8 Fed. 576, 581.

RESPONSIBILITY.

See "Criminal Responsibility."

One's "responsibility" is his liability, obligation, or bounden duty. Crockett v. Village of Barre, 29 Atl. 147, 66 Vt. 269 (citing Soule, Syn. [Ed. 1880] p. 337).

"The credit and responsibility of a party may attach as well to his liability as security as to his sole undertaking. When, therefore, the general term 'credit and responsibility' is used, it may include a collateral, as well as an original and exclusive, liability." Norris v. Graham, 33 Md. 56, 58.

REST.

Testatrix bequeathed one-tenth of all she possessed to charitable objects, and the rest, or nine-tenths, to a certain person. It was held that the words "the rest" have reference to what remains of the property in part previously given away. In re Sweitzer's Estate, 21 Atl. 885, 142 Pa. 541.

REST AND RESIDUE.

The term "rest and residue," in a will, naturally includes all property of every description. Bragaw v. Bolles, 25 Atl. 947, 950, 51 N. J. Eq. 84.

Where a will stated, "All the rest and residue of my property, personal or mixed, wheresoever situated, I give, devise, bequeath," etc., it was held that only the personal and mixed property, and not the real estate, of the testatrix, passed under the will. In arriving at this result the court observes that, while the testatrix uses the words "All the rest and residue of my property," and the word "devise," yet, in view of the words "personal and mixed," immediately following "property," they will be held to qualify and define the kind of property intended to be disposed of by the will, and that no broader significance would be given to the words "personal and mixed" than their usual technical meaning conveyed. Miller v. Worrall, 48 Atl. 586, 587, 62 N. J. Eq. 776, 90 Am. St. Rep. 480.

A will recited: "After the payment of all my just debts and funeral charges, etc., I order and direct the rest and residue of all my money in bank, stocks, and bonds to be paid to E. for his own." Held, that by the words "rest and residue," etc., the testator meant all his money deposited in banks and invested in stocks and bonds, after payment of debts, funeral charges, etc. Sanborn v. Clough, 10 Atl. 678, 680, 64 N. H. 315.

REST HOME.

"Rest home," as used in a will devising property for the establishment of a rest home for worthy working girls, is a place of rest for girls who are working for small wages, where they may go and board in the country at a low price. Sherman v. Congregational Home Missionary Soc., 57 N. E. 702, 176 Mass. 349.

REST OF MY HEIRS.

"Rest of my heirs," as used by a testator in providing that a certain legatee should share in a bequest of $5,000 with "the rest of my heirs," does not exclude from participation under the will a son who had received a grant of land in consideration of the relinquishment of all rights of heirship to his share, where no mention of such exclusion was made in any part of the will. Appeal of Turner, 18 N. W. 123, 124, 52 Mich. 398.

REST, RESIDUE, AND REMAINDER.

All the rest, residue, and remainder, see "All."

A residuary clause in a will, directing the disposition of the "rest, residue, and remainder" of the testator's property, both real and personal, shows a clear intent on the part of the testator to make a full and complete disposition of his property, and the clause is sufficient to pass the property included in void devises. Gallavan v. Gallavan, 68 N. Y. Supp. 30, 33, 57 App. Div. 320.

The words "rest, residue, and remainder," in a will first giving certain legacies and then giving the rest, residue, and remainder of testator's property, was construed to mean the property remaining after the preceding legacies had been paid. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 85 N. Y. 142, 150.

"Rest, residue, and remainder," as used in a will, after other bequests and devises, means such portion of the personal and mixed estate as might remain after the debts and legacies were paid, but as to the real estate is a separate devise, altogether unconnected with the legacies. White v. Kauffman, 5 Atl. 865, 867, 66 Md. 89.

RESTAURANT.

"Restaurant" has no defined meaning, and is used indiscriminately for all places where refreshments can be had, from the mere eating house or cook shop to the more common shops or stores where the chief business is vending articles of consumption and confectionery, and the furnishing of eatables to be consumed on the premises is subordinate. Richards v. Washington Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 27 N. W. 586, 588, 60 Mich. 420.

Barroom.

A restaurant means an eating house, a place where eatables can be obtained at all reasonable hours, and not a mere drinking house. To answer its purpose it should have an eating bar or room, where persons desiring eatables can be accommodated, separate from the drinking room. In re Liquor Licenses (Pa.) 4 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 77, 79.

As an inn.

The term "restaurant" has no definite legal meaning. As currently understood it doubtless means only or chiefly an eating house. But not unfrequently a bar forms a part of it, and sometimes lodgings in addition; and it is also just as currently understood that in numerous resorts termed "restaurants" some lodgings for travelers are provided or alleged to be provided, so as to obtain a license for the sale of liquors, which is allowed under the excise law of this state to hotels, taverns, or inns only. Laws N. Y. 1857, c. 628, §§ 2, 8, 13; Behan v. People, 17 N. Y. 516; Schwab v. People (N. Y.) 4 Hun. 520. However this may be, it is sufficient to say that the term "restaurant" has no such fixed and definite meaning as necessarily to exclude its being an inn in the legal sense. It may be an inn, or it may not be, according to its real character. The name by which it goes is of little or no account. Carpenter v. Taylor (N. Y.) 1 Hilt. 193, 195. And the court cannot say judicially that the place in question, though described under a videlicet as a restaurant, may not also be an inn, as previously averred. Lewis v. Hitchcock (U. S.) 10 Fed. 4, 6.

A restaurant is a place to which a person resorts for the temporary purpose of obtaining a meal. Such a place cannot be called an inn. Cromwell v. Stephens (N. Y.) 3 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 26, 35; People v. Jones (N. Y.) 54 Barb. 311, 317; Carpenter v. Taylor (N. Y.) 1 Hilt. 193, 195; Wintermute v. Clark, 7 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Sandf.) 242, 247.

Lemonade stand.

An apartment where only refreshing, soft drinks are sold at a single stand and by the draught is not a "restaurant" or "eating house," within the meaning of Civil Rights Act (Rev. St. c. 38) §§ 421, 42j, providing that all persons coming within the jurisdiction of the state of Illinois shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, restaurants, eating houses, etc., and giving a right of action for a violation of the act, or any provisions of the act, by denying to any citizen, regardless of color or race, the full enjoyment of any of the accommodations, etc., enumerated. A colored man has not, under said act, a right of action against the keeper of such a stand for refusing to furnish him refreshments. Oecil v. Green, 60 Ill. App. 61, 63.

Music hall.

A "restaurant" is defined by Webster to be an eating house, and such it has always been considered under the law. A concert saloon is not a restaurant proper, and a girl employed as a singer and dancer at a concert saloon is not "a servant girl at a restaurant," within the meaning of Act June 13, 1883, giving preference to certain liens for wages. Cleveland v. O'Neil, 4 Pa. Com. Pl. 148, 149.

Tobacco and cigar store.

"Restaurant," as used in an ordinance requiring persons keeping a "restaurant" to procure a license, etc., means an eating house, a place where something to eat ready prepared, or which can be readily prepared may be obtained; and the word does not include a shop which is used for the manufacture and sale of tobacco, snuff, and cigars. State v. Hogan, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 268, 272.

RESTAURANT KEEPER.

Chinese restaurant keeper as laborer, see "Chinese Laborers."

A "restaurant keeper" is a caterer, who keeps a place for serving meals, and provides, prepares, and cooks raw materials to suit the taste of his patrons. A person in such business is not a merchant. In re Ab Yow (U. S.) 59 Fed. 561, 562.

RESTITUTION.

"Restitution," properly speaking, is made only to a defendant whose money or property has been taken from him by the erroneous order of a court, and is not available to third parties. First Nat. Bank v. Avery Planter Co. (Neb.) 95 N. W. 622, 624.

"Restitution" was a remedy at common law whose object was to restore to the appellant the specified thing or its equivalent, of which he had been deprived by the enforcement of the judgment against him during the pendency of the appeal. It was not created by statute, but it was exercised by the appellate tribunal as incidental to its power to correct error; and hence the court not only reversed the erroneous judgment, but restored to the aggrieved party that which he had lost in consequence thereof. It was usually a part of the judgment of reversal, which directed "that the defendant be restored to all things which he has lost on occasion of the judgment aforesaid." Haebler v. Myers, 30 N. E. 963, 132 N. Y. 363, 15 L. R. A. 588, 28 Am. St. Rep. 589.

"Restitution" is not a mere right. It is ex gratia, resting in the exercise of a sound discretion; and the court will not order it where the justice of the case does not call for it, nor where the process is set aside for a mere slip. It is settled law that one voluntarily paying money with full knowledge or means of knowledge of all the facts, without any fraud having been practiced on him, cannot recover it back by reason of the payment having been made in ignorance of law. Defendant, to avoid an execution sale, made a voluntary payment in satisfaction of plaintiff's claim. An appeal from the judgment had, however, in the meantime been prosecuted, resulting in a reversal. As the payment was voluntary, defendant was not entitled to restitution. Gould v. McFall, 118 Pa. 455, 456, 457, 12 Atl. 336, 4 Am. St. Rep. 606.

RESTORE.

"Restore" signifies to bring back; to heal. Bowman v. McLaughlin, 45 Miss. 461, 486.

The word "restore" etymologically signifies to bring back to a former and better state; to bring back or put back to a former position or condition. Cent. Dict. As used in Act April 22, 1898, requiring corporations diverting the water of navigable streams to restore such stream to a certain depth, the meaning is that the stream must be so deepened only in case the water is diverted after the passage of the act. Town of Hempstead

v. City of New York, 65 N. Y. Supp. 14, 17, 52 App. Div. 182.

A covenant by a lessee to "redeliver or restore the property in the same condition or plight, usual wear and tear excepted," does not bind the covenantor to rebuild in case of casual destruction by fire, or impose the burden of the loss upon him. Levey v. Dyess, 3 Cent. Law J. 221, 222, 51 Miss. 501, 509.

As permitting impairment.

The use of the word "restore" in a statute requiring a highway over which a railroad is constructed to be restored to its former usefulness, imports that the company must so restore it that its use by the public shall not be materially interfered with, nor the highway rendered less safe or convenient to persons and teams passing over it, except so far as diminished safety and convenience necessarily result from any crossing of the highway by the railroad. Roberts v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 35 Wis. 679, 684. See, also, State v. New Haven & N. Co., 45 Conn. 331, 344; People v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 74 N. Y. 302, 305; City of Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co., 16 S. E. 514, 515, 37 W. Va. 92, 20 L. R. A. 161.

Previous existence implied.

"Restore," as used in Rev. St. § 1836, providing that every corporation constructing, owning, or using the railroad shall restore every street, highway, etc., to its former state, the use of the word "restore" relates to something having a previous existence; and hence such railroad is not compelled to keep in repair highways laid out across it after it has been constructed. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 72 N. W. 1118, 1123, 97 Wis. 418.

Repair synonymous.

The words "restore and repair," according to the lexicographers, are synonymous. State v. Gibson County Com'rs, 80 Ind. 478, 481, 41 Am. Rep. 821.

As surrender and deliver.

The word "restored," as used in Rev. St. c. 9, §§ 78, 79, declaring that, if an attaching officer has notice of a mortgagee's debt, the property shall be restored to the mortgagee, means that it shall be surrendered and delivered to the mortgagee, from whom it was detained by the officer. Esson v. Tarbell, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 407, 415.

RESTRAIN.

To "restrain" is to prohibit, limit, confine, or abridge a thing. The restraint may be permanent or temporary. It may be intended to prohibit, limit, or abridge for all time, or for a day only. The law draws no distinction in this respect. In re Charge to Grand Jury (U. S.) 62 Fed. 828, 831.

A religious Jew, who believes it is his religious duty to abstain from work on Saturday, is not "hurt, molested, or restrained" in his religious sentiments or persuasions by a statute or municipal ordinance prohibiting the sale of goods to merchants on Sunday. Frolickstein v. City of Mobile, 40 Ala. 725, 727.

Const. art. 2, pt. 1, providing that no subject shall be "hurt, molested, or restrained in his person or estate" for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience, or for his religious profession or sentiments, means "prosecution by punishing any one for his religious opinions, however erroneous they may be. But an atheist is without any religion, true or false. Disbelief in the existence of any God is not a religious, but an antireligious, sentiment. If, however, it were otherwise, the rejection of a witness for such a disbelief or sentiment as incompetent would be no violation of this article of the Constitution. It is not within its words or meaning. It would not hurt, molest, or restrain him in his person, liberty, or life." Thurston v. Whitney, 56 Mass. (2 Cush.) 104, 110.

"Restraining," as used in a statute authorizing towns to pass by-laws restraining certain kinds of animals from going at large, meant laws for preventing or hindering animals, and not merely that the authorities might impose a penalty on the owners for allowing the animals to go at large. The provision for "restraining"—that is, for preventing or hindering—the animals from going at large, implies direct action on the animals themselves. Whitlock v. West, 26 Conn. 406, 418.

As giving power to license.

A city charter, authorizing the municipality to "suppress and restrain" the use of billiard tables, includes the right to pass an ordinance imposing reasonable penalties upon those who use them without permission. Village of Winooski v. Gokey, 49 Vt. 282, 286.

Where a penal statute of Texas prohibits disorderly houses in the state, and another statute confers on a certain city power to "suppress and restrain" such houses, and authorizes the city council to "restrain and punish" the inmates and to prevent and punish the keeping of such houses, and authorizes the adoption of summary measures for the removal or suppression, or the regulation and inspection, of all such establishments, the words "suppress, restrain, and regulate" should not be construed as giving power to license such houses. Ex parte Gar- sa, 13 S. W. 779, 781, 28 Tex. App. 881, 19 Am. St. Rep. 845.

Authority of a common council to restrain and suppress certain things implies that such things shall be permitted under such restraint and regulations as in the discretion of the common council may be proper. Smith v. City of Madison, 7 Ind. 86, 90; City of Burlington v. Lawrence, 42 Iowa, 681, 682.

Where a city council is given authority to regulate and restrain beer rooms and drinking shops, the words "regulate and restrain" should be construed to confer the power to require, as a proper measure of regulation and restraint, a bond to be given an applicant for a license. In re Schneider, 8 Pac. 289, 290, 294, 11 Or. 288.

A corporate charter, authorizing the city to "restrain, prohibit, and suppress" tippling shops, includes the power to license such shops, and to prescribe penalties for keeping one without a license. City of Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kan. 622, 630.

"Restrain," as used in a village charter, authorizing the same to pass by-laws to "suppress and restrain" all description of gaming, was not synonymous with "suppress," but contemplated the continued existence of the business, placing it within bounds, or in effect licensing it. In re Snell, 58 Vt. 207, 209, 1 Atl. 566, 568.

Priv. Laws 1883, c. 111, § 1936, giving a city authority to regulate and restrain tippling houses, authorized the city to impose a license tax. State v. Stevens, 114 N. C. 873, 19 S. E. 861.

The power to restrain or tax the sale of liquor, when given to a municipal corporation, includes the power to license the sale thereof. Town of Mt. Carmel v. Wabash County, 50 Ill. 69, 73.

As power to prescribe limits.

"Restrain," as used in an act authorizing cities to restrain and prohibit tippling houses, means to keep them within certain limits as to the number and order, as the city should deem best; the word "prohibit" meaning that the council might prohibit the existence of such houses altogether, if deemed best to do so. State v. Fay, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 474, 476 (citing City of St. Louis v. Smith, 2 Mo. 113).

As giving power to prohibit.

"Restrain," as used in Rev. St. § 696, providing that municipal councils shall have the power to regulate and restrain all places where spirituous liquor is sold at retail, does not include the power to entirely prohibit. Marnaugh v. City of Orlando, 27 South. 34, 35, 41 Fla. 433.

7 Wds. & P.—22

"Restrain," as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 3333, empowering towns to license, regulate, or restrain the sale of intoxicating liquors, cannot be construed to confer upon towns the power to prohibit the traffic. Steffy v. Town of Monroe City, 35 N. E. 121, 122, 135 Ind. 466, 41 Am. St. Rep. 436.

The primary meaning of the word "restrain" is to keep from action; to repress; to prevent; to debar. The word in the statute authorizing a town to license, tax, regulate, and restrain the retailing of spirituous liquors is the legal equivalent of the verb "prohibit." Smith v. Town of Warrior, 12 South. 418, 419, 99 Ala. 481.

A municipal power to license, regulate, and restrain the sale of intoxicating liquors authorizes a prohibition of the bartering or giving away of liquors without license. Vinson v. Town of Monticello, 19 N. E. 734, 735, 118 Ind. 103.

As giving power to punish.

In City of Chariton v. Barber, 6 N. W. 528, 54 Iowa, 360, 37 Am. Rep. 209, it was thought that the power to suppress or restrain did not authorize the city to punish a keeper of a disorderly house. City of Centerville v. Miller, 10 N. W. 293, 294, 57 Iowa, 56.

Ogden City Charter, § 85, empowering the council by ordinance "to restrain and punish * * * prostitutes," does not authorize an ordinance making it an offense to resort to a house of ill fame for lewdness. Ogden City v. McLaughlin, 16 Pac. 721, 722, 5 Utah, 387.

As regulate.

The word "restrain" is not more comprehensive than "regulate." The former term is usually employed to signify to hold back, to curb, to hold in, to check, to prevent, or to hinder, and to that extent it may mean to govern. But the power to regulate is surely as comprehensive as to restrain, and would seem to embrace the power to employ more and different means. It no doubt embraces the power to restrain by the same methods of restraint; and, if a license may be required as a means of restraint, we have no hesitation in saying that it may be as a means of regulation. Chicago Packing & Provision Co. v. City of Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 226, 30 Am. Rep. 545.

RESTRAINING ORDER.

See "Temporary Restraining Order."

A restraining order is distinguishable from an injunction, in that a restraining order is intended only as a restraint upon the defendant until the propriety of granting an injunction, temporary or perpetual, can be determined; and it does no more than restrain the proceedings until such determination. Such an order is limited in its operation, and extends only to such reasonable time as may be necessary to have a hearing on an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue. Wetzstein v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 63 Pac. 1043, 1044, 25 Mont. 135.

Code Proc. § 1409, provides that in all cases where a final judgment or decree shall be rendered by any superior court in a cause wherein a temporary injunction or restraining order has been granted, and the party at whose instance it was granted shall appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court, such restraining order or injunction shall remain in force until the appeal was finally returned, it was held that the words "injunction and restraining order," as thus used, are synonymous, and apply only to such as are granted after notice to the adverse party, and do not apply to an emergency restraining order. The court said that the Legislature, in speaking of injunctions and restraining orders, meant to use terms which would make it proper for the court to put its order in the shape of a formal injunction, as known to the common law, if it saw fit to do so, and that, if it did not see fit to go into all the formalities required by the use of such a writ, it could accomplish the same purpose by issuing a simple order restraining the acts complained of. State v. Lichtenberg, 30 Pac. 716, 717, 4 Wash. 407.

A "restraining order" is an interlocutory order made by a court of equity on an application for an injunction, and as part of the motion for a preliminary injunction, by which the party is restrained pending the hearing of the motion. Bouv. Law Dict. It is true a restraining order is an injunction; but the term is commonly used to designate a temporary injunction, as distinguished from the injunction which is to remain in force during the pendency of the suit. Riggins v. Thompson, 71 S. W. 14, 15, 96 Tex. 154.

RESTRAINT.

"Restraint," as the term is used in speaking of "restraint sufficient to invalidate a will," means "that kind of influence which is exercised by force or threats, or coercion, physical or mental, which the testator is not able to resist, or from fear, by which the testator is prevented from exercising and expressing his own judgment and desire." In re Black's Estate (Cal.) Myr. Prob. 24, 31.

By "restraint" is meant the kind of control which one person exercises over another, not to confine him within certain limits, but to subject him to the general authority and power of the person claiming such right. Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1895, art. 172.

As constraint.

Code, § 2076, enacts that the certificate of privy examination of a married woman to a deed of her land shall recite the execution of the deed by her without constraint from her husband. Held, that where a certificate of the examination was in the words of a statute, save that the word "restraint" was used, instead of "constraint," the deviation was immaterial, inasmuch as both words mean "to restrain." Edmondson v. Harris, 2 Tenn. Ch. 427, 433.

As detention.

Where a marine policy provides that the insurer shall be liable for all loss or damage arising from the restraint and detention of princes, the words "restraint and detention" are synonymous; each meaning the effect of a superior force bearing directly on the vessel. Richardson v. Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 102, 109, 4 Am. Dec. 92.

RESTRAINT OF COMMERCE.

The term "restraint of commerce," as used in Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200], making all contracts in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states unlawful and illegal, is used in its ordinary business understanding and acceptance. Among the recognized meanings of the word are prohibition of action, holding or pressing back from action, hindrance, restriction, confinement. It is a restriction or hindrance created by the application of external force. A combination by railroad employes to prevent all the railroads of a large city engaged in carrying the United States mails and in interstate commerce from carrying freight and passengers, hauling cars, and securing the services of persons other than strikers, and to induce persons to leave the service of the road, is a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce. United States v. Elliott (U. S.) 64 Fed. 27, 30.

RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE.

A devise of land to the testator's wife "so long as she shall remain my widow" contains no condition in restraint of marriage, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 2567, providing: "A devise or bequest to a wife, with a condition in restraint of marriage, shall stand, but the condition shall be void"—but a mere limitation, and if she marry, or, not marrying, die, the land goes to the heirs, in the absence of devise over. Hibbitts v. Jack, 97 Ind. 570, 573, 49 Am. Rep. 478.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE

See "Combination in Restraint of Trade"; "General Restraint"; "Partial Restraint."

Agreements for as conspiracy, see "Conspiracy."

"Contracts in restraint of trade" have been known and spoken of for hundreds of years, both in England and in this country; and the term includes all kinds of those contracts which in fact restrain or may restrain trade. Some of such contracts have been held void and unenforceable in the courts by reason of their restraint being unreasonable, while others have been held valid because they were not of that nature. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 554, 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007.

Whatever combination has the direct and necessary effect of restricting competition is, within the meaning of the Sherman act as now interpreted, a "restraint of trade." The general meaning of the term is no longer open to inquiry. It has been passed upon carefully by the Supreme Court in United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007, and in United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U. S. 508, 558, 19 Sup. Ct. 25, 43 L. Ed. 259. United States v. Swift & Co. (U. S.) 122 Fed. 529, 534.

A contract in "restraint of trade" may be against the use of premises for one or another particular purpose, as that no building thereon shall be used for the sale of alcoholic liquors, or as an inn, etc. Where the restraint is of such a nature as concerns the mode of occupying or dealing with the property purchased in the way of business operations, or even the omission of all business, or certain kinds of business, or of the erection or nonerection of buildings upon property, an agreement which is fair and valid in other respects is not invalid because restraining the use to which the premises may be put. Hodge v. Sloan, 17 N. E. 335, 338, 107 N. Y. 244, 1 Am. St. Rep. 816.

A covenant by which the grantor agrees not to engage in a specified business for a certain length of time is held not void as a contract in restraint of trade. While it is true that, to the extent that the contract prevents the grantor from carrying on a particular trade, it deprives the community from any benefit it might derive from his entering into competition, yet the business is open to all others, and there is little danger that the public will suffer harm from lack of persons to engage in a profitable industry. Such contracts do not create monopolies. They confer no special or exclusive privilege. Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 13 N. E. 419, 422, 106 N. Y. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 464.

Laws which merely impose a tax on sales of merchandise are not in restraint of trade. Harrison v. City of Vicksburg, 11 Miss. (3 Smedes & M.) 581, 586, 41 Am. Dec. 633.

"There are two principal grounds on which the doctrine is founded that a contract in restraint of trade is void as against public policy. One is the injury to the public by being deprived of the restricted party's trade; the other is the injury to the party himself by being precluded from pursuing his occupation, and thus being prevented from supporting himself and his family. It is evident that both these evils occur when the contract is general not to pursue one's trade at all, or not to pursue it in that part of the country. The country suffers the loss in both cases. * * * But if neither of these evils ensues, and if the contract is founded on a valid consideration and a reasonable ground of benefit to the other party, it is free from objection and may be enforced." Newell v. Meyendorff, 23 Pac. 333, 9 Mont. 254, 8 L. R. A. 440, 18 Am. St. Rep. 738.

Within the rule that contracts in restraint of trade are void, United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 329, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007, settles absolutely the proposition that contracts in restraint of trade must absolutely, or at least unreasonably, restrain trade, and that an agreement not to engage in business for a definite length of time, but within a restricted territory, entered into in aid of or collateral to the main sale of one's property, is not included. Thus an agreement by sellers of property that they would not become engaged or interested in the business of catching or manufacturing the products of certain classes of fish along the Atlantic seaboard for a term of 20 years is not void in restraint of trade. Fisheries Co. v. Lennen (U. S.) 116 Fed. 217, 220.

What is meant by "restraint of trade" is well defined by Chief Justice Savage in People v. Fisher (N. Y.) 14 Wend. 18, 28 Am. Dec. 501. He says: "The mechanic is not obliged by law to labor for any particular price. He may say that he will not make coarse boots for less than one dollar per pair, but he has no right to say that no other mechanic shall make them for less. Should the journeymen bakers refuse to work, unless for enormous wages, which the master bakers could not afford to pay, and should they compel all journeymen in the city to stop work, the whole population must be without bread. So of journeymen tailors, or mechanics of any description. Such combinations would be productive of derangement and confusion, which certainly must be injurious to trade."

The act declaring illegal "every contract or combination, in the form of a trust or otherwise, in restraint of trade and commerce" among the several states or with foreign nations (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200]), applies to combinations of laborers, as well as of capitalists. A combination of workmen to secure and compel employment of none but union men in a given business, which causes a discontinuance of labor engaged in the business of transporting goods and merchandise in transit from one state to another and to and from foreign countries, is a combination in restraint of commerce, and is unlawful, and as such within the prohibition of the act of 1890. United States v. Workingmen's Amalgamated Council (U. S.) 54 Fed. 994, 996, 26 L. R. A. 158.

"Contracts in restraint of trade are either general or partial. Where the contract is unlimited as to space, it is general; where it is limited as to space, it is partial, although it may be unlimited as to time. Clark, Cont. p. 447. Contracts in partial restraint of trade, if they are reasonable and founded upon a legal consideration, will be enforced." Thus a contract of a physician not to practice medicine in a certain locality is a contract in partial restraint of trade only, and is binding. Webster v. Williams, 34 S. W. 537, 538, 62 Ark. 101.

"Contracts in general restraint of trade" are those contracts between individuals designed to prevent competition and keep up the price of articles of utility. A contract with the object and view to suppress the supply and enhance the price of lumber in four counties of the state is a contract in general restraint of trade. Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co. v. Hayes, 18 Pac. 391, 392, 76 Cal. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 211.

Where it is a question as to private parties engaged in private pursuits, and not dealing in staple commodities of prime necessity, it is not the existence of the restriction of competition, but the reasonableness of that restriction, that is the test of the validity of contracts that are claimed to be in restraint of trade; and contracts made for a lawful purpose, which are not unreasonably injurious to the public welfare, and which impose no heavier restraint upon the trade than the interest of the favored party required, have been uniformly sustained, notwithstanding their tendency to some extent to check competition. Dueber Watch Case Mfg. Co. v. E. Howard Watch & Clock Co. (U. S.) 66 Fed. 637, 643, 14 C. C. A. 14.

The action of a tobacco manufacturer in refusing to sell his products to a dealer, except at prices so exorbitant as to preclude the possibility of the dealer's being able to sell such products to his customers at a profit to himself, unless such dealer agrees, as a part consideration for the sale of such products at a price which will permit the dealer to resell the same at a profit, that he will not sell or deal in the products of the competitors of the manufacturer, does not constitute a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200], although such manufacturer sells at a reasonable price to other dealers, who have agreed not to carry the products of the manufacturer's competitors. Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 125 Fed. 454, 456, 60 C. O. A. 290, 64 L. R. A. 689.

RESTRAINTS OF KINGS OR PRINCES.

See, also, "Detainment."

The "restraints and detainment of all kings, princes, or people," within the meaning of a clause of a marine policy in reference to the liabilities of the parties in case of restraints and detainment of all kings, princes, or people, means the operations of the sovereign power by an exercise of the vis major in its sovereign capacity, controlling or divesting for the time the dominion or authority of the owner over the ship, and not proceedings of a mere civil nature to enforce the private rights claimed under the owner for services actually rendered in a preservation of his property. It does not include the mere detention of an officer in admiralty proceedings. Bradley v. Maryland Ins. Co., 37 U. S. (12 Pet.) 378, 402, 9 L. Ed. 1123.

The words "arrest, restraint, and detainment of all kings," in a marine policy insuring against arrest, restraint, and detainment of all kings, cover a loss caused by a vessel being unable to enter her port of destination by reason of a blockade, though she proceeds to other ports without attempting to enter the blockaded port. Schmidt v. United Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 1 Johns. 249, 262, 3 Am. Dec. 819.

The clause in a bill of lading, excepting liability for damages caused by "restraint of princes, rulers, or people," is held to cover the loss caused by a quarantine detention. The Bohemia (U. S.) 38 Fed. 756, 757.

"Arrest, restraints, and detainments of kings, princes, or people," within the meaning of a marine policy on a cargo of slaves against such arrest, restraints, and detainments, includes the issuing of a writ of habeas corpus by a judicial officer of a government within the control of which the vessel is driven by stress of weather, which results in the slaves being taken from the vessel and set at liberty. Simpson v. Charleston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (S. C.) Dud. 239, 242.

Quarantine regulations, which interfere with the charter engagements of a vessel, are within the clause of a charter of a vessel excepting liability for results caused by "restraints of princes, rulers, and people." The Progreso (U. S.) 50 Fed. 835, 837, 2 C. C. A. 45.

RESTRICT.

The word "restrict," as used in Rev. St. art. 278, providing that railroad companies and other common carriers shall not limit or restrict their liability as it exists at common law by any general or special notice, or in any other manner whatever, prohibits a common carrier from so contracting as to make its liability to depend on other facts than such as would fix its liability under the settled rules of the common law. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Trawick, 68 Tex. 814, 819, 4 S. W. 567, 2 Am. St. Rep. 494.

RESTRICTION.

The word "restriction" is defined to mean limitation, or confinement within bounds, and, as used in the constitutional provision that the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction under such restrictions as may be provided, applies to the amount and time within which an appeal may be taken or a writ of error sued out. Curry v. Marvin, 2 Fla. 411, 415.

"Restrictions," as used in Act May 1, 1852, § 1, providing that any number of natural persons not less than five "may become a body corporate, with all the rights, privileges, and powers conferred by, and subject to all the restrictions of, this act," does not mean penalties or liabilities, but simply restrains or limits the powers of the association within the bounds of the corporate powers prescribed in the act. Strobridge & Co. v. Winchell, 6 Ohio Dec. 761.

A provision in a will that real estate, which had therein been devised in fee, should not be sold or alienated by the devisees for a certain number of years, is properly a "restriction," though called in the will a "condition." Fowler v. Duhme, 42 N. E. 623, 633, 143 Ind. 248.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANT.

A "restrictive covenant" is one running with the land. Terry v. Westing, 5 N. Y. Supp. 99, 100, 52 Hun. 610.

RESTRICTIVE INDORSEMENT.

A "restrictive indorsement" precludes the person to whom it is made from transferring the instrument over to another, so as to give him a right of action either against the person imposing the restriction or against any of the preceding parties. Such an indorsement may give a bare authority to the indorsee to receive the money from the indorser, as if it says, "Pay the money to S. for my use" or use any expressions which necessarily imply that he does not mean to transfer his interest in the bill or note, but merely to give a power to receive the money. Drew v. Jacocks' Adm'r, 6 N. C. 138.

"Restrictive indorsement" is a term used to designate indorsements of negotiable paper which stop the negotiability of the paper. The term applies to indorsements on a bill of exchange that it be credited to the indorser's account. Whether an indorsement be restrictive or not depends upon the intention of the parties as expressed. "Pay to J. S. only;" "Pay to A. for my account;" "Pay the contents to my use;" "Pay the contents to the use of" a third person; "Carry this bill to the credit of A.," a third person; "Pay to A. B. or order for my use;" "Pay to A. B. for my account;" "Pay the within to A. B., for the use of C. D.;" "Pay the money to my use;" "Pay the money to my servant for my use"—are specimens from cases where the indorsements have been held restrictive. Lee v. Chillicothe Branch of State Bank (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 151, 153.

An indorsement such as "for collection" or "on account of" is a restrictive indorsement. People's Bank v. Jefferson County Sav. Bank, 17 South. 728, 729, 106 Ala. 524, 54 Am. St. Rep. 59.

An indorsement is restrictive which either (1) prohibits the further negotiation of the instrument, or (2) constitutes the indorsee the agent of the indorser, or (3) vests the title in the indorsee in trust, for or to the use of some other person. But the mere absence of words implying power to negotiate does not make an indorsement restrictive. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 3172h; Negotiable Instruments Law N. D. § 36; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 1044.

RESTRICTIVE PROVISIONS.

The words "restrictive provisions," as used in Code, § 3252, providing that no condition or restrictive provision of a policy of insurance shall be valid as a defense to an action on the policy, unless printed in type of a certain size or written with pen and ink, are not used in a narrow or technical sense, but are intended to cover any clause, expression, or provision, included in or appended to a policy, whereby the effect of the principal and essential part of the policy is modified, changed, restricted, or otherwise affected, so as to materially influence the rights and liabilities of the insured thereunder, and to make such clause or provision of no effect as a defense, unless it be printed in type of the size prescribed, and therefore it is of no consequence whether the language used be in the form of a condition, an agreement, or a restrictive provision. National Life Ass'n v. Berkeley, 34 S. E. 469, 97 Va. 571.

RESULT.

See "Direct Result."

The word "result" is in common use by all classes—the lettered, as well as the unlettered. The lettered know that the word means that which springs or rebounds back from some pre-existing thing. The unlettered know from its daily practical application that it means the same thing—as the floods in the rivers are the result of rains or the melting of snow; the earth is parched as the result of heat and drought; a person lost his life as the result of a fall; a building fell as the result of fire. Indeed, the meaning of the word is so generally understood by all classes that a person who failed to readily comprehend its meaning, though not scholar enough to express it classically, should be excluded from a jury box on the ground of incompetency. Thus an instruction that defendant was not liable unless the building fell as a result of fire was equivalent to a request for an instruction that defendant was not liable unless the building fell from fire existing previously in time to the fall. Trans-Atlantic Fire Ins. Co. v. Bamberger (Ky.) 11 S. W. 595, 596.

"It is necessary," says the court, "to distinguish somewhat between the term 'result,' as applied to an injury, and 'results,' as applied to the proximate consequences of the injury." Fisher v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 N. W. 545, 548, 119 Wis. 146.

As used in a statement that, where a contractor submits himself to the direction of his employer as to the details of the work, fulfilling his wishes, not merely as to the result, but also as to all the means by which that result is to be obtained, the contractor becomes a servant in respect to that work, "result" means a production or product of some sort, and not a service. Thus, one may contract to produce a house, a ship, or a locomotive, and such ship, house, or locomotive produced is the result; but plowing a field, mowing a lawn, or driving a carriage or horse car for one trip or many trips a day, is not a result, in the sense in which the word is used. Such acts will not result in a product. They are simply service. Jensen v. Barbour, 39 Pac. 906, 908, 15 Mont. 582.

RESULTING POWERS.

It is important to observe that Congress has often exercised, without question, powers that are not expressly given nor ancillary to any single enumerated power. Powers thus exercised are what are called by Judge Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, "resulting powers," arising from the aggregate powers of the government. He instances the right to sue and make contracts. Many others might be given. The oath required by law from officers of the government is one. So is building a capitol or a presidential mansion, and so, also, is the Penal Code. It is not indispensable to the existence of any power of the federal government that it can be found specified in the words of the Constitution, or to be clearly and undoubtedly transferable to any specified power. Its existence may be deduced fairly from one or more specified powers. It is allowable to group together any number of them, and infer from them all that the power claimed has been conferred. Legal Tender Cases, 79 U. S. (12 Wall.) 457, 535, 20 L. Ed. 287.

RESULTING TRUST.

Resulting trusts are defined in 1 Perry, Trusts, § 124, as a class of trusts which result in law from the acts of the parties, whether they are intended to create a trust or not, and they are aptly designated as resulting trusts. A resulting trust arises where the purchaser of an estate pays the purchase money and takes the title in the name of a third person, and also where a person standing in a fiduciary relation uses fiduciary funds to purchase the property, and takes the title thereto in his own name. Thum v. Wolstenholme, 61 Pac. 537, 540, 21 Utah, 446; Gottstein v. Wist, 61 Pac. 715, 718, 22 Wash. 581; Kaphan v. Toney (Tenn.) 58 S. W. 909, 913; Gabert v. Olcott (Tex.) 23 S. W. 985, 987, 86 Tex. 121 (citing 1 Perry, Trusts, § 24); Hodgson v. Fowler, 43 Pac. 462, 463, 7 Colo. App. 378; Pollard v. McKenney (Neb.) 96 N. W. 679, 681.

A resulting trust is defined by Pomeroy to be such as arises when the legal estate is disposed of or acquired, not fraudulently or in the violation of any fiduciary duty, but the intent and theory of equity appears or is assumed from the terms of the disposition, or from the accompanying facts and circumstances, that the beneficial interest is not to go with the legal title. In such a case a trust results in favor of the person for whom the equitable interest is thus assumed to have been intended, and which equity declares to be the real owner. Sanders v. Steele, 26 South. 882, 885, 124 Ala. 415 (citing Lee v. Browder, 51 Ala. 288; Lehman v. Lewis, 62 Ala. 129; O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 205, 17 South. 525, 28 L. R. A. 707, 54 Am. St. Rep. 31); Lewis v. Lindley, 48 Pac. 765, 771, 19 Mont. 422; Springer v. Young, 12 Pac. 400, 402, 14 Or. 280; Tenney v. Simpson, 15 Pac. 187, 196, 37 Kan. 353.

A resulting trust is a trust that the courts presume to arise out of the transaction of parties, as, if one man pays the purchase money for an estate, and the deed is taken in the name of another, courts presume in such a case that the trust is intended for the person who pays the money. Burks v. Burks, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 353, 356; Malin v. Malin (N. Y.) 1 Wend. 625, 649; Keller v. Kunkel, 46 Md. 565, 569, 570; Bates v. Kelly, 80 Ala. 142, 145; Tiedeman v. Imperial Fertilizer Co., 34 S. E. 999, 1000, 109 Ga. 661.

Resulting trusts arise by construction of law and the acts of the parties, based on confidence, which equity will enforce. Runnels v. Jackson, 2 Miss. (1 How.) 358, 360.

A resulting trust is a purely equitable interest, and may be destroyed and cut off as against all bona fide purchasers or mortgagees from the trustee for a valuable consideration and without notice. Murphy v. Clayton, 45 Pac. 267, 269, 113 Cal. 153.

A resulting trust is raised only from fraud in obtaining title, or from payment of the purchase money when the title is acquired. Brower v. Brower, 17 Montg. Co. Rep'r (Pa.) 39, 42; Bickel's Appeal, 86 Pa. 204, 211 (citing Barnet v. Gougherty, 32 Pa. [8 Casey] 371); Watson v. Watson (Pa.) 47 Atl. 1096, 1100.

When the evidence shows the payment of the purchase money by one, and the conveyance of the title thereby purchased to another, between parties who are strangers to each other, the law so construes these two facts as to make them constitute a resulting trust. If the legal title is taken in the name of the wife, such implication does not arise; it being the presumption that the same was intended as an advancement. Such presumption may, however, be rebutted by parol testimony, if the same is clear and satisfactory. Dorman v. Dorman, 58 N. E. 235, 236, 187 Ill. 154, 79 Am. St. Rep. 210; Malin v. Malin (N. Y.) 1 Wend. 625, 649.

There is a resulting trust where one buys property and pays the purchase money with his own funds, and has the title placed in the name of another, in favor of him who has so paid the purchase money, and he is regarded as the actual owner of the property bought. Such a trust is a mere creature of equity, founded on presumptive intention, and designed to carry that intention into effect. If it is not the intention that the estate shall vest in him who pays the purchase price, then no resulting trust in his favor attaches to the property, and there may be a resulting trust as to a part of the property, or a part of the interest therein, and not as to the residue, according to the intent existing in each particular case. Cook v. Patrick, 28 N. E. 658, 659, 135 Ill. 499, 11 L. R. A. 573.

Whenever the purchase money for land is paid by one person, and the conveyance is to another, or whenever the consideration for the conveyance, if other than money, moves from a person who is not the grantee, the law, unless the person stands in the relation of husband or parent to the grantee, so that the conveyance may be presumed to be an advancement, raises an implied trust, ordinarily termed a "resulting trust," in favor of him who pays the purchase money, or from whom the consideration proceeds. The principle on which the rule is based is that the beneficial estate follows the consideration, and attaches to the person from whom it comes. The principle itself is founded in the natural presumption that he who supplies the purchase money or other consideration intends the purchase for his own benefit, and not for the benefit of a stranger, and that the conveyance is taken to the grantee as a matter of convenience to the purchaser. Aborn v. Searles, 27 Atl. 796, 18 R. I. 357.

"The resulting trust not within the statute of frauds, and which may be shown without writing, is when the purchase is made with the proper moneys of the cestui que trust, and the deed not taken in his name. The trust results from the original transaction at the time it takes place, and at no other time, and is founded on the actual payment of money, and on no other ground." Woodside v. Hewel, 42 Pac. 152, 153, 109 Cal. 481.

Where two persons together advance the price, and title is taken in the name of one of them, a trust results in favor of the other to such proportion of the property as is equal to the proportion of the consideration contributed. The trust must arise, if at all, at the time of the execution of the conveyance, and when the legal title vests in the grantee. It is not created by contract, but by implication of law apart from the contract. When the two facts, to wit, payment of the purchase money by one, and conveyance of the title thereby purchased to another, are found to exist, then the law so construes these two facts as to make them constitute a resulting trust, and for this reason such a trust is said to arise by operation of law. Van Buskirk v. Van Buskirk, 35 N. E. 383, 384, 148 Ill. 9.

A resulting trust is such a one as arises where the legal estate in property is transferred or conveyed, but it is inferred from the terms of the disposition, or from the accompanying facts and circumstances, that the beneficial interest is not to pass to, or be enjoyed with, the legal title. Familiar examples of this character of trust are cases where property is conveyed by will or deed upon trusts, but no trusts are in fact declared, or where the trust, although in fact declared, has failed, or, where attempted to be declared, the declaration of trust is so imperfect that it cannot be carried into effect. Another example of a resulting trust occurs where a conveyance is made to A., the price or consideration being paid by B., whereupon, according to well-settled principles in equity, A. takes the title in trust for

B. Fulton v. Jansen, 84 Pac. 331, 332, 99 Cal. 587; Williams v. Williams, 78 N. W. 792, 793, 108 Iowa, 91.

A resulting trust does not arise out of the contract of the parties, but it is an implication of law from the existence of facts necessary to sustain the implication. It cannot be created by contract, but exists, if at all, independent of any contract. Monson v. Hutchin, 62 N. E. 788, 194 Ill. 431.

It is well settled that, when one person becomes invested with the title to real property under circumstances which in equity obligate him to hold the title and to exercise his ownership for the benefit of another, a trust arises in favor of the latter person, commensurate with his interest in the subject-matter. Such trusts are known as implied or resulting trusts, and are not prohibited by statute. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shepard, 62 N. E. 154, 157, 169 N. Y. 170, 58 L. R. A. 115.

Resulting trusts have been considered, since the decision of Lord Hardwicke in Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 148, to fall naturally within one of three classes, and the distinction has frequently been recognized by our courts. One class arises when title to lands purchased in whole or in part with the money of another is taken in the name of another. Another class of such trusts arises when a trust is declared in respect to a portion of the title to lands, and nothing is declared with respect to the other portion. The remaining class is that where title to lands is acquired by fraud. Aller v. Crouter, 54 Atl. 426, 429, 64 N. J. Eq. 381.

A trust may arise in different ways. If one uses the funds of another for the purchase of property, taking title thereto in his own name, as a general rule it will be held that the purchaser holds the property thus acquired in trust for the benefit of the owner of the funds. Such is known as a resulting trust, which is sometimes spoken of as an equitable lien; and, while it is, the lien extends no further than the property acquired with the money of the other. G. Ober & Sons Co. v. Cochran, 45 S. E. 382, 386, 118 Ga. 396.

A resulting trust rests on presumed intention, and is founded on the equitable principle that the beneficial ownership follows the consideration. The trust results to the party from whom the consideration moves, before or at the time of the purchase or of the making of the conveyance. Generally, in the absence of circumstances showing any contrary intention, a trust arises whenever the purchase money of land is paid by one person, and the title taken in the name of another, whether the purchase is made by an advancer of the purchase money personally or by the grantee. Though a resulting trust arises where an agent, on a parol undertaking, purchases land for the benefit, and pays for it with the money, of his principal, and takes a deed for it in his own name, if, nevertheless, in such case, the agent pays his money for the land, not having any funds of the principal in hand, and not as a loan, a trust is not created, notwithstanding the principal may subsequently reimburse the agent for the amount expended. The foundation of a resulting trust being the payment of the consideration price by the person claiming to be the beneficial owner, if the party who sets it up has made no payment, he cannot show by parol evidence that the purchase was made on his account. There must be in the transaction something more than the breach of a parol agreement. In order to constitute a resulting trust arising from the fact that the purchase money of land is paid by one person, and the title taken in the name of another, payment in money is not essential, but it may be made in labor, property, securities, credit, or anything of value. The mode, time, and form in which the consideration was rendered are immaterial, provided they are in pursuance of a contract of purchase. Bibb v. Hunter, 79 Ala. 351, 356.

Express trust distinguished.

See, also, "Express Trust."

A resulting trust is a trust which is raised or created by the act or construction of law. It differs from an express trust, which is a trust created by act of the parties. Lovett v. Taylor, 34 Atl. 896, 899, 54 N. J. Eq. 311.

A resulting trust does not arise out of the contract of the parties, but is an implication of law from the existence of facts necessary to justify the implication. It cannot be created by contract, but exists, if at all, independent of any contract. Monson v. Hutchin, 62 N. E. 788, 194 Ill. 431.

As extending to part of tract.

Where one furnishes only a part of the amount paid for realty taken in the name of another, no trust arises, unless his part is some definite portion of the whole, and is paid for some aliquot part thereof; and there must be no uncertainty as to the proportion of the property to which the trust extends. O'Donnell v. White, 29 Atl. 769, 770, 18 R. I. 659.

As founded on presumed intention.

The doctrine of resulting trust from payment of the consideration money has its origin in the natural presumption that he who supplies the money means the purchase to be for his benefit, rather than that of another. It is founded upon a presumed intention of the parties. A trust is never presumed or implied unless, taking all the circumstances, that is a fair and reasonable interpretation of the acts of the parties. Klamp v. Klamp, 79 N. W. 525, 527, 51 Neb. 17 (citing 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1195).

A resulting trust arises in favor of one who pays the purchase money of an estate and takes title in the name of another, because of the presumption that he who pays for a thing intends a beneficial interest therein for himself. But this presumption cannot arise when a contrary intent appears, since it is based on absence of evidence of such intent. Manning v. Screven, 34 S. E. 22, 24, 56 S. C. 78

A resulting trust has its origin solely in the facts that the purchase money of land is paid or advanced by one person at the time of the purchase, and the title is taken in the name of the other. It is founded on the presumption that he who pays the purchase money intends to become the owner of the land, and therefore presupposes the authorized use of the money of him who asserts the trust, and is implied independently of any fraud, or of any fiduciary relation between the person who pays the money, and him in whose name the title is taken, although the mere existence of such a relation will not prevent the implication of such a trust. Long v. King, 23 South. 534, 535, 117 Ala. 423.

A resulting trust, though by no means an express one, because not declared in the deed out of which it arises, rests upon a presumed intention, from which results the rule that the purchase money must have been paid at the time of the purchase, whereas a constructive trust is supported by no such presumption. Robinson v. Pierce, 24 South. 984, 991, 118 Ala. 273, 45 L. R. A. 63, 72 Am. St. Rep. 160.

A resulting trust is one which is presumed to exist, owing to a supposed intention of the parties to create a trust. The books sometimes say that the law presumes an intention, but this is a legal fiction, and the real foundation of the resulting trust is the natural equity springing into life through fraudulent or inequitable advantages obtained by means of agreement, express or implied. Kayser v. Maugham, 6 Pac. 803, 805, 8 Colo. 232.

Trusts resulting from the operation or construction of law are divided into two classes: First, those which are said to result by operation or presumption of law from certain acts or relations of parties from which an intention to create a trust is supposed to exist, and which are called resulting or presumptive trusts; second, those which exist by construction of law alone, without any actual or supposed intention that a trust should be created, but merely to assert the rights of parties or baffle fraud. Williams v. Williams, 78 N. W. 792, 793, 106 Iowa, 91.

As arising at time of purchase.

A trust is ordinarily presumed to result in favor of one paying the purchase money for land, as against the grantee named in the deed. In re Davis (U. S.) 112 Fed. 129, 130.

A resulting trust must arise, if at all, at the time of the execution of the conveyance. Dick v. Dick, 50 N. E. 142, 143, 172 Ill. 578.

A resulting trust must grow out of the facts existing at the time of the conveyance, and cannot grow out of a mere parol agreement that the purchase will be for the benefit of another. Hunt v. Friedman, 63 Cal. 510, 513.

The payment of the purchase money at the time title is obtained will create a resulting trust, but neither a promise to pay nor after payment is sufficient. Motherwell v. Taylor, 10 Pac. 304, 305, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 254.

A resulting trust arises by operation of law from contemporaneous circumstances which give the legal and equitable titles different directions. It must therefore arise at the instant the deed is taken and the legal title is vested in the grantee, and the situation of the transaction when the title passes is to be looked to, and not the situation preceding or following that time. Whitley v. Ogle, 20 Atl. 284, 285, 47 N. J. Eq. (2 Dick.) 67.

A resulting trust arises where one of two parties advances the purchase money for land, and the other takes the title, and it must arise at the time when the conveyance is executed. Ellis v. Hill, 44 N. E. 858, 859, 162 Ill. 557.

A resulting trust does not arise in favor of one furnishing money for the purchase of property, the title to which is taken in the name of another, unless such payments are coincident with the purchase and the deed. The trust, if at all, must arise from the circumstances and state of the parties as they existed at the time the title was acquired, and the money was appropriated and used in the purchase thereof. Money furnished for the purpose of making payments on lands theretofore acquired under a contract cannot create a resulting trust in favor of the person so loaning the money. Neither can a resulting trust arise in real estate by reason of the fact that money is loaned or used for the erection of buildings on the property. Therefore, if a corporation loans money to one of its officers to be used in paying for land previously purchased by him, and for the erection of buildings thereon for the use of the corporation in its business, no resulting trust in the property is created in favor of the corporation. Pain v. Farson, 53 N. E. 579, 582, 179 Ill. 186.

A resulting trust in favor of a purchaser can only arise where the party claiming the benefit of the trust has furnished the consideration money, or some aliquot part thereof, as part of the original transaction, and he must have occupied such position then as to entitle him to be substituted for the grantee. Pickler v. Pickler, 54 N. E. 311, 312, 180 Ill. 168.

There is no resulting trust in favor of the wife in land purchased by the husband on his credit, though part of the purchase price was paid with money subsequently borrowed from her. Woodside v. Hewel, 42 Pac. 152, 153, 109 Cal. 481.

Where one person purchases real property, and takes in his own name a conveyance of the legal title, when the purchase money or consideration is paid by another, a trust immediately arises in favor of him who paid the purchase price, constituting him the beneficiary, and the holder of the legal title the trustee. Chambers v. Emery, 45 Pac. 192, 194, 13 Utah, 374.

Where the president and cashier of the bank voluntarily converted the funds and assets of the bank, and invested them in mill machinery, fixtures, real estate, and appurtenances of a corporation of which they were at the time the president and secretary, such corporation holds such property impressed with a trust in favor of the bank to the extent of the bank funds and assets that can be traced into such corporate property, unless such corporation can show that it acquired such funds and assets in good faith and for a valuable consideration. Farmers' & Traders' Bank v. Kimball Milling Co., 47 N. W. 402, 403, 1 S. D. 388, 36 Am. St. Rep. 739.

A resulting trust is raised only from fraud in obtaining the title, or from payment of the purchase money when the title is acquired. Stafford v. Wheeler, 93 Pa. 462, 467, 468 (citing Barnet v. Dougherty, 32 Pa. [8 Casey] 371, 372).

A resulting trust is raised only from fraud in obtaining the title, or from payment of the purchase money when the title is acquired. Payment of the purchase money subsequently is not sufficient. McCloskey v. McCloskey, 55 Atl. 180, 181, 205 Pa. 491.

A resulting trust must arise at the time of the execution of the conveyance. It results from the original transaction at the time it takes place, and at no other time, and it is founded on the actual payment of money, and on no other ground. McDevitt v. Frantz, 85 Va. 740, 751, 8 S. E. 642.

A resulting trust in lands depends on the fact that the money of the person claiming a trust was used in the purchase, and it cannot be raised by any future payment or tender. The trust results from the original transaction at the time it takes place, and at no other time. Three plaintiffs entered into an agreement with the defendant that the four should buy certain lands in equal shares. The defendant took a bond for a deed securing two-fifths to himself, and one-fifth to each of the plaintiffs, but it did not appear that the money to buy the land was contributed equally. The plaintiffs sought a decree that defendant held one-twentieth in trust for each of the plaintiffs. Held, that there was no trust. Bailey v. Hemenway, 17 N. E. 551, 645, 147 Mass. 326.

Right to pursue trust fund.

Where a trustee invests trust funds held by him in a fiduciary capacity in land or other property, and takes the title in his own name or in the name of a stranger, with notice of the trust, so long as such funds can be identified by being traced into specific property the cestui que trust can claim the entire property, if paid for exclusively with his money, or he can assert an equity to reimbursement pro tanto for his moneys so misapplied by the trustee. Though often classified in the books as a resulting trust, such a designation is not technically or strictly accurate. It is a trust implied or created by law, originating in the right to pursue a trust fund into a new investment in violation of the duties of the trustee. Whaley v. Whaley, 71 Ala. 159, 161.

A resulting trust is created by operation of law, and only because of being created by operation of law does it constitute an exception to the rule that a trust in land cannot be created or declared except in writing. A very common case of a resulting trust is where one holding a fund under an express trust, either with the duty of holding the fund intact, or with power of discretionary investment, invests the trust fund in his own name; and the law raises a resulting trust in the acquired property because of the ownership of the fund, notwithstanding it was originally held under an express trust. Withnell v. Withnell (Neb.) 96 N. W. 221, 224.

As arising from voluntary conveyance.

A voluntary conveyance cannot be held to create a resulting trust for the grantor. Benson v. Dempster, 55 N. E. 651, 654, 183 Ill. 297 (citing Stevenson v. Crapnell, 114 Ill. 19, 28 N. E. 379).

RESUME.

The word "resume," as used in reference to the act of taking by the public of a road from its owners being a resumption, is used as an allusion to one of the rules of public right to take private property, whether held in fee or otherwise, and not as a suggestion that the owner's title is exceptionally de-feasible. In re Opinion of the Justices, 33 Atl. 1076, 1080, 66 N. H. 629.

"Resume work," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426], providing that mining claims shall be open to relocation after the expiration of a certain time if the locator has not resumed work on the claim before such location, means to actually begin work anew, with the bona fide intention of prosecuting such work. McCor-mick v. Baldwin, 37 Pac. 903, 904, 104 Cal. 227.

"Resume," as used in a statute requiring proof, as a condition precedent to the appointment of a receiver, that an insolvent corporation will not be able to resume its business with safety to the public and advantage to its stockholders within a short time, predicates some interruption to the insolvent's business, but it does not contemplate an entire suspension of all its workings. Ft. Wayne Electric Corp. v. Franklin Electric Light Co., 41 Atl. 217, 219, 57 N. J. Eq. 16.

RESURVEY.

"Resurvey" means to survey again, and applies to land which has been surveyed once. Trudeau v. Town of Sheldon, 20 Atl. 161, 163, 62 Vt. 198.

As relocate.

"Resurvey," as used in Rev. Laws, § 2920, providing that, if the terminations and boundaries of a highway cannot be ascertained, the selectmen may resurvey the highway, means to relocate it, and the lines may be where originally located, or may be elsewhere. To say that the word "resurvey" means nothing more than to locate the lines of the boundaries in their original location is to give the word too narrow a construction. Culver v. Town of Fair Haven, 31 Atl. 143, 144, 67 Vt. 163.

RETAIL

House for, see "House for Retailing Spirituous Liquors."

The word "retail" means to sell in small quantities, and not in gross. State v. Cas-sety (S. C.) 1 Rich. Law, 90, 91; State v. Lowenhaught, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 13, 14; Bridges v. State, 37 Ark. 224, 225; Koenig v. State (Tex.) 26 S. W. 835, 839, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35; McArthur v. State, 69 Ga. 444, 445; State v. Hawkins, 91 N. C. 626, 627; Harris v. Intendant and Council of Living-ston, 28 Ala. 577, 579.

"Retail," as used in Act Sept. 18, 1885, permitting the manufacture and sale of domestic wines or cider, but providing that such wines and cider shall not be sold in barrooms by retail, means the sale of such liquor in quantities less than one quart. Beiser v. State, 4 S. E. 257, 258, 79 Ga. 326.

Selling, bartering, or loaning liquors in quantities of less than five gallons shall be deemed retailing. Ky. St. 1903, § 4199.

Division of larger quantities.

A sale of 10 gallons of whisky drawn from a cask containing a much larger quantity was a sale at retail, and not at wholesale. A sale in such quantity according to the common and popular import of the term wholesale is not a sale at wholesale. The sale here involves the idea of breaking up, dividing, and parceling out the goods which are held by the seller in large parcels or packages, in which he has purchased, and excludes the idea of selling a thing whole and unbroken. Tripp v. Hennessy, 10 R. I. 129, 131.

The term "retail liquor bills," in Sessa Laws 1850, c. 139, § 5, providing that no suit for retail liquor bills shall be entertained by any courts of this state, includes a bill incurred for spirituous liquors in six or ten gallon kegs, consisting of brandy, gin, etc., and all amounting to the sum of only $62. The term "wholesale" implies the selling in unbroken parcels, as by the barrel, pipe, or cask; while the term "retail" implies the cutting or dividing up of such pieces, parcels, or casks into smaller quantities, and selling to customers in such manner. Gorsuth v. Butterfield, 2 Wis. 237, 243.

Sale for profit.

"Retail" means to dispose of in small quantities, either for or without a consideration, and may be a distribution of a whole into parcels. Markle v. Town of Akron, 14 Ohio, 586, 592.

To constitute the offense of carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer without having paid the special tax, the accused must have procured the liquor sold with intent to retail it, or, having it on hand, formed the intent to retail it, and carried out that intent by one or more acts. It is not enough that, having the liquor on hand for his own use, he let others have it as a matter of kindness or liberal feeling, although he took money from them for the accommodation. United States v. Bonham (U. S.) 31 Fed. 808, 809.

Sales to club members.

"Sale by retail" means sale to any member of the general public when they come to buy, and is so used in laws of New York requiring a license for the sale of liquor by retail, and does not apply to sales to members of a club. People v. Platt, 36 N. Y. Supp. 531, 536, 92 Hun, 349.

The clubroom of a German turnverein, maintained in connection with a hall for the usual purposes of such a society, and equipped with periodicals, billiard tables, and card tables for the free use of members and their guests, where intoxicants are furnished, without profit, to members only, for fees which are turned into the general fund and used to keep up the stock of liquors, is not a "house for retailing spirituous liquors," within Pen. Code, art. 355, prohibiting card playing in such a place. Koenig v. State, 26 S. W. 835, 837, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 367, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35.

Sale of original package.

Under Laws 1886, c. 272, forbidding any person, unless a registered pharmacist, to conduct a store for retailing, dispensing, or compounding medicines or poisons, the word "retailing" does not necessarily involve the opening of the ultimate original package and dividing its contents, in connection with the ordinary dispensing and compounding of medicines. The word differs radically in meaning from "dispensing and compounding." To retail is differentiated from to wholesale, and the selling of one bottle is a clear sale at retail, and it makes no difference that it is in the original package. People v. Abraham, 44 N. Y. Supp. 1077, 1079, 16 App. Div. 58.

Single sale.

"Retail spirituous liquors," as used in Acts 1801 (2 Faust, 400), making those who "retail spirituous liquors" without a license subject to a penalty of $100, means to vend liquor in small quantities for gain. A single act of selling may constitute a violation of the statute. State v. Mooty (S. C.) 3 Hill, 187, 189.

RETAIL DEALER.

A sugar planter who keeps a store on his plantation is a retail dealer, where, though the bulk of the sales are made to employes on the plantation, yet other persons are not forbidden to purchase from the store, and is liable to pay a license under Act 4 Ex. Sess. 1881, imposing a license on every business of selling at retail. Thibaut v. Dymond, 37 La. Ann. 902, 903.

Vegetable dealer.

A vegetable dealer in the markets undoubtedly conducts a "business of selling at retail," within the license act of 1881, imposing a license upon every business of selling at retail. State v. Cendo, 38 La. Ann. 828, 829.

RETAIL LIQUOR DEALER.

A retail dealer in spirituous liquors is one who sells by small quantities, to suit customers, liquors which are bought in larger amounts generally. Webb v. State, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 662, 665; State v. Lowenhaupt, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 13, 14.

The term "retail liquor dealer," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. §§ 3242, 3244 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 2094, 2096], requiring the payment of a special tax by every one who carries on the business of a retail liquor dealer, and declaring that every person who sells or offers for sale foreign or domestic spirits or wines in quantities less than five wine gallons at the same time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors, does not apply to one selling an occasional drink of spirits out of a bottle at a place outside a barroom, without intending to defraud the national revenues. United States v. Jackson (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 558.

Under the express provisions, of Acts 1897, p. 253, a wholesale dealer in liquors, within the meaning of the term as used in such statute relating to the licensing of liquor dealers, includes any person who sells in quantities of five gallons or more; a retail dealer being one who sells to consumers in quantities less than five gallons at a time. Daniels v. State, 50 N. E. 74, 79, 150 Ind. 348.

A retail dealer in spirituous liquors is one who sells to persons or customers for purposes of consumption. The distinction between wholesale and retail dealers does not depend on the quantity sold by either. State v. Tarver, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 658, 660.

"Retail dealer," as used in the Code, imposing a tax on those who sell goods and liquors at retail, means any one who sells goods in small quantities directly to the consumer, and would include a planter or farmer who sold only to his employes. Thibaut v. Kearney, 12 South. 139, 140, 45 La. Ann. 149, 18 L. R. A. 596.

A retail liquor dealer is defined as one who sells in less quantities than a quart (4 Revenue Act, § 112), but one act of selling does not constitute engaging in or carrying on the business, unless an intention to do so is concurrent with the selling. Bryant v. State, 46 Ala. 302, 303.

The term "retail liquor dealer," within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the business of retailing spirituous liquors without a revenue license, was construed to include a person who on a few occasions sold case whisky in quantities less than a quart. Lemons v. State, 50 Ala. 130, 132.

Retail dealers of spirituous and intoxicating liquors and brewed, malt, and fermented liquors shall be held and deemed to include all persons who sell any of such liquors by the drink, and in quantities of three gallons or less, or one dozen quart bottles or less, at any one time, to any one person. Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 5380.

A "retail liquor dealer," as used in the act relating to licenses for the sale of liquor, means one dealing in malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors in quantities of not more than 4½ gallons to any one person at any one time. Comp. Laws N. M. 1897, § 4134.

Social clubs.

Under Act March 1, 1879, c. 125, § 1, 20 Stat. 333 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2101], defining a retail dealer in malt liquors to be one who sells or offers for sale in less quantities than five gallons at one time, but who does not deal in spirituous liquors, an incorporated beneficial association which sells as such to its members, for five cents each, tickets entitling the holder to a glass of beer or other refreshment, or to participate in some amusement, at his option, who upon presentation of the ticket, or any number he may so see fit to purchase, obtains from the association beer therefor, which beer is the property of the corporation, as such, is a retail dealer in malt liquors, within the statute. United States v. Giller (U. S.) 54 Fed. 656.

A club or association of persons, not incorporated, combining together to promote social and literary objects, which bought lager beer at wholesale, permitting the members to take beer at the rooms of the club on giving as many checks as they received glasses of beer, which checks cost five cents each—the price being intended to cover the cost of the beer, though there was sometimes a small profit—was a "retail dealer in malt liquors," within the meaning of the law of the United States requiring such dealers to be licensed. United States v. Wittig (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 744, 745.

Acts 1881, c. 149, § 4, authorizing a taxation of retail liquor dealers, does not include a social club maintaining a library, giving musical entertainments, and furnishing meals for its members, which keeps a small stock of liquors; the members paying for each drink as it is taken, but no profit being made on such sales. Tennessee Club of Memphis v. Dwyer, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 452, 461, 47 Am. Rep. 298.

"Retail dealers," as used in Pub. Acts 1887, No. 313, § 2, providing that retail dealers include all persons who sell liquors by the drink and in quantities of three gallons or less, or one dozen quart bottles or less, at any one time, to any person or persons, includes a club which distributes liquors among its members, receiving pay for them as they are distributed by the glass, the proceeds going into the treasury of the club, to be used in purchasing other liquors or in paying expenses. People v. Soule, 41 N. W. 908, 909, 74 Mich. 250, 2 L. R. A. 494.

A social club, composed of members who have no proprietary interest in the assets, which provides a reading room, restaurant, barroom, library, billiard rooms, and sitting rooms for its members, the expenses of which are defrayed by annual dues from each member, and by payments made by the members for food and drinks, is not engaged in the business of a retail liquor dealer, within section 11 of the Louisiana license tax law, imposing a tax on such business. State v. Boston Club, 12 South. 895, 45 La. Ann. 585, 20 L. R. A. 185.

A social club, not organized for the purpose of evading the liquor laws, but which furnishes its members with liquors and refreshments without profit to itself, is not a retail liquor dealer, within the statute imposing a license tax on all persons dealing in, selling, or disposing of intoxicating liquors by retail. Barden v. Montana Club, 10 Mont. 330, 25 Pac. 1042, 11 L. R. A. 593, 24 Am. St. Rep. 27.

RETAILER.

A retailer is one who sells goods in small quantities or parcels, and includes a person engaged in the sale of lumber. Campbell v. City of Anthony, 20 Pac. 492, 493, 40 Kan. 652.

Bouvier defines a retailer of merchandise as one who deals in merchandise in smaller quantities than he buys, generally with a view to profit. State v. Lowenbaught, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 13, 14.

Three classes of persons are retailers, within the meaning of the liquor law, as shown by Code, § 1058: First, one who sells spirituous or vinous liquors in quantities of less than a quart; second, a person who sells such liquor by the quart to a person of known intemperate habits; third, those who sell in any quantities to be drunk on or about the place. Elam v. State, 25 Ala. 53, 55.

Under Act July 23, 1831, authorizing the corporation of the city of Washington to provide for licensing, taxing, and regulating auctions, retailers, ordinaries, and taverns, hackney carriages, etc., the keeper of a woodyard in a city is a retailer. Washington v. Casanave (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 343, 344.

As importing sale.

To retail is to sell in small quantities. To retail to any particular individual is to sell to him in a small quantity. An indictment charging a person with being a retailer of spirituous liquors to a certain person charges a sale of spirituous liquors to such person. Commonwealth v. Kimball, 49 Mass. (7 Metc.) 304, 308.

As including liquor dealer.

The term "retailers," in Acts 1888-89, p. 601, § 7, giving the mayor and city council power to license, tax, and regulate auctioneers, grocers, merchants, and retailers, and all other privileges, is used in the legal and ordinary signification which by long-continued use it has acquired in our statutory vocabulary, and includes retail liquor dealers. Unless so, the term, as employed, is without distinctive meaning, for merchants, grocers, confectioners, and other persons engaged in such pursuits who sell at retail are specially named. Olmstead v. Cook, 7 South. 776, 778, 89 Ala. 228.

RETAIN.

"Retain," as used in Laws 1871, c. 1, § 15, providing that the owner shall retain a sufficient sum to pay subcontractors, and shall not be liable to the principal contractor therefore, means to keep in possession or hold back; that is, the owner is to hold back from the principal contractor the amount due the subcontractor. He cannot retain that which he does not possess. Cudworth v. Bostwick, 45 Atl. 408, 409, 69 N. H. 536.

Consideration implied.

An allegation that the defendant, who was a carpenter, was retained by the plaintiffs to build and repair certain houses, did not necessarily show that there was a consideration. Elsie v. Gatward, 5 Term R. 143, 151.

As hire.

"To retain" means to keep in pay, to hire, so that, under an agreement to give an attorney a certain salary, an agreement to retain such attorney is implied. Elderton v. Emmons, 6 C. B. 160, 176.

As conferring property right.

"Retain," as used in Pub. St. c. 184, § 7, providing that the husband shall be entitled to administration of the personal estate of his wife in case of her intestacy, and shall not be compelled to distribute the same among the next of kin, but shall have and retain the surplus thereof after payment of her debts for his own use, is sufficient to cover his right to the property, if it is to depend upon his administration. Kenyon v. Saunders, 30 Atl. 470, 471, 18 B. I. 590, 28 L. R. A. 232.

As giving right to restrain.

In construing an act of the Legislature authorizing a certain asylum to "receive and retain all inebriates who enter such asylum, either voluntarily or by the order of the committee of any habitual drunkard," the court said: "The power given to retain inebriates who enter the asylum voluntarily only confers the right upon the superintendent of the institution to keep them so long as they will voluntarily remain, and no longer." In re Baker (N. Y.) 29 How. Prac. 485, 489.

RETAINER.

See "General Retainer"; "Special Retainer."

As to attorneys.

A retainer is the act of a client by which he retains an attorney or counsel to manage a cause, either by prosecuting it when he is plaintiff, or defending it when he is defendant; the retaining fee. Bouv. Law Dict. The word is also used for a notice served by an attorney on the opposite party or attorney that he has been retained, in which use it is by ellipsis for notice of retainer. Abb. Law Dict.

Whenever an attorney or counselor at law is employed generally to prosecute or defend in an action, he may, after the action has been terminated, recover from his client a retaining fee, although the contract of employment did not expressly or specifically mention a retaining fee. A retainer of an attorney is presumably worth something to the client, and presumably a loss to the attorney; and whether the attorney is ever called upon to perform any services, or not, in that case, he may, when the case is terminated, recover for whatever the evidence shows a retainer was worth. Blackman v. Webb, 17 Pac. 464, 38 Kan. 668; Knight v. Russ, 19 Pac. 698, 699, 77 Cal. 410.

Where a client procured an attorney to visit him at his house, and employed him to assist as counsel, and the attorney agreed to do so, and gave advice several times it constituted a retainer. Perry v. Lord, 111 Mass. 504, 506.

The word "retainer," as used in the statute authorizing the court to grant temporary alimony, and allowing the wife's attorney a retainer, is used in the sense that the judge allows the attorney the right to apply for additional fees as the exigencies of the case may require. Rogers v. Rogers, 30 S. E. 659, 660, 103 Ga. 763.

There are two classes of retainers by which the services of attorneys, solicitors, or counselors are secured: First, general retainers, having for their object the securing beforehand of the services of a particular attorney or counselor for any emergency that may afterwards arise. They have no reference to any special service, but take in the whole range of possible future contention which may render attorneyship necessary or desirable. Counsel thus retained is not at liberty to accept employment or render service adverse to the interest of the client thus retaining him. He is, as to such client, monopolized. Agnew v. Walden, 4 South. 672, 673, 84 Ala. 502.

As to executors and administrators.

Retainer is a remedy by mere operation of law, and is thus explained and defined by Blackstone: "If a person indebted to another makes his creditor his executor, or if such a creditor obtains letters of administration to his debtor, in these cases the law gives him a remedy for his debt, by allowing him to retain so much as will pay himself before any other creditors whose debts are of equal degree." 3 Bl. Comm. 18. To constitute a retainer, and, of consequence, a satisfaction and extinguishment of the debt, there was no act to be done by the executor or administrator, no discretion or volition to be exercised by him, no election whether he would retain or not. The moment assets came to his possession which in the due course of administration were and could be legally applied to the payment of the debt, the law, of its own force, made the application. This right of retainer, with its legal consequences, is not limited to debts due to the personal representative individually, but also includes debts due to him as trustee or as executor or administrator of another person. Miller v. Irby's Adm'rs, 63 Ala. 477, 483.

The general principle in cases of retainer is that where the party unites in himself, by representation or otherwise, the character of debtor and creditor, he is entitled to retain, inasmuch as he cannot sue himself, and the law will presume a retainer in satisfaction of the debt if there are assets in his hands. Therefore, in the common case of a creditor executor, his action is gone forever if he has assets in his hands, because, as the court says in Plow. 185, "in judgment of law he is satisfied before, for, if the executor has as much goods in his hands as his own debt amounts to, the property of these goods is altered and vested in himself." Taylor v. Deblais (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 763, 765.

RETAINING LIEN.

See, also, "Attorney's Lien."

A retaining lien is that which an attorney has on all the papers of his client in his possession, by virtue of which he may retain all such papers until his claim for services has been discharged. In re Lexington Ave., 52 N. Y. Supp. 203, 206, 30 App. Div. 602.

An attorney's retaining lien is that which he has upon all papers, deeds, vouchers, etc., in his possession, upon which or in connection with which he has expended money or given his professional services. It is a general lien for whatever may be due to him, but is purely passive, authorizing the attorney to take no steps to procure payment of the debt out of the article so held. In re Wilson (U. S.) 12 Fed. 233, 239.

Liens of attorneys are retaining liens and charging liens; the former existing as against moneys or papers in the hands of the attorney, and the latter being one which gives the creditor the right to collect such debt as a priority out of property in the hands of another. Whart. Ag. § 623 et seq. It is not necessary that the attorney should have obtained a judgment for his client, in order to enforce his lien in a suit in equity. Koons v. Beach, 46 N. E. 587, 147 Ind. 137.

RETAXATION OF COSTS.

A retaxation of costs either affirms, modifies, or corrects the taxation had. A new taxation necessarily implies that the former taxation is vacated or annulled. Baker v. Coddington, 8 Misc. Rep. 512, 513, 23 N. Y. Supp. 5.

RETIRE.

The word "retire," in reference to a bill of exchange, is susceptible of various meanings, according as it is applied to various circumstances. If the acceptor retires the bill at maturity, he takes it entirely from circulation, and it is, in effect, paid; but, if an indorser retires it, he merely withdraws it from circulation in so far as he himself is concerned, and may hold it with the same remedies as he would have had if he had been called upon in due course, and had paid the amount to his immediate indorsee; and this latter is the ordinary meaning of the word "retire." Elsam v. Denny, 15 C. B. 87, 94, 25 Eng. Law & Eq. 423, 431.

RETIRED OFFICERS.

A finding of a retiring board that an officer be retired from active service for incapacity, etc., approved by the President, made him a retired officer, etc. Potts v. United States, 8 Sup. Ct. 830, 831, 125 U. S. 173, 31 L. Ed. 661.

RETIREMENT.

"Retirement," as used in a fidelity insurance policy, providing that the liability of the insurer for the acts of a president of a bank shall cease with his retirement, is not effected by the mere suspension of the bank and the taking possession thereof by an examiner; and, in the absence of some other action, he continues in such service at least until a receiver is appointed by the Comptroller. American Surety Co. of New York v. Pauly, 18 Sup. Ct. 563, 170 U. S. 160, 42 L. Ed. 987.

RETRANSFER.

Where defendant stored machines with complainant, its agent, to be conveniently delivered to other agents in the state, and the contract between defendant and complainant declared that he should be allowed compensation for the retransfer of such machines, but that he should ship at the order of defendant all unused machines free of charge, and on demand of an agent of defendant all machines were surrendered, and, by such agent's direction, immediately transferred to parties who had been appointed agents instead of complainant, there was not a retransfer of the machine, within the meaning of the contract. A surrender of the machines and goods on hand at the termination of the agency cannot be construed as a retransfer to other agents. Brown v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. (Tenn.) 59 S. W. 196, 202.

RETRAXIT.

A retraxit, at common law, is an open, voluntary renunciation of a claim in court, whereby the party making the same forever loses his action. Pethatel v. McCullough, 39 S. E. 199, 200, 49 W. Va. 520; Westbay v. Gray, 48 Pac. 800, 802, 116 Cal. 660; Loomis v. Green, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 386, 391; Russell v. Rolfe, 50 Ala. 56, 57. It has long been practically obsolete in England (Chitty, Gen. Prac. 1515), and certainly has never been recognized in this state or the earlier territory. Walker v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 52 Minn. 127, 53 N. W. 1068, 1069.

A retraxit occurred at common law when a plaintiff came into court in person and voluntarily renounced his suit or cause of action, and when this was done, and a judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff's cause of action was forever gone. Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 660, 48 Pac. 800. An instance where, by agreement of the party, an order of dismissal is entered, which operated as a retraxit, is found in Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 542. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Portener, 72 Pac. 716, 139 Cal. 90.

A technical retraxit is where a plaintiff, after declaration filed, comes personally into the court in which his action is brought, and declares he will not proceed further in it, and this is a bar to any subsequent suit for the same cause of action. A retraxit must always be in person. If it is by attorney, it is error. It cannot be before a declaration, for before a declaration it is only a nonsuit. In the case in hand, the plaintiff did not go personally into court, and there was no declaration filed. It cannot, therefore, be considered as a retraxit, for, although the words "withdraw forever" are used in the paper filed, we cannot suppose that the parties had in their mind a legal, technical rule, obliterated where it is not worn out, even in the professional mind, merely from the affinity of the word "withdraw" to the word

"retraxit." Lowry v. McMillan, 8 Pa. (3 Barr) 157, 163, 49 Am. Dec. 501.

A retraxit is a proceeding by which the plaintiff withdraws himself from the action altogether. It is an open, voluntary, and final renunciation of his suit in court, by which he forever loses his action. Napier v. Gidiere (S. C.) Cheves, 101, 102.

Dismissal distinguished.

A dismissal, as the term is used in modern practice, does not amount to a retraxit at common law. Nor does a dismissal constitute a nonsuit. Bullock v. Perry, 2 Stew. & P. 319.

Nolle prosequi distinguished.

The nature of a nol. pros. in civil cases was not accurately ascertained and defined until modern times, some of the older authorities considering it a retraxit operating to release or discharge the action, and an absolute bar to another action for the same cause; but in later cases, which have been adhered to ever since, a nol. pros. is considered not to be in the nature of a retraxit, but only an agreement not to proceed further as to some of the defendants or as to some of the suit, but he is at liberty to go on as to the rest. Davenport v. Newton, 42 Atl. 1087, 1092, 71 Vt. 11.

"A retraxit 'is where a plaintiff cometh in person in court, where his action is brought, and saith he will not proceed in it; and this is a bar to the action forever. It is so called because it is the emphatic word in the Latin entry.' * * * It differs from a nolle prosequi, in that it is a bar to any future action for the same cause, whereas the nolle prosequi is not, unless made after judgment." Broward v. Roche, 21 Fla. 465, 477.

Nonsuit distinguished.

A nonsuit is to be distinguished from a retraxit. Minor v. Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria, 26 U. S. (1 Pet.) 46, 7 L. Ed. 47. Blackstone defines the difference as follows: "A retraxit differs from a nonsuit in this: One is negative, and the other positive. The nonsuit is a mere default or neglect of the plaintiff, and therefore he is allowed to begin his suit again upon payment of costs; but a retraxit is an open, voluntary renunciation of his claim in court, and by this he forever loses his action." 3 Comm. 296. And it has been held that a judgment of dismissal, when based upon, and entered in pursuance of, the agreement of the parties, must be understood, in the absence of anything to the contrary expressed in the agreement and contained in the judgment itself, to amount to such an adjustment of the merits of the controversy, by the parties themselves, through the judgment of the court, as will constitute a defense to another action afterwards brought upon the same cause of action. United States v. Parker, 7 Sup. Ct. 454, 458, 120 U. S. 89, 30 L. Ed. 601; Evans v. McMahan, 1 Ala. 45, 47; Civ. Code Ga. 1895, §§ 5042, 5053.

It is improper to enter a retraxit, or a judgment on the entry of a retraxit, having the effect of a judgment upon the merits, without the personal consent of the plaintiff in the action. Such is the rule of the English common law, and, in the absence of statute, such is the rule in this country. Hallack v. Loft, 34 Pac. 568, 570, 19 Colo. 74; Worke v. Byers, 10 N. C. 228, 231.

A retraxit is a form of estoppel by record which differs from a nonsuit, in that one is negative and the other positive. The nonsuit is a mere default and neglect of the plaintiff, and therefore he is allowed to begin his suit again upon payment of costs; but a retraxit is an open and voluntary renunciation of his suit in court, and by this he forever loses his action. When properly entered, the retraxit is a total relinquishment of the suit, and will operate as a present and perpetual release, surrender, and abandonment of all right of action in the subject-matter in dispute, so that at no subsequent time can the retractor in any form of action contest with the defendant his right or title to, or the possession of, the rights or property in the suit. Thompson v. Thompson (Ky.) 65 S. W. 457, 459. See, also, Herring v. Portitz, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 208, 211.

Nonsuit is on default, but where plaintiff appears it is a retraxit. South Branch R. Co. v. Long, 23 W. Va. 692, 700.

RETREAT TO THE WALL.

By the words "retreat to the wall," as applied to the case of a party threatened with assault by another, is not meant that a party must always fly, or even attempt to fly. The circumstances of the attack may be such, the weapon with which he is assailed of such a character, that retreat might well increase his peril. By "retreat to the wall" is only meant that the party must avail himself of any apparently reasonable avenue of escape by which his danger might be averted, and the necessity of slaying his assailant avoided. People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 115, 120.

RETROACTIVE LAW.

See "Retrospective Law."

RETROCESSION.

A retrocession means the restitution of an ancient title to the true owner. Such an act confers no new title. It merely recognizes and confirms a previously existing title in another. Amet v. Boyer, 9 South. 622, 627, 43 La. Ann. 562.

RETROSPECTIVE LAW.

A law is retrospective, in its legal sense, which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions or considerations already past. Perry v. City of Denver, 59 Pac. 747, 748, 27 Colo. 93; Deland v. Platte Co. (U. S.) 54 Fed. 823, 832; Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 756, 767; Dodin v. Dodin, 40 N. Y. Supp. 748, 751, 17 Misc. Rep. 35; Gaston v. Merriam, 22 N. W. 614, 619, 33 Minn. 271.

A retrospective law is one which changes or injuriously effects a present right, by going behind it and giving efficacy to anterior circumstances to defeat it, which they had not when the right accrued. Poole v. Fleeger, 36 U. S. (12 Pet.) 185, 198, 9 L. Ed. 680, 955.

Upon principle, every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a disability in respect to transactions or considerations already past, must be deemed retrospective. Sturges v. Carter, 5 Sup. Ct. 1014, 1018, 114 U. S. 511, 29 L. Ed. 240.

An act taking away vested rights, and giving rights which had been extinguished by the general laws of the state, is retrospective. Town of Bradford v. Brooks, 2 Aikens (Vt.) 284, 294, 16 Am. Dec. 715.

A retrospective law is one that relates back to and gives to a previous transaction some different legal effect from that which it had under the law when it transpired. State v. Whittlesey, 50 Pac. 119, 121, 17 Wash. 447.

A retrospective law is one that gives a right where none before existed, and, by relation back, gives a party the benefit of it. Sutherland v. De Leon, 1 Tex. 250, 305, 46 Am. Dec. 100.

Acts of the Legislature which look back upon interests already settled, or events which have already happened, are retrospective; and the Constitution has, in direct terms, prohibited them, because highly injurious, oppressive, and unjust. But perhaps their invalidity results no more from this express prohibition than from the circumstance that in their nature and effect they are not within the legitimate exercise of legislative power. For though, under the name of the ex post facto laws, when made for the punishment of offenses, they have long been severely reprobated, because more common in times of commotion, and because they endanger the character and person as well as the property, yet laws for the decision of civil causes made after the facts on which they operate, ex jure post facto, are alike retrospective, and rest on reasons alike fallacious. Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 199, 213, 8 Am. Dec. 52.

A retrospective law for the decision of civil causes is a law prescribing the rules by which existing causes are to be decided upon facts existing previously to the making of the law. Instead of being rules for the decision of future cases, as all laws are in their very essence, retrospective laws for the decision of civil causes are in their nature judicial determinations of the rules by which existing causes shall be settled upon existing facts. Dow v. Norris, 4 N. H. 16, 18, 17 Am. Dec. 400.

A statute does not operate retroactively from the mere fact that it relates to the antecedent facts. A retrospective law has been defined as one intended to affect transactions which occurred or rights which accrued before it became operative as such, and which ascribes to them effects not inherent in their language, in view of the law in force at the time of their occurrence. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. State, 66 N. W. 624, 627, 628, 47 Neb. 549, 41 L. R. A. 481, 53 Am. St. Rep. 557 (citing Black, Interp. Laws, p. 237).

"It is a principle which has always been held sacred in the United States that laws by which human action is to be regulated look forward, not backward, and are never to be construed retrospectively unless the language of the act should render that indispensable." Ladiga v. Roland, 43 U. S. (2 How.) 581, 589, 11 L. Ed. 387.

The words "retrospective law," as used in Const. art. 11, providing that no retrospective law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall be made, does not mean retrospective laws in general, for then no law could be made for the remuneration of past services, not even of members of Assembly, their clerks and doorkeepers, at the end of each session of the assembly. Nor could further time be given for the probate and registration of deeds, of which there never was any doubt, from the first Assembly after the formation of the Constitution to this day. Nor can it mean laws made for the preservation and establishment of just rights and titles, which have become imperfect and infirm by the nonobservance of some legal ceremony, for these laws are not to take away rights, but to confirm and establish them. There are some retrospective laws which it does prohibit—ex post facto laws, for instance, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts. These are justly prohibited, because they destroy existing rights, not preserve them from destruction.

Bell v. Perkins, 7 Tenn. (Peck) 261, 266, 14 Am. Dec. 745.

A "retrospective statute," in its legal sense, according to text-writers and many well-considered cases on the subject, embraces a statute which abrogates an existing right of action or defense, or creates a new obligation on transactions or considerations already past. Such laws have always been regarded with distrust, for frequently thereby liabilities were imposed which were oppressive and unjust, the effect of which could not be avoided on the ground that they were ex post facto or impaired the obligation of contracts, and it was to prevent such legislation that several of the states have an express constitutional inhibition against legislation of this character. Evans v. City of Denver, 57 Pac. 696, 697, 26 Colo. 193.

Whether a statute falls within the prohibition of Const. art. 2, § 28, forbidding the General Assembly of the state from passing retroactive laws, depends on the character of the relief that it provides. If it creates a new right, rather than affords a new remedy to enforce an existing right, it is prohibited by this clause of the Constitution. In Society for Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 756, Judge Story defines a retrospective or retroactive law as follows: "On principle, every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation imposing a new duty, or attaches a new liability in respect to transactions or considerations already passed, may be deemed retrospective." This definition was approved in Rairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 207. Commissioners of Hamilton County v. Rosche, 50 Ohio St. 103, 111, 33 N. E. 408, 19 L. R. A. 584, 40 Am. St. Rep. 653; Leete v. State Bank of St. Louis, 115 Mo. 184, 190, 21 S. W. 788.

An act authorizing a probate court to renew a commission, appointing commissioners of claims upon the estate of a deceased person after such commissions have been closed, and after the expiration of the time limited by the general law for such renewal, is retrospective in its effect, and goes to take away rights vested by the general law, and to give rights extinguished by the general law, and is one which courts cannot enforce. Town of Bradford v. Brooks (Vt.) 2 Aikens, 284, 295, 16 Am. Dec. 715.

Curative acts.

The term "retrospective statute" includes curative acts. Conde v. City of Schenectady, 58 N. E. 130, 132, 164 N. Y. 258.

As ex post facto law.

A retrospective law, within the meaning of the Constitution, prohibiting retrospective laws, must be a law made to punish an act previously done, or to increase the punishment of such act, or in some way to change the rules of law in relation to its punishment to the prejudice of him who commits it. In other words, it must be a law establishing a new rule for the punishment of an act already done. Woart v. Winnick, 3 N. H. 473, 476, 14 Am. Dec. 384.

The word "retrospective," as used in the Constitution of Colorado, inhibiting the passage of any ex post facto law or one retrospective in operation, has reference to civil cases, and is synonymous with the term "ex post facto" as applied to the criminal law. French v. Deane, 36 Pac. 609, 612, 19 Colo. 504, 24 L. R. A. 387.

The term "retrospective law" includes every law that takes away or impairs rights vested agreeably to existing laws. Every ex post facto law is necessarily retrospective, but every retrospective law is not necessarily ex post facto, as the latter term is limited to criminal laws. Calder v. Bull, 3 U. S. (3 Dall.) 386, 390, 1 L. Ed. 648.

Const. art. 11, § 20, providing that no retrospective law shall be made, prohibits ex post facto laws. Bell v. Perkins, 7 Tenn. (Peck) 261, 267, 14 Am. Dec. 745.

A statute which repeals an act limiting the time within which crimes shall be prescribed is a retrospective law, but not an ex post facto one. State v. Moore, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 208, 231.

As law impairing obligation of contracts.

There is a marked distinction between a law which impairs the obligation of contracts and one which is retrospective in its operation. Leete v. State Bank of St. Louis, 115 Mo. 184, 199, 21 S. W. 788.

The clause of Bill of Rights, § 20, providing that no retrospective law or law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be made, taken in its common and unrestrained sense, extends to all prior times, persons, and transactions, whether civil or criminal; yet certainly there are some cases coming within its general scope to which it does not extend. It does not extend to ex post facto laws, for they are prohibited by Bill of Rights, § 11. It does not extend to a law for extenuation or mitigation of offenses, the remission of penalties or forfeitures. The whose clause, and both sentences taken together, mean that no retrospective law which impairs the obligation of contracts, or any other law which impairs their obligation, shall be made, the latter words relating equally to both the preceding substantives; and therefore the term "retrospective" alone, without the explanatory words, can have no influence in this discussion. Townsend v. Townsend, 7 Tenn. (Peck) 1, 15, 14 Am. Dec. 722.

Retrospective synonymous.

The words "retrospective" and "retrospective," as applied to laws, seem to be synonymous. Rairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 207, 210.

As applying to rights alone.

The word "retrospective," as used in the Constitution, providing that no retrospective law shall be made, embraces the rights, and not modes of redress. The last, from the nature of things, must be left open to legislative modification. Jones v. Jones, 2 Tenn. (2 Overt.) 2, 5, 5 Am. Dec. 645.

Laws affecting remedies are not within the scope of retrospective laws. Paschal v. Perez, 7 Tex. 348, 349, 365.

Retrospective laws which are prohibited by the Constitution are acts which give a right where none before existed, and, by relation back, give the party the benefit of it. But where a right already exists, it is within the legislative power to provide a remedy. Sutherland v. De Leon, 1 Tex. 250, 304, 46 Am. Dec. 100.

The term "retrospective," in the Bill of Rights, embraces laws which are not included in the description of ex post facto laws, or laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but which destroy or impair vested rights according to the laws of the land. A retrospective law literally means a law which looks backward, or on things that are past. If it be understood in its literal meaning, without regard to the intent, then all laws having an effect on past transactions are prohibited. Laws which affect the remedy merely are not within the scope of the inhibition against retrospective laws, unless the remedy be entirely taken away, or be incumbered with conditions which would render it impracticable. De Cordova v. City of Galveston, 4 Tex. 470, 473.

A law is not necessarily within the prohibition of the twenty-third article of the Bill of Rights, providing that retrospective laws are highly injurious, oppressive, and unjust, and declaring that no such laws should be made, either for the decision of civil causes or the punishment of offenses, because it looks back upon past transactions. It is not necessarily outside of the prohibition because it affects the remedy, or, if it affects the remedy only, and the court cannot say that it affects it injuriously, oppressively, or unjustly, the law should be regarded as constitutional. The question of the validity of a statute affecting the remedy merely is whether it is just or unjust. Simpson v. City Sav. Bank, 56 N. H. 466, 471, 22 Am. Rep. 491.

RETURN.

See "False Return"; "Sale and Return"; "Voluntary Return."

To return is to come back from him to whom it was given. Micheau v. Crawford, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 90, 112.

"Returns," as used in a will providing that, in case any of testator's sons or daughters die without issue, their share returns to testator's sons and daughters, equally among them, would seem to imply that the deceased son or daughter from whom the share was to return to the survivors should have already taken it under the devise. Harris v. Dyer, 28 Atl. 971, 972, 18 R. I. 540.

Under a charter party by which the owner agrees to deliver the vessel to the charterer, who agrees to return her in as good condition as when received, it is held that the words "deliver" and "return" are to be construed liberally, and not in a technical sense. Auten v. Bennett, 84 N. Y. Supp. 689, 692, 88 App. Div. 15.

As to go to or pass.

"Return," as used in a will bequeathing property to certain legatees, but providing that on the death of such legatees the property should return to testator's legatees, means to go or to pass. Micheau v. Crawford, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 90, 96.

As remain.

"Return," as used by a testator in devising his property to his son Abraham "during his life and to John during his life; for default of male issue the land shall return to the said Abraham and John"—means to "remain," in order to effectuate the testator's intent of creating estates in tail male. McMurtrie v. McMurtrie, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 276, 286.

As repay.

"Returning," as used in a municipal ordinance authorizing the raising of certain money by the pledge or hypothecation of stock held by the city, and afterwards speaking of returning the money so raised, means repaying. City of Baltimore v. Gill, 31 Md. 375, 388.

As return day.

The word "return" in a justice's docket reciting that the cause was called on, and judgment rendered on, the return of process, was construed to mean "return day," and not the actual return of process; the court saying that the two terms were frequently used as synonymous. Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205-211.

As transmission and deposit.

"Return," as used in land acts, requiring the certificate or other evidence of right to land to be returned with the survey, means the transmission to and deposit of the certificate in the general land office, with intent that it should there remain, and not a retransmission and redeposit after the certificate or survey had once been deposited in the general land office and afterwards withdrawn. Snider v. Methvin, 60 Tex. 487, 495.

In limitations.

"Return," as used in a statute of limitations, declaring that on the debtor's return into the state after an absence therefrom the statute should again be put in operation, means a bona fide return within the state for the purpose of taking up the debtor's domicile again therein. The word applies as well to persons coming from abroad as to citizens of the state going abroad and then returning. The coming into the state must not be clandestine; and the intent, to defraud the creditor by setting the statute in operation and then departing. The return must be so public and under such circumstances as to give the creditor an opportunity, by the use of ordinary diligence and due opportunity, of arresting the debtor. Campbell v. White, 22 Mich. 178, 183 (citing Fowler v. Hunt [N. Y.] 10 Johns. 464, 465).

"Return," as used in the statute of limitations, where it is provided that actions are suspended as against persons out of the limits of the commonwealth, but that it begins to run from the time of such person's return, means a return with a design to again dwell within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth, and not to lurk in it as a place of concealment. White v. Bailey, 3 Mass. 271, 273.

A return into the state, sufficient to set the statute of limitations running, must be open and notorious, and under such circumstances that the creditor could, with reasonable diligence, find his debtor and serve him with process. A debtor might return to the state for a few hours in the nighttime or on Sunday, or he might be in the state on his progress through it, and a return might be of such a character that it might be concealed from and unknown to the creditor, and which would afford him no opportunity by use of reasonable diligence to serve his debtor with process. These are not a return to the state within the meaning of the act. Engel v. Fischer, 7 N. E. 300, 301, 102 N. Y. 400, 55 Am. Rep. 818.

"Return," as used in 2 Rev. St. 297, § 27, providing that if, at the time when a cause of action shall accrue against any person, he shall be out of the state, the action may be commenced within the terms limited after the "return" of such person into the state, is satisfied by deducting the first absence after the cause of action has accrued. If the defendant returns under such circumstances as to set the statute in operation, it continues to run notwithstanding any subsequent departure of the debtor. Cole v. Jessup (N. Y.) 2 Barb. 309, 815.

"Return," as used in the statute of limitations enacting that the time continues to run after a debtor's "return" to the state, contemplates but one return. Ingraham v. Bowle, 33 Miss. 17, 21.

The statute of limitations (section 10) excepts from its operations actions against debtors absent from the state at the time the cause of action accrues, and provides that after such absent persons coming or returning into the state the same time is limited for the bringing of the action as in other cases. It was held that a mere temporary return without the creditor's knowledge did not set the statute to running; the court saying: "It cannot be supposed that every coming or return into the state would set the statute in operation. It is admitted that it must be such as that by due diligence the creditor might cause an arrest. If the creditor should remove or return into the state publicly, and with a view to dwell and permanently reside within its jurisdiction, although in an extreme part from the place of his former residence or that of a creditor, this would undoubtedly bring the case, by a correct construction of the statute, within its operation, though the creditor should have no knowledge of his return. So, too, if a debtor, having no intention to reside here, comes or returns into the state, and this is known to the creditor, and he has opportunity to arrest the body, the case is brought within the statute. In the latter case it is necessary the creditor should be apprised of his debtor's being within the jurisdiction of this state. Within what distance of the creditor's residence the debtor shall come, how long he shall remain, and how publicly he shall sojourn, cannot be settled by any general rule. We therefore believe the only safe and practical rule is to require proof of actual knowledge where the residence is only temporary."—Mazon v. Foot (Vt.) 1 Aikens, 282, 285, 15 Am. Dec. 679.

The word "return," as used in Pub. St. 1882, c. 205, § 5, providing, if any person against whom there shall be a cause of action in favor of a resident of the state shall go out of the state, the person entitled to the action may commence the same within the time limited after such person shall return to the state, applies equally to a first entry as to a second one. Oottrell v. Kenney (R. I.) 54 Atl. 1010, 1011.

Same—Nonresidents.

"Return," as used in the statute of limitations, providing that if a cause of action accrues against any person who is out of the state it may be commenced within the time limited after his "return" into the state, will be construed to mean to come into it, so that the statute applies to nonresidents. Weber v. Yancy, 34 Pac. 473, 474, 7 Wash. 84; Allen v. Allen (Cal.) 27 Pac. 30, 31; Whitcomb v. Keator, 18 N. W. 469, 470, 59 Wis. 609; Tagart v. State of Indiana, 15 Mo. 209, 210, 214; Burrows v. French, 13 S. E. 355, 34 S. C. 165, 27 Am. St. Rep. 811.

In the statute of limitations, providing that, if any person against whom there is or shall be a cause of action is or shall be without the limits of the republic at the time of the accruing of such action, or at any time during which the same might have been maintained, then the person entitled to such action shall be at liberty to bring the same against such person or persons "after his or their return" to the republic, and the time of such person's absence shall not be counted or taken as a part of the time limited by the statute after his or their return, is not equivalent to "after his or their emigration or removal to the republic." It does not make "returning to a place" and "coming to it for the first time" equivalent expressions. Foreigners residing abroad and coming into the state for the first time are not in the class included within the intent of the statute. In its terms reference is made only to persons within the territorial limits being subject to action, and their return. Although a foreigner who has always resided out of the country may be truly described as being without its limits, it cannot be predicated of him, if he afterwards come to the country, that he has returned, at least as long as the terms have the meaning imported to them by the given consent of those who employed them as a medium for the communication of ideas. Snoddy v. Cage, 5 Tex. 106, 107.

The statute of limitations (Rev. Code 1835, p. 394), providing that if at the time an action accrues against a person he be out of the state the statute shall commence to run on his "return," does not contemplate only residents who occasionally go abroad, but it was designed to apply to foreigners who always reside out of the state, and who may be found within it, to be served with process. King v. Lane, 7 Mo. 241, 243, 37 Am. Dec. 187.

"Returns," as used in reference to foreign corporations returning to the state within the meaning of the statute of limitations, means establishing an agent therein upon whom process can be served as its representative. Burns v. White Swan Min. Co., 57 Pac. 637, 638, 35 Or. 305.

The provision in the statute of limitations that the time any defendant is absent from the state shall not be counted in allowing suit after his "return," does not apply to nonresidents who have never been in the state. Hyman v. Bayne, 83 Ill. 256, 260.

"Return," as used in the statute of limitations, providing that, if the debtor is out of the state at the time the cause of action arises against him, the statute shall not commence to run until after the return of the defendant, does not confine the operation of the statute to citizens temporarily going abroad, but applies equally to foreigners who always resided abroad. Rugles v. Keeler (N. Y.) 3 Johns. 263, 267, 3 Am. Dec. 482.

Return of advancement into hotchpot.

A statute requiring advancements to be "brought into hotchpot" with the whole real and personal estate descended, and that such party returning such advancements as aforesaid shall be entitled to his proper portion, etc., "does not mean that the party should relinquish his interest in that particular property, but it is intended to be brought in for the purpose of being taken into consideration in making distribution of the entire estate, in order to ascertain whether it amounts to his full share of the estate." Jackson v. Jackson, 28 Miss. (6 Cushm.) 674, 680, 64 Am. Dec. 114.

Return of attachment.

Code 1873, § 3010, provides that "the sheriff shall return upon every attachment what he has done under it. The return must show the property attached, the time it was attached, and the disposition made of it, by a full and particular inventory," etc., and that such "return must be made immediately after he shall have attached sufficient property, or all that he can find, or, at latest, on the first day of the first term at which the defendant is notified to appear." There is no time fixed within which the levy must be made, and, as the return consists in the account in writing, made by the sheriff, of the manner in which he has executed the writ, the limitation as to the time when the return must be made refers necessarily to a time after the writ has been executed. Westphal v. Sherwood, 28 N. W. 640, 641, 69 Iowa, 364.

Return of bill, as presented.

"Return," as used in the constitution, providing that, if any bill shall not be "returned" within ten days after it shall have been presented to the Governor, the same shall be a law, must be a step taken by which his own time for deliberation is ended, and that for the deliberation of the Senate is begun; that the bill itself must be put beyond the executive possession; that it must be placed in the possession, actual or potential, of the Senate itself. The word "return," as applicable to the bill itself, is equivalent to the word "presented." Har-pending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189, 199, 2 Am. Rep. 432.

Return of process.

The return of a writ of summons is the answer made by the officer indorsed on the writ certifying to the court the fact and manner of service. Horton v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 349, 355 (citing Burrill, Law Dict.).

A "return" is a short account in writing, made by the sheriff, of the manner in which he has executed his writ. Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11 Iowa, 387, 391.

"Return" of an officer is a written statement of what he has done in the process in his hands. Davis v. Reaves, 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 585, 589; Aultman v. McGrady, 12 N. W. 233, 234, 58 Iowa, 118.

A "return" is an official statement by an officer of what he has done in obedience to a command from superior authority, or why he has done nothing, whichever is required. State v. Bulkeley, 23 Atl. 186, 188, 61 Conn. 287, 14 L. R. A. 657.

"Return" has the specific legal meaning of a short account in writing, made by a ministerial officer, of the manner in which he has executed a writ, and where it occurs in the statute regulating fees it will be presumed to have been used in its technical sense. Phillips County v. Pillow, 1 S. W. 686, 687, 47 Ark. 404 (citing Steph. Pl. 24).

The very term "return" implies that the process is taken back to the place where it is issued. A thing delivered by one person to another is not returned when it is delivered to a stranger, and at a place other than the place of original delivery. In contemplation of the statutes, every process is to be returned to the court or commissioner which issued it and for the purpose of computing the mileage of the marshal the place of return is the place of issue. So held in an action by a marshal for fees for travel from and to the place of issuing a warrant, where the warrant required him to arrest a prisoner and take him before a commissioner who resided nearer the place of arrest than the place where the warrant was issued. United States v. Landrum (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 816, 817.

A "return" of an execution is the statement by the officer, certified to the court under the sanction of his official oath and responsibility, of what he has done touching the execution of the writ, according to the commands and requirements of the law, and may properly contain the facts touching his acts under the mandate and the law. Hutton v. Campbell, 78 Tenn. (10 Lea) 170, 173.

A "return to process" is the officer's answer touching the service or execution of such process. It is usually in the form of a certificate, and is indorsed on the writ, process, or paper, but it must be signed by the officer making it. Iselin v. Henlein (N. Y.) 16 Abb. N. O. 73, 75 (citing Crocker, Sheriffs [2d Ed.] § 39).

A "return" is nothing but the sheriff's answer relative to that which he is commanded to do by the writ, and is intended to inform the court of the truth of that alone which it concerns them to know. Third persons ought not to be injured by a return because the sheriff has departed from its proper object and mingled with it a relevant matter. Smith v. Kelly, 7 N. C. 507, 510.

A "return" may be considered as the certificate of the officer to whom any process is directed, stating what he has done in obedience to the command therein given, or the reason of his neglect in not fulfilling them, and is a material part of his duty. Herm. Ex'ns, p. 373. Our statute requires this return to be made in writing, and that the name of the officer be signed to his return. Sand. & H. Dig. § 6003. But this would probably be the law even without the statute. The filing by a constable of an execution with the justice who issued it, with an oral report that it was still unsatisfied, which return was entered in the docket of the justice, held not a return within the above section. Jones v. Goodbar, 60 Ark. 182, 185, 29 S. W. 462, 463.

The word "return," as used in Gen. St. 1894, § 5204, providing that when defendant cannot be found within the state of which the "return" of the sheriff of the county in which the action is brought that the defendant cannot be found in the county is prima facie evidence, means merely the sheriff's certificate without regard to whether it has been filed or not, though literally the word "return," as applied to a writ, which a summons is not, includes not only the certificate of the sheriff, but also the filing of it in court. Easton v. Childs, 67 Minn. 242, 244, 69 N. W. 903.

The word "return," as used in the chapter relating to service and return of writs of habeas corpus, refers to and means the report made by the officer or person charged with serving the writ of habeas corpus, and also the answer made by the person served with such writ. Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1895, art. 205.

Return to writ of mandamus.

The office of a return to a peremptory writ of mandamus by the respondent therein is to show a compliance by him with the order of the court. This return, however, is not conclusive, and the relator may controvert its truthfulness by a motion to require the respondent to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt for disobeying the order of the court in the particulars set forth in the motion. State v. Crites, 28 N. E. 178, 48 Ohio St. 460.

The return made to an alternative writ of mandamus stands in place of an answer in ordinary pleadings, and is insufficient unless it shows a complete legal right to refuse obedience to the commands of the alternative writ. It must state the facts which justify such refusal clearly, specifically, and with sufficient certainty that the court can see at once that such fact, if admitted or established, would furnish a legal alternative for obedience to the writ. Woodruff v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 59 Conn. 63, 86, 20 Atl. 17. The function of a return is not simply to show what would amount to a prima facie right in the respondent in the absence of any allegations to the contrary, but to show a right to refuse obedience to the writ in view of the allegations the writ contains. Williams v. City of New Haven, 38 Atl. 61, 62, 68 Conn. 263.

RETURN DAY.

Return day is the day appointed by law when writs are to be returned and filed. Bankers' Iowa State Bank v. Jordan, 82 N. W. 779, 780, 111 Iowa, 324.

The words "return day," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1115, providing that when an elector contests the right of a person declared elected he must, within 40 days after the "return day" of such election, file a statement, is not the day on which the result of the election is declared, but the day on which the canvass begins under Pol. Code, §§ 1278, 1280, 1281, declaring that the board of supervisors shall meet on the first Monday after the election to canvass the returns. Carlson v. Burt, 43 Pac. 583, 111 Cal. 129.

RETURNABLE.

"Returnable," is defined by Webster to mean capable of being returned; in law, legally required to be returned, as a writ returnable at a certain day. Daniels v. Lewis, 4 Pac. 57, 59, 7 Colo. 430.

RETURNABLE PROCESS.

The term "returnable process" is used to designate the process upon which the officer receiving it is bound to certify his doings. Utica City Bank v. Buell (N. Y.) 9 Abb. Prac. 385, 391.

RETURNED UNPAID.

The words "returned to us unpaid" in a notice of dishonor stating that, "Your draft is returned to us unpaid, and, if not taken up in the course of this day, proceedings will be taken against you," operates as a sufficient notice of dishonor. Robson v. Curlew, 1 Car. & M. 378, 379.

RETURNS.

The "returns" from a board of election consist of the certificate of the officers conducting the election, together with a list of voters and one of the tally lists. People v. Ruyle, 91 Ill. 525, 528.

The word "returns" in a statute providing that the returns are to be sealed up and delivered to the sheriff, and that the sheriff must deposit with the county clerk the returns of the different precincts, includes undestroyed ballots. Houston v. Steele, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 1149, 1151, 34 S. W. 6, 8.

The word "returns," as used in the city charter of St. Paul (Sp. Laws 1874, c. 1, subc. 2, § 6), requiring "the returns for all city elections to be made to the city clerk," means an official statement of votes cast at an election transmitted to the clerk for the purpose of being canvassed by some proper authority. State v. Common Council of City of St. Paul, 25 Minn. 108, 108.

In election laws the word "returns" no doubt often refers particularly to the official count, but the poll lists are a part of the returns required to be transmitted by the judges of election to the county auditor under Laws 1889, c. 174. Slingerland v. Norton, 61 N. W. 322, 59 Minn. 351.

A certificate of the number of votes given for county commissioners at a town meeting, and of the result, signed, "Attest, J. S." without showing that it was a copy of the record, or that "J. S." was a town clerk, was not a "return" within Rev. St. c. 14, § 17, requiring the board of examiners to receive the return from the clerk. Luce v. Mayhew, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 83, 85.

REVEL.

"Revel," as used in a complaint charging that the defendant did "revel," quarrel, commit mischief, and otherwise behave in a disorderly manner, means to behave in a noisy, boisterous manner, like a bacchanalian. The word "revel" has a precise and definite meaning. One of its definitions is to act like a bacchanalian. In re Began, 12 R. I. 309 (citing Webst. Dict. Unab.).

REVENDEICATION.

"Revendication" means to reclaim; to demand the restoration of. Smart v. Bibbins, 34 South. 49, 109 La. 986.

"Revendication" in the civil law has been defined to be the right of an unpaid vendor on the insolvency of the vendee to reclaim in specie such part of the goods as remain in the hands of the vendee entire, and without having changed its quality. Benedict v. Schaettle, 12 Ohio St. 515, 520.

"Revendication" is an action which relates to claims made on immovable property, or to the immovable rights to which they are subjected, the object of which is to recover the ownership or possession of such property, and is the proper action to be brought for the purpose of ascertaining the legal title and consequent right of possession of the heir at law to the succession when another is in possession under claim of title by virtue of a will admitted to probate. Ellis v. Davis, 3 Sup. Ct. 327, 328, 109 U. S. 485, 27 L. Ed. 1006.

REVENGE.

"Revenge" is defined to be a malicious injury inflicted in return for an injury. People v. Pierson, 3 Pac. 688, 690, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 76.

REVENUE.

See "General Revenues"; "Municipal Revenue."

The word "revenue" means the income of the government arising from taxation, excise, and the like. State v. School Fund Com'rs, 4 Kan. 261, 268; Commonwealth v. Bailey, 3 Ky. Law Rep. 110, 117.

The lexical definition of the term "revenue" is very comprehensive, and is given by Webster as "the income of a nation derived from its taxes, duties, or other sources, for the payment of the nation's expenses." United States v. Norton (N. Y.) 2 Cow. Cr. Rep. 358, 361.

"Revenue" is the product or fruit of taxation. It matters not in what form the power of taxation may be exercised or to what subjects it may be applied, its exercise is intended to provide means for the support of the government, and the means provided are necessarily to be regarded as the internal revenue. Duties upon imports are imposed for the same general object, and because they are so imposed the money thus produced is considered revenue, not because it is derived from any particular source." United States v. Wright, 3 Pittsb. R. 192, 194, 28 Fed. Cas. 789.

The first definition of the word "revenue" given by Worcester is "income or annual profit received from lands or other property." Where a canal company transferred all the tolls and revenues to be derived from the use of the canal for the payment therefrom of certain expenses and expenditures, the word "revenue" was held broad enough to cover income derived from the sale of ice formed in the canal. Cromie v. Trustees of Wabash & E. Canal, 71 Ind. 208, 216.

As estimated revenue.

Under a statute (Pol. Code, § 4070) providing that the board of county supervisors must not contract debts or liabilities in excess of the "revenue" of the county for current expenses, it was held that the word "revenue" could not mean the actual money which shall be received in the county treasury, since to give the word this interpretation would render it impossible for the board to comply with the direction of the statute, as the amount can never be ascertained until all the assessments have been collected and paid into the treasury, but in view of the context the word "revenue" should be construed to mean "estimated revenue." Babcock v. Goodrick, 47 Cal. 488, 513.

As license fee.

Where a city levied a license fee in the exercise of its police power, and provided that the revenue derived from such license should be expended in a particular manner, the word "revenue" was used in the same sense as "money received from the license," and did not indicate that the tax was levied in the exercise of the city's power to tax for the purpose of defraying governmental expenditures, and not in the exercise of the police power and regulation of certain occupations. Van Sant v. Harlem Stage Co., 59 Md. 330, 334.

A city charter empowered the city to make and enforce by-laws to protect the city from fire, to establish districts within which it should not be lawful to erect any wooden buildings except by license of the city, and to enact ordinances relating to the subject. An ordinance of said city provided that no person should build or enlarge any building within the fire limits without a license first issued by the fire marshal, for which license a fine of 50 cents was required to be paid. It was held that the license, if required, was not a "revenue tax" in any appropriate sense, but rather a reasonable sum collected of the party interested for the purpose of defraying any part of the expense of issuing and recording the license, and that the power to require such a fee was conferred by the charter by intendment is convenient, if not essential, to the full enjoyment of the powers expressly granted. Welch v. Hotchkiss, 89 Conn. 140, 142, 12 Am. Rep. 383.

As moneys of ward.

The word "revenue" in New Code, art. 334, directing a tutor to invest in the name of his minor the revenues which exceed the expense of his ward whenever they amount to the sum of $500, means all moneys belonging to the minor that comes into the hands of the tutor in the course of administration. In re Watson, 26 South. 409, 410, 51 La. Ann. 1641.

Under the rule that under no circumstances can the expense of a minor for board, clothing, tuition, etc., exceed her "revenues" (Rev. Civ. Code, art. 350), a minor's "revenues" must be taken to be what remains each year after the payment of taxes for that year. Sims v. Billington, 24 South. 637, 640, 50 La. Ann. 968.

Postage included.

"Revenue" is the income of a state, and the revenue of the Post-Office Department, being raised by a tax on mailable matter conveyed in the mail, and which is disbursed in the public service, is as much a part of the income of the government as moneys collected for duties on imports. United States v. Bromley, 53 U. S. (12 How.) 88, 99, 13 L. Ed. 905.

As public revenue.

"Revenue," as used in the Constitution, requiring bills for raising revenue to originate in the lower branch of the Legislature, means such as might be imposed for the support of the state government and the payment of its ordinary expenses. Webster defines "revenue" to mean the annual profits of taxes, excise, customs duties, rents, etc., which a nation or state collects and receives into the treasury for public use. A tax to build bridges and roads is not for revenue, for the money raised thereby is not revenue. Labor produces money. The timber, stone, and gravel used in the construction of the road may be converted into money. It requires money to procure the labor, timber, stone, and gravel that may be used in the construction of the roads. Money, in this instance, is placed in the same class of adjuncts as building roads and highways with timber, stone, gravel, or labor, and as such is not revenue. Fletcher v. Oliver, 25 Ark. 289, 295.

"Revenue," as used in Sess. Laws 1879, p. 222, providing that appeals may be prosecuted in all cases relating to revenue, was used to embrace public revenue, whether state or municipal—to embrace all taxes and assessments imposed by public authority. It would not embrace suits for the recovery of fines and forfeitures, or suits on contracts, or other suits of the city. Webster v. People, 98 Ill. 343, 346.

The word "revenue" means the income which a state collects and receives into its treasury and has appropriated for the payment of its expenses, and hence the title of an act, "An act for the preservation of oysters and to obtain revenue for the privilege of taking them within the waters of the commonwealth," sufficiently states the object of the tax imposed, as required by

As return from capital invested.

"Revenue" means a return for capital invested or labor bestowed. In a general sense, it is the annual rents, profits, interests, or issues of any species of property, real or personal, belonging to an individual or the public. The revenue or income of a farm is the sum total which its owner receives from it. It is not the money borrowed by the owner, or an annuity which he may have owned and may have pledged to pay for it, or the money invested in stock, farming utensils, or fertilizers. People v. New York Cent. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 485, 490.

"Revenue" is defined by Worcester to mean: (1) Income or annual profit received from lands or other property; (2) the income of the nation or state derived from the duties, taxes, and other sources for the payment of the national expenses. It is defined by Webster to be: (1) That which returns or comes back from an investment; the annual rents, profit, interest, or issue in any species of property, real or personal; (2) hence return, reward, as a rich revenue of praise; (3) the annual product of taxes, excise customs, duties, rents, etc., which a nation or state collects and receives into the treasury for public use. The word is used in many senses. It is, like thousands of others in our language, ambiguous in meaning, the significance of which can only be properly determined by the words with which it is connected. Bates v. Porter, 15 Pac. 732, 739, 74 Cal. 224.

"Revenue" is the yearly income of a government or a person natural or artificial, from the property belonging to such government or person. Thus we speak of the revenues of the state of New York, of the New York Central Railroad Company, and the like, and we may also speak of the revenues of any individual, though the word is not so often applied to individuals. The canals of the state, not being the state, nor a corporation, nor a natural or artificial being, nor possessed as such of property or income, but simply public works, material structures, made and used for travel and transportation, and capable of yielding an income to their owners from such use, in a strict sense have no revenues, because they have no recognized individual legal existence. Strictly speaking, the canals only yield revenue, but it is the revenue of their owners, the state or the people. People v. New York Cent. R. Co. (N. Y.) 34 Barb. 123, 135.

Special assessment.

Under a statute providing for appeals "in all cases relating to revenue," a judgment confirming special assessments or improving a street made by a city relates to revenue, and is within the meaning of the statute. Herhold v. City of Chicago, 106 Ill. 547, 548.

Under a statute providing for appeals "in all cases relating to revenue" the word "revenue" embraces all taxes and assessments imposed by public authority. All public park assessments are included in the term. People v. Springer, 106 Ill. 542, 544.

Practice Act, § 88, as amended in 1879, provides that in all cases relating to the revenue, etc., appeals shall be taken directly to the Supreme Court. The word "revenue" in that clause embraces all taxes and assessments imposed by any public authority, and includes special assessments made by the city for any public improvement. Potwin v. Johnson, 106 Ill. 532, 533.

As taxes.

The term "revenue," when used in reference to funds derived from taxation, is best interpreted, in the absence of qualifying words or circumstances implying a different signification, as confined to the usual public income—taxation. The word is so used in the Revenue Laws of 1882, c. 62, in reference to the repeal of acts or parts of acts regarding the raising of revenue. "The statute did not contemplate other sources of public income than revenues and licenses of the classes enumerated in its several sections. Laughlin v. Santa Fé County Com'rs, 5 Pac. 817, 819, 3 N. M. (Johns.) 264.

The word "revenue," as used in the statute (section 88, Practice Act), as amended June 3, 1879, includes a proceeding to restrain the collection of taxes. In Webster v. People, 98 Ill. 343, it was held that the word "revenue," as used in the statute, embraces all taxes and assessments imposed by public authority. Phoenix Grain Stock Exch. v. Gleason, 22 Ill. App. 373, 374.

The word "revenue" in Practice Act, § 88, providing that all cases relating to the revenue shall be taken directly to the Supreme Court on appeal, embraces all taxes and assessments, including special assessments. Claypool Drainage & Levee Dist v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 81 Ill. App. 433, 434; Gunning v. People, 76 Ill. App. 574, 578.

The word "revenue" is defined by Webster as: "The income of the nation, derived from its taxes, duties, and other sources for the payment of the national expenses. The phrase 'other sources' would include the proceeds of sales of public lands, those arising from sales of public securities, the receipts of the Patent Office in excess of its disbursements, and those of the Post-Office Department, if there should be such an excess as there was at a time in the early history of the government. The phrase would apply to all cases of such excess. In some of them the receipts might fluctuate; there being an excess at one time and deficiencies at another. The constitutional limitation (article 1, § 7), providing that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the words, and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which incidentally create revenue. United States v. Norton, 91 U. S. 566, 568, 23 L. Ed. 454 (citing Story, Const. § 880).

REVENUE LAW.

See "Internal Revenue Act."

The term "revenue measures" is commonly used to designate legislation providing for the assessment and collection of taxes to defray the expenses of the government. These measures include all the laws by which the government provides means for meeting its expenditures. Peyton v. Bliss (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 407, 408.

"Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, defines 'revenue' to be 'the income of the government arising from taxation, duties, and the like.' 'Revenue laws' * * * should, then, mean laws relating to the income of government, arising from taxation, duties, and the like. The seventh section of the first article of the national Constitution provides that 'all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.' I suppose that 'bills for raising revenue' are," then, to be classed as revenue laws, within the meaning of the act of July 14, 1866, punishing the violation of the revenue laws of the United States. "What bills are properly 'bills for raising revenue,' in the sense of the Constitution, has been a matter of some discussion. A learned commentator (Tucker) supposes that every bill which indirectly or consequentially may raise revenue is, within the sense of the Constitution, a revenue bill. He therefore thinks that bills for establishing the post office and the mint, and regulating the value of foreign coin, belong to this class; * * * but the practical construction of the Constitution has been against this opinion, and * * * it has been confined to 'bills to levy taxes' in the strict sense of the words, and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue. No one supposes that a bill to sell any of the public lands, or to sell public stock, is a bill to raise revenue in the sense of the Constitution. Much less would a bill be so deemed which merely regulated the value of foreign or domestic coin, or authorized the discharge of insolvent debtors upon assignment of their estates to the United States, giving priority of payment to the United States in case of insolvency, though all of them might incidentally bring revenue into the treasury.

* * * The obvious meaning and common sense of the thing is that * * * the act of July 13, 1866," punishing the violation of the revenue laws of the United States, intended those laws, and those only, which upon their face are plainly designed to raise revenue." The Nashville (U. S.) 17 Fed. Cas. 1176, 1178.

Laws 1893, p. 150 (Civ. Code, §§ 978-984), was a senate bill, entitled "An act to regulate the sale and redemption of transportation tickets of common carriers." It limits to agents authorized by certificates from the carriers the right to sell tickets, the certificates to be posted for inspection by travelers, and requires each agent, within 10 days after his appointment, to exhibit his certificate to the Secretary of State, and obtain a license as ticket seller, and pay to the secretary a fee of $1. The act makes it unlawful for any one to sell tickets without a license, provides a penalty for violations, provides for the redemption of unused tickets, and makes it unlawful for tickets to be sold at other than the regular rate. Held, that the act was a police regulation, and not a bill for raising revenue, within Const. art. 5, § 32, requiring such a bill to originate in the House of Representatives; the true meaning of "revenue laws" being such laws as are made for the direct and avowed purpose of creating and securing revenue or public funds for the service of the government. State v. Bernheim, 49 Pac. 441, 442, 19 Mont. 512.

While the primary object of all taxation is the raising of revenue for the support of the government, and all bills for that general purpose are bills for raising revenue in the sense of the Constitution, and therefore must originate in the House of Representatives, it does not necessarily follow that every bill for some other legitimate and well-defined general purpose becomes a revenue bill in the same sense, because, as an incident to the main object, it may contain a provision for the payment of certain dues, license fees, or special taxes. The fact that that portion of National Bank Act June 3, 1864, § 41 (13 Stat. 111), imposing a semiannual tax upon circulating notes of national banks organized under the act, had its origin in the Senate by amendment to the bill as originally introduced in the House, does not invalidate it, as the amendment was not an independent measure, and did not convert it into a bill for raising revenue in the sense of Const. art. 1, § 7, providing that bills for raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives. Twin City Nat. Bank v. Nebeker (D. C.) 3 App. Cas. 190, 200, 201.

The expression "revenue laws of the United States," as used in Act Cong. 1804, c. 40, § 3, providing that "any person or persons guilty of any crime arising under the revenue laws of the United States or incurring any fine or forfeiture by breach of the said laws may be prosecuted," etc., does not embrace Act Cong. 1803, c. 62, § 2, prescribing the penalty of $500 for not depositing the ship's register with the consul on arrival in a foreign port. Parsons v. Hunter (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 1259, 1261.

A "bill for raising revenue," as we understand it from the debates on the federal Constitution, authorities, and text writers, embraces all appropriations of money for the public treasury, where the bill either provides for the levy of duties or taxes, capitation or ad valorem, upon the people; or is a part of a system of laws or another bill which does so provide. Commonwealth v. Bailey, 81 Ky. 395, 399, 400.

Appropriation bill.

"A bill for raising revenue is one whose main purpose is to raise money by taxation. A mere appropriation of public money, though it may lead to the necessity of taxation, is insufficient to characterize a measure as one for revenue, such as must originate in the House, and not in the Senate." Curryer v. Merrill, 25 Minn. 1, 8, 33 Am. Rep. 450 (quoting 2 Story, Const. [4th Ed.] § 880).

Embargo act.

Within the meaning of United States statutes providing that any person guilty of any crime arising under the revenue laws of the United States, or incurring any fine or forfeiture by breach of said laws, may be prosecuted at any time within five years, an action to recover a penalty under the embargo law of 1808 is not an action for a penalty under the revenue laws. The true meaning of "revenue laws" in this clause is such laws as are made for the direct and avowed purpose of creating and securing revenue or public funds for the use of the government. No laws whose collateral and indirect operation might possibly conduce to the public wealth are within the scope of the provision. United States v. Mayo (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1230, 1231.

Delegation of power to tax.

An act incorporating a town is not an act for raising revenue, within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 16, providing that all bills for raising revenue or appropriating moneys shall originate in the House of Representatives, although the act may, among the many powers it confers upon the town, confer the power to tax. In such a case taxing is not the end; it is a mere incident. Besides, the delegation of the power to tax and the laying of a tax are two things. The constitutional provision applies to an act laying a tax. Harper v. Town of Elberton Com'rs, 23 Ga. 566, 570.

Imposition of direct tax.

"Any law which provides for the assessment and collection of a tax to defray the expenses of the government is a revenue law. Such legislation is commonly referred to under the general term 'revenue measures,' and these measures include all the laws by which the government provides means for meeting its expenditures. 12 Stat. 294, imposing direct taxes upon the states, is a revenue act, and therefore cases arising under the act are removable to the federal courts under the provision of 4 Stat. 632, authorizing such removal in cases of suits involving the revenue laws of the United States." Peyton v. Bliss (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 407, 408.

As excluding internal revenue law.

The general term "revenue laws of the United States," as used in Act March 2, 1833, providing for removal of causes, standing alone, might include all revenue laws of every description, but, used as it is in an act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports," must be considered as not intended to include laws for the collection of internal revenue. Stevens v. Mack (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 20.

Postal law.

The act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a postal money system" (13 Stat. 76) is not a revenue law within the meaning of the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States (2 Stat. 290), fixing the limitation for prosecution of crimes arising under the revenue laws of the United States at five years from the time of the commission of the offense. United States v. Norton, 91 U. S. 566, 567, 23 L. Ed. 454.

Revenue laws are not necessarily laws for raising "revenue," within the constitutional rule that a bill for raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives, and hence an act increasing the rate of postage on certain mail matter is not unconstitutional although it originated in the Senate, and was not an amendment to a bill for raising revenue in the House of Representatives. Const. art. 1, § 7, subd. 1, providing that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House. United States v. James (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 577, 578.

The post-office laws of the United States are "revenue laws" within the meaning of section 3 of the act of Congress of March 2, 1833 (4 Stat. 633), providing for the removal into a Circuit Court of the United States from a state court of a suit brought against a person for an act done under the revenue laws of the United States, or under color thereof. Warner v. Fowler (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 255.

The term "revenue laws," within the meaning of 4 Stat. 633, providing for the removal into the Circuit Court of a suit brought against a person for an act done under the revenue laws of the United States or under color thereof, includes the post-office laws of the United States. "Laws relating to the revenue or revenue laws are such laws as are enacted in reference to such collection; such as give rules as to the mode of its collection, and as to the manner in which the officers employed in such collection shall collect duties. Our taxes are no more the revenue of the state than are the duties or taxes collected under the post-office laws of the United States for the carriage of letters in the public mails." Warner v. Fowler (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 255, Tariff act.

Act Cong. March 2, 1799, c. 22, 1 Stat. p. 627, regulating the collection of duties on imports, is a revenue law, within the meaning of Act Cong. April 18, 1818, c. 70, providing for the mode of suing for and recovering penalties and forfeitures for violations of the revenue laws of the United States. The Abigail (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 36.

REVENUE LAWS OF A STATE.

The ordinances of municipal corporations laying taxes cannot be regarded as the "revenue laws of a state" from which they derive their power of laying taxes, within the meaning of the act of June 30, 1870, making it the duty of the court to give to causes wherein the execution of the revenue laws of any state are enjoined, etc., preferences or priority over all other civil causes. Davenport City v. Dows, 82 U. S. (15 Wall.) 390, 392, 21 L. Ed. 96.

REVENUE OFFICER.

"Revenue," as used in Rev. St. § 989 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 708], providing that judgments recovered against an "officer of the revenue" shall be paid out of the United States treasury if there was probable cause for the commission of the act for which the judgment was rendered, does not include a postmaster. Campbell v. James (U. S.) 3 Fed. 513, 516.

REVERSE.

To reverse is to overthrow, set aside, make void, annul, repeal, or revoke, as to reverse a judgment, sentence, or decree, or to change to the contrary, or to a former condition. The distinction between the reversal of a judgment and an affirmance with a modification is said by the court to be too marked and radical to justify them in disregarding it, and it is held that the reversal of a judgment nullifies the same and entirely vacates it. Cowdery v. London & San Francisco Bank, 73 Pac. 196, 197, 139 Cal. 208, 96 Am. St. Rep. 115.

REVERSAL.

Unanimous reversal, see "Unanimous."

The reversal of a judgment annuls it, but does not necessarily set aside the foundation on which it rests. This foundation may be sufficient to support a judgment of a different kind, and may be such as to require it. A reversal, therefore, is never, standing alone and ex vi termini, the ground of a new trial. Coughlin v. McElroy, 44 Atl. 743, 744, 72 Conn. 444.

The terms "affirmance" or "reversal," used in section 84 of the small cause act (Revision, p. 554), providing that courts of common pleas shall have cognizance of appeals in a summary way, and give judgment, with costs, and award execution thereon, either on the affirmance or reversal of the judgment so appealed, are employed to indicate the successful or unsuccessful party on the appeal; and costs on appeal will only be given to a successful party, who has judgment in his favor on the appeal. Housel v. Higgins, 47 N. J. Law (18 Vroom) 72, 73.

REVERSED.

The term "reversed," as used in opinions, judgments, and mandates, has received by long usage in the courts a settled construction, and means setting aside, annulling, or vacating. Laithe v. McDonald, 7 Kan. 254, 268.

"The word 'reversed' in its technical sense applies to the ultimate decision annulling expressly what had been done before." King v. Sloan (Pa.) 1 Serg. & R. 77, 79.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

Where the order of a court on appeal is as follows: "Judgment reversed and cause remanded"—the effect of the reversal is only to set aside the judgment, unless it is apparent from the opinion of the court that the adjudication was intended to be a final disposition of the cause. Ryan v. Tomlinson, 39 Cal. 639, 646.

It is a settled rule, unless there is something in the opinion of the court or the order made by it restricting the operation of the words "reversed and remanded," they have the ordinary meaning, and it is error, on the entry of such order, for the court below not to award a new trial. Myers v. McDonald, 8 Pac. 809, 811, 68 Cal. 162.

REVERSED CURRENT.

An electric current, which is periodically reversed by a commutator, which thus breaks the current between the changes in direction and takes off the current in sections, is known as a reversed or alternated current. This distinction between an alternating and an alternated or reversed current should be carefully noted. An alternating current continues to act in opposite directions as originally generated. An alternated current has been so reversed that the whole flows in one direction, and is then known as a continuous current. Every mechanically generated current is naturally and originally an alternating current. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. New England Granite Co. (U. S.) 103 Fed. 951, 952.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

A reversible error is such an error as warrants the appellate court in reversing the judgment. New Mexican R. Co. v. Hendricks, 30 Pac. 901, 902, 6 N. M. 611.

REVERSION.

The term "reversion" signifies a return to a pre-existence or former state or place. Clute v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 24 N. E. 317, 318, 120 N. Y. 267.

Sir Edward Coke describes a reversion to be the returning of land to the grantor or his heirs after the grant is over. Barber v. Brundage, 50 App. Div. 123, 125, 63 N. Y. Supp. 347; Alexander v. De Kermel, 81 Ky. 345, 350.

In Co. Litt. c. 2, § 19, it is said: "A reversion is when the residue of the estate always doth continue in him that made the particular estate, or where the particular estate is derived out of his estate." De Kermel v. Alexander, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 142, 147.

A reversion is a vested interest or estate, inasmuch as the person entitled to it has a vested right of future enjoyment. Payn v. Beal (N. Y.) 4 Denio, 405, 411.

The term "reversionary interest" implies that there is a preceding particular estate or interest, and is so used in Acts 1869-70, c. 1, § 21, providing that it shall not be lawful to sell on execution the reversionary interest in any lands included in a homestead until after the termination of the homestead interest therein. Joyner v. Sugg, 44 S. E. 122, 124, 132 N. C. 580.

4 Bl. Comm. p. 175, says "an estate in reversion is the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him." Barber v. Brundage, 63 N. Y. Supp. 347, 348, 50 App. Div. 123; People v. Lawrence (N. Y.) 54 Barb. 589, 619; Todd v. Jackson, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 525, 540. And Lord Coke describes it as the return of land to the grantor or his heirs after the grant is over. Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R. Co., 16 Pac. 863, 866, 16 Or. 33, 8 Am. St. Rep. 251; Alexander v. De Kermel, 81 Ky. 345, 350; Todd v. Jackson, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 525, 540. It seems to have two significations. The one is an estate left, which continues during a particular estate in being; and the other is the returning of the land after the particular estate is ended. Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R. Co., 16 Or. 33, 38, 16 Pac. 863, 866, 8 Am. St. Rep. 251 (citing Abb. Law Dict.).

Blackstone attributes the doctrine of reversion to the feudal constitution; but Kent differs from him, and says that reversion, in the general sense, must be familiar to the laws of all nations which admit of private property in lands. Alexander v. De Kermel, 81 Ky. 345, 350.

A "reversion" is the return of an estate to the grantor and his heirs after the grant is over. A gratuitous permission by the owner to a third person to use a chattel for a specified time is a loan, and does not create a reversionary right in the lender. Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 20, 25.

An "estate in reversion" is the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. Sir Edward Coke describes a reversion to be the returning of land to the grantor or his heirs after the grant is over; as, if there be a gift in tail, the reversion of the fee is, without any special reservation, vested in the donor by act of law. So, also, the reversion after an estate for life, for years, or at will, continues in the lessor; for the fee simple of all lands must abide somewhere, and if he who was before possessed of the whole carves out of it any small estate, and grants it away, whatever is not so granted remains in him. Barber v. Brundage, 63 N. Y. Supp. 347, 348, 50 App. Div. 123 (quoting 4 Bl. Comm. p. 175).

A "reversion" is a present vested interest, to be enjoyed at some future time on the happening of some particular event. A reversion is an estate vested in present, though to take effect and profit in futuro, and may be aliened and charged as an estate in possession. It can only exist where the grantor has conveyed less than his whole interest or estate. Wingate v. James, 121 Ind. 69, 72, 22 N. E. 735.

The word "reversion," in the rule that "where property is given to a person expressly for life, and there is annexed to such gift a power of disposition of the reversion, the first taker takes but an estate for life, with the power annexed," is a word of the very greatest importance in its connections in its influence upon rules of construction. It implies that the devising clause has left something to revert to the testator after the estate given to the devisee. Byrne v. Weller, 61 Ark. 366, 373, 375, 33 S. W. 421, 423.

The term "reversion" is often used in such a sense as to be descriptive only of an interest in land. 4 Kent, Comm. 354. It is also used in speaking of the right to a return of such personal property as does not perish with a short term of using, the possession of which property the general owner has parted with. Frankenthal v. Meyer, 55 Ill. App. 405, 414 (citing Gordon v. Harper, 7 Term Rep. 9).

An estate in reversion is the residue of an estate, usually the fee, left in the grantor and his heirs after the determination of a particular estate which he has granted out of it. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3098.

A "reversion" is the residue of an estate left by operation of law in the grantor or his successors, or in the successors of the testator, commencing in possession on the determination of a particular estate granted or devised. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 768; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 1217; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3332; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 248; Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 4373; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 4033; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 8794; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 2036; Nicoll v. New York & M. R. Co., 12 N. Y. (2 Kern.) 121, 132; Rev. St. N. Y. p. 723, § 12. It necessarily assumes that the grantor has not parted with his entire estate. Wood v. Taylor, 30 N. Y. Supp. 433, 436, 9 Misc. Rep. 640 (citing 4 Kent, Comm. 353).

As an estate or fee.

See, also, "Estate."

"A reversion has been said to be the residue of the fee after a less estate has been carved out of it, both these interests being but one estate. Jac. Law Dict.; 1 Coke, c. 12, § 215. A fee simple of the land is the largest possible estate. Id. c. 1, § 11. Although there may be a remainder or a reversion in fee, it is not the entire property, or, in popular language, the land itself, that is held in fee in such case, but only the reversion or the remainder. A reversion or a remainder is described as such; the quality, value, and sometimes the validity, being dependent upon the precedent estate." Therefore a remainder or a reversion is not properly described in the certificate of appraisers in execution, reciting that the debtor holds certain real estate in fee simple.—Stinson v. Rouse, 52 Me. 261, 266.

REVERT.

"Revert" means to turn back that which has been received. Lewis v. Lewis, 87 N. W. 280, 281, 114 Iowa, 399.

The word "revert," in connection with property, implies in a popular sense devolution upon one having an already existing interest. In re Phillips' Estate (Pa.) 48 Leg. Int. 232.

"The usual and ordinary meaning of 'revert' is to return. Its legal or technical signification is for property to return or go back to a person who formerly owned it, but who parted with the possession or title to it by creating an estate in another." Pearce v. Lott, 29 S. E. 276, 278, 101 Ga. 395 (quoting And. Law Dict.).

As used in a provision of a will providing that any portion of a certain sum authorized to be appropriated to the relief of the testator's needy nephews and nieces therein referred to which should not be so appropriated should revert to the use of a hospital fund, the term "revert" means that it should go back to the hospital fund, from which it had been withdrawn. Ingraham v. Ingraham, 48 N. E. 561, 569, 169 Ill. 432.

"Revert," as used in a will giving a daughter of the testator a certain sum, and providing that, should she die leaving no issue, the legacy should revert to testator's estate, does not indicate that the testator contemplated the death of the daughter after she had come into possession of the legacy. McDowell v. Stiger, 42 Atl. 575, 576, 58 N. J. Eq. 125.

"Revert," as used in Code, § 2015, providing that if a railway is not used or operated for eight years, or if, its construction having been commenced, work has ceased and has not been in good faith resumed for eight years, the right of way, including the roadbed, shall revert to the owners of the land from which it was taken, is a technical word, and should be accorded its meaning as such. It is the return to the owner of the fee of the easement formerly operated, or, perhaps more accurately speaking, the removal of the burden cast upon the fee. The instant the right of way reverts to the owner, the easement, with all its incidents, is extinguished, and the owner of the tract from which it was taken is restored to complete dominion over the entire property. Remey v. Iowa Cent. Ry. Co., 89 N. W. 218, 220, 116 Iowa, 133.

As go to.

The term "revert," as used in a clause of a will declaring that, if the legatee should die before attaining her majority, the legacy should revert back to the testator's lawful heirs, should be construed to mean "go to." Beatty v. Trustees of Cory Universalist Soc., 39 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 452, 463.

Where a holographic will bequeathed testator's residuary estate to his only surviving sister of the whole blood, and provided that, in case of the death of any of the legatees before distribution, the portion bequeathed to such legatee should "revert to the children of the family of which such legatee is a member," and it appeared that the only members of the testator's family surviving at the date of the will were a half-brother and half-sister living in different states, the phrase "revert to" should not be construed technically, but as meaning "go to," so that, on the death of the sister before distribution, her share should be divided among her children, instead of between testator's half brother and sister. In re Bennett's Estate, 66 Pac. 370, 134 Cal. 320.

Testator devised his property to his own daughter in trust, she to have the income, and, should she die without issue, the property was to revert back to the heirs of testator and his deceased wife, but, should she die with issue, such issue was to inherit the estate. Held, that the words "shall revert back" should be read as "shall go to," as it would be impossible for the estate to "revert" to persons who had never had any interest therein. Johnson v. Askey, 60 N. E. 78, 77, 190 Ill. 58.

As terminating estate.

Where a deed conveyed land to a grantor's wife for the life of the grantor, providing that at the grantor's death the land should revert and reinvest in fee simple to his heirs at law or devisees, the provision that the land should "revert and reinvest" at the termination of grantor's life was equivalent to a grant of a life estate only. Whayne v. Davis (Ky.) 66 S. W. 827, 829.

A holographic will devised all the testator's land to his widow during widowhood, and at her death the land was directed to be sold, and the moneys arising therefrom to be equally divided among testator's four children or their heirs. In case of the widow's remarriage, the land was directed to be sold, and one-half of the money was to be used for her benefit and support, to revert back to the children at her death, and the other half to be equally divided among them. Held, that the phrase "revert back" clearly indicated the testator's intention to vest the fee in the children, subject to the widow's life estate. The court says: "We think that a fair and reasonable interpretation of the words 'revert back' indicates that the testator assumed and believed that by the preceding language he had already vested his real estate in his children in equal shares, subject to the use thereof of his widow during her life or widowhood." Therefore a conveyance by one of the children of his interest during the widow's lifetime was valid and binding. Miller v. Gilbert, 22 N. Y. Supp. 355, 357, 3 Misc. Rep. 43.

The word "revert," as used in a will whereby the testator gave a life interest in certain lands to his wife, and whereby he directed that after her death the property should revert to the executors and be disposed of by them in the same manner as the rest of his estate thereafter mentioned, showed that testator intended to give to the executors the remainder in fee. Therefore the executors could, with the widow's consent, sell the lands in question in her lifetime. Snell's Ex'rs v. Snell, 38 N. J. Eq. (11 Stew.) 119, 124.

"Revert to the United States," as used in Act Cong. July 25, 1886, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, Or.—section 8 providing that, in case the company should not complete the same as provided in section 6, this act shall be null and void, and all lands not conveyed by patent to said company or companies, as the case may be, at the date of any such failure, shall revert to the United States—is equivalent to a declaration that the act granting such lands shall cease to be operative if the company fails to complete its road within the specified time. "It is no more than a provision that the grant shall be void if a condition subsequent be not performed." Bybee v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 11 Sup. Ct. 641, 643, 139 U. S. 663, 35 L. Ed. 305.

REVERTER.

A devise of land was to be used by the vendee for a certain purpose forever, and whenever the vendee should cease to use the land for such purpose the same was to revert to testator's heirs at law. Held, that testator had reserved to his heirs at law an interest not exactly a reversion, but what is rather the possibility of a reversion, and termed a "reverter." Loughheed v. Dykeman Baptist Church and Society, 40 N. Y. Supp. 586.

REVEST.

The word "revest," in law, simply means the return or the falling back into the possession of the donor or of the former proprietor. McPheeters v. Wright, 24 N. E. 734, 739, 124 Ind. 560, 9 L. R. A. 176.

REVIEW.

See "Bill of Review"; "Writ of Review."

As new trial.

In Comp. St. 1715, § 131, giving the prisoner, if a verdict of guilty were returned in the county court, an absolute right of review, a new trial is meant. State v. Main, 37 Atl. 80, 82, 69 Conn. 123, 36 L. R. A. 623, 61 Am. St. Rep. 30.

As review on appeal.

The word "review," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 779, providing that where costs of a motion are awarded or proceedings in the action on the part of the party required to pay the same, except "to review or vacate the order," are stayed until the payment thereof, must be taken to mean to review on appeal; for that is the only method whereby a review may be had. The word could not have meant renewal of the motion or a resettlement of the order. The word "review" means simply that the court on appeal may be asked to consider the question presented below as a ground for the determination in the order. Weehawken Wharf Co. v. Knickerbocker Coal Co., 54 N. Y. Supp. 566, 567, 25 Misc. Rep. 309.

REVIEWS.

"Reviews," as used in St. 1810, c. 108, § 25, providing that privates in the militia are not required to attend reviews held more than 15 miles from their residence, applies only to brigade reviews. Commonwealth v. Richardson, 13 Mass. 220.

REVISE.

"Revise," as used in the title of Laws 1893, Act 118, to "revise" the laws relative to penal institutions and the government and discipline thereof, and to repeal all acts inconsistent therewith, implied an intention on the part of the Legislature to include the entire control over the subject; and, the provisions of the act being intended to cover the entire management of such penal institutions, the same did not violate Const. art. 4, § 25, providing that the act revised and the sections altered or amended shall be re-enacted and published at length. Ellis v. Parsell, 58 N. W. 839, 840, 100 Mich. 170.

"To revise is to review or re-examine for correction, and when applied to a statute contemplates the re-examination of the same subject-matter contained in the prior statute, and the substitution of a new, and what is believed to be a still more perfect, rule." Ossey v. Harned, 5 Iowa (5 Clarke) 1, 12.

"Revise," as contained in Const. art. 15, § 11, providing that three persons learned in the law shall be appointed "to revise and rearrange the statute laws of the state," means to review, alter, and amend, and does not signify an act of absolute origination. It relates to something already in existence. Vinsant v. Knox, 27 Ark. 266, 272.

A law is revised when it is in whole or in part permitted to remain, and something is added to or taken from it, or it is in some way changed or altered to make it more complete or perfect, or to fit it the better to accomplish the object or purpose for which it was made, or some other object or purpose. Falconer v. Robinson, 46 Ala. 340, 348.

The phrase "revise, amend, and consolidate," as used in the title of Acts 1897, No. 209, entitled "An act to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws for the incorporation of ecclesiastical bodies," shows the plain purpose of the enactment, which was to collect the provisions essential to the incorporation of ecclesiastical bodies and embody them in one act. Therefore this act supersedes Acts 1895, No. 110, entitled "An act for the incorporation of Methodist Episcopal Churches." Graham v. Muskegon County Clerk, 118 Mich. 571, 572, 74 N. W. 729.

REVISED STATUTES.

Though in 1862 there were in New York five so-called editions of the Revised Statutes in common use, yet the term "Revised Statutes" had a well-settled meaning in the state, which denoted the statutes published under that title pursuant to Laws 1888, c. 20, and the amendments to those statutes. In re Norton, 89 App. Div. 369, 371, 57 N. Y. Supp. 407.

REVISION.

"Revision," as used in a statute authorizing the entering of an appeal, after the expiration of the time limited for such appeal, when the court is satisfied that justice requires a revision of the decree appealed from, does not mean reversal or modification, but simply review, re-examination, or looking at again. Goodwin v. Prime, 42 Atl. 785, 787, 92 Me. 355.

The words "revision or correction," as contained in a city charter (Sp. Laws 1893, p. 25, § 27), relating to special assessments, and providing that any person might present a petition to the city council showing wherein he had been or may be injured by a proposed improvement, and asking for a "revision or correction of the same," means that the council may be called upon to review that which had been done, and to make the proceedings conform to the law; but it does not empower the council to do anything that it or its officers could not have done in the first instance. Hutcheson v. Storrie, 51 S. W. 848, 852, 92 Tex. 685, 45 L. R. A. 289, 71 Am. St. Rep. 884.

"A 'revision of statutes' implies a re-examination of them. The words apply to a restatement of the law in a corrected or improved form. The restatement may be with or without material change. A revision is intended to take the place of the law as previously formulated. By adopting it the Legislature does the same thing in effect as when a particular section is amended by the words 'so as to read as follows.' The revision is a substitute. It displaces and repeals the former law as it stood relating to the subjects within its purview." Cortesy v. Territory, 32 Pac. 504, 505, 7 N. M. 89 (citing Suth. St. Const. § 154). See, also, City of Helena v. Rogan, 69 Pac. 709, 710, 27 Mont. 135.

REVIVE.

The primary meaning of the word "revive" is to give life to again. The first syllable indicates the use of old matter, and the latter means to give life to, which is one of the primary meanings of the word "create." In re Bank of Commerce, 53 N. E. 950, 954, 153 Ind. 160, 47 L. R. A. 489.

Debts.

The word "revive" means to bring again to life, to renew, to reanimate, or to bring into action after a suspension; as to revive a project or scheme that had been laid aside. It is a word which has been generally employed in the judicial decisions to express the effect of an admission of the existence of indebtedness or a promise to pay a debt otherwise barred by the statute of limitations. Lindsey v. Lyman, 37 Iowa, 206, 207 (citing Webst. Dict.).

"Revive," as used in Comp. Laws, § 1873, providing that actions on contracts shall be "revived" by admission that the debt is unpaid, etc., will be held to mean both the revitalization of a dead cause of action and the restoring of a lapsed period of a statutory life, so that the promise may be made either before or after the running of the statute of limitations. Bullard v. Lopez, 37 Pac. 1103, 1104, 7 N. M. 561.

Judgments.

The term "revive" means to restore or bring again to life. When a judgment is revived, it becomes a new judgment, on which execution may issue as a personal liability; and it continues in existence for five years longer from date of the order of revival, and the lien thereof, like the judgment and incident thereto, is a new creation, and dates from the order of revival. Brier v. Traders' National Bank, 64 Pac. 831, 835, 24 Wash. 695.

REVIVAL.

The revival of a suit, which is either abated or made defective by the death of a party interested, is not a new suit, but is still the same suit, in which both parties are entitled to the benefit of all former proceedings. Where a suit abates or becomes defective by the death of a party, and is revived by his heirs, they are not bound by proceedings taken after his death prior to revival. Havens v. Sea Shore Land Co., 41 Atl. 755, 757, 57 N. J. Eq. 142.

"Revival of a will" is where a second will, which has revoked the former one, is canceled or destroyed, which operates to revive the first will. Boudinot v. Bradford, 2 Dall. 266, 268, 1 L. Ed. 375.

REVIVAL BY AGREEMENT.

See "Judgment of Revival by Agreement."

REVIVOR.

See "Bill of Revivor."

REVOKE—REVOCATION.

See "Express Revocation"; "Implied Revocation."

When an order of removal of the board of license commissioners was revoked, it was not rescinded from the beginning and made as if it never had been. That is not the meaning of "revoked," which imports that the order is in force until it is recalled. Taber v. City of New Bedford, 58 N. E. 640, 641, 177 Mass. 197.

As annul

"To revoke" sometimes denotes the right to annul, rescind, or abolish. City of Houston v. Houston City St. Ry. Co., 19 S. W. 127, 130, 83 Tex. 548 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

Revocation of bequest

By a very loose and indeterminate use of language, anything which renders a bequest inoperative at the testator's death may possibly be called a "revocation." A satisfaction of a legacy by an advancement made by a testator in his lifetime, if under any circumstances a revocation of the bequest or an alteration of the will by which the bequest is made, in the sense in which those terms are used in the statute of wills (2 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] pp. 64-65, pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 1, §§ 42, 48), is not so in a case where the testator has declared in the will itself that the legacy should not be payable in the event of an advancement to be made and characterized in a specified manner, and that event has happened. A testator who concludes to anticipate a proposed testamentary gift cannot be said by any just use of language to revoke or recall it, when, so far from wishing to undo what he has done, he has concluded to do it sooner than he before intended. Langdon v. Astor's Ex'rs, 16 N. Y. 9, 39.

Revocation of franchise.

The provision in Const. 1831, art. 2, § 17, authorizing the Legislature to incorporate, with a reserved power of "revocation" by the Legislature, permits the withdrawal of a single right or privilege, without revoking the whole franchise. The revocation contemplated under the clause may be either direct or by necessary implication, by the passage of an act necessarily inconsistent with any right or privilege possessed by an existing corporation. Wilmington City Ry. Co. v. Wilmington & B. S. Ry. Co., 48 Atl. (Del.) 12, 16.

Revocation of grant.

The word "revocation," when used in reference to a grant, "not only means the recalling of the power, but may denote the vacation of the grant for cause." City of Houston v. Houston City Ry. Co., 19 S. W. 127, 130, 83 Tex. 548, 29 Am. St. Rep. 679 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

Revocation of will.

Revocation of will occurs where a second will is made containing an express clause revoking the former one. Boudinot v. Bradford (Pa.) 2 Dall. 266, 268, 1 L. Ed. 375.

The word "revocation" means an act done by the party by which he recalls his will. The statute, therefore, with propriety says, not that the marriage of a testator revokes the will, but that it is to be deemed or considered the same as a revocation. The marriage is not a revocation, but it has the effect of a revocation. Lathrop v. Dunlop (N. Y.) 4 Hun, 213, 215.

By "revocation of a will" is generally understood an act by which the will ceases to have any effect or efficacy. It is not, however, uniformly used in this sense by legal writers or in English judicial opinions. But it is frequently applied to cases where the will operates on some estates, but does not operate on others, by reason of some conveyance or modification made therein by the testator in his lifetime. The alienation of real estate by the testator himself after he has devised the same by will is a revocation of the will only as to the part thus alienated. Carter v. Thomas, 4 Me. (4 Greenl.) 341, 342.

An intention to sell property does not revoke a will by which the property is devised, and hence, where a testator contracted to sell the land, prepared articles, and took bonds for the payment of the purchase money, but no money was received by him, and no deed executed, the will devising such property was not revoked. Hall v. Bray, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 212.

A will, or a provision in the will, is "revoked," in the proper sense of the term, when, although capable of being carried into effect according to its terms, it is rendered inoperative and void by a subsequent change of the mind of the testator, manifested by such evidence as in the particular case the law requires. Langdon v. Astor's Ex'rs, 10 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Duer) 477, 561.

"Revoke" means to recall, to take back, or to repeal; and where a testator merely changed the time of payment of the bequest, it was not a revocation, though testator called it by that name in his will. In re Morrow's Estate, 54 Atl. 342, 343, 204 Pa. 484.

Express revocation of a will can only be shown by evidence of some of the acts designated by the statute, and the provisions of the statute must be complied with; but the revocation of a will may be implied from subsequent changes in the condition or circumstances of testator, and hence a valid sale of an estate devised will effect a revocation pro tanto. An inoperative conveyance may so operate, if there be an intention to convey; but a contract of conveyance executed by one who is mentally incapacitated, or adjudged void for fraud or undue influence, is ineffectual as a revocation. Graham v. Burch, 49 N. W. 697, 698, 47 Minn. 171, 28 Am. St. Rep. 339.

Same—As alter.

"Revoked," as used in Code, art. 93, § 302, providing that no devise in writing of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any clause thereof, shall be revoked, except in the manner designated, means annulled, and is not synonymous with "altered"; and in legal contemplation a revoked will ceases to exist, and is as inoperative as if it never existed. Eschbach v. Collins, 61 Md. 478, 499, 48 Am. Rep. 123.

A testator, who bequeathed a certain sum to an orphanage, afterwards executed a codicil which recited: "I hereby annul and revoke such bequest, and instead thereof I give the same to a trustee, to be invested during the life of A. for his benefit, and upon his death to be paid to the orphanage for the purpose expressed in the will." In construing the codicil, it was held that the words "annul and revoke," taken in connection with expressed purposes of the codicil, did not constitute a revocation of the will. "The fact that the testator called it by that name does not make it so." "Revoke" means to recall, to take back, to repeal. "Annul" means to abrogate, to make void. The codicil did not recall or make void the bequest in any part, except as to the time of payment; and this it changed. In re Watt's Estate, 32 Atl. 42, 44, 168 Pa. 422.

Same—Alteration distinguished.

In Swinton v. Bailey, 45 L. J. Exch. 427, where testator had devised his real estate to E., her heirs and assigns, forever, and subsequently obliterated these words with a pen and ink, the judge said: "The difference between revocation and alteration seems to me to be this: If what was done simply takes away what was given before, or a part of what was given before, then it is a revocation; but if it gives something in addition, or gives something else, then it is more than a revocation." Appeal of Miles, 36 Atl. 39, 41, 68 Conn. 237, 36 L. R. A. 176.

Same—As annul.

"To revoke a testamentary disposition" is to annul it, so that in legal contemplation it ceases to exist and becomes as inoperative as if it had never been written. But when, by the substitution of certain words for others, a different meaning is imported, there is not a mere revocation. There is something more than the destruction of that which has been antecedently done. There is a transmutation, by which a new clause is created. There is another and different testamentary disposition." Gardiner v. Gardiner, 19 Atl. 651, 652, 65 N. H. 230, 8 L. R. A. 383.

Same—As requiring both act and intent.

"To establish a revocation, it is quite clear that a symbolic burning will not do, a symbolic tearing will not do, nor will a symbolic destruction. There must be the act, as well as the intention. * * * All the destroying in the world, without intention, will not revoke a will, nor all the intention in the world, without destroying. There must be the two." Cheese v. Lovejoy, L. R. 2 Prob. Div. 251. There must be an act and an intention, in order to revoke. Neither can be inferred from evidence or declarations of the testator, apart from the acts, and with no proof that the testator ever performed an act of a revocatory nature. Throckmorton v. Holt, 21 Sup. Ct. 474, 488, 180 U. S. 552, 45 L. Ed. 663.

"Revocation" is an act of the mind, which must be demonstrated by some outward and visible sign. As said by a learned judge: "All the destroying in the world, without intention, will not revoke a will, nor all the intention in the world, without destroying. * * * There must be the two." Cheese v. Lovejoy, L. R. 2 Prob. Div. 251. It is not the mere manual operation of tearing the instrument which will satisfy the law. The act must accompany the intention of revoking. There must be the act, as well as the animus. Woodruff v. Hundley, 29 South. 98, 102, 127 Ala. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 145.

"Revocation" of a will consists of two things: the intention of the testator and some outward act or symbol of destruction. A defacement, obliteration, or destruction, without the animus revocandi, is not sufficient. Neither is the intention, or the animus revocandi, sufficient, without some act of obliteration or destruction done; and where a will was defaced and mutilated by vermin, and the testator adopts this with intent to revoke the will, a revocation of the will will be deemed to have been made. Outler v. Outler, 40 S. E. 689, 130 N. C. 1, 57 L. R. A. 209, 89 Am. St. Rep. 854.

REVOLT.

See "Endeavor to Make a Revolt."

A revolt, in the contemplation of maritime law, occurs where the crew, or any part of them, throw off all obedience to the commander and forcibly take possession of the vessel, by assuming and exercising the command and navigation of her, or by transferring their obedience from the lawful commander to one who has usurped the command. United States v. Haskell (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 207, 209.

REVOLUTION.

"The term 'revolution,' when used in reference to government, has a positive and qualified meaning. When employed in the first, it supposes a radical change in the whole system and structure of the government; when in the latter, it conveys the idea of modification only. The revolution of Texas was clearly of the last description. As a seceding part of the Mexican government, she was not left without laws made by herself, or without the proper officers for administering them. This was practically the case: The old laws continued to be administered, through the instrumentality of the old officers, until the establishment of a new system, and, until changed, were supposed to exert the same binding influence in the protection of persons and property that had been claimed for them before the relations between Texas and other parts of Mexico had been changed." McMullen v. Hodge, 5 Tex. 34, 75.

REVOLVER.

"A revolver may or may not be such a weapon as is adapted to the usual equipment of the soldier, or the use of which may render him more efficient as such, and therefore it is a matter to be settled by evidence as to what character of weapon is included in the designation 'revolver.' We know there is a pistol of that name which is not adapted to the equipment of the soldier, yet we also know that the pistol known as the 'repeater' is a soldier's weapon, skill and use of which will add to the efficiency of the soldier." A carrying of a revolver of the latter character is within the protection of a constitutional provision protecting the right to carry arms. Andrews v. State, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 165, 187, 8 Am. Rep. 8.

REWARD.

See "Liberal Reward."

The term "reward" is usually applied to a sum paid for the performance of some specific act to some person or persons. Kircher v. Murray (U. S.) 54 Fed. 617, 621.

A "reward" is a recompense or a premium offered by a government or an individual in return for special or extraordinary services to be performed. Kinn v. First Nat. Bank, 95 N. W. 969, 970, 118 Wis. 537.

Const. art. 2, § 7, provides that every person shall be disqualified from holding office, during the term for which he may have been elected, who shall have given or offered a bribe or reward to procure his election. Under this statute it was held in State v. Dustin, 5 Or. 375-377, 20 Am. Rep. 746, that a promise by a candidate for the office of county judge, made to the voters of his county prior to his election, that he will, after elected, pay into the county treasury $200 per annum of his salary as judge, is not an offer to reward voters, unless it also appeared that the voters influenced by such offer were taxpayers in such county, or would in some way be benefited by the performance of the offer. In arriving at this conclusion the court quoted with approval Burrill's definition of "reward" as a "compensation or remuneration for services; a sum of money paid or taken for doing or preparing to do some act."

The term "reward," in an ordinance prohibiting any person from running any hack, carriage, dray, sprinkling wagon, or other vehicle for reward, without a license, can only be applied to such vehicles as are run for the accommodation of the public, and for the use of which a fee is charged to the person using them; and therefore wagons used by coal merchants to deliver coal sold by them are not public vehicles or wagons within the meaning of the statute. City of Henderson v. Marshall (Ky.) 58 S. W. 518.

Bounty distinguished.

See "Bounty."

As proposition for contract.

An offer of reward is a proposal. The party making it may insert his own terms. Haskell v. Davidson, 40 Atl. 330, 91 Me. 488, 42 L. R. A. 155, 64 Am. St. Rep. 254.

The "offer of a reward" remains conditional until it is accepted by the performance of a service, and the one offering the reward has a right to prescribe whatever terms he sees fit, and such terms must be substantially complied with before any contract arises between him and the claimant. Under an offer of reward to be paid for the arrest and conviction of certain murderers, a person identifying parties already under arrest and not having done anything toward their capture or conviction would not be entitled to the reward. Williams v. West Chicago St. R. Co., 61 N. E. 456, 457, 191 Ill. 610, 85 Am. St. Rep. 278.

A "reward" is a recompense or premium offered by the government or an individual for special or extraordinary services to be performed. Until acceptance by performance of the services, it is a mere proposition, which may be accepted by any part of the public, if it be offered to the public, or by any particular person or class of persons, if such proposition is made to them. When accepted by performance it becomes a binding contract, subject to the laws governing contracts generally. Campbell v. Mercer, 33 S. E. 871, 872, 108 Ga. 103.

RHUMKORF COIL

A rhumkorf coil is a coil constructed on the following principle: On a central core of soft iron is wound a certain number of turns of copper wire, each turn being insulated by a layer of paper or some other insulating material; then on top of this coarser wire is wound, in the same direction, a large number of layers of very thin wire, each one likewise insulated by a layer of paper or other insulating material, and the fine wires connect with the two poles on top, and the coarser wires connect with the lower, with the commutator running from one pole to the other. This box is filled with what is called "condenser," which is a series or number of plates of tin foil, that stores up electricity somewhat on the principle of the Leyden jar and keeps it stored, so that when a person uses it he gets a much greater shock than he would if the condenser was not there. It is used in schools and universities, by physicians, and to explode mines and dynamite cartridges. It has no practical use in telegraphing, and is commonly used for illustrating the law of electrical induction. It is a "philosophical instrument," within the tariff acts. Robertson v. Oelschlaeger. 11 Sup. Ct. 148-150, 187 U. S. 436, 34 L. Ed. 744.

RIBBON.

Silk and cotton velvet ribbons, silk being the component material of chief value, are "ribbons," within Act Cong. June 30, 1864, § 8, levying a duty of 60 per cent. ad valorem on all dress and piece silks, "ribbons and silk velvets, or velvet of which silk is a component material of chief value." Lane v. Russell (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 1085, 1087. See, also, Chapon v. Smythe (U. S.) 5 Fed. Cas. 500, 501.

RIBS.

In mining parlance, "ribs" are the columns or partitions left in the coal vein to support the roof. Reddon v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 15 Pac. 262, 263, 5 Utah, 344.

RIDE.

"Ride" means to be carried on a horse or other animal or in any kind of vehicle or carriage; to be carried or travel on horseback. As used in an ordinance providing that any person riding or driving shall check up or halt for pedestrians on approaching alley or street crossings, the term "riding" was probably used to signify something different from "driving," and was intended to designate one travelling on a horse or other animal, and does not apply to street cars. Citizens' Ry. Co. v. Ford, 53 S. W. 575, 576, 93 Tex. 110, 46 L. R. A. 457.

The term "riding," in a Sunday statute which operates to prohibit riding on Sunday, is to be construed as meaning unnecessary riding, and therefore does not operate to preclude riding in the open air for exercise necessary for the promotion of health. Sullivan v. Maine Central R. R. Co., 19 Atl. 169, 170, 82 Me. 196, 8 L. R. A. 427.

RIDER.

A "rider" is a new and unrelated enactment or provision attached to appropriation bills in the Legislature. Commonwealth v. Barnett, 48 Atl. 976, 977, 199 Pa. 161.

RIDGELING.

A "ridgeling," as defined by Webster, is "an animal half castrated; a male of any beast half-gelt." Proof that a horse is a ridgeling will not support an indictment for the theft of a gelding. Briscoe v. State, 4 Tex. App. 219, 221, 30 Am. Rep. 162.

A ridgeling is the male of any beast half-gelt, and the fact that a horse was a ridgeling constituted a breach of a warranty that he was a gelding. Douglass v. Moses, 56 N. W. 271, 272, 89 Iowa, 40, 48 Am. St. Rep. 353.

RIGIDLY.

In an instruction in a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, which stated that if the defendant knew that the goods were stolen, or the circumstances were such that he should have known, then the defendant should be as rigidly held responsible as if he had actual knowledge, the word "rigidly," taken in connection with the whole instruction, means no more than "to the same extent," or "exactly," and with this meaning there is no error. State v. Feuerhaken, 65 N. W. 299, 300, 96 Iowa, 299.

RIGHT—RIGHTS.

All right, title, and interest, see "All."
All my right, see "All."

The word "rights" is generic and common, embracing whatever may be lawfully claimed. Lonas v. State, 50 Tenn. (3 Helsk.) 287, 306.

The word "right" denotes, among other things, property, interest, power, prerogative, immunity, and privilege. In law it is most frequently applied to property in its restricted sense; but it is often used to designate power, prerogative, and privilege, and especially when applied to corporations. A large proportion of the rights of political corporations consists of the powers conferred upon them. People v. Dikeman (N. Y.) 7 How. Prac. 124, 130.

"A 'right' has been defined by Mr. Justice Holmes to be a legal consequence which attaches to certain facts. Every fact which forms one of the group of facts of which the right is the legal consequence appertains to the substance of the right." White v. Multnomah County Com'rs, 10 Pac. 484, 486, 13 Or. 317.

The term "right," in civil society, is defined to mean that which a man is entitled to have, or to do, or to receive from others, within the limits prescribed by law. Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 37, 40, 29 Am. Rep. 356.

A right, according to the Spanish civil law, "was either in the thing or to the thing." A right in the thing was that which belonged to one over anything, without respect to another person. A right to a thing was that which belonged to any one as against another person, to oblige him to give or to do something. Of the first kind are rights of dominion, of inheritance, of services, and of pledge and mortgage. Of the second kind were all species of obligations which arise from contract. Sullivan v. Richardson, 14 South. 692, 706, 33 Fla. 1.

Archbishop Whately says that which is conformable to the Supreme Will is absolutely right, and is called "right" simply, without any reference to a special act. The opposite to "right" is "wrong." What, therefore, may be meant by a statement in a letter from a bankrupt, after his discharge, to his creditors, saying, "Be satisfied all will be right," is as difficult to determine as if no such standard had been raised by the archbishop. It is not absolutely certain that it is right for a creditor, seizing his debtor, to say, "Pay that which thou owest," or that it is wrong for the debtor to resist such an attack. It is not unnatural that the creditor should think that payment of the debt was right, and that it was the only right in the case. It is equally natural that the debtor should have a different opinion. When, therefore, the debtor said to the creditor: "I intend to do right. All will be right between my creditors and myself"—he cannot be understood as saying that he would certainly pay the debt, much less that he would pay it immediately. Allen v. Ferguson, 85 U. S. (18 Wall.) 1, 4, 21 L. Ed. 854.

The word "right" is defined by lexicographers to denote, among other things, property, interest, power, prerogative, immunity, and privilege. In law it is most frequently applied to property in its restricted sense, and it is often used to designate power, prerogative, and privilege, and especially when applied to corporations. People v. Dikeman (N. Y.) 7 How. Prac. 124, 130.

Where a statute relating to insurance companies saves the corporate existence of all companies organized prior to its adoption, and continues all the rights that they previously had, what is comprehended in the term "rights" is not very clear. In some respects it may be considered vague, and leave a good deal to implication; but where such a company had the authority before the enactment of such law to invest its funds in certain stocks or bonds, the word "rights" continued to the company, after the adoption of such statute, the power so to invest its funds. St. Joseph Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hauck, 63 Mo. 112, 118.

"Right," as used in Sess. Laws 1861, p. 56, § 60, saving a right of action existing in favor of the party who holds a contract, obligation, right, or lien, must be construed as embracing some other right than those arising under an obligation, contract, or lien. Gould v. Subdistrict No. 3 of Eagle Creek School Dist., 7 Minn. 203, 211 (Gil. 145, 152, 153).

A warranty of a horse as being "sound and right" will be construed to mean that the horse was right in conduct and behavior as to all matters materially affecting its value, as well as in physical condition. Walker v. Hoisington, 43 Vt. 608, 611.

As cause of action.

"Right," as used in R. L. § 28, which provides that the repeal of an act shall not affect "a right accruing, accrued, acquired, or established," means a cause of action which has accrued at the time of the repeal, but does not require that suit shall have been commenced thereon at such time. Harris v. Town of Townshend, 56 Vt. 716, 719.

As deed.

The word "right" is generally used in the popular sense in this country as synonymous with a deed, and in that sense was properly used by a son in declaring that he had no right to his land, and that he feared his father never would make him a right to it. It did not have the effect of an acknowledgment that he had in fact no claim upon his father for the land.—Rowton v. Rowton (Va.) 1 Hen. & M. 92, 97.

As correlative with duty.

A duty or a legal obligation is that which one ought or ought not to do; the terms "duty" and "right" being correlative. When a right is invaded a duty is violated. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Kurtz, 37 N. E. 303, 304, 10 Ind. App. 60.

The word "right," as used in a definition of tort as one's disturbance of another in a right which the law has created, etc., is employed strictly in a legal sense; that is, in the sense implying something with which the law invests one person, and in respect to which, for his benefit, another, or perhaps all others, are required by the law to do or perform acts, or to forbear or abstain from acts. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Hennigan (Tex.) 76 S. W. 452, 453.

As enforceable legal right.

The word "right," in Act April 2, 1890, (87 Laws 149), providing that no railroad company, etc., shall demand, expect, require, or enter into any contract, agreement, etc., with any person in the employ of any railroad company, whereby such person stipulates or agrees to surrender or waive any right to damages against any railroad company, thereafter arising for personal injury or death, etc., means a tangible legal right, one arising on contract or a tort, which would be recognized and enforced by law. Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Cox, 45 N. E. 641, 644, 55 Ohio St. 497, 35 L. R. A. 507.

"Right lawfully accrued or established," as used in Acts 1880, c. 245, providing that the repeal therein enacted should not affect any other right lawfully accrued or established before the act took effect, etc., means an absolute right only, and does not include one resting in the discretion of the court. People v. Cohocton Stone Road (N. Y.) 25 Hun, 13, 17.

The word "rights," according to one definition given by standard lexicographers, means that which one has a legal claim to do; legal power; authority; immunity granted by authority; the investiture with special or peculiar rights. The word is used in this sense in Rev. St. § 5508 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3712], making it criminal for two or more persons to conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States. United States v. Patrick (U. S.) 54 Fed. 338, 348.

As exclusive grant.

The expression "the right," as used in Acts S. C. March 1, 1870, which gives and grants to designated persons "the right to dig, mine, and remove," for 21 years, from the beds of navigable waters within the jurisdiction of the state, the phosphate rocks and deposits contained therein, and which requires the grantee to pay the state a specified sum per ton for every ton removed, cannot be held to grant an exclusive right, so as to prevent the state from granting similar rights and powers to others. Bradley v. South Carolina Phosphate & Phosphatic River Min. Co. (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 1165, 1166.

Exemption from taxation.

The term "all rights" embraces each right. A statute providing that all rights as to a line of railway which having been legally vested in one corporation shall pass to another corporation, upon a sale by one to the other, is sufficiently clear and certain to pass a right of exemption from taxation, as well as any other right. Atlantic & G. R. Co. v. Allen, 15 Fla. 637, 658.

As law.

The word "right," as used in the Constitution, providing that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, is not used in the broad sense, as synonymous with "law," but is limited in its meaning, and merely gives the right to every one to have his cause tried by a jury. Therefore the act of 1874, providing that in all prosecutions the party accused, if he should so elect, might be tried by the court, instead of by the jury, and that in such cases the court should have full power to try the case and to render judgment, is valid. State v. Worden, 46 Conn. 349, 364, 33 Am. Rep. 27.

As matured rights.

Where a party, having a right to declare a contract to convey land forfeited for failure to comply with its terms, in consideration of certain payments extended the time for payment and agreed to waive his rights under said contract of sale of land, the words "his rights under said contract" meant his matured rights, and applied to past rights to forfeiture only, and not to rights accruing out of future delinquencies.

Cohrt v. Kock, 10 N. W. 230, 231, 56 Iowa, 658.

Moral obligation.

A person has a right, when the law authorizes him, to exact from another an act or forbearance. There is no right where there is no remedy. The case of a moral obligation is not to be confounded with a legal right. People v. Ulster County Sup'ra, 65 N. Y. 300, 308.

As power.

The word "right," in Laws 1871, p. 70, § 12, providing that the husband shall have no right to sell or incumber the common property, unless he shall be joined therein by the wife, is synonymous with "power," and a deed by the husband after the wife's death passes no title to the wife's interest as against the heirs. Mable v. Whittaker (Wash.) 39 Pac. 172, 173, 10 Wash. 656.

As privilege.

The word "right," as used in a deed conveying certain premises, but excepting and reserving the right and privilege of taking water from a stream, is synonymous with the word "privilege," and is limited to the use for the convenience of the grantor and his heirs and assigns. Smith v. Cornell University, 45 N. Y. Supp. 640, 643, 21 Misc. Rep. 220.

Remedy distinguished.

See "Remedy."

As rights surviving to personal representative.

The word "rights," as used in a bond given by an administrator with the will annexed, requiring the administrator to make and exhibit within three months an inventory of the goods, chattels, rights, and credits of the deceased, means only such rights of the deceased as survive to the personal representative; for, whenever it becomes necessary in the course of the administration to sell the real estate of the deceased, an additional bond is taken for the protection of the proceeds. Newport Probate Court v. Hazard, 13 R. I. 3, 9.

Right to decree included.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 81, § 15, relating to redemption from mortgage foreclosure sales, and providing that, if a lien creditor redeems, the certificate of redemption operates as an assignment to him of the rights acquired under such sale, includes the right to a final decree. Bovey De Laitre Lumber Co. v. Tucker, 50 N. W. 1038, 1040, 48 Minn. 223.

Right to redeem included.

In construing a statute providing that persons garnished are required to appear and answer such interrogatories as shall be propounded touching the goods, chattels, rights, and credits of the judgment debtor, the court say that it would seem that the words here used, particularly "rights and credits," concerning which such garnishee must make disclosure, are sufficiently comprehensive to include the right of redemption in mortgaged or pledged personal property. Burnham v. Doolittle, 15 N. W. 606, 608, 14 Neb. 214.

Stockholders' liability.

The double liability of the stockholders of a bank is not a "right" or "credit" of the bank, which Rev. St. 1894, § 2908 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2671), authorizes the assignees for the benefit of creditors to collect, but is enforceable only by the creditors. Runner v. Dwiggins, 46 N. E. 580, 581, 147 Ind. 238, 86 L. R. A. 179.

As title.

"Right," as used in a deed conveying to the grantees the right to so much of certain premises as might be necessary on which to build and maintain a dam, with its wings, is equivalent to "title." "Right" is equivalent to "all right." Webster defines "right" to be "just claim; legal title; ownership." Monmouth v. Plimpton, 1 Atl. 693, 695, 77 Me. 556.

"Right," as used in 5 Stat. 456, § 12, providing that all assignments and transfers of the right secured by such statute prior to the issuing of the patent of lands claimed under the pre-emption laws shall be null and void, cannot be construed as meaning a fee, or even an estate less than a fee in lands; and hence deeds by pre-emptors which purported on their face to pass the absolute ownership of the lands—the fee simple—did not convey a right within the meaning of the statute. Franklin v. Kelley, 2 Neb. 79, 88.

"Right," as used in a will, in which testator devised all his right in certain woods to all his children, passes all the testator's estate and interest therein, and, of course, a fee, if he had one. Newkerk v. Newkerk (N. Y.) 2 Caines, 345, 351.

5 Stat. 456, § 12, after a declaration of the terms on which the settler will be privileged to purchase public lands, provides that all assignments and transfers of the "right hereby secured" prior to the issuing of the patent shall be null and void. Held, that by the words "right hereby secured" is meant simply the right to be preferred over all other persons in becoming a purchaser from the government at an established price. The words do not mean the possession, nor the right of possession. They do not mean the title or the land itself, for these are not yet the property of the settler. Coleman v. Allen, 5 Mo. App. 127, 135.

Title distinguished.

"Rights," and "titles" are, in some respects, synonymous; yet there is a distinction. The possession of land, actual or constructive is a right. "Rights," in this connection, originate in and are modified by the quality of the title. To constitute a perfect title, there must be the union of actual possession, the right of possession, and the right of property. 2 Bl. Comm. 199. These several rights may exist in several persons. In a completed title they are consolidated in one right, existing in the same party." Said in construing 1 Rev. St. p. 318, § 5, requiring that the rights and titles of the plaintiff in an action for partition should be set forth. Stewart v. Munroe (N. Y.) 56 How. Prac. 193, 195, 196.

RIGHT AND CLAIM.

A mortgage conveying all the "right and claim" to land which the grantor has in a certain town does not include land to which he has only a possibility of a reversion, on the nonperformance of a condition subsequent; the court remarking that at the time the grantor executed the conveyance he had no right or claim to this land, and it was not certain that he ever would have any. Richardson v. City of Cambridge, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 118, 121, 79 Am. Dec. 767.

RIGHT AND JUSTICE.

"Right and justice," as used in Laws N. Y. 48th Sess. c. 325, § 9, authorizing the Supreme Court on motion to set aside a corporate election, and to make such order and give such relief as both "right and justice" may require, means the legal rights of the parties, and gives no authority to pronounce on the right and justice arbitrarily. Ex parte Willcocks (N. Y.) 7 Cow. 402, 408, 17 Am. Dec. 525.

RIGHT AND PRIVILEGE.

"Right and privilege," as used in a will bequeathing land to testator's son for life, with the right and privilege of disposing of the same by will or devise to his children, if he should have any, do not necessarily import a discretion. Such may be their general signification, but not when used for the purpose of creating a trust power. If the testator had said that he authorized and empowered his son to devise the property to his children, it cannot be doubted that an imperative trust power would have been created; but to hold that the power is only discretionary, because he gave him the right and privilege to so dispose of it, would be to introduce a distinction which the difference in the form of expression does not warrant. The words are not the same, it is true; but their legal effect is. The right to do an act is the possession of the highest authority, and a privilege is a right or power specially conferred. In both cases full and unrestricted authority is given to dispose of the testator's property for the benefit of others. From the earliest times this has been deemed sufficient to impress the power with a trust which imposes upon the donee the duty of executing it. Smith v. Floyd, 35 N. E. 606, 607, 140 N. Y. 337.

Immunity from taxation is not a corporate franchise or "right and privilege," within the meaning of the Texas statute authorizing proceedings by quo warranto "in case any person shall usurp * * * or unlawfully hold * * * any office or franchise, * * * or any incorporation does or omits any act which amounts to a surrender or forfeiture of its rights and privileges as a corporation"; and an appeal from a decree withdrawing such exemption, in a proceeding seeking forfeiture of charter and such withdrawal, need not be prosecuted within the time required in quo warranto proceedings. International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. State, 12 S. W. 685, 686, 75 Tex. 356.

A charter granting to a consolidated company all the rights and privileges of constituent companies does not pass to the consolidated company the exemption from taxation of one of the constituent companies. Adams v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 24 South. 200, 209, 77 Miss. 194, 60 L. R. A. 33.

The words "rights and privileges," in the charter of an insurance company, giving it all the rights and privileges of another insurance company, which was exempt from taxation, was construed not to include exemption from taxation. City of Memphis v. Phoenix Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 19 S. W. 1044, 91 Tenn. 566.

RIGHT AND WRONG TEST.

"Right and wrong test" is that test of criminal responsibility which is whether, at the time the accused committed the act, he had the mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong, and comprehend his relations to others, and to understand the nature and consequences of the particular act; that the act was morally wrong, or that he was conscious of doing wrong. State v. Harrison, 15 S. E. 982, 986, 36 W. Va. 729, 18 L. R. A. 224 (citing 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 475).

The "right and wrong test," as to mental responsibility for crime, is stated as follows: "Where a person, at the time of the commission of an alleged crime, has sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature and quality of the particular act or acts constituting the crime, and the mental capacity to know whether they are right or wrong, he is generally responsible if he commits such act or acts, whatever may be his capacity in other particulars; but, if he does not possess this degree of capacity, then he is not so responsible." State v. Mowry, 15 Pac. 282, 285, 37 Kan. 369 (citing State v. Nixon, 4 Pac. 159, 32 Kan. 205).

RIGHT AWAY.

The phrase "right away," in a proposition to sell for a certain sum of money, if accepted "right away," must be construed as meaning a reasonable time, and cannot be interpreted to mean instantaneously. Lorimer v. Boylan, 98 Mich. 18, 22, 56 N. W. 1043, 1045.

RIGHT BANK.

The term "right bank" of a stream is used to designate the bank to the right of an object passing down stream. Borkenhagen v. Vlanden, 52 N. W. 260, 261, 82 Wis. 206.

RIGHT BY PRESCRIPTION.

A "right by prescription" is acquired when an open, uninterrupted, and continuous user for more than 20 years of an easement upon another's land is had under a claim of right adverse to such other's title; but, when such claim has been acquiesced in by the owner of the servient tenement after such a user for such a period, the conclusive presumption of a grant arises. The right to take ice from a creek is a property right that may be acquired by prescription. Hinckel v. Stevens, 54 N. Y. Supp. 457, 459, 35 App. Div. 5.

RIGHT, DEBT, OR DUTY.

A statute avoiding fraudulent conveyances, "made or had to avoid a right, debt, or duty," is not designed to protect creditors alone in the strict sense of the term. It embraces all persons to whom the grantor owes a duty which he attempts to avoid; and, though the rights and duties must be of the nature of debts arising ex contractu, yet they are far more extensive than "debt" in its strict sense. Therefore a liability arising by statute from acting as a director for a partially organized corporation, and also by reason of untrue representation made by such director concerning the status of said corporation, constitutes a "right or duty," to protect which the statute will invalidate a conveyance. Corey v. Morrill, 42 Atl. 976, 978, 71 Vt. 51.

RIGHT EXISTING.

A "right existing or accrued," within the saving clause of the statute relating to actions for injuries, includes both an injury received and a claim therefor, on which a right of action has accrued by giving the requisite notice, as provided by a former or existing statute. The existing right is the injury, the cause of action, as distinguished from the notice required to be given, which pertains to the remedy. Sehl v. City of Syracuse, 81 N. Y. Supp. 482, 484, 81 App. Div. 543.

RIGHT HEIR.

See "Own Right Heirs."

The "right heir" of a person deceased is he of the blood of such deceased upon whom the law casts the inheritance. A husband is not the right heir of his deceased wife, nor an administrator of a person dying intestate, in the strict and primary sense of that term. The words "right heirs," as used in a will in which the testator gave certain property to the trustee, in trust to pay the net incomes and rents to Mrs. G. for life, and after her death to convey the trust fund or estate according to the directions of her will, and on the failure of such will to convey the same to the "right heirs" of Mrs. G., their heirs and assigns, forever, are construed to be "designata persona"; that is, the property is to go to the persons who would be heirs in the strict sense of that term, or, in other words, the persons who are entitled by law to take the real estate of an intestate. Mason v. Bally, 14 Atl. 309, 322, 6 Del. Ch. 129.

Where a testator devised his estate in trust to pay the income to his children, providing that after the death of all his children the estate should descend to the respective right heirs of his children, the expression "right heirs" meant the children of his children. Ballentine v. Wood, 9 Atl. 582, 585, 42 N. J. Eq. (15 Stew.) 552.

"Right heir" is a term formerly used, in the cases of estates tail, to distinguish the preferred, to whom the estate was limited, from the heirs in general, to whom, on the failure of the preferred heir and his line, the remainder over was usually finally limited. With the abolition of estates tail, the term has fallen into disuse.—Brown v. Wadsworth, 61 N. E. 250, 253, 168 N. Y. 225.

A bequest to trustees, to pay the income for life to legatees named, and at their death "to my right heirs," is payable to the heirs at law living at the death of the testator; the phrase "right heirs" meaning testator's heirs at common law, and the words having been used properly as words of purchase. McCrea's Estate, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 448, 449.

Construing a will devising property to the guardian of an infant married woman during her life, and thereafter to her husband for life, and after his death, in case he survived her, and after her death, whether he be living or dead, to have and hold the premises in trust for her "right heirs," the phrase is a term formerly in use in the creation of estates tail, to distinguish the preferred, to whom the estate was limited, from the heirs in general, to whom, upon the failure of the preferred heir and his line, the remainder over was usually finally limited. Estates tail having been abolished, the term does not import any preference, if none was made among the heirs. Therefore the term here means the same as the single word "heirs," so that the married woman took an equitable estate and the right heirs a legal estate by purchase. Brown v. Wadsworth, 61 N. E. 250, 253, 168 N. Y. 225.

RIGHT IN A HIGHWAY.

A "right in a highway" was originally classed, and rightly so, with incorporeal hereditaments, because there was a mere grant of a right of passing over, and it came about that the streets of a city have been placed in the same category; but the rights which a municipal corporation has in the streets of a city are very different from the rights of the public in a highway of the country. The easement is not confined to a mere passing over. The street may be graded and improved; the grade may be raised or lowered; the earth excavated; it may be tunneled and water mains, gas mains, sewers, and telegraph and telephone wires laid therein; and cars propelled by steam, electrical, cable, or horse power may be authorized to be operated in such tunnel, as, likewise, upon the surface of the road, except possibly as to cars operated by steam power. So, also, great steam structures spanning the right of way of the street may be authorized to be constructed for the operation of an elevated railway. In fact, there is at this day no substantial difference between streets in which the legal title is in private individuals and those in which it is in the public, as to the rights of the public therein. City of La Crosse v. Cameron (U. S.) 80 Fed. 264, 276, 25 C. C. A. 399.

RIGHT IN PERSONAM.

See "Jura in Personam."

RIGHT IN REM.

The security as to life and limb, and indemnity against personal injuries occasioned by the negligence, fraud, or violence of others, is a right in rem, as distinguished from a right which avails against a particular individual or a determinate class of persons, which is a right in personam; for example, the indemnity which the law affords against assaults by others is a right in rem, while the right which one may obtain by contract to secure an indemnity from another for assault by a stranger is a right in personam. The mere fact that one may have a right in personam for the same wrong which was also the breach of a right in rem does not impair the right in rem. Accordingly one injured on a passenger train, by a collision between it and another train, may have an action against the company operating the other train for its breach of the right in rem, though he may also have an action ex contractu against the carrier to which he bore the relation of a passenger. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Shacklet, 105 Ill. 364, 365, 44 Am. Rep. 791.

RIGHT OF ACCESSION.

See "Accession."

RIGHT OF ACTION.

As property, see "Property."

Cause of action as, see "Cause of Action."

"Right of action" has been defined in the Roman law as "jus persequendi in judicio sibi debetur." Inhabitants of Webster v. County Com'rs, 63 Me. 27, 29.

"Right of action," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 227, § 8, providing that a debt due from plaintiff to defendant cannot be set off unless a right of action exist thereon, etc., means a right to commence and maintain an action. Boody v. Watson, 9 Atl. 794, 799, 64 N. H. 162 (citing Hibbard v. Clark, 56 N. H. 155, 22 Am. Rep. 442).

"Right of action," as used in Gen. St. c. 208, § 8, providing that any debt or demand shall be set off as aforesaid, unless a "right of action" existed, means a right to commence a suit to enforce the claim, or to collect the debt or demand referred to, and does not include the right which a collector of taxes has to collect taxes assessed in his list, and such collection is a ministerial, and not a judicial, act. Hibbard v. Clark, 56 N. H. 155, 158, 22 Am. Rep. 442.

"Right of action," as used in a statute providing that an attachment may issue if the person having the right of action will make complaint on oath or affirmation, includes actions for demands or claims arising ex delicto, as well as ex contractu, and includes present, but not future, demands. Lum v. The Buckeye, 24 Miss. 564-566.

"Right of action," as used in Gen. St. c. 227, § 8, declaring that a debt due from plaintiff to defendant cannot be set off unless a right of action existed thereon at the commencement of plaintiff's action, is construed by a majority of the court to mean a right to commence and maintain an action existing at the time of the commencement of plaintiff's action. Hibbard v. Clark, 56 N. H. 155, 22 Am. Rep. 442 (cited and approved Boody v. Watson, 9 Atl. 794, 799, 64 N. H. 162).

RIGHT OF ACTION BASED ON NEGLIGENCE.

To constitute a right of action based upon negligence, it must appear that there has been an invasion of the legal rights, or injury to the person or property, of the plaintiff, as the proximate result of an inadvertent or nonintentional failure on part of the defendant to use the degree of care imposed by the law upon the defendant under the circumstances and relations affecting the parties, when the injury happened of which the plaintiff complains. In other words, the right of action is the combination of negligence on the part of the defendant with a resulting injury to the person, property, or legal rights of the plaintiff. Honey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (U. S.) 59 Fed. 423, 424.

RIGHT OF ANOTHER.

How. St. § 7759, provides that where, by the wrongful act of any person, an injury is produced, either to the person, personal property, or right of another, for which an action of trespass may by law be brought, an action on the case may be brought to recover damages. Held, that the term "or right of another" was intended to include personal torts to persons or personal property, and was not sufficiently comprehensive to include or apply to trespass on lands. Wood v. Michigan Cent. & A. L. R. Co., 45 N. W. 980, 981, 81 Mich. 358.

RIGHT OF APPEAL.

"Right of appeal," as used in Act March 3, 1887, establishing the Court of Claims and giving Circuit Courts of the United States concurrent jurisdiction in certain cases, wherein it is provided that the plaintiff or the United States, in any suit brought under the provisions of the act, shall have the same rights of appeal as are now reserved in the statutes of the United States in that behalf made, means the right of appeal reserved in statutes relating to the court of claims. Johnson v. United States, 24 Pac. 256, 257, 6 Utah, 403.

RIGHT OF COMMON.

See "Common."

RIGHT OF A COMMON-LAW REMEDY.

The saving, in Judiciary Act, § 9, "to suitors in all cases of the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it," does not authorize a proceeding in rem to enforce a maritime lien in a common-law court, whether state or federal. Common-law remedies are not applicable to enforce such a lien, but are suits in personam, though such suits, under special statutes, may be commenced by attachment of the property of the debtor. The Belfast, 74 U. S. (7 Wall.) 624, 635, 19 L. Ed. 266.

RIGHT OF CONQUEST.

By the "right of conquest" nothing more is in fact meant than the right of discovery. It was the right of discovery as to the civilized world, and the right of conquest as to the Indians themselves. Caldwell v. State (Ala.) 1 Stew. & P. 327, 408

RIGHT OF CONSCIENCE.

The "right of conscience," as understood under our organic laws, is simply "to worship the Supreme Being according to the dictates of the heart; to adopt any creed or hold any opinion whatever, or to support any religion; and to do or forbear to do any act for conscience's sake, the doing or forbearing of which is not prejudicial to the public weal." Commonwealth v. Leshner (Pa.) 17 Serg. & R. 155, 160. Nor is any preference given to any particular church. All are placed on a like foundation. Const. arts. 3, 6, 9, 14, providing that no person shall "be competent as a bishop, priest, deacon, minister, elder, or other clergyman of any religious persuasion, sect, or denomination, to teach or preach, or solemnize marriage," unless such person "shall have taken, subscribed, and filed" the oath specified in section 6, is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. Such provisions are not in the nature of ex post facto laws, nor a bill of attainder. State v. Cummings, 36 Mo. 263, 264, 273.

RIGHT OF DOWER.

See "Dower."

RIGHT OF DRAINAGE.

The "right of drainage" is said to be an easement which gives the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another, either from its source or from any other place. This right cannot exist independent of its connection with another tenement, and therefore cannot be aliened or conveyed, except by a conveyance as an appurtenance of the dominant estate. It can be created only by grant or prescription, and partakes in this as well as other respects of the characteristics of real estate. It can be inherited, and is therefore classified by all elementary writers as a hereditament. Nellis v. Munson, 15 N. E. 739, 740, 108 N. Y. 453.

A right of drainage from an avenue to the sea cannot be construed to pass as parcel of a right of drainage in and through the avenue. Fiske v. Wetmore, 15 R. L. 354, 359, 10 Atl. 627, 629.

RIGHT OF ELECTION.

The right of election to the estate by the eldest legal heir meant the privilege of taking the whole estate, if indivisible, and paying the others an equivalent in money according to the valuation thereof. It was not only a sentimental privilege of retaining paternal estate, but it was a valuable right, intrinsically so, and capable of alienation, so that the purchaser succeeded, though an entire stranger to the family and its sentiments, to the right of election. If the eldest male heir refused to take, the eldest female enjoyed the right, and if she was married the husband took the right of election in her right, even to her exclusion of any right in the land as such; his election giving him an absolute title. Catlin v. Catlin, 60 Md. 573, 577 (citing Stevens v. Richardson [Md.] 6 Har. & J. 156).

RIGHT OF ENTRY.

A right of entry on land is the right of possession. Cecil v. Clarke, 80 S. E. 216, 219, 44 W. Va. 659.

RIGHT OF FISHERY.

The "right of fishery" in the waters of the ocean, whether in the open sea or where the waters ebb and flow over tide lands, is a public right which may be exercised by any citizen. Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331. In its very nature the exercise of the right of fishing in the public waters of the ocean is not and cannot be exclusive. Its exercise, no matter by whom or for what length of time, is only the exercise of a public right. Pacific Steam Whaling Co. v. Alaska Packers' Ass'n, 72 Pac. 161, 163, 138 Cal. 632.

RIGHT OF FREE PASSAGE.

"The 'right of free passage' in a highway or street is a comprehensive term, which in this advanced age may embrace the transmission of thought and words as a substitute for the actual physical passage of persons over a public highway, and thereby greatly facilitate social and commercial intercourse." The construction of an underground telephone conduit in a street is a proper use of the street, and not an additional burden, for which an abutting property owner is entitled to compensation. Castle v. Bell Telephone Co., 63 N. Y. Supp. 482, 484, 49 App. Div. 437.

RIGHT OF HABITATION.

The "right of habitation" is the right of dwelling gratuitously in a house, the property of another person. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 627.

RIGHT OF HOMESTEAD.

See "Homestead."

RIGHT OF POSSESSION.

See "Immediate Right of Possession."

Two things are essential to perfect a present right of possession of an office—election and installation. Election determines the right to succeed the existing incumbent at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, and installation establishes a present right to exercise the functions of the office. Ex parte Norris, 8 S. C. (8 Rich.) 408, 483.

RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION.

See "Pre-emption."

The so-called "right of privacy" is, as the phrase suggests, founded upon the claim that a man has the right to pass through this world, if he wills, without having his picture published, his business enterprises discussed, his successful experiments written up for the benefit of others, or his eccentricities commented upon, either in handbills, circulars, catalogues, periodicals, or newspapers; and necessarily the things which may not be written and published of him must not be spoken of him by his neighbors, whether the comment be favorable or otherwise. Such right does not exist in law, and is not enforceable in equity. Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co., 64 N. E. 442, 443, 171 N. Y. 538, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828; Owen v. Partridge, 82 N. Y. Supp. 248, 252, 40 Misc. Rep. 415.

"The law does not discriminate between those who are sensitive and those who are not, and the brutality of the remark which, while slanderous per se if said in the presence of a third person, is not actionable if addressed to the object in private, makes no difference. Yet the alleged right to privacy is invaded. This law of privacy seems to have obtained a foothold at one time in the history of our jurisprudence; not by that name, it is true, but in effect. It is evidenced by the old maxim, 'The greater the truth, the greater the libel,' and the result has been the emphatic expression of public disapproval, by the emancipation of the press and the establishment of freedom of speech, and the abolition in most of our states of the maxim quoted by constitutional provisions. The limitation upon the exercise of these rights being the law of slander and libel, whereby the publication of an untruth, that can be presumed or shown to the satisfaction, not of the plaintiff, but of others (i. e., an impartial jury), to be injurious, not alone to the feelings, but to the reputation, is actionable. The law does not remedy all evils. We do not wish to be understood as belittling the complaint (one to restrain the use of the name and likeness of a deceased person as a label to be used in the sale of a cigar named after him). We have no reason to doubt the feeling of annoyance alleged. * * * We can only say that it is one of the ills that under the law cannot be redressed." Atkinson v. John E. Doherty & Co., 80 N. W. 285, 286, 121 Mich. 372, 46 L. R. A. 219, 80 Am. St. Rep. 507.

RIGHT OF PROPERTY.

Rights of private property consist in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land. Evans v. Reading Chemical Fertilizing Co., 28 Atl. 702, 706, 160 Pa. 209 (citing Hutchinson v. Schimmelfeder, 40 Pa. [4 Wright] 396, 398).

The right of property guaranteed by Const. art. 1, § 6, declaring that no one shall be deprived of property without due process of law, includes the right to acquire property and enjoy it in any way consistent with the equal rights of others and the just demands and exactions of the state. Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323.

Bankr. Act 1841 provided that all property and rights of property should be vested in the bankrupt's assignee. Held, that a contingent interest, which nothing but the death of the bankrupt could prevent vesting in him, was to be regarded as a right of property. Nash v. Nash, 94 Mass. (12 Allen) 345, 348.

The right of property in an article involves the power to sell and dispose of such article, as well as to use and enjoy it. Any act which declares that the owner shall neither sell it, nor dispose of it, nor use and enjoy it, confiscates it, depriving him of his property without due process of law. But the prohibition of sale in any way or for any use is quite a different thing from a regulation of the sale or use, so as to protect the health and morals of the community. All property, even the most harmless in its nature, is equally subject to the power of a state in this respect with the most noxious. Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 85 U. S. (18 Wall.) 129, 137, 21 L. Ed. 929.

The words "property," "rights of property," and "adverse interest," as used in the bankruptcy act (Rev. St. U. S. § 5057), providing that no suit, either at law or in equity, shall be maintainable in any court between an assignee in bankruptcy and a person claiming any adverse interest touching any property or rights of property transferable to or vested in such assignees, unless brought within two years, etc., have been held to include debts owing to or by the bankrupt. Bowen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 47 N. E. 907, 909, 153 N. Y. 476, 60 Am. St. Rep. 667.

A right of property consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposition of all a person's acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the law of the land. In re Jacobs, 2 N. Y. Cr. R. 539, 543 (1 Bl. Comm. 138); Roderigas v. East River Sav. Inst. (N. Y.) 48 How. Prac. 166, 174.

Chancellor Kent says: "The exclusive right of transferring property follows as a natural consequence from the exception and admission of property itself." Roderigas v. East River Sav. Inst. (N. Y.) 48 How. Prac. 166, 174.

RIGHT OF PROTECTING PROPERTY.

"Right of protecting property," as used in Bill of Rights, art. 2, declaring that all men have certain natural, essential, and inherent rights, among which is the right of acquiring and protecting property, "is the right to do whatever, under the circumstances of each case, apparently is reasonably necessary to be done in defense." Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 398, 399, 16 Am. Rep. 339.

RIGHT OF REDEMPTION.

A right to redeem from a sale of real estate is purely statutory. It does not exist at common law. Courts of equity in justifiable cases may grant in their decrees of sale something akin to the right, but the power thus exercised is apart from the one conferred by statutes. Case v. Cherokee Lanyon Spelter Co., 61 Pac. 406, 408, 62 Kan. 69.
